TO THE
RIGHT HONOURABLE
ROBERT WALPOLE, Esq;

First Lord Commissioner of the Treasury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Under-Treasurer; and one of His MAJESTY'S Most Honourable Privy Council.

S I R,

THE Dignity of the Subject, and the great and deserved Merit of the Authors of these Memoirs, will, I hope, excuse my Presumption, in attempting to introduce them to the World under Your Patronage: An Honour, which yet I would not have sought, had I not been well perswaded, that whatever in the least tends to the Service of your Countrey, cannot fail of your Approbation.

AND DEDICATION.

AND indeed, a Work of this Nature, of all others, claims a Right to the Protection of a Patron of the most illustrious Character and distinguish'd Merit. The great and generous Maxims by which our Ancestors govern'd themselves, may perhaps amuse and please, and excite in us some faint Desires to imitate them; but when they stand exemplify'd in the Conduct of so great, so sincere a Patriot, 'tis then they strike us with an irresistible Force; and oblige us to confess, that the only Way to true and lasting Honour, is by a steady Pursuit of it in the Paths of Virtue and Integrity.

THIS, Sir, has been so eminently Your Practice, that every Action of Your Life is a Proof of it. How early did You appear in the Glorious Cause of Liberty and Your Country, and with what immoveable Firmness and Constancy have You on all Occasions maintained its true Interests! When a dark and melancholy Cloud hung over our Heads, and we saw nothing but Ruin before our Eyes, how bravely did You then oppose Your self to the overbearing Torrent! And by the Force of Your Eloquence, raise the drooping Spirits of the Senate and Nation, and teach them, by Your great Example, that no Hazards, no Dangers were to be declined for so inestimable a Prize.

These Arts (and these alone) have justly raised You to the highest Stations, and to the Favour of a Prince of the sublimest Wisdom and Virtue. With what happy Conduct and Prudence You discharge the great and important Trusts reposed in You (though we feel, and gratefully acknowledge the happy Effects) will be the glorious Theme of future Histories. They will tell, that when by an unaccountable Infatuation we had plunged ourselves into the extreamest Miseries, Your Cares and Vigilance again restored the Credit of your Countrey to its ancient Glory, and established it upon a firm and immoveable Basis. Nor will they forget the grateful Tribute of their Praises, when they reflect upon Your Vigilance, in bringing to Light a Conspiracy, formed and carried on by the most refined and secret Malice, against the best of Princes and Governments. But these are Subjects which require a Masterly Pen to do them Justice; and if I presume to mention a them,

them, it is only because on such an Occasion, it is impossible to be silent.

IN the midst of all Your Cares for your Countrey's Safety, give me leave, Sir, to lay these Papers before You; and if Your Great and Important Affairs will permit You to cast Your Eye upon them, I persuade my self You will not find them unworthy the Perusal. The greatest thing I can say of them, is, that they are the genuine Dispatches of the several great Men whose Names they bear, and contain many important Pieces of History hitherto unknown. That true, honest English Spirit, which seems to have animated the great and worthy Authors of them, and the faithful and curious Account of Facts here delivered, gives me Reason to hope they may be of some Service to my Countrey; especially at a Time, when His Majesty has by so unprecedented a Piece of Generosity founded two such noble Lectures for Modern History. As the chief Design of that Royal Munificence, seems calculated for the forming young Gentlemen for the faithful and successful Service of their Countrey, perhaps there are no Books so proper for that Purpose, pose, as the Letters of Wise and Great Ministers of State, whose Stations naturally lead them into the most exact Knowledge of Events, and whose Capacities enable them to form the truest Judgment of them: And I think I may venture to add, that amongst these, there are none comparable to those of our own Countreymen. How far these I here present You will answer so great a Design, I dare not presume to determine: Your favourable Acceptance of them, will alone give them a lasting Reputation; and to that they are with all Humility submitted, by

S I R,

Your Most Obedient

And Devoted Servant,

EDM. SAWYER.

The first part of the document describes the general situation of the country and the state of the economy. It then goes on to discuss the social and political conditions of the country. The author concludes by stating that the country is in a state of transition and that the future is uncertain.

Very truly yours,

P R E F A C E.

THE Letters of Wise and Great Men, those especially concerned in the Publick Administration of Affairs, have been the Delight and Entertainment of the politest and best Judges in all Ages. By the Lights we receive from them, we arrive not only at an exact Knowledge of Events, but may view them in their most secret and reserved Causes. By these Assistances, we are enabled to form a true and unerring Judgment of the Interests of States and Princes, and the Conduct of their Ministers; and by pursuing their Maxims, to qualify our selves for the faithful and successful Service of our Prince and Countrey.

These Reflections first led me into the Design of communicating the following Papers to the World: And provided they any ways answer so great and worthy Ends, I shall think the Pains I have taken in collecting them, very happily employ'd. What Reception they will meet with, as I dare not presume to determine, so (after all that can be said) must be left to the Reader's Judgment; whom I will detain no longer, than just to mention the several Persons to whom I stand obliged for my Materials.

For the greatest and noblest Part of them, I must with all Duty and Gratitude acknowledge my self indebted to His Grace the b Duke

The P R E F A C E.

Duke of Montagu; by whose singular Favour and Goodness I was admitted to the free Use of the Original Papers of Sir Ralph Winwood, and by his generous Encouragement enabled to undertake the Publication of them. Upon the Perusal of them, I discover'd so many valuable and important Papers, that I hoped to have finished this Work from that Collection only. But a stricter Enquiry too soon convinced me of my Mistake: For having begun to digest them into Order, I found many curious and useful Papers wanting; Part whereof were moulder'd and decay'd, and the rest too carelessly thrown aside and lost. Those which were left, I took care to copy with the most Religious Exactness; and had they stood singly, they (with all their Defects) had not been unworthy the Perusal of every Englishman, who desires a perfect Knowledge of those Times, and has a due Regard for the Honour of his Countrey.

The long Stay of this Great and Worthby Minister at the French Court, in the Reign of Henry IV. gave him an Opportunity of informing himself, with the greatest Exactness, of their true Policies and Designs: And his longer Stay in Holland, (where he had a great Share in establishing the Liberties and Sovereignty of that Great Republick,) created in him so unalterable an Affection to that State, and that sincere Abhorrence of Popery, and Arbitrary Power, that when he came to be preferred to the Office of Secretary of State, he bravely and generously opposed the Intrigues of the Spanish Faction (then too powerful in England) and at last (I speak it on good Grounds) dy'd a Martyr to their Resentments.

But to obviate all Objections, and to make this Collection as compleat and useful as possible, I had recourse to my Friends; and by their kind Assistances, have been enabled to make some very valuable Additions to my first Design: Which, though it has somewhat retarded the Publication of this Work, will, I hope, fully atone for the Delay.

Of this Nature is Sir Henry Neville's Negotiations at the French Court in the Years 1599 and 1600. together with the Transactions in the Treaty of Bulloign, which immediately succeeded it. I should be ungrateful to my Benefactor, if I did not in this publick Manner acknowledge, that for these I am oblig'd to his late Worthby Great-Grandson Grey Neville, Esquire: Who, with the greatest Freedom and Generosity gave me leave to publish them entire from the Original MSS. (all wrote by his two Secretaries Mr. Win-wood

wood and Mr. Packer;) desiring, that as these two great and worthy Statesmen had lived together in the most constant and intimate Friendship, their Memoirs and Letters might be jointly delivered to the World.

The Reader, will, in the Third Volume of these Papers, meet with many curious and valuable Letters to William Trumbull, Esq; who, with great Integrity and Sufficiency, served his Prince and Countrey in the Quality of Resident at Brussels, for near Twenty five Years. For these I stand indebted to my late highly Honoured and Learned Friend John Bridges, Esq; whose incomparable Knowledge in all Kinds of Learning, was temper'd with that engaging Candour and Affability, as at once render'd him the Delight and Wonder of all who had the Honour and Happiness of his Acquaintance. By his untimely Death, the World is deprived not only of a most valuable Man, but of * a Work, which would have done lasting Honour to Himself and Country: And his worthy Relations will, I hope, forgive me, if I take the Freedom in this publick Manner to tell them, they cannot do greater Justice to both, than to perfect so great and generous a Design, for which he had (with the greatest Care and Exactness) collected so many noble and valuable Materials.

That I might at once give a perfect View of the Affairs of Europe, I thought it proper to add to these, Sir Charles Cornwallis's Negotiations at the Court of Spain, whither he went Ambassador in Ordinary, upon the Conclusion of the Treaty in 1604. These I found in the † Cotton Library, written in Three large Volumes in Folio; but whether they were the Resident's own Books, or copy'd by Sir Robert Cotton's Directions, I cannot precisely determine. This however is certain, that they are very inaccurately done; which I mention, to obviate any Exception against my own Conduct; having been obliged in some few places to correct the Transcript, as will be easily found by comparing them. This I confess is a Liberty I would gladly have avoided, because it may call in question the Integrity of these Papers: But as the Mistakes were purely owing to the Negligence of the Transcriber, and usually obvious, I hope the Liberty I have taken is not unpardonable.

It may possibly be wished I had carry'd this Collection higher, and given the World a compleat View of the publick Transactions of State, from the beginning of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth. Such a Work, I am sensible would have been of great Honour and Service to our Countrey; since perhaps there was never any Reign, in which the publick Affairs were conducted with truer Wisdom and Integrity, or with greater Glory and Success. The excellent Annals of Mr. Camden, and the publick Papers in the fifteenth and sixteenth Tomes of the Fœdera, have in some measure supplied the Curiosity of Mankind in these Particulars: But still the genuine Instructions and Dispatches of Lord Burleigh and Sir Francis Walsingham, would have added new Lustre to that Glorious Reign, and open'd a Scene of Action equally surprizing and beautiful.

But though I have not been so happy, yet I account it a singular piece of good Fortune, that I have been able to preserve so many noble Monuments from Ruin and Oblivion. If we here want the Transactions of the Burleighs and Walsinghams, the Loss is in some measure supply'd, by the incomparable Dispatches of the Great Earl of Salisbury; the Successor of both, in their Virtues as well as Offices: To whose Memory, if Mankind have not paid an equal Regard, it is only because they were unacquainted with his Merit.

In truth, the Transactions comprized within this Period, (those especially which fall under the Reign of King James) are generally so ill understood, that I persuade my self I have performed no unacceptable piece of Service, in setting them in a true Light. The whole Reign of that Prince, has been represented by a late celebrated Pen, to have been a continued Course of mean Practices; and others, who have professedly given an Account of it, have filled their Works with Libel and Invective instead of History. I will not undertake to justify every Part of that Reign; but this I will venture to say, that both King James and his Ministers have met with a Treatment from Posterity highly unworthy of them; and that those Gentlemen, who have so liberally bestowed their Censures, were entirely ignorant of the true Springs and Causes of the Actions they have undertaken to represent.

The noble Lord I just now mentioned (for what Reasons I can't well conceive,) has indeed been the Mark and Level of all the Little Wits of his own and succeeding Times. * An Author of more Malice than Learning, long since dead, could bestow upon him no better Character, than that He was the first ill Treasurer, and the last good one since the Reign of Queen Elizabeth: And * one of much greater Merit and Learning, now living, has been pleased to transcribe his very Words. 'Tis great pity our Historians should not give themselves some little Trouble in examining the Conduct of Great Men, before they sit down to draw their Characters. Had the worthy Author I last mention'd done this, I persuade my self he would soon have altered his Judgment, and from the clearest and most convincing Testimonies, have commended him to Posterity, as one of the wisest and compleatest Ministers this Nation has produced. I think I need go no farther than these very Papers, for the Proof of this Assertion. We may here take a perfect View of him, in all parts of his Conduct, from his first Entrance upon publick Business, to his Death: For although † he was made Secretary of State in the Year 1596, yet I conceive he was not Prime Minister till after the Death of his Father, ‡ which fell out in August 1598: From that time the publick Affairs seem to have been entirely under his Direction; which he conducted with a Capacity worthy of his Prince and Countrey, and an Integrity so firm and constant, || as more than once exposed his Life to the implacable Malice of the Spaniards and Jesuits. During the last Years of the Reign of his Glorious Mistress, he supported her declining Age with that Vigour and Prudence, as at once enabled Her to assist her Allies the States, when they were ingloriously abandoned by France, and to baffle a dangerous Rebellion in Ireland, fomented and cherished by a strong Assistance from Spain. In the Reign of her Successor, if the publick Affairs were not carry'd on with the same Spirit, the Fault cannot with Justice be charged upon this Great Minister. King James coming to possess a new and great Kingdom, was resolved, at any Price, to have Peace with all the World, and especially with Spain. And if we look into the Conduct of that Prince, during the latter end of the preceding Reign, (an ample Account whereof we may meet with in the first Volume of these Papers,) we may from thence collect some better Reasons for that Resolution, than have been yet made publick. But I will not dwell upon so unpleasing a Subject; since though Truth may require us not to conceal the Failings of Princes, Decency obliges us, at least, not to aggravate them. How that Treaty was conducted, and upon what Terms finally concluded,  we may here find a full Account. But how inglorious soever it was for England, it proved of the most happy Consequence to the States of Holland, who, by the sole Assistance of our English Volunteers (who, on that Occasion resorted thither in great Numbers) were enabled to continue the War, till by their Treaty with Spain, and the Archdukes, they had established their Liberties and Sovereignty.

I might enlarge upon several other Particulars of this noble Lord's Conduct, and shew with what incomparable Wisdom and Prudence he managed the great and important Trusts reposed in him; which would give me an Opportunity of examining several very false and injurious Reflexions, which with great Injustice have been thrown upon his Memory, by our own, as well as foreign Historians. But I purposely decline all this, since his own Dispatches are the strongest Proof, both of his Capacity and Integrity: And will conclude all I have to say of him, in the Words of* a very ingenious Gentleman who perfectly knew him; "That though his infirm Body could promise no " great Support, yet he had a Head so capacious and richly furni" shed, as if Nature had been most careful and diligent to compleat
" the best and most useful Part about him; in enduing him with a " perfect Memory, and bright and sound Intellectuals.

For the same Reasons I omit any particular Account of the rest of those great and worthy Persons, whose Negotiations I have here made publick. Their Names and Characters are already too well known to all Men of Learning, to be particularly enlarged upon: And were they not, their own Letters will give the best and truest Idea of both. It is sufficient to say they are all faithfully copy'd from their Originals; in which Particular, any Person who desires it, may have immediate Satisfaction, the greatest part of them being in my own Custody.

As to the Method in which these Papers are digested, I have chosen to throw them all into an exact Series of Time, which I judged to be the most useful. This preserves a Connexion and Thread of History; whereas any other, would have made the whole appeared disjointed and confused: And to make them as compleat as possibly I could, I have added at the end of each Volume an Index of the principal Matters.

One thing I ought not in Justice to my self and the Reader to omit, which is, that I have not brought this Collection so low, by three Years, as I at first designed it. This, I fear, will be objected

* Sir Robert Naunton, in his Fragmenta Regalia.

The P R E F A C E.

to me; but my Answer is, that I had already swelled this Work so far beyond its intended Size, (for which Reason I was obliged to put it into three Volumes) that it was impossible to compleat what I at first intended. To which I beg leave to add, that if what I here present the World, meets with a favourable Reception, they may possibly one Day see this Work carried on to the beginning of our unhappy Troubles.

Upon the whole, as a Persuasion that the Publication of these Transactions would be of some Service, was the sole Cause of my undertaking it, so I most sincerely wish they may answer their designed End. Which is, that by taking a serious and impartial View of former Times, and of the Policies and Interests of other States, we may thence learn to set a just Value on our own Happiness; who, by the signal Mercies of Heaven, enjoy, under the greatest and best of Princes, the purest Religion, and best constituted Government in the World.

A Summary of the Memorials which John Ogleby a Scotch Baron, Envoy from the King of Scotland to his Catholick Majesty, for promoting a League between*

* The following Papers relating to a Transaction concerning which all our Historians are silent, I think my self obliged to set it in as clear a Light as I am able. That there was about this time a Scotch Agent at Rome, we learn expressly from Cardinal D'Offat, who in a Letter to M. Villeroy of the last of February 1596, tells him, — Qu'il est vrai, que l'Ecossois, dont vous faites mention, est venu par-deçà, & a traité avec le Pape, par le Moyen de Monsieur le Cardinal Aldobrandin. He acknowledges he could not give him an exact Account of his Negotiation, but (says he) bien pense-je ne me tromper de Guere, en croyant comme je fais, qu'il est ici pour tacher à induire le Pape sous le pretexte acoutumé de la Religion Catholique, à favoriser de son autorité & Moyens, quelque que ceux qui l'envoyent ont en ces país la. Farther, That a Treaty was then on foot between the Kings of Spain and Scotland, seems (though obscurely) to be hinted at in another Letter of the Cardinal D'Offat to Hen. IV. dated the 19th of July 1596, wherein he tells him that he had that Day had Audience of the Pope, — & ai dit à S. S. le contenu de la letre du Duc de Sesse, surprise & déchiffrée touchant le Roy d'Ecosse: à quoi S. S. n'a rien répondu, Sinon que lors que je lui ai demandé s'il vouloit, que V. M. lui envoyât la letre originale, il a répondu, qu'il n'etoit point besoin. And adds, — Il est ainsi retenu à parler en telles choses, afin qu'on ne puisse reconnoître de quel côté il panche, ni decouvrir rien de ses intentions. But in the last place, the Negotiation it self is expressly mention'd in a Letter of Sir Henry Nevil's to Secretary Cecyl, dated the 27th of June 1599, (which the Reader may find at large) in which, after he had given him a very particular Account of the different Views and Designs of the English Fugitive Catholicks abroad, he says, — I have bin acquainted with a Negotiation of the Lord of Ogleby, from the King of Scotland with the King of Spain, in the Year 1596. There are Points of great Importance

An. 1596.

y lo que Juan Cecilio Sacerdote Ingles de parte de los Condes, y otros Señores Catholicos de Escocia exhibio en contrario en la ciudad de Toledo, en los Meses de Mayo y Junio, 1596.

N el mes de Mayo deste Año 1596, vino de Roma a España Juan Ogleby Escoces el qual decia que venia embiado por el Rey de Escocia en comission de tratar una amistad, liga y confederacion, de parte del dicho Rey con su Magestad Catholica pues decia que el Rey de Escocia querria ser Catholico y confederarse con su santidad y con su Magestad Catholica contra la Reyna de Inglaterra, y mostro una cierta carta de confiança y creencia del dicho Rey de Escocia dando diferentes memoriales a este efeto con la conformidad siguiente.

Las razones que mueven al Inviçtissimo Rey de Escocia a reconciliarse con la sedè Apostolica, y a buscar la confederacion de España.

1. “ El desseo que a tenido el dicho Rey de vengar la muerte de su madre contra la Reyna de Inglaterra y between the two Kings, and of what † John Cecil an English Priest, on the Behalf of the Earls and other Catholick Lords of Scotland presented in Opposition to the same, at the City of Toledo, in the Months of May and June, 1596.

N the Month of May this Year 1596, John Ogleby, a Scot, arriv'd in Spain from Rome, saying he was sent by the King of Scotland, with a Commission to treat of Friendship, a League and Confederacy between that King and his Catholick Majesty: For he declar'd, that the King of Scotland would become a Catholick, and enter into a Confederacy with his Holiness and his Catholick Majesty, against the Queen of England, and produced a Letter of Trust and Credence of the said King of Scotland, presenting several Memorials to this Effect, of the following Purport:

The Reasons that induce the most Invincible King of Scotland to be reconciled to the See Apostolick, and to procure a Confederacy with Spain.

1. “ The Desire the said King has had to revenge his Mother's Death on the Queen of England and the Hereticks, tance containd in yt; and yf your Honour have not seen yt, I think I shall be able to procure a Copy of yt. All which I think amounts to a sufficient Proof of the Fact it self.

The Person from whom he received the Copy of this Negotiation, I conceive to have been Charles Paget; who in this and other Letters of Sir Henry Nevil's, is recommended to her Majesty's Grace, as a Person able to do her good Service; and is likewise taken notice of in the Negotiation it self, as one with whom Ogleby treated in Flanders.

I will not presume to determine whether he was really sent by the King upon this Errand, (though, I think, Cecyl's own Objections, who appears quite through to have been avowedly in the Interest of Bothwell, and the rest of the Popish Lords, are a strong Proof that he was) since it appears by the Papers themselves, that he was confined at Barcelona upon that account; but shall submit the whole to the Reader's Judgment; and only add, that as to the Papers themselves, (which I found amongst Sir Ralph Winwood's) they are printed exactly from the Originals. They have the Misfortune to be imperfect in some few Places; to supply which, the Gentleman whom I procured to translate them (who is eminent for his Skill in that Language) hath inserted the Words, which he conceived were wanting. How happy he has been in his Conjectures, must be submitted to the Curious. But to obviate any Exception, Care has been taken to print those Words in a different Character, both in the Spanish and English.

† The Reader will find this Person taken notice of more than once in the following Papers. The Figure he here makes, agrees perfectly with the Character Cardinal D'Offat gives of him some Years after this Transaction, in a Letter to Monsieur Villeroy: Tho' it is certain he once endeavour'd to make his Peace with the English Court, and to that end wrote something against Parsons and the Jesuits, which he prevailed upon Sir Henry Nevil to transmit to the Secretary, and at the same time to express his Desire to return to England. It appears by the Secretary's Answer, that his Proposal was very coldly received; which might possibly be the reason that he afterwards joined again with the Spanish Faction; for I don't find him afterwards taken notice of either by Sir Henry Nevil, or Sir Ralph Winwood.

 “ dignidad y tal desprecio que toca

2. “ El decreto Parlamentare que
 “ hisieron los Ingleses en las cortes
 “ d'Inglaterra poco antes de la conde“ nacion y muerte de su madre, quan-
 “ do decretaron que ninguna persona o
 “ personas pudiesen heredar el Reyno
 “ de Inglaterra que uviessen descendi-
 “ do de parientes condenados de Con“ spiracion contra la Reyna, el qual
 “ decreto claramente se hizo para ef-“ cluyr al dicho Rey de Escocia de la “ Succession de la corona de Inglaterra.

3. “ El engaño que la Reyna usò
 “ en año 88. con el dicho Rey de Es-“ cocia quando venia la armada de Es“ paña contra Inglaterra, porque
 “ entonces la dicha Reyna le embio a “ Escocia un Embaxador llamado Ash-
 “ by, prometiendoy asegurando al di-“ cho Rey que luego en passando la ar“ mada le mandaria pregonar y publi-“ car por successor del Reyno, y le ha-“ ría Principe de Wallia y mas le da“ ría el estado de su padre que tenia en “ Inglaterra y otras cosas semejantes “ para que se juntasse con ella contra “ los Españoles, pero luego en passan-
 “ do el peligro se rio la Reyna del &
 “ no quiso cumplir cosa alguna, antes
 “ dixo que su Embaxador avia ecedi-
 “ do la commission que se le dio.

4. “ La sospecha que es publica por “ toda la Christiandad de aver procura-
 “ do y effectuado la Reyna de Ingla“ terra la muerte de su padre del Rey, “ qué era el Conde de Lenox por manos
 “ de algunos inquietos parciales de la “ dicha Reyna en Escocia, de manera “ que la dicha Reyna aya dado la mu“ erte al padre y a la madre del dicho
 “ Rey, y puesto tambien en peligro del“ la muchas vezes al dicho Rey por las “ muchas rebueltas que ha causado la “ dicha Reyna en el Reyno de Escocia “ durante la minoridad del dicho Rey,
 “ y despues.

“ though he has for some Reasons till An. 1596.
 “ this time conceal'd the same — for
 “ as much as that Murder executed by “ a common Executioner in so disho“ nourable a manner, and with so much “ Contempt, concerns the Honour of “ the King her Son, and of all other “ Christian Kings who were affronted
 “ in that Action.

2. “ The Act of Parliament pass'd by “ the English in the States of England
 “ a little before the Condemnation and “ Death of the Queen his Mother,
 “ when it was enacted that no Person
 “ or Persons might inherit the Crown “ of England, that were descended from “ the Kindred of such as had been con“ demn'd for conspiring against the “ Queen; the which Act was manifest“ ly made to exclude the said King of “ Scotland from the Succession to the “ Crown of England.

3. “ The Fraud the Queen put upon
 “ the said King of Scotland in the Year
 “ 88, when the Spanish Fleet was ma“ king for England; for then the said “ Queen sent him an Embassador into “ Scotland, whose Name was Ashby,
 “ promising and assuring the said King,
 “ that as soon as the Spanish Navy was “ pass'd by she would cause him to be “ proclaim'd and declar'd her Successor
 “ in the Kingdom, and would create “ him Prince of Wales; and moreover “ would give him the Estate which his “ Father had in England, with other “ matters of this sort, to induce him
 “ to join with her against the Spani- “ ards; but as soon as the Danger was “ over the Queen made a Jest of him,
 “ and would perform nothing, but said,
 “ that her Embassador had exceeded the “ Commission given him.

4. “ The general Suspicion there is “ throughout all Christendom, that “ the Queen of England procured and “ brought about the Murder of the “ King's Father, being the Earl of Le- “ nox, by means of some turbulent Par“ tisans of the said Queen in Scotland;
 “ so that the said Queen has been the “ Death of the said King's Father and “ Mother, and often brought the said “ King into danger of the same, by “ means of the many Troubles the said
 “ Queen has occasion'd in the King“ dom of Scotland, during the said “ King's Minority, and since.

5. Que

An. 1596.

5. " Que la dicha Reyna ha amparado siempre a los contrarios y rebeldes del dicho Rey, y por su medio le ha hecho prender tres o quatro vezes al dicho Rey y quedar en poder y mando de los dichos subditos rebeldes con notable deshonra y peligro de la persona del dicho Rey, como ultimamente ha parecido en lo que ha favorecido y amparado la dicha Reyna al Conde de Bodvell Escococ rebelde y enemigo del dicho Rey.

6. " La dicha Reyna de Inglaterra ha favorecido y sustentado siempre a los Ministros y Predicadores rebeldes de Escocia, dando les mano contra el Rey mismo y procurando por su medio de tener mas mando en Escocia que el dicho Rey, y quando fue el dicho Rey a Dinamarca a casarse acordaron los Ingleses de camino para prenderle y llevarle preso a Inglaterra.

7. " La dicha Reyna de Inglaterra nunca ha querido dar al dicho Rey el estado de su Padre que le tocava en Inglaterra, ni le quiso entregar Arbella hija de su Tio, para casarla con el Duque de Lenox en Escocia, quando el dicho Rey no teniendo hijo, pretendia hazer al dicho Duque su pariente successor de la corona de Escocia, en el qual tiempo la Reyna uso palabras muy asperas y de mucho desprecio contra el dicho Rey de Escocia.

8. " Ultimamente la dicha Reyna ha procurado por medio de sus partiales en Escocia de tirar en su poder al hijo niño del dicho Rey, principe que es aora de Escocia, con pretextos que estaria mas seguro en Inglaterra, pero la verdad es que la Inglesa queria hazer otro tanto a esse Rey por medio desse hijo suyo, si le tuviesse entre las manos, que hizo al Padre y a la Madre del mismo Rey por medio suyo, quando estava apoderada del, que fue quitarles el reyno y la vida, y assi no tiene el Rey de Escocia otro refugio para librase destos peligros que procurar de unirse con la sede Apostolica y con el Rey de España, y por esto mando el dicho Rey proponer los ciertos

5. " That the said Queen has always protected the said King's Enemies and Rebels, and by their means has caus'd the said King to be three or four times taken into Custody, and to remain in the Power and Disposal of the said rebellious Subjects, to the great Dishonour and Peril of the Person of the said King, as has of late appeared in the said Queen's favouring and protecting the Earl of Bothwell, a Scot, Rebel and Enemy to the said King.

6. " The said Queen of England has always favour'd and supported the Ministers and Preachers that embroil'd Scotland, giving them an helping hand against the King himself, and endeavouring by their means to have more Power in Scotland than the King himself; and when the said King went to Denmark to be marry'd, the English contrived to seize him by the way, and to carry him Prisoner into England.

7. " The said Queen of England never would give the said King his Father's Estate that belong'd to him in England; nor would she deliver up to him Arbella his Uncle's Daughter, to be marry'd to the Duke of Lenox in Scotland, at the time when the said King having no Issue, intended to make the said Duke his Successor Heir to the Crown of Scotland, at which time the Queen utter'd very harsh Words, and of much Contempt against the King of Scotland.

8. " Lastly, the said Queen has by means of her Partisans in Scotland, endeavour'd to draw into her Power the said King's Infant Son, now Prince of Scotland, upon pretence that he would be safer in England; but the Truth is, that the English Woman would serve this King by the means of this his Son, if she had him in her Hands, as she serv'd the same King's Father and Mother by his means, when she had him in her Power, which was taking away their Kingdom and Life: and thus the King of Scotland has no other recourse to rescue him from these Dangers, than to endeavour to unite himself with the See Apostolick, and with the King of Spain, and for this Reason the said King

JOHN OGLEBY.

Lo que opponia Juan Cecilio, sacerdote Ingles contra los ofrecimientos de Juan Ogleby ya propuestos.

Juntamente con este Agente del Rey de Escocia Ogleby, vino en su compañía desde Roma Juan Cecilio Ingles, el qual avia vivido muchos años en Escocia, y conocia y avia tratado mucho a los Condes de Anguis, Arrolli, Huntely y otros Señores; que se avian declarado en favor de la religion Catholica, y por ellos era embiado a España primero y despues a Roma, para contradecir a toda esta negociacion e facion del Rey de Escocia, y de algunos polticos y herejes Ingleses que se oponian

The Objections made by John Cecilio, an English Priest, against the Offers made by John Ogleby.

Together with this Ogleby the King of Scotland's Agent, came in his Company from Rome, John Cecil, an Englishman, who had liv'd many Years in Scotland, and was acquainted, and had much convers'd with the Earls of Angus, Arrol, Huntley and other Lords; who had declar'd in favour of the Catholick Religion; and was by them first sent into Spain, and afterwards to Rome, to oppose all this Negotiation and Contrivance of the King of Scotland, and by some English Politicians

An. 1596. al Rey en ella, para assegurar por esta via la succession que el pretende a la Corona de Inglaterra, y para este effeto el dicho Cecilio dio diferentes Memoriales a su Magestad Catholica en la conformidad siguiente.

Contra la persona de Pury Ogleby, o de Juan Ogleby, Escoces y su negociacion.

I. “ Primeramente dixo, que este Agente aunque la religion que tiene deve deser Catholica, toda via nunca uvo mucha confiança del entre los Catholicos de Escocia, antes ha avido siempre mucha sospecha de su trato, parte por aver estado el en Inglaterra y sido muy intimo con algunos Ministros principales de la Reyna, y parte porque el padre deste Ogleby, y sus deudos y amigos mas cercanos son conocidamente herejes.

2. “ Lo segundo, la sospecha que la carta de confiança que trae este Cavallero del Rey de Escocia, o es fingida o sacada por arte, sin que el Rey aya advertido mucho en ello, y esto por medio de un cierto Thomas Heskin casado con hermana deste Cavallero, el qual Heskin priva mucho con el Rey de Escocia, y mas este Agente ha confessado que el y muchos otro Escoceses saben contrabazer el sello y firma del Rey quando es menester.

3. “ Lo tercero, la manera de negociar deste Cavallero, es muy variable, aguda y subjeta a sospechar; porque en Flandes negociò primero con Carlos Pagetto y con el Doctor Gifordo, y con otros de aquella parcialidad de Ingleses politicos, que siguen al Rey de Escocia, sin resguardo a su religion, y para algunos dellos truxo cartas del Rey de Escocia, y con su direccion fue a Italia para tratar con diversos principes en favor del Rey de Escocia, con muchas queexas contra los fautores del Rey de España, y de la otra liticians and Hereticks who oppos'd the King therein; by this Means to assure the Succession which he pretends to the Crown of England; and to this Effect, the said Cecil presented several Memorials to his Catholick Majesty, of the following Purport.

Against the Person of Pury Ogleby or John Ogleby, a Scot, and his Negotiation.

I. “ In the first Place, he said, that this Agent, tho' the Religion he profess'd was likely Catholick, however, he was never much confided in by the Catholicks of Scotland; but on the contrary, his Behaviour has always been much suspected; partly, on account of his having been in England, and very intimate with some of the Queen's prime Ministers, and partly because this Ogleby's Father, and his Relations and nearest Friends are known Hereticks.

2. “ Secondly, the Jealousy that the Letter of Credence, which this Gentleman brings from the King of Scotland, is either counterfeit, or obtain'd by some Wile, without the King's reflecting much on it; and this, by means of one * Thomas Heskin, who is marry'd to this Gentleman's Sister, the which Heskin is much in favour with the King of Scotland; and besides, this Agent has confess'd, that he and many other Scots, can counterfeit the King's Hand and Seal upon occasion.

3. “ Thirdly, this Gentleman's Method of negotiating, is very variable, sharp and suspicious; for in Flanders he first treated with Charles Paget, and Doctor Gifford, and others of that Party of English Politicians, who adhere to the King of Scotland, without any regard to his Religion; and he brought Letters from the King of Scotland, for some of them, and by their Direction went into Italy, to treat with several Princes in favour of the King of Scotland, with many Complaints against the Favourers of the King of “ el a España, por saber que el en“ tendia bien las cosas de Escocia, que “ es señal que no lleva mui derecha in“ tencion en las cosas de la Religion “ Catholica.

4. “ Lo quarto, este hombre no està
 “ bien con los Condes y otros Señores “ Catholicos que se han levantado por “ la Religion Catholica en Escocia, “ como bien parece en todo lo que pide
 “ al Rey de España en nombre de su
 “ Rey, que no sean oydos; mas desto

Difficultades de la parte del Rey de Escocia.

1. “ Tampoco parece que de la parte
 “ del Rey de Escocia, y de su persona

 “ him, as knowing him to be well

 “ which is a Sign, that his Intention “ is not very sincere, in relation to “ what concerns the Catholick Reli-

4. “ Fourthly, this Man does not “ stand well with the Earls and other “ Catholick Lords, who have taken up “ Arms for the Catholick Religion in “ Scotland; as sufficiently appears by “ all that he demands of the King of “ Spain, in his own King's Name;

* Tho' 'tis probable, Father Parson's Book (publish'd about this time under the Name of Do'eman) might give the King some Alarm; perhaps there was another and better Reason for setting on foot this Treaty. We are told by Roger Creighton a Scotchman, in his Life of Cardinal Vincent Laureo, (who was Protector of Scotland during the Regency of Queen Mary) whose Secretary he was, that the Queen sent her last Will all wrote with her own Hand (by which she excluded her Son of his Succession to the Crown of England in case he continued a Protestant, and gave it to the King of Spain) to that Cardinal; who comparing it with several Letters he had received from that Queen, all of her own Hand, remained perfectly satisfied it was the same; and having signed it himself, and caused an English Bishop then present to sign it likewise, he delivered it to the Conde Olivarez, the then Spanish Embassador with Pope Sixtus Quintus at Rome, to be sent into Spain. I will not avow the Truth of this Relation, because Thuanus (who Lib. 86. of his History relates the Fact, where by the way he mistakes his Author's Name, and calls him Tritonius.) seems to make some doubt of it; for having given us the Relation, he adds, — Id ne bona fide scripserit Tritonius, aut commentus fuerit, non dicam, nam a nemine quod sciam id memoratum. However I could not omit so remarkable a Circumstance, because it seems to point at the true Cause of this Negotiation, and accounts (in some measure) for that Prince's Proceedings on other Occasions of the like nature, of which the Reader will meet with frequent Instances in the following Papers.

Pursuant hereunto, Ogleby the Agent was dispatch'd, and a Portuguese Gentleman was appointed at Madrid to go with him into Scotland, according as he himself had desir'd; but afterwards
the Agent chang'd his Mind, and after having accepted of the said Companion, he left him at the Court of Madrid, and went away without taking leave, to Valencia and Barcelona, where he put on a Gold Chain of 500 Ducats, which the King's Secretary — Idiaques had presented him in his Majesty's Name;
 and within a few Days after, arriv'd at the Court of Madrid, the Secretary Stephen de Ibarra, with whom Ogleby had transacted much in Flanders, and then observing what he had propos'd and treated with his Majesty, he found it was of a very different strain from what he had treated with him about in Flanders; for Stephen de Ibarra said, that Ogleby had confess'd to him, that he went and was sent by the King of Scotland, and by some Hereticks and Politicians to rouie up some People's Spleen, and make them Friends to the King of Scotland against the King of Spain;

el sabia que todo era parcialidad y passion, y que el Rey de Escocia era hereje, y por ser este Agente Catholico trataria los negocios al revez de lo que los herejes y politicos pretendian, y con esto recibio promessa del dicho Secretario de 1000 Ducados de entretenimiento por cada mes, y con esto fue a Italia, y entendiendo despues el dicho Secretario que este hombre avia negociado lo contrario de lo que avia prometido, pidio que por su descargo se detuviesse hasta averiguar las cosas, y assi se detiene oy dia en Barcelona, aunque con muy buen tratamiento, hasta que se sepa, si el Rey de Escocia le embio, o le dio tal Comission o carta de Creencia, y esto es todo lo que hasta aora ha passado en este negocio.

Spain; and that he had conferr'd with An. 1596. Paget and Gifford, and other Englishmen of that Herd; and that he knew it was all Partiality and Passion, and that the King of Scotland was an Heretick, and that this Agent being a Catholick, he would manage Affairs the contrary way from what the Hereticks and Politicians aim'd at; and hereupon he had a Promise made him by the said Secretary of 1000 Ducats Pension per Month, and so he went away to Italy; and the said Secretary being afterwards inform'd that this Man had negotiated so contrary to what he had promis'd, he desir'd, that for his own Vindication, he might be stopp'd till matters were enquir'd into, and accordingly he is at this time detain'd at Barcelona, but with very good Usage, till it can be known whether the King of Scotland sent him, or gave him any such Commission, or Credentials, and this is all that has been hitherto done in this Affair.

Sir HENRY NEVILL'S Negotiation in France,
Anno 1599.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

S I R,

19th April 1599.

Send you a Letter for Monsieur Villeroy, which yt may please you to cause to be delivered him: I send you also a Letter to Mr. Edmonds, which is to geve him notice, that the Queen will have him stay one monethe after your Arrival. I would be glad he might know yt before your coming, because he may provide accordingly. Yf you do send any body before you, Sir, I pray you, let that Letter be sent him. The other Letter to Monsieur Villeroy, may be delivered to any of your Men, when you come yourselfe, for that only concerneth you. And thus hoping to send you the Queen's Letter to Night or to Morrow, I commit you to God. From the Court,

Your loving Kinsman and Friend

RO. CECYLL.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honourable,

Dover, 26th April 1599.

I Received at my coming to Dover, a Letter from my Steward, who is attending me at Deipe, dated two days since; wherein he writes, that Monsieur de Cuchon, Lieutenant Gouvernor of Deipe, hath received advertissement, that all French Ships are staied in Spain, with an intent, (as ys pretended) to use them in the Fleet, which that King is now preparing against the Navy of the States. The Lieutenant rode presently with the Newes to Fescampe, where the Governor lyeth sicke; and from thence to the Court, to advertise the King; the Matter being there generally very evil interpreted. I received heere also a Letter

Letter from Mr. Edmonds, dated the 20th of Aprill, (but what Stile I know not) An. 1599.
 that the King was to remoove to Blois within 10 or 12 Dayes, and after some few Dayes stay there, to passe forthwith to Molins in Bourbonnois; with pretence to go to the Bathes to Pogues, but indeed with a purpose to take some order about the * Marquisat of Saluces; and to receive som Newes from Florence, towching this Mariadge with that Duke's Neece. I feare heereby, I shall not arrive at Paris, or Blois, before his Departure; and therefore I humbly pray your Honor's Directions, what I shall doe yf I fynde him gon. I am heere attending the Wind, which is yet directly contrarie; as soone as yt turnes I will loofe no opportunity. And soe for this tyme, I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's very humbly to be commanded

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

S I R,

26th Aprill 1599.

I Send you the Queen's Letter, and a Copy, least her Characters should not be so plainly read; you shall do well to let Monsieur Villeroy have yt, for yt is not so kind a Style, as I would be forye (soeing in former tymes her Majesties Inck hath bene mixed with Gall, that now there is Hony put into this,) it should not be understood, by Default of not reading: Let the Secretary therefore, have yt before hand. We have receaved Newes that the Earl of Essex is well arrived; and here all things are as they were, saving this, that the Earle of Suffex, the Lord Cobham, and Lord Scroope, are chosen Knights of the Garter. I fynd the Queene will lyke yt well, yf you do procure the King accidentally, to send hitber to be † Installed. Your Company I am sure is merry yf you be together, and so I wishe you ever; but Mr. William Killegrew might be here the Queen fayeth, as well as taking his Pleasure. From the Court.

Your loving Kinsman and Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

* The Duke of Savoy made himself Master of the Marquisat of Saluces in the Year 1588, during the famous Assembly at Blois, in which the Duke of Guise was murdered. Henry the 3^d's Death happening soon after, the King's Affairs were too much imbroyled at his first coming to the Crown, to attend to this Usurpation. However, this Matter came to be seriously considered at the Treaty of Vervins in the Year 1598. But the Duke of Savoy peremptorily refusing to deliver it up, it was (after much contestation) agreed on both Sides, that the whole Affair should be referred to the Pope, (Clement the 8th) who should within one Year determine the Right, and in whose Sentence both Parties should acquiesce. Memoires du Bentivoglio, Vol. I. ch. 4. p. 291. D'Avila, lib. 15.

The French King's Claim to the Marquisat, is set down so clearly by Cardinal D'offat, that I beg leave to give it the Reader in his own Words.

*Le Marquisat de Saluces de toute Ancienneté étoit Fief de Daupiné, & les Marquis en prenoient investiture des Daupins de Viennois, & leur en faisoient hommage, & serment de fidélité: Auquel droit avoient succédé les Rois de France: lorsque le Daupiné leur fut acquis. Et partant étant depuis faillie la ligne des Marquis de Saluces, ledit Marquisat, par la loi commune à tous Fiefs, seroit de lui-même retourné aux Rois de France, comme Daupins de Viennois, quand il n'y auroit eü autre acquisition precedente. Mais au commencement des guerres de Piémont, regnant le Roi Francois I & en l'année 1535 ou 36, Le Marquis d'alors apellé François qui estoit Vassal de la Couronne, comme dit est; & qui encore commandoit à une armée que le Roy payoit, s'en alla proditoirement servir Charle-quin contra la France, avec ladite armée soldoyée par le Roy, & endommagea infiniment les affaires du Royaume & de S. M. qui pour cete insigne felonie & trahison se saisit dudit Marquisat, comme retourné à luy par les droits & coutumes des Fiefs, & ne se laissa onques depuis. Outre les susdits deux titres, les freres puisnez dudit Marquis François, (who was killed at the Siege of Carmagnole in 1537) qui n'ont point laissé d'enfans, ont fait cession & transport à nos Rois, en tant que besoin seroit, de tous les droits qu'ils pouvoient avoir & pretendre audit Marquisat. S I R,

Dover, 27th April 1599.

I Wrote unto you yesternight by the ordinary Post, of the Advertizements I had received from Diepe, towching the Arrest of the Frenche Ships in Spaine; and likewise what I had understood from Mr. Edmonds, of the King's remove to Blois, and from thence to Molins; wherein I hope I shall receive your Honours Direction for my Stay till his Returne, or following, before I go hence; seeing the Wind is yet so contrary, and the Weather so fowle, as we cannot put to Sea. This Morning I received your Honors Letter, with her Majesties inclosed to the Frenche King; whereof I am exceeding glad, and do most humbly kisse her Royal Hands for the great Honour she hath therein don unto me, which I pray God to geve me Grace to deserve, and to do her Service, which may be answerable to her Highness's Expectation, and myne owne Duty. I will endeavour in such sort as your Honor prescribes, to procure that the King shall send over some Personnage of Quality to be Installed for him, and therein yt may please your Honor, to let me know, what Person will be most gratefull to her Majestie; for yt is very likely, that in the choise of the Person, they will chiefly regard her Majesty's contentation. I fear yf this Journey of the King's hold, yt will geve him occasion to put off all Resolution (yf not all Cogitation) of payment of his Debt to her Majestie, till his Returne. Yf yt should be my good hap to fynd him about Paris or at Blois, and to have Audience before his going; I desyre to know her Majesties Pleasure, whether I shall not even upon my fyrst access moove hym in that matter; and also, whether having had Audience before his going, I shall need to follow, or not: For yf yt myght stand with her Majesties good liking, and be no prejudice to her Service, I would gladly fettle my selfe and my familie, before I undertake so long a Voiage; and so hoping of Your Honors speedy direction in these points, I humbly take my leave.

Your Honors, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honourable,

Diepe, 3^d May 1599. O. S.

Y T may please your Honor to understand, that I arryved in this Towne the second of May, having continued almost 3 Dayes upon the Sea. I found the Gouvernor, and his Leutenant, both absent; but have received great Curtesies of the Sergent Major of the Towne, called Monseieur Favet, by the Commandment, as he told me, of the Gouvernor. Touching the Arrest of the Frenche Shippes, whereof I wrote unto your Honor from Dover, I learne heere, that yt is of all Shippes, (above a hundred) and that he offers them very good Entertainment. Among the rest, there is one Shipp staid, belonging to the Gouvernor of this Towne, the Captaine whereof hath written hither, that the Fleet which that King prepares, consisteth of some 38 great Shippes, and 50 Gallies.

Touching this King's Voiage, I understand for certaine, that yt holdes not only to the Bathes besides Molins, but to Lions, and from thence (as he yet purposeth) to Marseilles. This place affords no other News at this tyme, that I dare wryte to your Honor; yet some bruits I heare, that the Duke of Savoie, fortifieth his Frontiers towards France; which should argue no great intention, to satisfie the King for the Marquisat; but of that I shall certifie your Honor more from Paris. I purpose to go hence to morrow to Roien, where I expect answer, by a Messenger I sent Post of purpose to Mr. Edmonds, of the certaintie ric and speede of the King's remoove. That little tyme I remaine there, I meane to imploy, in learning as much as I canne by our English Merchants, of the Nature and Valew of those Customes, which are by the * Contract, to be assigned to her Majestie, for her remboursement. I hope e're I arryve at Paris, I shall receave answere from your Honor, of both the Letters I wrote from Dover; and so, &c.

Your Honors, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

My good Cosen,

1st May 1599.

I Have acquainted her Majestie with the Substance of both your Letters, wherby I fynd her Majestie thus disposed to direct you; when you come to Paris, yf the King be gon to Blois, and so resolved of his Jorney further; in respect that the Matter wherin you should do her most Service, will require Expedition; her Pleasure is, that for a beginning, you repaire unto him with as much speede as you canne; and to request him, yf he goe further, to be pleased to assign you over to such of his Ministers as may have Commission to proceed with you. This Jorney to Blois, her Majestie would have you to take, as well to save the following him further, as to prevent the losse of Tyme to beginne the Matter. And yf you fynde him at Blois, then you may returne to Paris, or where he shall appoint his Commissioners to joyne with you. Herein her Majestie wisheth me to note unto you this one observation, that whatsoever you spend needlesly after th' English Fashion, the Frenche will laughe you to scorne for yt, and she will never thanck you; for there never came Frenche Embassador hither, but served their Master as well with Frugalitie, as any of hers have served her with Prodigalitie.

There remaineth now, that I acquainte you what her Majesty willeth you to delyver, both to the King, and Monsieur de Villeroy: First, that notwithstanding all such advertissements as were brought from Spaine into France, wherein assurance was geeven that there was no preparation for any Action of Offence; in which respect her Majestie was contented to License the carryinge of Corne; and where (out of her respect to the Frenche King) Proclamation is made, that no Shippe carryinge a French Flag, should be molested: First, it is most evident that the Preparations are greate and suspicious; for althoughe we know, that in regard of the Hollanders Fleete, which will lye upon their Coast, they are dryven to make Levies and Musters in Spaine, and happelye to provide a Fleet to encounter them; yet I cannot comprehend yt, why the King's Shippes and Provision, made in the Sowth Parts of Spaine, should come to the Groyn; for there is no greate thing to be had by the Flemings; neyther see I why the Gallies should come so far downe, whereof there is mention made, that they are daily looked for in that Haven.

Secondly, you shall make it knowen, that at this day the Frenche have carried him an infinite deale of Corne, and because by our Proclamation they may not be searched for any thing, they may cary what they list; and the King did always promise that he would not suffer Corne yt self to be carried, yf any Army were making. In this consideration, her Majestie requyreth you, expressly to desyre the King to take good Order that his Subjects be brideled; for even

* The Reader may find the Treaty at large in Rymer's Fœdera, Vol. 16. p. 102. by which it is agreed; Que sa Majesté & ses commis receuront & cueilleront tout le profit de toutes sortes de Tailles, Taxes, Customs & Droits, qui pourront reussir du dedans & des Environs de la Ville de Roüen, & du Havre de Grace, par les noms des Impositions & Domaine foraine, & les Gabelles des sels, & par les noms des quatrièmes des Vins, ou aucuns autres choses, ou d'autres impositions pour l'entrée des Marchandises, &c.

An. 1599. out of the Spanishe Ports themselves, we are certainly advertized and know, that they could not make th' Army, without helpe of the Frenche. And so, &c.

Your loving Cosen and Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

When you make your Dispatches hyther, yf any thing be fit for me to know, which you would not have the Queene see, you may write a private Letter, for she must see the Dispatches.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 15th May 1599, O. S.

Y^T may please you to let her most Excellent Majestie understand, I arrived at Paris the 8th of May, and fynding the King then in Towne, (tho' in secret manner at Zamet's House;) I signified my arrival unto him by Mr. Edmonds, and prayed Audience, as soone as yt might stand with his good Pleasure. He appointed me to come to Moret; a Towne some tow Leagues from Fountainbleau, upon the Satterday after, and promised to give me Accesse upon the Sunday. Accordingly I repayred to Moret, where I found the Spanish Ambassador John Baptista Taxis, * the Pope's Nuncio the Bishop of Modena, and the Ambassador of Savoy le Chevalier Breton, already lodged all very neare one another, and to my Lodgings. The next Morning, the King sent Monsieur Gondi, and Monsieur Luffan, Gouvernor of Blaye upon the River of Bordeaux, and Captaine of the Scottish Guard, to Moret, to conduct me to Fountainbleau; where I had a Chamber appointed for me to retyre into, and a great dynner prepared for me and the Gentlemen that attended me. After dinner, the Duke of Biron was sent to bring me to the King, who by the way used very many Complements unto me, and protestations of his dutiful Affection to her Majestie, which I was bold to answere with som Complements of her Majesties Commendations unto him, and of her good Acceptation of his good Affection towards her, and courtesie and good offices he had done to her Ministers here, and to divers others of her Subjects, that had come into these Parts.

I found the King in his Gallery, who upon my approche unto him, advanced himselfe tow or three Paces to receive and embrace me; and told me, I was very welcome, and that he had advanced himself to embrace me, but to the Spanish Ambassador he had not styrred one foote, which indeed I learned to be trew. I delivered him her Majesties Letters with all due Complements; and after som Questions on his Parte of her Majesties good Healthe, I told him, " That the " Queen my Mistrefs being very willing to continue the good Amitie, that had " beene so long fence begon and entertained betwene them, and knowing that " nothing could be more availeable thereunto, than a good and reall intelligence
 " between them, had sent me to resyde about his Person as her Ordinarie Am- " bassador, and had geeven me charge to do him all Honor and Service, that " was fit for a Minister of a Princess that was his trew and perfect Freind, as " she had many wayes declared by lively and effectuell Demonstrations. That " she had for that purpose commaunded me to direct my whole intention to that " End, to fortifie this good Alliance and Union that is now betwene them,
 " which I prayed him to be assured that I would not faile to performe to the " uttermost of my Abillitie, knowing that I could doe nothing more acceptable
 " to her Majestie, or more agreeable to her Commaundment.

* Gaspar Silingardi, a Native of Modena, recommended to that Nunciature by the Pope, and just then arriv'd at Paris upon the Affair of the Marquisat. Vid. Letres d' Ofsat, Vol. 3. p. 322. Edit. Amst. 1714.

The King answered, “ that he took in very kynd parte, her Majesties good An. 1599.
 “ Disposition to the Continuance of the Amitie, wherein he would never faile to “ concurre with her in desyre and earnest Affection. That he had received fo “ many reall Tokens of her Majesties favourable Intention towards him, as he “ could not, nor would not forget. That indeed good Ministers were meet to “ be imployed betwene Princes, and might be of great moment, to the further“ ance or hinderance of their Master’s entent: That he had had from her Ma“ jestic divers Men imployed to him, with whome he had treated with good Sa“ tisfaction; but agayne he had fownd some soe incompatible, and of so straunge
 “ a Nature, as he could not with any Contentment converse with them. That “ he promised himselfe all good of me, both from the Assurance he had received “ thereof by her Majesties Letters, and for the good Report he had hard other“ wise: And that I might likewise be assured, that he would use me with all Ho“ nor and Curtesie, as an acceptable Minister of a Princessse so dear unto him.
 “ I gave him thanks for his good Conccit, and offer of favorable Usage; and for “ my carriage in my Charge, prayed him to assure himselfe, that I had received “ therein so streight Commaundment from her Majestic, as I durst not, nor had
 “ in any wise Will to disobey her”.

Then I descended to the first Point of my Instruction, conteining a Congratulation of her Majesties, for his Preservation from * the Attempts which had bene against his Person, which I delivered in such sort, as I am therein directed; amplyfying as muche as I could, her Majesties Care of his Safetie, and ministring what jealousie I might with congruities, of them that had bene discovered to be the Authors, and perswaders of suche practizes. The King answered only,
 “ that Her Majestic and He had great Cause to praise God for their Preservation “ from so many wicked Practizes against their Lyves, and that he trusted that “ God would continue to be mercifull to them bothe, that they might lyve, and “ see as they had done, the Confusion of such as entended Mischiefe to them;
 “ which he wished with as great Affection to the Queene, as to himselfe, to “ whom yf she were a Man he would call himselfe a perfect Friend, but being “ as she is, Je me diray son Serviteur”. I said I praised God to continew the extraordinary Favour he had shewed to bothe their Majesties, for the Happinesses of the greatest Parte of Christendome, which had interest in their Preserva-tions.

And so I proceeded to the second point of my Instructions, towching the E- dict †; wherein I said, “ that her Majestic was very glad to heare that he had so “ well provyded for the Quiet of his Kingdom, and geven so good Contentment “ to his faythefull Subjects of the Reformed Religion, by the Edict which he “ had lately published; wherein I said, that her Majestic did acknowledge his “ great Wiidome in discovering the Errours of his Predecessours, who by a con“ trary Course, whereunto they were ledde by Evill Counsaillers, had well nigh “ overthrowne their Estate; and that she was very gladde (seing God had so “ ordained yt for his greater good) that he had ‡ found some Difficultie and “ Opposition in the passing of yt, that so his said Subjects of the Religion might ding farther, as in the same Article I am instructed. The King’s Answer was,

 “ That noe Man could better discover the Errours of his Predecessours Counsaile

* 'Tis probable the Ambassador had chiefly in View the Attempt of John Chastell, which Fact is related at large by all the French Historians. And altho’ it was committed some Years before, (viz. in December 1594.) yet the Restoration of the Jesuits, (who were banished on that Account) being at this time strongly laboured by the Pope, and seconded by Cardinal D’ossat and Monsieur Villeroy, the Queen thought there was no Way so likely to prevent their Designs from taking Effect, as by reminding him of the Dangers he had escaped from that Society.

† This was the famous Edict of Nantes, which was passed a few Months before.

‡ The Reader may find a large Account of the Difficulties the King met withal in this Affair, if he consults Serres’s History of France, pag. 887, &c. Memoires de Sully, Vol. 1. ch. 89. And Benoist’s History of this Edict, Vol. 1.

 “ thancked God he could tell how to make himfelfe to be obeyed.” I commended his Wiſdome and Conſtancye therein, as the only affured means of true Peace and Proſperitie to his Kingdome.

And ſo I paſſed to the third point towching Depredations; “ wherein I told him “ fyrſt, what care her Maſteſtie had taken to give him Satisfaction, bothe for Pre“ vention of ſuche Offences hereafter, and for the Punishment of thoſe that “ Ambaſſador had been acquainted with; in the latter, by granting an * extra- “ ſhould freely and wholly attend that Buſineſs. Secondly, I told him the “ Queene did expect that the like would be performed on his part, and that good

 “ and ſpeedy Juſtice might be done to her Subjects, of ſuch Wrongs as they had “ ſuſtained by the Frenche during the Trowbles; which throughe delay or want “ of Juſtice, had bin made more heavie and burdenſome unto them ſometimes,
 “ (by reaſon of their exceſſive Charges in following the Suites) then th’ originall “ loſſe yt ſelf; which I ſaid her Maſteſtye imputed in great part to the Difficul“ ties and Iniquitie of that Time, hoping that now under his peaceable Gou-“ vernement, that he would take order that they ſhould have Redreſſe, and ſynd
 “ all good Treatment and Favour, ſeeing he had found them often readie to ſacri“ fice themſelves to do him Service. Thyrdly I ſayd, her Maſteſtie did likewise “ aſſure her ſelfe upon the Promiſe made by his Ambaſſador, that this great liber“ ty which he had graunted to his Subjects, to paſſ unſearched and uncontrol“ led into Spain, or any other place, ſhould not be converted by them to her “ Prejudice, either by colleuring the Spaniards, or other her Enemies Goods;
 “ or by transporting into Spain, or any other of that King’s Dominions, Arms, “ Munitions, or any Inſtruments or Materials for Warre, eyther by Land or Sea;
 “ whereof I ſayd ſhe had geven me charge to make ſpecial Instance unto him,
 “ that ſome ſpeedy Order might be taken for her Assurance, as a matter which “ might be otherwiſe very prejudicial unto her Eſtate, and might give her occa-“ ſion to repent her of her former Reſolution.

Fourthly, having received your Honors Letters of the fyrſt of May, the very ſame Day I went to Moret, by a Meſſenger which Sir Thomas Vaine ſent of purpoſe from Dover. I told him, as I was thereby directed, “ that her Maje“ ſtie when ſhe aſſented to make the aforeſaid Proclamation, and thereby to give “ free Paſſage to all Ships bearing Frenche Flaggs, did foreſee that yt might be “ very prejudicial unto her, for that th’ enemies might by that means be ſufficient-

 “ the confidence of his Affection and true Friendſhip towards her, and upon a

 “ as is agreeable with the constant and perfect Amitie which he hathe professed
 “ to beare her, and his Promise afore said made by his Ambassador, so as she may “ reape the Fruite of the Confidence and Assurance which she reposed in him.
 “ And that she had the rather commanded me to deale earnestlie in this Point, “ because she is perfectly enformed out of those parts of Spaine, that without
 “ the great Supp^{ly} of Corne, which they have already receaved out of France, “ they would never have bene able to have proceeded so farre as they have done
 “ in their Preparations.

“ The King answered to the fyrst and second, that he had understood from “ his Ambassador, her Majestie's Willingness to have a mutual Reformation in “ those Causes of Depredation, which he was very glad of, and would be found
 “ as forward on his part to establishe a good Course therein, as she had bin.
 “ That he never had cause to complaine of her Majestie's Justice, but had al“ ways found her very inclinable to do Justice, as a Princess of great Honor, and “ the like Intention was always in him: But there might perhaps be som Defect
 “ in her Ministers, who for their own Profit, would peradventure not hold so “ streight a Hand in these Causes as was fit; but he knew her Majestie had noe “ Benefit by these Matters, and therefore he was the more earnest to urge a Re“ formation of the Abuses, whereby many, and those of the best sort were pre“ judiced, (meaning, as I guesse, the Merchants;) and few, and those of the “ worst sort, benefited.” To the third he answered nothing in particular, but “ only said non, non, non, whiles I was speaking, as yf he meant that he had noe “ purpose his Subjects should abuse her Majestie's Favour and Freedome granted “ them: But in that, and likewise in the fourth, I will urge a more particular An-“ swere at my next Audience. “ To the fourth he seemed willing, and said, “ he would take a Pretext to doe yt upon the Arrest which they had made in “ Spaine of Frenche Shippes, upon which Point he told me, he had dealt the “ Day before very rowndly with the Spanish Ambassador. He told me farther, “ there had bene no very great quantity of Corne carried out of France thither, “ but rather as he thought by the Easterlings. And for the Preparations in “ Spaine, he said he was enformed that they were suche, as were not likely to “ be used for Invasion of any of her Majestie's Dominions, but only to with“ stand the States Attempts. But that yt was not amisse for her Majestie to “ take the Allarme of yt, and not to be unfurnished; and that oftentimes suche “ false Alarmes were very profitable. He said further, that the Drought in “ Spaine had bin so great already this Year, as was like to breed an extreme “ want of Corne there this next Year, which he thought they would seeke to sup“ ply by the Easterlings.

“ I told him, that her Majestie intended not to give that libertie to any Nation,
 “ as she did to his Subjects, because she had not that Confidence in any, that she “ had in him; and that I dowbted not but she would have a vigilant Eye to “ the Easterlings Proceedings. Hereupon he tooke occasion to tell me of the “ Placart set out by the States, which he complained of as a thing injurious to “ his Subjects; I said, I thought it an effect of great Necessity, which had no “ Law; and more I forbore to speake, because I understood by Mr. Edmonds, “ that he was jealous that yt had bene done by her Majestie's Privitie and Di“ rection.

After these Speeches he began to question with me about Irishe Matters, and “ asked me, “ what Newes I had of my Lord of Effex; I told him I had only re-“ ceaved thus much, that he was well arryved there, after some difficultie in “ passing the Sea, by reason of foule Weather and contrary Winds. Then he “ said he would tell me Newes of him, which he had receaved; namely, that 2
 “ or 3 of the principal Rebels were come in, and had submitted themselves “ unto him.” I was ashamed that he should know more of those matters than I;
 “ but not to seeme to be ignorant, I answer'd, “ There was a secret Rumor and

An. 1599. "Expectation of some such matter." Then he beganne to enquire of the Peace between her Majestie and the King of Spaine, and asked me how neare yt was to the Conclusion. "I told him his Ambassador had bene made acquainted with all that passed in this matter; Oh, said the King, I think I know more than he dothe of yt. I assured him, that at my coming away there was noe more past than had bene communicated both to his Ambassador there, and to himselfe, by Mr. Edmonds: Well, said he, the other syde tells me another Tale: I protested I knew noe more then I had said, and yf there were any further Proceedings, yt was since my coming away, whereunto he replied not.

These Interlocutory Speeches being past, I tooke occasion partly out of my Instructions, and partly uppon som Instance made unto me by some of our Merchants trading into these Parts, to recommend unto him the Maintenance of the free Trade and Entercourse betwene these twoe Realmes, alleading, "That those were the surest and most durable Freindsships, which were founded not only upon the Disposition of the Princes, but upon the Interest of the Subjects also; and therefore prayed him to take order the Entercourse might be continued, in such ample sorte as yt had bene in his Predecessors Tymes, and according to the Treaties of perpetuall Amitie passed between the twoe Crownes. He answered, that he would have me present a Memorial of that I required in that behalfe, and his Counsell should consider of yt, and give me Satisfaction.

This is the Substance of that which passed betwene the King and me at this fyrst Audience; for as towching the matter of Scotland, I understood by Mr. Edmonds, he hath already advertized your Honor, that this King hath renewed th' ancient Privileges graunted to that Nation, and confirmed Amitie with that King, with omission of such Points conteyned in former Treaties, as had any reference to Enmitie with us: And to receive Confirmation on that King's part, he determined to send into Scotland Monsieur de Betunes Brother to Monsieur de Rhosni; therefore this Alteration being growen in the matter, I thought yt best not to deale in that point, till I understood her Majestie's further Pleasure.

Since my coming to this Towne, the Ambassador of Venice hath bene to visit me, and likewise the Agent of the States, who tells me he hath Commission from his Superiours, to communicate all his Negotiations with me, and to receive my Advise in them. I would gladly know her Majestie's Pleasure how far I shall make my selfe Partaker of his Counsaile or Actions; for I see the States desyre very much to draw some Countenance from her Majestie, in all their Proceedings heere, and could be content to be thought to have very streight Intelligence with her, and to doe nothing without her Privitie.

The Treatie of Peace begonne by Cardinal Andreas hath geven the Alarme not only to them, but to many other here; and th' Agent told me, that Monsieur de Villeroy assured him yt was concluded, and staid but the Archduke's Return to be perfected. The like he saythe he saw written from the Frenche Ambassador in England to the Duke de Bouillon. I answered all Men as my Instructions direct me, yet I think yt not amisse for her Majestie's Affayres, that this King should be held in some Jealousie of yt.

This Daie likewise, the Bishop of Glasgow Ambassador of Scotland, sent to complementize with me, and to excuse him uppon his Debillitie, that he hath not yet seene me. The Princeesse of Orenge hath likewise sent to visitte me, and would have come her selfe but that I went to the Courte; and to prevent her, I purposè to see her to Morrow. I was willing to have delivered her Majestie's Letters to the Duke of Bouillon, and Monsieur de Villeroy, when I had Audience, and signified unto them bothe by Mr. Edmonds, that I was desyrous to have some privat Conference with them: But they bothe thoughte yt fit to be deferred till my next Audience, which I am promised upon Munday next, being their Whis-son-Munday. I was desyrous to have had yt sooner, but could not obtayne yt, because the King had determined to spend this Week in Hunting, and in some secret Walks to this Towne. Presently after the Hollidays he purposeth to goe to Blois,

Blois, but whether any further or nay is not yet certaine; for by reason of this Concourse of Ambassadors, he staid his going to the Bathes till the Season was past, and is now dissuaded by the Physicians to use them this Yeare. And for his Journey to Lions, yt was not without som referēce to the Affayres of the Marquisat, where by the Mediation of the * Generall of the Cordeliers, sent of purpose by the Pope, and at the Instance of the Duke of Savoy himselfe, he hath bin contented to give him 2 Moneths tyme more to advise of an Answer. The Duke desired 6 Moneths, but he hath yealded but to two, yet with a purpose, as I am enformed from a very good Hand, to enlarge it two more yf need be; purposing to keepe the Duke of Savoy in the meane tyme bothe in Suspens and Charge, whiles he himselfe may also make his Provisions for the Warre, for the which he is yet utterly unready. Yet he lets not so set a good face upon the matter, and gives Commissions to levie Companies to draw downe that way; and the Duke of Biron told me he had already four Companies ready for that Service. But the truth is, there is no Mony, nor any other Provision in a readines.

An. 1599.

I understand that the King told the Spanish Ambassador, that he had some Bruits that his Master meant to assist the Duke against him in that Cause. Yf that yt were true he sayd, he was as ready to marche that Day as the next to meet him, and that he would send a Valet of his Chamber, to wishe him that eyther they might embrace as Friends, or meet in the Feild. The said Ambassador hath expostulated with the King upon three Points; Th'one of the Enterprise desseigned by Baligny some tyme Gouverneur of Cambray against that Towne; the second, that this King hath an Ambassador with the States, which he called his Masters Rebels; and lastly, that he suffer'd Monsieur de la Noüe, and many others, to passe to their Aid with good Troupes. The effect of all his Complaynts is only this, that the King hath promised to make a new Proclamation upon paine of Death, that no Man shall goe to the Service of any Foraine Prince or State, without his Leave.

I cannot yet learne by any meanes, of any Desseign in this King to erect a Navie Royall, neyther cann I heare of any great Increase of Shipping in all the Coaste of Normandy, althoughe I employed some of purpose that way to discover yt. True yt is they have bin somewhat buisier in trading since the Peace then they were before, and that must needs in tyme increase their Shipping. At my next Audience I meane to deale with the King about her Majestie's Mony, because I am like to have no more before his Journey, althoughe I have littell hope of any great effect for more than 20000 Crownes, which he hath already assigned to be paid at the Instance of Mr. Edmonds, and that with great Difficultie. I moved your Honor before my coming away about the † Treaty of Blois, whether you thought yt not fitt that the King should be urged to the Confirmation of yt, being the most beneficiall Treaty for England that hath bin made at any tyme. I beseech you let me understand her Majestie's Pleasure in yt, for I think the King will be easilie drawn to that, or any other reasonnable matter that shall be proposed, during the Suspens of her Majestie's Treaty with Spaine, and his own with Savoy. And so desyring your Honor that I may heare often from you, which will be bothe my Comfort and my Reputation heere, I most humbly take my leave, recommending your Honor to the safe keeping and gracious Care of the Almighty.

Your Honors, &c.

A private Letter (of the same Date) from Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

S I R,

BESIDES my Dispatch, which may perhaps be communicated to her Majestie, I thought good by this private Letter to your Honor, to signifie what passed more betwene the King and me, then I have therein advertised. Fyrst, in the matter of Depredations, when he seemed to lay the blame of lacke of Justice upon our Ministers, he named directly our Admiraltie, complayning very bitterly against them. Moreover after the Speche he used of the Irishe matters, he asked me yf my Lord of Essex and my * Lord Admirall were made Freends before his Journey. I answered, I knew of no other but frendly Disposition betwene them, and yf there had bin any other at any tyme, yet at the tyme of his Departure I knew they were in very kynd Termes. Then he asked me, whether your Honor and my Lord of Essex did agree any better than you did. These Questions were strange to me, and I answered, that I knew of muche Kindnes that had passed betwene your Honor and him, but never of any Unkindnes. He sayd, Yes, yes; and that he had hard much of yt. I told him, that in matters of Advice and Counsaile, you might perhaps have differed sometyme in Opinion, which was ordinary in Princes Counsailes, and I thought his Court was not free from yt: No, no, said he, I have had the greatest paine in the World to containe them, but I have made them know my Mind, that I will have them agree, and I thinck that the best course for the Queene your Mistres also. Then he fell in Commendations of your Honor, with Words of very good Affection, and said, he thought † your Journey into France had done you noe hurt. I told him, I had hard your Honor acknowledge the great Contentment and Honor you had received here, and how readie you would be to acknowledge yt (referring your Dutie to her Majestie) with any Service to him, with which he seemed to be well pleased. ‡ He told me also a Merriment, that he understood that the Archduke that Night he was married, was not able to consummat Matrimony with the Infanta, which he had likewise related to the Generall of the Cordeliers, who had answered that yt might well be, for he had hard the Archduke's Confessor affirme, that he knew, when he was 37 Years old he had never towched Woman. Thus praying Pardon of your Honor, yf whiles I thought to relate you all that passed, I have troubled you with more then needed, I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's, &c.

expresse Messenger. I have not yet any material thing to advertize your Honor more then I signified in my last dispatche, only I perceave yt generally beleevd heere by Men of the best Place, that the Preparations of Spain are only for Defence: But withall, the Proceedings of the State's Fleet, begins to be dowbted of: In which case yt is not amisse to be thought of, whether that which was fyrst intended for defence, may not be converted another way, when themselves are out of Feare.

The King's Marriadge with the Duke of Florence's Necce is muche in speeche here, howbeit, I learne from very good Hands, that the Duke of Florence hath made but a cold Answer to Gondie's overture, who was used in yt; Namely, " That the King did once before make the same Motion, and afterwards falling " in liking with Madame Gabriele, he left yt with her Disgrace, having drawn " some Loan of Mony from the Duke upon that Pretence. That since, he hath " entered into som Treaty with the Emperor for the Match, and althoughe he " be not farre engaged that way, but that he may retyre when he will; yet till " he may be better assured of the King's Constancy, he seeth no reason to do " yt". Hereupon they be at some stay, and know not what to build upon; which is likewise the occasion that the King's Journey is so uncertain, only he resolves to go this next Weeke to Blois, and there to stay two Moneths, and there to resolve to go further, cyther as the Matter of the Marquisat, or the Proceeding of this Match shall guide him. In the meane tyme, not to be utterly destitute, he causeth * Madamoiselle d'Entragues his new Favourite, and Villar's Wife, his late Mistrefs's Sister, to follow this Progreis; and hath assigned to the former 500 Crownes a Moneth for her Charges. Upon Munday next, I am promised a second Audience at Fontainebleau, whereupon I shall be able to advertise your Honour that shall be more material. In the mean tyme, &c.

May, 1599. O. S.

LA Royne ayant à faire la guerre en Irelande à ses rebelles, qui cognoissant la grandeur de leur faulte; & estant soustenuë par les supports du Roy d'Espagne, se pourront opiniastrec à la defence, & par consequent faire trainer ceste guerre en longueur, qui ne peut estre que de despence incroyable à la dicte Dame Royne, pour estre ce pais là desnuë de victuailles, & toutes choses necessaires pour faire vivre une armée; & pour estre la dicte Dame aussy contrainte d'entretenir perpetuellement outre l'armée de terre, une flotte de vaisseaux, non seulement pour empescher le secours que leur pourroit estre envoyé d'Ailleurs, mais aussi pour y apporter des vivres & autres choses requises; & ayant outre ce la dicte Dame occasion de se munir & fortifier en son Royaume, contre les desseins & preparatifs du dict Roy, qui sont notoires à tout le monde, qui ne peut estre qu'avecq une charge & despense extreme; elle s'est neantmoins resoluë, comme Princesse genereuse, qui a tousjours eu devant les yeulx, l'honneur & la conservation de son Estat de se roidir à l'encontre de toutes les difficultez qui se sont presentees en cest affaire, & de s'evertuer courageusement à la defence, ayant deliberé, d'y employer tout ce que Dieu luy a donné, des moyens & amis. Et encores que par le droict d'Amitie & de raison, elle peut justement & à

An. 1599. bon droit seconder ses amis & allies, & singulierement le Roy, de luy rendre les mesmes offices & effecte d'amitié, qu'il a tiré d'elle en son besoin; si est ce, qu'elle s'est contentée, de ne luy faire autre instance pour l'heure, si non, qu'il luy plaise de l'accommoder de quelque sommes de deniers, qu'elle luy a presté, ou bien employé pour son secours & service, durant les troubles de son Royaume. Ce qu'estant si juste & raisonnable, & le moindre de toutes les faveurs qu'elle peut attendre du Roy son bon Frere & Allié; elle espere, qu'il prendra l'affaire à coeur; & advisera promptement & serieusement aux Moyens de luy en donner contentement & satisfaction. Et encore que le Roy ne faisant que sortir des troubles, & n'ayant que bien peu gusté des effects de la paix, puisse pretendre, qu'il n'a pas encor le moien de luy donner entiere satisfaction; toutes fois la Royne a ceste ferme opinion & assurance de sa bonne volonté, qu'il aura esgard à l'estat de ses affaires, & ne se servira pas de ces excuses en son endroit; estant tousjours plus raisonnable, que le dict Seigneur Roy s'efforce encores qu'avecq quelque difficulté, & par moiens extraordinaires, de rendre à la dicte Dame cest argent dont elle l'a accommodé.

Et ayant la dicte Dame Royne receu promesse du Roy par son Ambassadeur resident aupres d'elle, qu'en temps suspect, quand le Roy d'Espagne feroit des preparatifs de guerre par mer, qu'il donneroit ordre que ses subjectz ne portassent du bled, ou autre grain en Espagne, dont ce Roy la se pourroit servir pour l'avittuellement de sa Flotte, & ayant fort fraichement eu advertissement, des grands preparatifs que se font à present de ce coste la, & que pour estre prests de faire voile, ilz n'attendent que le bled qui leur doit estre fourni de France; elle prie pourtant le Roy son bon Frere, d'y donner tel ordre, que sera conforme à sa dicte promesse, & à la vraie & parfaict amitié qu'elle s'est tousjours promise de luy.

Et comme ladicte Dame, sur l'assurance aussi de la bonne volonté, & amitié du Roy, & à l'instance de son Ambassadeur, a esté contente d'octroyer libre passage en Espagne à tous navires François, & a fait defendre sur griesues peines à ses subjectz de les arrester, rechercher, ou autrement incommoder, sur quelque pretexte que ce soit; le tout sur le promesse du Roy, faicte par son Ambassadeur, qu'il ne permettroit pas que ses subjectz en abusassent au prejudice de la dicte Dame, ou en prestant le noms faussement aux biens & Marchandises de ses Eunnemis, ou en leur fournissant par voie des Marchandises ou autrement, des armes, munitions, & autres materiaux de guerre, par mer, ou par terre. Ladicte Dame pourtant cognoissant bien l'importance de ceste affaire à la conservation de son estat, a trouvé bon, de prier le Roy son bon frere, de y promptement pourvoir, en telle sorte qu'il luy semblera propre, pour le bien de ses affaires; & mesme, qu'il luy plaise de luy faire entendre par quel moien il a deliberé d'y pouvoir; a fin, que comme ilz sont d'accord de la maniere & substance, ilz se puissent aussi accorder de la forme, & du moien d'y parvenir.

Ladicte Dame estant aussi advertié, qu'un sien subject, nommé* Collesford, qui a autrefois demeuré à Anvers, & s'est totalement employé aux pratique & menees pernicieuses contre son estat, s'est venu depuis n'agueres rendre à Calais, pour avecq plus de commodité vacquer à la poursuite de ses mauvais desseins; trouvé bon, de faire Instance au Roy, selon les anciens traittés de perpetuelle alliance entre ces deux Couronnes, de donner commandement, qu'il vuide promptement de la dicte Ville de Calais, & autres places de son obeissance.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

S I R,

Paris, 26 May 1599. O. S.

Y T may please you to let her Majestie understand, that upon Munday last, being the 21st of this Moneth, I repayred to Fontainebleau, and had Access unto the King, where I delivered at large unto him that which I comprifed

* One principal Part of Sir Henry Nevill's Negotiation being to obtain Satisfaction for this Debt, I thought it proper to print the State of the whole Debt, as I found it drawn up by Mr. Levinus Muncke, who was under Secretary to Sir Rob. Cecill.

An. 1599. more briefly in the Proposition I presented in wryting, whereof I fend a Copy here inclos'd. His Anſwere was ſhort, (as his manner is) "That yt was great
 " reaſon her Maieſtie ſhould be ſatiſfied of ſuche Sommes, as ſhe had lent or " diſbourſed for him in his great Neceſſities, and that he would be carefull in yt
 " to the uttermoſt of his Abillitie, and would lay open unto me the bottom of
 " his meanes, and make me judge of his dealing with her Maieſtie therein";
 But for that and the reſt I had propoſed, he prayed me to deliver a Memorial in wryting, and his Counſail ſhould conſider of yt, and geve me an anſwere. I had the Memoriall ready, and delivered yt, together with a Note of the Sommes of Money due to her Maieſtie, by bond or account, which he preſently gave to Monsieur de Villeroy, and then prayed me to ſit downe by him that we might talke: Thereupon he fell into Diſcourſe with me of his Marriadge, wherein he told me, "That he had divers propoſed unto him, as namely, a Siſter of the " King of Denmarke, a Siſter of the Prince of Anbalt's, a Widow that had " had Children, but a very goodly Woman, the Duke of Florence's Neece,
 " (whom he ſeemed cheefly to commend) and ſome in his owne Kingdome.
 " He ſaid he was reſolved to marrie, but he would fyrſt ſeeke to ſeperate him-
 " ſelfe from her that was now his Wyfe, and * had already begon to treat with " the Pope to that purpoſe, from whom he hoped to receive anſwere ſhortly to " his contentment: That done, he would thincke of another, and communicate
 " his Intention to his good Siſter, and pray her Advife in yt". Upon this occa-ſion of Speeche of the Pope, "he told me how reſpectful he found him towards " him in all things, † that he had very well allowed of his late Ediēt, acknow" ledging that no Violence could force Men's Conſciences and Beliefs, but they " muſt be wonne by teaching, and good Example. That he likewise intended to " publiſh a Bull of Excommunication againſt all ſuche as ſhould attempt, pro" cure, or favour; the murthering of him. That there was a quarrel grown be-" twene the Pope and the Spaniſhe King, about the Cenſe and Homage of the " Kingdom of Naples, which being not performed or tendred ſince the Deathe
 " of the late King, the Pope had ſent to ſeaſe upon the Revenue of the King" dom, and the Viceroy had imprifoned his Commiſſaries; whereupon the Pope
 " had excommunicated him, with Threats that yf that King perſiſted in thoſe
 " Courſes, the Churche had a Champion which never failed her in her need,
 " whoſe aſſiſtance he would pray, and was ſure he ſhould find yt ready in the " Churches quarrel, (meaning the King of France.) I told the King the Pope
 " was Politique, and to keepe the Spaniſhe King in awe he would be contented
 " to make ſom good Shew and Demonſtrations towards him; but I thought the " Pope, or at leaſt the Conſiſtorie, too much Spaniard, for the King to make " any great Foundation of them. He ſaid, he thought he had as good Credit
 " there, as the King of Spaine.

"He told me he underſtood, that the Emperour was ſicke unto Deathe, and " that he had taken, as yt was ſuppoſed, a great Diſpit and Grief, ‡ for that the " Varvode of Transilvania had ſent home his Wife, who is the Queen of Spaine's
 " Siſter, and had reſign'd his Eſtate to his Uncle, Cardinal Battorie, which the " Emperour made account of. He told me alſo, that he thought the Electors
 " would not eaſily agree of a new Choice, becauſe the moſt of them had no Af" fection to the Houſe of Austria. Hereupon, becauſe I would found his In" tention, I ſaid they needed not ſeeke farre for a worthy Subject; his Majeſtie
 " being ſo near a Neighbour, and the Princes of Germany ſo well affected to
 " the Houſe of Fraunce. He answered he had never ambitiouſly brigued or " wooed for any thing, not for the Kingdom of France yt ſelfe, when he knew
 " the Practiſes and brigues that others made for yt, but had ever depended upon

† The King was deſirous the Engliſh Court ſhould believe the Pope had a more favourable Opinion of this Ediēt, than in Truth he had, of which I am perſwaded the Reader will be convinced, if he gives “ yt; but if yt pleeced God to put in their Mynds to choosè him, he had no “ Reason to refuse yt”. This I thought good to advertise, as a thing not to be neglected; I feare as they growe in greatness, they will growe in Insolence, and neglect of their Friends.

He tolde me further, of his Proceedings about the Marquisat of Saluces, “ * That at the Instance of the Pope he had geeven two Moneths more for the “ decyding of yt, besides the two Moneths graunted before, all which terme “ will expire in September next. That the Pope had assured him he would in “ this tyme decide yt, and to his Advantage; for which purpose he said he “ would draw himselfe towards Lions about a Moneth before the Terme would “ expire, to be in a Readiness when yt was decided, eyther to receive the Possession “ quietly, or to take yt by force, yf the Duke of Savoy were so madd
 “ to stand in yt. And in this meane tyme, he said he had gotten this Advantage “ by the Prorogation of the Terme, that the Duke of Savoy by continuing the “ Forces he had already gathered, (which yf he intended Resistance he must be “ forced to keepe together) would be consumed before the Warre beganne; “ whereas he himselfe need not be at any charge, but that which is ordinary to “ him; for with drawing down that way 20 Companies, out of his Garrisons of “ Picardie and Burgundie, and the Regiments of his Gards which did always “ attend him, and some Light Horse which he had geeven order should be in a “ Readines, he should be able to possess himselfe of all that the Duke of Savoy
 “ had on this syde the Alps, Montmelian only excepted, which he woulde “ blocke, and then his Passage to the Marquisat would be free. I said yt “ was generally conceaved that the King of Spaine would assist the Duke, “ as not willing that this King should have suche a footing and stepp into “ Italie. He answered, that his Ambassador at Rome, Monsieur de Sillerie, “ charged the Spanishe Ambassador with yt, who answered, that untill the Pope
 “ had decided the Matter, the Right hanging in suspens, his Master could not “ in honor but profess to assist his Brother-in-law in his Right; but the Pope “ having decided yt with this King, he did assure him his Master would not “ meintaine an evill Cause”. After he had spent an Houre or more privately with me in these Discourses, he went with me himselfe about his House, and shewed me his Buildings, willing me to come againe the next day to see his Gardens, and the rest of the House, whiles he was abroad a hunting, and willed Monsieur de Villeroy to shew me all, and so dismissed me with great Curtesie, commaunding Monsieur d' Entragues, a Knight of the Order, who brought me in, to accompany me out againe.

The next Day I returned, and found Monsieur de Villeroy at good Leysure, all the Court being gone abroad with the King. I presented him the Queen's Letters, with ordinary Words of Complement, whereunto he answered with the like, “ That he would be glad to do her Majestie any acceptable Service, in re“ gard of her Greatness and rare Vertues, and of the favor and kindness she had “ don to the King his Master; he knew yt was his Master's Pleasure that all his “ Servants should be likewise Her's, for the Affection he bare her, and for the “ streight Amitie which was betwene them, which yt was fit for the Ministers “ of bothe Sydes to labour to preserve, and to increase by all means. I tolde him
 “ it was bothe my Charge from her Majestie, and my particular Desyre, and “ prayed him I might find that Disposition in him not in Words only, but in ef- “ fect, which would best appeare, yf yt would please him to be a means to pro“ cure a good Answer and Contentment in those Poynts I had proposed to the “ King, and after delyvered in wryting, which the King had geven him. He “ told me in that, or any thing else which might concerne her Majestie, he “ would do his best labour that she might receive all good Satisfaction; but he “ had not spoken with the King since I saw him, because the King presently up-

An. 1599. "pon my departure roade abroad, and was not yet returned, (which was trew indeed) and besides, there was none els of the Counsaill there but himselfe. "But at the King's Returne, he would deale earnestly with him to fend for his " Counsaill, and especially those of his Finances, without whom he could give " no answere to the principall Point, which concerned the Payment of Mony. " I prayed him to hasten my Answere as muche as might be, for that her Majestie might marvail I had been so long here, and returned her no answere of " any thing she gave me in charge, and might perhaps condemne me of negligence. I prayed him also not to referre my Answere to the * Financiers, for " they were like enough (according to their Custom) to fynd many Difficulties, " rather than they would part with any Mony. But I desyred him, as a principal Minister of the Kings, by whom his Affaires were cheefly directed, to enter into due Consideration how meet yt was for the King in Honor and Justice " to give her Majestie Contentment herein, she having shewed so princely and " entire an Affection to him, in all his Necessities, and requiring now nothing " of him but her owne, and that in suche tyme as she had apparent occasion to use yt, and he by reason of his Peace at home and abroad, might best spare " yt. He said, the King bothe ought and would streyne himselfe, to give her " Majestie Contentment, as farre as his State would permitt; but to deal plainly with me, and not to feede me with Words, he thought he was not able to content her for the present with any Mony. I said, that Answere might perhaps serve yf she went about to borrow any Mony of him, but she demanding nothing but her owne, lent in his necessitie, and when she might evill have spared yt, and to furnishe him was fain to disaccomodate her selfe, whereby she is now driven to want; the King was bound in Honor to satisfie her, though with som Difficulties and extraordinarie Meanes, rather than to dryve her for want of yt, unto any extremitie or inconvenience. I told him her Majestie was a great Princess, and did not contract Amitie uppon any Disadvantage, but upon equall Termes and Interests. That hitherto the Amitie with the King had bin rather burdensome then profitable unto her, the King having drawn from her, assistance bothe of Men and Mony, and she nothing but Promise and Hope from him; whereof, althoughe she did not repent, yet according to the Nature of Amitie, which consists upon mutual Offices and Interests, she did looke now to receive som returne of kindness from him; and this being the least of all other, to recover her owne, yf he did no more regard her Satisfaction in this, she might little looke for yt in any greater Measure. I told him further, that the King had already geven Satisfaction to the States, and was now about to doe the like to the Swissars, to the Valew of 500000 Crownes; that he had likewise geven Contentment to all his rebellious Subjects, with whom he had made Compositions; And yf amongst all these, he should only neglect her Majestie, yt would give her just cause to thinck, that he made not that account of her Amitie, which by the greatnes of her Estate, and the Sinceritie of her Friendship towards him, she might justly challenge. He answered, that he would sollicit the King, which was all he could do in yt, and when the King had geeven order in yt, he would likewise sollicit the Dispatch. Then he required of me the Coppies of the Bonds, which I have since sent unto him, and have likewise written unto him to hasten my Answere.

Touching the matter of the Carriage of the Corne into Spaine, he told me, " That the King hathe already written unto all the Ports, that they should forbear to trade with Spaine, bothe in respect of the Arrest made there of Frenche " Shippes, and likewise of the Placart set out by the States, for feare they " should meet with them, and make Prize of them. But when I replied, that

* Monsieur de Rhosny, was then Surintendant of the Finances, of whom Mezarj gives this Character: Qu'il avoit la Negative fort rude, estoit impénétrable, aux prieres & aux importunités, se chargeoit hardiment de la haine des refus, & se bouchoit les Oreilles aux plaintes & aux reproches, sans se soucier d'autre chose, que de trouver de Jour en Jour de nouveaux fonds.

" these

“ these Respects were but for a Tyme, but that the other Respect of the “ Queene my Mistris was like to continue, and therefore prayed to know what “ I should answer, He said I should have answer to that point as well as to “ the rest, in wryting. An. 1599.

For the third Point contained in my written Proposition, he hath assented thus farre, and willed me so to certifie, “ that the King shall by Proclamation “ forbid his Subjects to buy or provyde any Armes, Munitions, or Materials “ for Warre in any forrain Countrey, and to carry them into any Countrey ex“ cept France.” And yf this be liked of, he desired th’ Articles might be finished and put into a Forme of a Treaty, that bothe her Majestie and the King might signe yt. But being once entred into this Argument, he fell into bitter Exclamations against our Justice, and told me (as the King had likewise done the Day before) that the Ambassador had written, “ that though the Queen’s Majestie “ had geeven him all Contentment and Promise of Reformation, yet he found “ all was stayed by other meanes, and that he should be forced to send back the “ Parties that sued, to seeke Remedie heere. I told him, I feared the Ambassa“ dor tooke too passionate a Report from the Parties themselves, who measure “ Justice but by their owne Affection: That I knew her Majestie was fully “ bent to do Justice, but yt may be there was som stay made of proceeding in the “ course she had established, till yt might be seen what Corrispondence they “ yeilded heere: That the Queene had already established a Commission for that “ purpose, which the King had not yet done; and till they were as forward on “ their part, as the Queene had bin on hers, they had no reason to complaine, “ for Princes used to marche with equal Paces; but the Queene had so used to “ prevent them with Kindnes, that yt seemed they looked for yt still.” I offered yf he would give me the Particularities of his Complaints, I would write of yt. He answered, “ the Ambassador was best acquainted with the Particulars, “ and prayed me only to write in generall, that there might be good Justice
 “ don, the want or refusall whereof, might otherwise interrupt all good Inten“ tions betwene their Majesties; assuring me that the King would do the like;
 “ and though the Commission was not established, that he would cause Justice
 “ to be don upon any Complaint I would deliver: Yet yf the Queene staid up“ on those respects, or any other, about the Intercourse of renewing of Treaties, “ (wherein he said the King would be ready to meet the Queene half way,) he “ desired that they might be accelerated, and that we might begin to put Pen
 “ to Paper, either here or there.

Hereupon we fell into some Speche of the Treaty of Blois, why this King made no Declaration of his Intention to continue yt, as the Treaty requires.
 “ He said the King made account it had bin sufficiently confirmed by that of “ 1596, and yf it were not, the King was willing to do any thing that might be “ to the confirmation of Amitie and Entercouric.” Thereupon, because I understood by Mr. Edmonds he had already dealt with the King and him for an Exemption for our Englishe Marchants du droit d’Aubeine, which is very grea-vous unto them, for that such as dye heere loose their Goods without remedie, not having Power by Will to dispose of them; “ I urged him to shew som To“ken of the King’s good will towards our Nation that way, as he had don of late
 “ to the Low-Country Men, who had not better deserved of him, then ours had “ don. And the rather to induce him, I alledged the Treaty of Blois, wherein “ that Point was accorded unto us. He answered fyrst for the Immunitie graunt“ ed to the States, yt was required by them, and yealded to in a tyme when “ the King had need of them, and might denye them nothing. To which I re“ plied, that yt was more Honor for the King to requite Kindnes with Kindnes “ freely, then to do all things by the way of Bargaine: That the Queen had “ dealt like an honorable Princes, and had not made Marchandize of her Fa“ vours, yet she had reason to looke for som Fruit of her Frenship. To the “ point of the Treaty of Blois, he said that we had not performed yt on our “ part, I asked him wherein we had made default; he said yt had never bin ex“ ecuted,

An. 1599. " ecuted, but the Intercourse was presently discontinued. I answer'd, that was " not our fault but theirs, for the * Massacre followed immediately, wherein
 " our Men were murdered, and their Goods spoiled, without any Justice or Re-
 " medie; but now that Peace was established, and our Men began to revive " that Trade into these Parts, yt was reasonable they should enjoy the Prive" leages due unto them by the Treaty. To this he only answered, that when " all the rest was agreed on, this would easily be determined, but to single it " from the rest he saw no reason.

The last point of my Proposition touching Collesford, I did add upon Information from Mr. Edmonds, of the daylie Practizes of that Man to draw over young Englishe Gentlemen, and to convey them to Rome: wherein I am to ad-vertize your Honor, that the Searchers of Sandwicke and Dover doe not their Duties, but are dayly corrupted as I am informed; and not only that way, but for the Passage over of Gueldings, which from thence and Rye, are continually shipped over in good Plenty.

I had som Speeche with Monsieur Villeroy about the Spanishe Preparations, which he assured me upon perfect Information, were not any way meet to attempt an Invasion, but only to be used for Defence. But the next Teare he said yf we made not Peace, he thought they intended som Attempt upon us.

I learned bothe by the King and him, that † Coomans, who was imployed lately into England from the Cardinall, passed this way within these few Daies into Spaine, having in his Speeche with the King professed himselfe as it were an Enemy to the Spaniards, but a Servant of the Archdukes, and a great Wither of Peace, that by that means the Countrey might be freed from the Spaniards.
 He professeth himselfe likewise of the Religion, and was present the last Sunday, as the Duke of Bouillon told me, at the Assembly of the Protestants at Grigni five Leagues from Paris towards Fountainbleau. Yt is thoughte he goethe to work the King of Spaine to be more inclinable to the Peace, whereunto these Messieurs, both Villeroy and others, would faine perswade me, that that King hath no Inclination, but is only contented to harken unto yt, for the Benefit, and at the Instance of the Cardinall.

Towching our Peace with Spaine, they pretend here in Words to be very defyrous of yt, that we might have rest from our Troubles, as they have. But the truthe is they are jealous of yt, and I think yt fit they should be so held till her Majestie be resolved: And in the mean tyme that they be urged instantly to whatioever her Majesty shall thinck fit to draw from them; for yt is not good Nature or Gratitude, but Interest of State that must prevail with them. Yt is commonly beleaved, that yf yt were not for the Warre with England, the King of Spaine would easily imbarke himselfe into the Duke of Savoy's Quarrel: So as yf her Majesty intend any Peace with Spaine, yt may advantage her muche to make yt before this terme geven to the Duke of Savoy expire; for this occasion once passed, there is no likelehood of any probable occasion of Breach to growe betwene them in haste, which I hold very fit for her Majesty's Affaires not to be neglected.

The King is this Day departed from Fountainbleau, minding to passe his tyme at Monsieur d'Entrague's House, and fundrie other Gentlemens for 15 or 20 Days, and so to settle at Blois, where he intends to remaine a Moneth or two, till he proceede towards Lyons. I do not yet learne of any Order geven to the Ambasadors to follow: But I beseeche you let me understand her Majesty's direct Pleasure in yt, for I am very desirous to conforme my selfe thereunto, though I know her Allowance will not discharge my Lodging and my Horses, besides my Diet and other Charges; but I trust for my Horses and my Carriages, her Maje-

Responce du Roy au Memoire presenté à sa Majesté par l'Ambassadeur de la Royne d'Angleterre, sa bonne Soeur & Cousine.

Sur le Premier Article.

SA Majesté Reconnoist avoir reçu de ladite Dame Roine, durant les troubles de son Royaulme, plusieurs plaisirs & secours tres à propos; desquelz elle sera à jamais memorative, & mettrà peine de se revancher aux occasions qui se presenteront, aultant que ses moiens & sa puissance s'estendront; ne luy souhaitant moins de prosperité & de contentement en la Guerre d'Irlande, que ses armes sont accompagnes de Justice. Partant sa Majesté commendera à ceulx de son Conseil, d'adviser aux moiens, qu'il y aura de faire rembourser ladite Dame Roine, des deniers qu'elle a avancés pour le bien de ses affaires. Mais estant ceste Année si avancée, qu'elle est, ceulx que sadite Majesté doit recevoir en icelle sont déjà deparlitz, de sorte qu'il sera difficile qu'elle luy puisse faire plus grande somme que les vingt mille escus qu'elle presta à sadite Majesté l'an 1596, du seul remboursement desquelz aussi il a esté faicte instance jusques à present. Cependant sa Majesté fera verifier & arrester le compte desdites avances par les Gens de son Conseil, afin d'y pourvoir aprez plus de lumiere.

Sur le Deuxieme.

Le traffic & transport des grains en Espagne, ne peult justement estre empesché aux Subiectz de sa Majesté, par ladite Roine & ses Subiectz, ny aucuns qui sont en paix avec elle; Les quelz tirent aussi de la France plusieurs autres commoditez semblables, desquels si les Espagnols vouloient enterprendre de les priver, pour mesmes considerations & raisons d'estat, ou de guerre, aleguées contre le transport desdites grains; la France seroit privée de Commerce de toutes parts, à son trop grand dommage. C'est pourquoy, sa Majesté a insisté, pour la liberté du commerce desdites grains, comme des autres marchandises. Mais sa Majesté a pour certaines considerations commandé à ses Subiectz, de surceoir quelque temps le transport desdites grains, ainsy qu'il a esté déclaré à l'Ambassadeur de ladite Roine.

Sur le Troisieme.

Sa Majesté n'entend point que ses subiectz, abusent au dommage de ladite Roine ny d'autres, de la liberté de traffiquer par tout, que la Paix qu'elle a avec tous ses voisins leur donne, ny qu'ilz entreprennent, de debiter & porter des Armes, Munitions, & materiaulx de guerre hors de son Royaulme, soit qu'ilz preignent & acheptent en icelluy, ou ailleurs, sans son expresse permission, de quoy seront faictes les deffenses necessaires, avec commandement aux Officiers de sadite Majesté, de les faire exactement observer.

Sur le quatrieme.

Sa Majesté pourvoira au contenu du present Article, comme le requiert la bonne paix & amitié qu'elle a avec ladite Roine, laquelle elle veut conserver & entretenir fidèlement.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Of the same Date with the former.

SINCE the finishing of my Dispatch, I received from Monsieur de Villeroy the King's Answer, whereof I send a Copy herewith. Thereupon, considering the King was removed from Fountainbleau, and Villeroy with him, so as I shall of long tyme have no means of Access to them, I went this Evening to Monsieur de Believre, a principal Man in Counsaile, who is yet in this Towne, and complained to him very botly of the Answer, saying, "That yt appeared rather made par maniere d'acquit then upon any serious Consideration of the Importance of yt, and that yt had bin fitter to have bin geven to a Suitor that would have borrowed or begged Money of the King, then to a Princeesse of that State, who demaunded nothing but her owne, when she had occasion to use yt her selfe, having lent yt him in his extreme Necessitie. And I told him I found yt so very unreasonable, and so likely to give her Majestie an exceeding Discontentment, to see her selfe so little regarded that had so well deserved; that out of my Love to the King, and Desyre of the continuance of good Amitie betwene their Majesties, I would presume to conceal and suppress yt till the King might readvise of yt; and yf I must needs returne this, and could get no better, I would do yt, but with Protestation of the great Wrong and Ingratitude don therein to the Queene my Mistris. I told him, that yf the King were not able to fatisfy her all presently, yet yf he had made Offer of some reasonable part of yt, yt might have geven her Majestie an Argument of his Willingnes and Care to content her: But to give her no Satisfaction, having fatisfyed the States, the Suissers, and all his own Subjects, (to whom he was no more tyed then to her Majestie) argued a less regard towards her then towards them, which I was sorry to see, and might breed in her Majestie an Impression nothing profitabile unto him. And whereas yt is alleadged in the Answer, that the Assignations of the King's Meanes are already made for this Yeare, I told him, the King was not so muche tyed in Honor or Justice by those Assignations, which were but his voluntary Act, as by his Obligations made to the Queene under the Great Seal of France, and verified in his Court of Parlement, and Chambre des Contes, and that there was none of those who had these Assignations made them for Debt or otherwise, whom the King had so muche cause to feare to breake with, as with the Queene, of whom he had received suche real Kindnes. And therefore, yf the King, to fatisfy her in some good measure, did streine himselfe, by using his Credit, or any other extraordinary Meanes, yt were but reason, rather then that she for want of yt, should be dryven into any Streight or Difficulty.

The old Man apprehended my Speeche very well, and confessed, "yt was meet the King should make the Queene a better Satisfaction; but told me, that the matter was not yet com to the Counsaile, but when yt should be communicated unto them, he would speake that which he thought fitt, for the King's Honor, and the continuance of the Amitie." He wished me likewise to write unto Monsieur de Villeroy as muche as I had said to him, which I meane to do out of hand; and as soon as I have any other Answer, I will advertize your Honor immediately. In the mean tyme I referr yt to your Honor's Consideration, whether you will take Knowledge of this Answer or nay; and when you do, yt were very fit her Majestie would deal roundly and quickly with the Ambassador about yt, for that is the way to prevaile most with these Men; and so I shall be best avowed when I shall prosecute yt with Earnestnes. In all things els I make no doubt but they will give her Majestie good Contentment, and particularly I understand that upon the Speeche Monsieur de Villeroy and I had about the Treaty of Blois, yt hath sence bin debated in Counsaile, and yt is resolved, that the Confirmation of yt shall be offered. So likewise yt seemeth the King will send one to be installed for him, but how soone I cannot yet certainly discover.

Upon

Upon Sunday last, as those of the Relligion returned hither by Water from An. 1599. Grigni, where they had bin at the Communion, they were receaved at their landing place right before my Lodging, with great Injuries and Reproaches, and some Stones and Durt slong at them; and yt was feared yt would have growen to a worse matter, but the others Patience stayed all. They have proceeded to informe diligently of the Offendors, and amongst the rest, yt is thought a Preeft who began the Tumult shall be executed for yt. The Edict I perceave hathe scarce contented them of the Relligion, and they make some difficulty in some places to receive yt, whereat the King is much offended, and complained to me of their Inconsideratnes, saying, he found there were some Spirits of Jesuits among them, as well as among the Catholicques.

Yesternight the Lord of Weames a Scottishe Man came to me, and told me, that the Lord of Hume was come over hither, and was to go hence to Rome, employed to the Pope from that King; of whom he also delivered me very many Suspicious, as yf he declined altogether in Relligion, and began to intertaine streight Intelligence with the Popishe syde and Princes. He told me also that H. Cunstable, who went lately thither out of these parts, was sent by the Pope with offer of 10000 Crowns a Moneth, and other secrett Conditions to the King; But of this latter I make little account. The Lord of Hume is certainly here, and I will be very inquisitive of his Proceedings. Yf your Honor have any Intelligence at Rome, yt were well don to cause some Eye to be had to his Negotiation there. It were pity that that King should be lost, yf a small matter might reaine him in Devotion to her Majestie, and the Cause. And so, &c.

Your Honors, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Monsieur de Villeroy.

Monsieur,

De Paris 6 Juin 1599. S.N.

J'AY esté bien marry & non moins esbahi de voir la Responce que vous m'avez envoyé au Nom du Roy, aux propositions que j'avois présentées; laquelle, pour parler franchement, me semble avoir esté faicte plustoit par maniere d'acquit, qu' autrement, & comme si la Roine ma Maistresse demandoit quelque chose en don ou emprunt du Roy, & non pas d'estre remboursé de ce qui est du sien, & dont elle l'a autrefois accommodé en son besoin. Car vous ayant représenté les grandes occasions que la Roine a d'employer d'argent, & la nécessité qui l'a force à present, de faire Instance au Roy de luy rendre ce dont elle l'a autrefois assisté; vous me respondes que le Roy a desia departi ses moiens, & en a faict les Assignations pour ceste année; Comme si le Roy estoit plus subject à ses assignations, que ne sont que ses Actes volontaires, que aux Contracts & Obligations faictes à la Roine ma Maistresse, sous le Grand Seel de France, & Verifiées en sa Cour de Parlement, & Chambre des Contes; & Comme s'il y eust personne à qui le Roy deust avoir plus d'esgard de ne la mescontenter point, qu'à la Roine ma Maistresse, & principalement en un tel affaire, qui ne l'emporte pas moins, que de la conservation de son Estat, & la reduction d'un de ses Royaumes.

A quoy je vous replique librement & franchement, qu'encor que le Roy s'efforçast pour emprunt, ou autre moien extraordinaire, de luy donner contentement, veu l'Estat & circonstances de cest affaire, il ne feroit que ce qui est de raison, & ce à quoy l'honneur & l'amitie semblent l'obliger; estant toujours plus juste & raisonnable que le Roy patisse quelque chose, pour rendre ce qu'il a emprunté; que la Roine, pour ne l'avoir point reçeu. Encores, si le Roy l'eust offert satisfaction de quelque raisonnable somme, il eust tousjours donné argument à la Roine de sa bonne volenté, & du desir qu'il avoit de luy donner plus grand contentement, quand il en auroit le moien. Et cependant il eust en la commodité

An. 1599. de faire verifier le Conte, avec autant de lumiere qu'il eust desire. Mais de la renvoyer avec une responce si froide & sterile, ayant donné satisfaction aux Estatz, aux Suisses, & tant d'autres, & mesmes à ses subjectz; monstre, qu'il n'en faict pas l'estime, que par ses merites, & la Grandeur de son Estat, elle pouvoit justement attendre.

Mais presupposant, (ce que je ne puis pourtant accorder) que le Roy n'a pas le moien pour le present, de luy donner contentement en argent contant; Comment vous excuserez vous du contract de l'an 1591? par lequel le Roy s'est obligé de consigner entre les mains de la Roynes, pour le remboursement de plusieurs sommes y specifiées, les Gabelles du Sel, & autres impositions provenantes dans les Villes de Roüen & Havre de Grace. Vous deviez pour le moins luy avoir offert cela, qui est tousjours en la puissance du Roy. Mais par ceste Responce vous ne luy avez présenté satisfaction en aucune sorte. Et pourtant, cognoissant la mauvaise impression qu'elle pourroit donner, à la Roine ma Maistresse, je me suis resolu comme bon serviteur du Roy, & comme celuy que desiré, autant qu'en moy est, de prevenir toutes occasions de mescontentements entre ces deux Grands Princes; de ne la luy communiquer point, jusques à ce que je vous eusse prié (comme je fais tres instamment) de supplier le Roy de ma part, qu'il luy plaise d'y reäviser, comme à chose qui est de tres grande consequence à l'entretènement de la bonne Amitié & Union entre leur Majestez; & vous resservant, que pour faire durer les Amities, il faut qu'elles soient fondées sur Interests egaulx, & offices reciproques. Et si à la fin; il me faudra communiquer ceste Responce à la Roine, je le feray, mais tousjours avec protestation du trop peu de respect que je vois qu'il en porte à ma Maistresse, & d'avoir faict mon devoir au contraire; & me laveray les mains, de tout mescontentement, alienation de bonne volonte, ou autre inconvenient qui en pourra avenir.

Quand au second poinct de ma Proposition, je ne m'y trouvé non plus satisfait. Car je me suis insisté sur la promesse de l'Ambassadeur du Roy, que le Roy donneroit ordre à ce qu'y est contenu, & vous ne m'y respondes point directement. Je desire pourtant sçavoir la Responce du Roy la dessus, à fin que la Roine ma Maistresse sçache, quel Conte ou fondement elle pourra faire, de la promesse dudit Ambassadeur d'icy en avant.

Pour le troisieme poinct, il me semble, que vous ne l'avez pas couché par Escrit, en telle sorte que me l'avez explique de bouche; mais la difference n'est pas grande, & je croy que à la premiere conference nous en viendrons facilement d'accord. Cependant, je vous prié aussi de moyenner envers le Roy, qu'il luy plaise d'expedier sa Commission, pour juger des plaintes des abus, commis en Mer, comme la Roine a desja faict de son coste; a fin que nous puissions marcher de mesme pied, comme il est seant & raisonnable.

Et à tant, vous priant de faire paroistre par effect la bonne affection que vous m'avez assureé d'avoir à la continuation d'estroite Union entre ses deux Royaumes, je vous baise les mains, & supplié le Seigneur Monsieur de vous conserver la bonne Santé.

Vostre humble & affectionné Serviteur & Amy,
HENRY NEVILLE.

Monsieur Villeroy's Answer.

Monsieur,

Du Bois Maleherbes le 8^{me} de Juin 1599. S.N.

JE suis tres marry, que la Responce du Roy à vostre Memoire, ne vous a mieulx satisfait; car ça esté, & sera tousjours, l'intention & le desir de sa Majesté, de donner tout contentement à la Roine de ce qui dependra d'elle, & sera en son pouvoir en la necessité de ses affaires. Sa Majesté vous a respondu qu'elle commendera à ceux de son Conseil d'adviser au moien d'y pourveoir, mais qu'il qu'il sera difficile, qu'elle paie ceste année plus grande somme que les 20000 An. 1500

Escuz qui luy ont esté demandez au commencement d'icelle, pour n'y avoir disposé ses affaires. Sa Majesté vous a diét la Verité, vous declarant sa bonne Volonté, & ne voulant rien promettre qu'elle ne puisse effectuer.

J'ay aprins par la lettre que vous m'avez escripte par ce porteur, que vous desirez que sa Majesté s'efforce de donner plus de contentement à la Roine, au besoing que vous representes qu'elle en a. Je l'ay diét à sa Majesté, laquelle m'a commandé vous escrire, si tost que ceulx de son Conseil seront aupres d'elle, elle advisera avec eulx aux moiens qu'il y aura de mieulx faire; vous priant croire, & asseurer la Roine, qu'elle a tresbonne Volonté, non seulement de paier ce qu'elle doit, mais aussi de se revancher des plaisirs qu'elle a reccus d'elle; & qu'elle embrassera toutes les occasions de ce faire qui se presenteront, sans y espargner sa personne, mesmes tout ainsi que si c'estoit pour le salut propre de son Estat. Mais sa Majesté vous prie, de n'attribuer à faulte d'affection, ce qui procedé d'impuissance; plus sa Majesté a disbourse d'Argent, pour payer ce qu'elle doit aux Suisses, aux Estatz, & à d'autres, moins en a elle maintenant, pour paier ce qu'elle doit à la Roine, mesmement si soudainement, & à point nommé, comme il semble que vous le desirez. J'advoue, que sa Majesté doibt s'incommoder pour contenter la Roine, & se revancher des plaisirs qu'elle en a reccus; aussi, est il raisonnable, luy donner temps competent, pour rendre les choses possibles. L'assistance que le Roy a tirée de la Roine en sa necessité, n'a esté du tout inutile au service mesmes de ladite Roine; du moigns, Elle a obligée à Elle ung Prince qui n'en sera ingrat; du quel, Elle recevra tant plus d'Amitié & de Service, qu'il aura de moien & de commodité de s'en acquitter.
Mais comme il est certain, & que la longueur & rigueur des guerres, ont grande-ment depeuplé ce Royaume, & apauvry le peuple qui reste, & qu'en la substance & abondance d'icelluy, consiste la Richesse du Roy; tout ainsi, qu'il fault du temps pour le remede; aussi, fault il donner temps & loysir à sa Majesté, d'en tirer de quoy payer ce qu'elle doit; Autrement, comme ce seroit desirer d'elle l'impossible, ce seroit aussi outrepasser les termes de vray Amitié, & la vouloir mettre en pcine pour ung plaisir recçu, qui doit produire des effectz tous con-trairez, comme j'espere qu'il succedera de façon, que la Roine n'aura moindre occasion d'en estre contente, & vous de vous en louer, que sa Majesté a de volonté que cela arrivé, & ses Serviteurs d'y contribuer, ce qui est de leur deb-voir & pouvoir; Comme je vous supplié croire que je feray de ma part, en homme de bien & tresfidelle Serviteur de sa Majesté, tres desireux du contentement de la Roine, & d'entretienement de la bonne Amitié de leurs Majestés; pour laquelle, sa Majesté espere, que vous ferez tousjours tous bons offices, comme vous luy avez promis.

Je ne scay pas quelle promesse a faicte l'Ambassadeur du Roy, sur le transport des Grains en Espagne, qui obligé sa Majesté à faire autre Responce, que celle qui vous a esté faicte de bouche & par Escript; puisque sa Majesté vous a declaré, avoir commandé à ses Subjectz, de surceoir pour quelque temps le transport desdits Grains; Monsieur, il me semble que vous avez occasion de vous en contenter; & pareillement, de la responce faicte à la troisieme Article de vostre Memoire, qui est conformé à ce que je vous en ay dit de bouche. Et quant à la Commission que vous desirez estre expediee, pour juger des plaintez des abus qui se commettent en Mer: Il y sera satisfait, si tost que le Roy & la Roine auront signé les Articles du reiglement, accordé pour cest effect; dont sa Majesté a escript à son Ambassadeur, faire Instance à la Roine & à Messieurs de son Conseil; afin, que toutes choses soient faictez ensemble, & que les Effects dudit Reglement s'en ensuivent telz, qu'il convient pour le Seureté des Subjectz de leurs Majestés, & la conservation de leur amitié & bonne Voisinance. Je prie Dieu, Monsieur, vous donner longue & heureuse vie.

Vostre humble & affectionné Serviteur & Amy,
DE NEUFVILLE.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

S I R,

23^d May 1599.

ALTHOUGH since your Departure there hath little happned worthy your Knowledge, nor nothing in your Letters specified, that dothe require present Answere; yet have I thought good to dispatche away this Messenger, to bring you such Newes as I am sure you will be gladd of, as namely these, That Her Majestie hath hard your Letter read from the fyrst to the last, and hath allowed of your whole Cariage at this your fyrst Entry, with an exceeding gracious Commendation, whereof she keepeth no Secret, but divulgeth yt to the whole Court; wherein I must confesse to participate with you as feelingly, as the dearest Freind you have living.

* For the Newes that was told you by the French King, this is all I have to say unto you, that yt is possible, that many things may fly over by common bruits, whereof you have not hard by me: But those I wishe you to credit as things eyther likely to be false, or so uncertainly advertised, as yt would be a towche to the Credit of my Place, to wryte unto you such Reports, and turne to your discredit, yf (being her Majesties publick Minister) you should pronounce occurents from your own State, that prove untrue by that tyme you have reported them. In this Point I confesse I mean to deal curiously, in a common respect to us bothe, but of any other negligence, remaine secure, that you shall have little Cause to complaine. And therefore, know this from me, that yf any one of the Great of Ulster or Connaght be reduced, yt is more then the Queene of England to my Knowledge understandeth; only this is true, that in the Countries of Lempster and the Pale, where her Majesties Army livethe, divers of those Provincial Rebels offer Submission: But those are suche as the Earle dothe meane to dryve from Capitulations, and to give them suche Conditions as best pleaseth him: of which number, the Principall Man is the Lord of Montgarret; whose Countrey being scituated where her Majesties Forces may passe with less Difficulty, he being an unweildy Body, (and knowing that he could not hold out, when the Earle should prosecute him,) resolved upon my Lord's Arrivall, to offer his Submission.

Thus much doe I particularise unto you, nether to th' intent you should make them there thincke us lesse happy, or yet to diminishe the Reputation of my Lord's Proceedings; for he, arriving not in Ireland before the 17th of April, must have wrought Miracles, to have settled and distributed an Army of 16000 Foote and 1300 Horse, and to have accomodated them with all Necessaries in a Countrey full of Misery and Disorder, in a shorter Tyme then he did; for the Tyme of the Yeare not serving to passe into Ulster (to breake the Head of the Rebellion) till the Moneth of June: within twenty Dayes, his Lordship beganne a Journey into Lempster, and from thence intends to passe into Munster, with a Purpose to secure those Provinces; that thereby, the maine Action of Ulster may be proceeded withall with lesse Distraction.

For the matter of the Peace, I cannot stoppe the Bruits that the contrary Party may sprede yf they thinck yt for their Advantage, neither can I thinck yt straunge, that the Frenche Jealousies multiplie according to their owne Inventions, nor that the Frenche Ambassadour wryteth that which he knoweth not, because that which he knoweth is not worthe the wryting. But to tell you truly, her Majestie hath reason to conceive unkindly of the Frenche Ambassadour, who being made acquainted with the Truthe, (to th' intent to satisfy the King of her Majesties sincere Proceedings) hath now without Cause, written of his owne head, that which may make the King suspitious, when he shall fynd that you Her Majesties Ambassador, had that from him, which his owne Ambassador wryteth; wherein I do assure you, upon my Creditt, you know as muche as I doe; for since Coomans departed, (with whose Answer you were acquainted) I never hard from him directly or indirectly, but to this Effect; that the Secretary which Cardinal Andreas sent into Spaine (when he came hether, was not returned out of Spaine with any Answer; and this by Letters was certified, that all further Proceeding was staied, till the Archduke's coming into the Low-Countries. An. 1599.

To write you any Newes howe the States prosper, is needlesse, because you have as good meanes to know yt there, as we have here; only this you may know, that by this tyme the Fleet is upon the Coast of Spaine; of whose Success, God send us speedilie to heare.

Concerning the Point in your Letter, how you should cary your selfe to their Agent, her Majestie liketh very well that you should hold Correspondence withe him, except in some suche Points, as your Discretion serves you to reserve; which her Majestie sayeth, she dare trust in a greater Matter.

To the other Point, concerning the Treaty of Blois, after your next Dispatch her Majestie will thinck what course is fitt to be taken. In the meane tyme, having now I doubt not, sent you the welcome Newes of her Majesties good Acceptation of your endeavours, and having lykewife satisfied your Mind that the Frenche King's Intelligence exceeded ours here, I do now recommend you to the Protection of God, and do desyre to know what you are the nearer for those 20000 Crownes, and when they shall be paid; though I hope they are not so simple to thinck that suche a Portion, yf yt came never so soone, should excuse the due Payment of those great Sommes, whereof her Majestie hath great need; and therefore, Sir, presse the other, but take the 20000 Crowns, because yt is of a severall Nature from the rest of the Debts.

The domesticall Newes we have are these, That the Lord Buckburst is Lord Treasurer, * Lord Cheif Justice a Counsaillor, and my self Master of the Wards, but so restrained by new Orders, as in the Office I am a Ward my selfe. But seeing yt was my Father's Place, and that her Majestie hath bestowed yt on me, I will undergoe yt with as muche Intergrity as I can, and yet I vow to you, I have resigned a better Place of the Dutchy for yt. From the Court.

Your loving Kinsman and Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

The next Wind will bring us Newes, I hope, of the Erle's Success in this first Enterprife.

Your Letter came to my Hands the 22^d of May. I thanck you for your private Letter.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 30th May 1599. O. S.

THE Lord of Weames was with me this Day, and signified unto me, that he would depart very shortly for Scotland, and would take his Way throughe England, purposing to kisse her Majesties Hands, and to advertize her (as he sayeth) of som Matters of Importance. Having this occasion, I would not faile to accompany him with these few Lynes, to let your Honor understand, that he hath bin once or twise with me, and hath made great Protestations of his Duety and Zeale towards her Majestie; and pretends at his Returne into Scotland, to be able to do som Service, for the conteyning that King in

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 30th May 1599, O. S.

I Have thought good to send your Honor here inclosed, a * Copy of my Letter to Monsieur de Villeroy, and lykewise of his Answer to yt, which I received this Day; humbly praying I may be directed how I shall farther proceed in that Matter. If her Majestie approve my earnestness in the poursuite of yt, I humbly beseech her to concurre in like sorte, when she deales with the Ambassador there about yt; for otherwise, they will conceive that yt is but my doing pour faire le bon Valet, and they will regard yt accordingly. I beseech you, Sir, also let me understand her Pleasure, about my following the King in his Progressse.

The Agent of the States is muche discontented with the Proclamation which the King is about to publishe, for the Revocation of Monsieur de la Noüe, and the Troupes which are gon to the Service of the States; wherein, the King promifeth to give secret Advise to La Noüe, and the Principall of them, not to feare or styrre upon yt; yet he doubts, that the generallitie who shall not know the Secrett, will apprehend the Danger, and will withdraw themselves, which will be very unscasonable for their Affayres. Yt seems the King, whiles the Matter of the Marquisat depends, will not give the Spanishe King any Cause of Discontentment, least he should take yt for a Pretext to imbarke himselfe into that Quarrel. And for the same purpose, there having bin lately discovered an Enterprife which the Count Maurice had upon a Towne called Charlemont, not farre from Sedan, wherein certaine Frenche Men of the King's Garrisons adjacent were imploied; the Kinge hath sent a Provost thither to do rownd Justice upon them, and to proceed to their Execution.

There are Letters come out of Spaine, of the 30th of May, N.S. which make mention, that the Archduke and the Infanta, were to imbarke at Barcellona upon the 5th of June; they purpose, as I heare, to returne by the way of Tiroll, and yt will be the middle of August, before they can arrive in the Low Countries. The opinion in this Court is, that the Spanishe Camp must be forced to rise from before † Bommell very shortly. Yt is constantly reported here, that the State's Army is already past along this Coast to the Westward, and that there were discovered in two Fleets, to the Number of 140 Saile. The Agent giveth out, that they will be able to put 8 or 10000 Men on Land. The Spanish Preparations on the other Syde are thought here to be very weake. — The News of Ireland is muche enquired after. Thus having no other matter at this present fit for your Honor's Knowledge, I humbly take my Leave.

Your Honor's, &c.

MONSIEUR,

De Paris le 10^me de June, 1599. N. S.

*J*E suis tres aisé d'entendre par vos Lettres, qu'il vous a plu de m'escire, que le Roy a si bonne volonté d'adviser aux Moyens de donner plus ample contentement à la Royne ma Maistresse, au faict de remboursement de l'Argent, dont je luy avois faict instance: Et ay cesle esperance, que tant plus qu'il pensera, aux occasions & Estat present des Affaires d'icelle, & aux raisons que j'ay en partie allegues, & que luy scaurez trop mieulx deduire; tant plus raisonnable il trouvera de s'efforcer de luy satisfaire, pour le moins en quelque sorte raisonnable, plustost de la contraindre par son refus, aux inconveniens & difficultez que je vous ay representez, & qui ne pourront saillir d'apporter aussi prejudice à ses affaires propres; ven l'estroite conjunctiō, qui est entre leur deux Majestez & leurs Estatz. Ce que me gardera de vous faire autre replique pour le present, aux excuses que vous alleguez en vostre Lettre. Bien vous dirray je ce mot en passant, qu'il me semble qu'on de doibt pas convertir au prejudice de la Royne ma Maistresse, ce qu'elle a faict de bonne affection envers le Roy, comme vous ferez tousjours, si vous prenez le pretexte de differer le paiement sur ce, qu'elle ne vous n'en a plustost importuné. Il me semble plustost, que le respect qu'elle a monstré de porter à l'Estat & Affaires du Roy, ne l'ayant voulu presser jusques à ce qu'il fust bien estably, & qu'elle fust mesmes contrainté par ses occasions tres urgentes, merite tant plus de respect en son endroict, en ce sien besoign que je vous ay representé; & aussi, vous me permettez s'il vous plaist de vous dire, que ce n'est pas maintenant la premiere fois que la Roine a demandé remboursement au Roy, & ce de plus grande somme que de vingt mille escuz, Car Jay entre mes mains, la Requisition que luy en fit Monsieur Cecill, il y a plus d'un an, & sa Responce la dessus; Auxquelles il est faict mention, de plusieurs grandes sommes de deniers employés pour le Service du Roy, tant devant, qu'aprez son arvenement à la Couronne; & notamment, de ces 20000 escuz; lesquels, y sont particulierement specifiez, pourceque le Roy ne s'estoit encore obligé pour ceste somme, comme il estoit pour le reste. De sorte, que ceste demande ne vous doibt sembler nouvelle ou soudaine, mais bien d'avoir esté commencé & poursuivie, avecq beaucoup de respect & moderation de la part de la Royne; qui merite plus favorable Interpretation, & non pas d'estre converty à son desavantage.

Je vous pourrois encore repliquer sur quelques autres points de vostre letre; & notamment sur ce, que vous n'y avez nullement touché au point de la Consignation, que doibt estre faicte des Gabelles de Roüen & Havre de Grace; Mais je m'en deporte, comme j'ay dict, sur l'Esperance que vous m'avez donné que le Roy prendra cest Affaire à cœur, & s'efforcera à bon escieint, de donner contentement à la Royne. Seulement vous prieray je, de supplier le Roy de s'asseurer, que je ne fauldray pas de faire toutz les meilleurs offices que je pourray, pour entretenir & accroistre, ceste Amitié & Union entre leurs Majestés; & que la poursuite instante que je fais de cest affaire, ne tend qu'à ceste seule fin, comme scait le tout puissant seul scrutateur des Cœurs; lequel, je prieray Monsieur, de vous donner en bonne santé longue & heureuse Vie.

Sir Henry Neville to Queen Elizabeth.Most Gracious Sovereigne,Paris, 6th June 1599. O.S.

THE inward Witnes I daylie feele of my many wants for a Charge of this Nature and Weight, which your Majestie hathe layed upon me, would greatly difmay me, were it not that I know that there is in your Most Excellent Majestie all abondance bothe of Wisdome, by your Princely Directions to supply my Defects, and of gracious Disposition, with Favour to enterpret my Endeavours. Whereof, as I have received a comfortable Taste, by your Majestie's gracious Acceptation of my first Negotiation with the King, for which I do render all humble and possible Thancks, so I do most humbly beseeche your most excellent Majestie to continue in like gracious sorte, to pardon and accept my poor and weake Endeavours hereafter; who as I said unto your Majestie when yt pleased you fyrst to impose this Charge upon me, can promise nothing of my selfe, but Faytbe and Diligence; which I do vow not to faile in, nor to omit any Helpe I may with any Industry procure to inable me for the Service: In which kind I should be very ungratefull, yf I should not yeald a true Testimony unto this Gentleman Mr. Edmonds, and acknowledge the great Light I have received, by his frendly and reall communicating with me his Knowledge of the Affaires of this State; which I assure your Majestie to be very exquisite, and his Judgment and Sufficiency suche withall, as I hold him to have bin a worthy Minister of your Majestie's here, and to be very able to do you good Service, wherefoever yt shall be your gracious Pleasure to make further use of him. He coms so perfectly instructed of all matters here, and so well acquainted with all my Negotiations since my Arrival, as I hold not fytt to trouble your Majestie with any other Relation, then that he will make at his repaire unto your Presence, unto which I refer my selfe. And therewithall I do with all Humilitie kisse your Royall Hands, beseeching God long to preserve your most excellent Majestie in Healthe, with Increase of all Princely Honor and Happines.

Your Sacred Majestie's most humble and dutiful Subject and Servant,

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.Right Honorable,Of the same Date.

THEre could be no Newes more welcome unto me, then those yt pleased you to send me, of her Majestie's gracious Acceptation of my proceeding hitherto; wherein as I acknowledge also your honorable Favour towards me, in preparing her gracious conceit, towards that which otherwise in yt selfe scarce deserved pardon; so I do most humbly thanck your Honor for communicating yt so soone unto me, and especially for the Participation you vouchsafe to take of my Joy and Comfort therein, which gives me assurance of that I have always to muche desyred. I beseech you continue to patronize my poore Credit with her Majestie, and inable me as you have begon, with your good Directions, unto which I do and will referre, whatsoever hath bin or may be pleasing in my Service.

I sent your Honor lately Copies of my Letter to Monsieur de Villeroy, and of his Answere to me; I thought not good to leave so, but have made  a gentle Reply*, and yet suche as shall urge him to a better Answere the next tyme, whereof I send your Honor a Copy here inclosed; for all other matters I shall not need to trouble your Honor muche at this tyme, for Mr. Edmonds coms so well instruſted in all things that have paſſed here, and namely, in the Points of my Negotiation, that I ſhould but diſappoint your Honor, and wrong him, to make any other Relation. This I may not omitte to ſignifie, that I have found him moſt friendly and willing, not only to communicate really with me, but to take much more pains for me then was fit for me to requyre of him, inſomuch as I hold my ſelfe very much obliged unto him; Whereof, becauſe I wholly impute yt to your Honor's Commendation, being otherwiſe of my ſelfe a meer Straunger unto him; I humbly beſeech your Honor to take knowledge thereof, and let him ſee that yt is gratefull unto you.

An. 1599.

I beſeech you, Sir, to be aſſured, that I had no purpoſe any way to challenge you of any omiſſion, in that I was not advertiſed of the Newes of Ireland which the King told me; for I had even the ſame conceyte of yt, which I find now to be trew, that the Ambaſſador had taken up the Newes there at the Exchange: but de bene eſſe, I made that Anſwere I wrote of. I beſeeche you thincke, that I ſhall take all you wryte me to be of favor, and what you write not, to be forborne upon good reſpects.

This Day were the Obſequies of the King of Spaine performed, and wherunto I was invited, but excuſed my ſelfe, That I was very willing to do the King any Honor, but this Action being deſſigned wholly to the Honor of the King of Spaine, who dyed not in Amitie, but rather in Hoſtillitie with her Majeſtie, and his Son continuing in the ſame Termes, yt would very evill beſeeme me to be Partaker of yt, and beſydes my Preſence would but trouble the Feaſt; for I thought the Spaniſhe Ambaſſador would inſiſt upon his Maſter's Place and Honor, and ſo would I upon the Queen's my Miſtreſſes; which might eaſily produce Effects that would not be pleaſing to this King, eſpecially at ſuche a tyme. My Excuses were well taken, and I was offered a private Place to ſee the Solemnity yf I would; I accepted yt for the Gentlemen of my Company, but indeed I went alſo diſguiſed my ſelfe, and repented me of my paines, having never ſeene a poorer thing. The young Prince of Condé, the Duke Monpenſier, and the Duke of Nevers, were the Mourners.

The Biſhop of Glaſcow, Ambaſſador of Scotland, was lately to viſit me, together with another that beares the Title of Maſter of Requeſts, who is ſent to aſſiſt him. The Lord of Hume is yet in theſe Parts, and for any thing I can learne makes no great haſte into Italie; which ſhould argue that * my Lord of Weemes Intelligence is not well founded; yet I thought yt my Duty to wryte yt, being of that nature, and to name my Author, upon whoſe Credit I muſt lay yt, yf yt prove otherwiſe.

Here are diverſe Engliſhe Gentlemen that ſeeme weary of their Exile and evill Entertainment among the Spaniards, who ſeek to have acceſſe unto me. Among the reſt here is Charles Paget and one Mr. Treſham, who was ſome tyme a Gentleman Penſioner. I beſeeche your Honor direct me, whether I ſhall give acceſſe unto them to make any uſe of them, or how I ſhall governe my ſelfe towards them. And ſo referring the Report of all other Particularities here unto this Bearer Mr. Edmonds, I moſt humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

* Sir Henry Nevill's Letter to the Secretary of the 26th of May.

An. 1599.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

S I R,

From the Court at Greenwich, 9th June 1599.

I Have now received your Letter of the 30th of May, whereby appeareth the Continuation of your discreet Proceedings, with which her Majestie hathe bin thoroughly informed even by reading as well your Proposition, as all the Answers. All which was fit for me to shew, unless I should have don you apparent Wrong, for I know not how the Wit of Man could have answered better. Her Majestie hathe sent for the Frenche Ambassador, and means to take notice of the small Satisfaction which is given her; and will so cary her selfe, as that yt shall appeare, that your Industry proceedeth not from youre owne particular Spyrite, but that you are bothe well warranted, and well quickned, from hence. Within these two Dayes the Ambassador hathe defyred Audience, and as I learne yt is to knytt up those Articles which were accorded here betwene us concerning Depredations; a matter which we shall hardly make any use of, yf we do not by that meanes establishe the Treaty of Blois; in which there be dyverse things you knowe will prove beneficiall for her Majestie's Marchants; as namely, the Restitution of that point of the Droit d'Aubene, which by that Treaty was graunted her Majestie's Subjects; besydes divers other things concerning our Marchants Trade for Cloathe, in which (if you remember) they were very fickle before your Departure. Yt shall be therefore very convenient that you do thoroughly informe your selfe (if that Treaty be renewed) what will be fitt for us to requyre, and what in your opinion may be likely to be obtayned; with which Instruction I thinck Mr. Edmonds may do well to come over.

I had determined to have forborne to have made you any other Answer, untill we had heard what the Ambassador would propound; but because I would rather wryte somewhat, then by tarying to wryte all, wryte nothing, in a tyme when so many Bruits fly over, whereof you could be content to heare Certainties; I have thought yt not amisse by this Bearer to wryte something of your particular fyrst, which is shortly this: That yf any other Ambassador follow the King, her Majestie would have you do so too, especially yf he go no further than the parts of Blois; and yf none of them do, then dothe her Majestie requyre you to consider how this matter of the Mony may be dealt in, when the King is so farre absent, and whether any suche provisional Order may be left by him with his Financiers, or any Commissioners, that your tarying behind him, or his own Absence from them, may not serve for an Excuse, and an Evasion, to spend the tyme in talke, and do nothing.

For your Request to be allowed as other Ambassadors have bin of these Extraordinaries; whatsoever President can be found that doth concurre with yours in Circumstances, you may be assured shall no way be denied you.

Of the Matters of Ireland I send you a Memoriall, which is as much as we do know; use you then the truth as you shall see cause, when you know yt. Yf you be any further interrogated in the matter of Peace, know this also to be trew, (but use yt for your best Advantage) that since you went out of England we have not yet hard any other matter, then that all should be deferred till the Cardinall's coming down, and that Coomans that was imployed in yt, was sent from the Cardinall at Bruxells, to informe the King of Spaine (yf yt were possible before the Archduke should come away) of the Difficulties of the Army, and Discontentment of the Provinces; with this pretence, that when the King of Spaine should be truely informed, yt would quicken his Disposition towards the Peace. But, Sir, yf you observe how hotly they beganne, and now how apt they are to Delays (though trew yt is they had but cold Comfort from us) yt makes me thinck that yt will prove Parturiunt montes, sed hæc tibi soli. And thus I committ you to God.

The Cardinall's Army is removed from Bomell without any hope to prevaile.

Yf

Yf you chance to heare any flying Tale, that my Lord Gray should be committed in Ireland, the Accident was only this: That he being only a Collonel of Horse, and my Lord of Southampton Generall, he did charge without Direction; and so for Order sake, was only committed to the Marshall one Night.

An. 1599.

Your very assured Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 15th June 1599. O.S.

Y^T may please you to remember, that at one of the last tymes I wayted upon you, I desyred to understand as muche of her Majestie's general Intentions as she would be pleased to thinck me worthie to be trusted with; to the end I might serve her the better in my Negotiations here, by directing them in particular, unto those generall Ends which she had proposed to her selfe. The Conveniency or rather Necessitie of which Course, doth daylie more and more discover yt selfe unto me. And that I may both explain my Meaning, and the Reason of that Proposition, I beseeche you give me leave to exemplifie yt in this matter of the Peace with Spaine; wherein I am bold to say yt is very fitt I should understand her Majestie's Intention and Purpose in generalitie, whether she be desyrous to make Peace or nay; for yf she be not, then will yt be fitt to enlarge and assure her Trade in other places as muche as may be, and namely in this Kingdom; yt will be fitt also to resolve how the States of the United Provinces shall be inabled to subsist, eyther by her meanes alone, or by the helpe of others: And lastly, yt will be necessary to draw as muche Assistance from hence, at least in the Repayment of the Mony due, as may be gotten. All these things are fittest to be negotiated here, whiles matters are in suspens; and yf I knew her Majestie's Intention that way, I would not doubt but to take apt tyme, not only to discover how they are affected here, but to draw some Offers from them, and that tanquam aliud agens; and so it should come of them, and not of me, which were the best way of negotiating. I make no question, whatsoever they pretend, that they are unwilling this Peace should proceede, at leaste till the matter of the Marquisat be determined; whiles this depends therefore will be the fittest tyme to draw Conditions of Advantage from them: For yf either we had actually broken off the Treaty, and engaged our selves into the Warre; or yf they were out of doubt of recovering the Marquisat, they would soone leave us to our selves. I am of Opinion, that to be assured that this Warre should be continued three or four Years against Spaine, whiles they might recover themselves in State to stand alone, they might be drawn, fyrst, to repay the Queene the Mony they owe her, by a yearly Payment of 300000 Crownes, or some suche Somme: Secondly, to make any streight League deffensive with her, that she would requyre: Thirdly, to establishe a free Trade and Entercourse for her Subjects into these Parts, in any reasonable sorte: Fourthly, to assist in secret manner the States, as the Queene shall thinck necessary. All which would be best negotiated before they did too plainly discover her Majestie's Intention. On the other syde, Yf her Majestie be desyrous to make a Peace, under pretence that she would do nothing in so important a matter, without the Advice of her good Brother and Allie, and without due regard unto the common Good of her Confederats, the King's Mind might be felt how he stands affected to yt; what Conditions he would advise to be insisted upon, both as towching our selves, and especially towching the States, yf they joyne in the Peace; and yf not, then what he would thinck fittest to be done, eyther by their common Authoritie to over-rule them to accept the Peace, or otherwise, by common means to maintaine them; and howe farre he would engage himselfe therein. Withall, before he know too

An. 1599. too muche of the Queen's Mind therein, this matter of the Trade of our Marchants, would be established with as great Advantage and Freedom from new Exactions, as might be obtained in virtue of former Treaties, or otherwise of Favor; which is one of the cheefest, and most probable Fruits, her Majestie shall reap of her great Charges here. And for the Money due by him to her Majestie, som certaine Courte would be likewise urged for Repayment in tyme, (since ready Payment cannot be had) yf her Majestie's Mind were understood before-hand what I should demaund or accept; for otherwise to wryte of every Particular, and expect the Answer, will but prolong the tyme till the Opportunity be past; eyther by the finishing of our Treaty with Spaine, or by his clearing the matter of the Marquisat.

As in this Particular, so in others, I could show like Reason why it should be necessary for me to understand the generall Purpose of her Majestie in those Matters, whereof I am to negotiate any Part or Circumstance; but I will only conclude that Point with this, That I being taken into the Worke, and having a part of the Building committed unto me, yf I be not acquainted with the Architect's Desseign and Plott of the whole, I may the sooner misse of the Proportion and Uniformitie that were fitt. This I have made bold to wryte unto your Honor now at a tyme of leisure, when I had no great matter to trouble you with; and fynding this Messenger otherwise ready to depart, it may please you to consider of yt as you see cause; and howsoever you judge otherwise, I beseeche you to excuse my Boldnes.

The King is now at Orleans, gon thither of purpose, as yt is said, to establish Monsieur d'Entragues in that Gouvernement; yt seems thereby that the Composition is already made about his Daughter, and that this is the fyrst Effect of yt. The Voyage of Blois is yet very uncertaine, I have sent one of purpose to the Court to bring me as much certainty, bothe of that and other matters, as he can learne. I wrote also to the Duke of Bouillon, praying him to deale privately with the King about her Majestie's Mony; and likewise to Monsieur de Villeroy, to know when the King's Counsaile will repayre unto the Court, and where the King will fettle, that I might attend him to pursue the matter my selfe.

The Court of Parliament made an Arrest upon Satterday last, to suspend the Execution of the King's Edict in favor of the Relligion, till those of Rochell had received the Masse. They of the Relligion beyond Loyre, make som difficulty likewise to accept yt, pretending that yt is minced, and pared, since it was fyrst accorded at Nautes. In summe, I perceave there is great Animositie on bothe sydes, and yt seems they are not yet growen wise by their long Miseries, especially the Popishe syde, who cannot dissemble their Hatred.

Since my coming hither, the Deputies of the Assemblee at Chasteltraut have bin long in this Towne, but never offred any Communication with me, not so muche as an ordinary Visitation; and for my part I thought yt not fitt to offer yt them. The Duke of Bouillon likewise hath seemed to avoid me as yt were of purpose, insomuche as he disappointed two Assignations he had geeven me of meeting at his own Lodging, and one at mine; besydes his putting me off at the Court; all which I guesse he hath don, fearing the King might conceave som Jealousie of his Communication with me. But by this means, he and I never mett, but upon the High-way betwene Paris and Fountainbleau. I did therefore wryte unto him the rather, to discover more thoroughly what Affection he beares her Majestie, and what Foundation I might make of him.

Towching the Prince of Condé, I suspect the matter stands not with him as your Honor seemed to conceave. Yt is a common Wishe here that the King would marry, to have Children, to take away all Scruples; which argueth that there is a Scruple made; besydes I heare that the Prince of Conty refused to assist at the King of Spaine's Funeralls, because he would not give the other place. The King himselfe likewise hath of late made no great Demonstration towards him. For bothe these respects I judge the State of France in a miserable case, yf God call this King, for yt seems there is a farther Judgment hanging upon them.

There

There is no certaine Advertifement yet come of the Archduke's Imbarquement, An. 1599. only yt comes confirmed from many places that he was to imbarke the 5th of this Moneth, and was expected at Milan the 15th. The Provisions are already made in Burgundy for the Troupes which came downe with him, but he himfelfe is thought will take the way of Tirol, for the Commoditie of the Coaches. Yt is delivered here from good Hands, that the King of Spaine's Assignation unto the Archduke, is of 250000 Crownes a Moneth; for the Maintenance of the Warres till the end of December next. Many conjecture, that the Archduke is in the meane tyme to assure his Estate, cyther by Peace, or Succes in Warre; and that the King of Spaine will not charge himfelfe any further with the Defence of those Countries. But in my poor Opinion, Spaine hath reserved too great an Interest in them, and too great a Possibilitie of reverting, to abandon the care of them so soone, and so lightly.

I * understand, that there is a great Breache growen betwene the Pope, and the Constable of Castile Governor of Milan, for inroaching upon the Archbishop's Jurisdiction there; and that the Pope hath personally cited the Governour to appeare at Rome about yt:

Otwell Smythe a Marchant resyding at Rouën, well known as I suppose to your Honor, was lately at Nantes: Where I gave him Instructions to learne what he could of the Spanishe Preparations; and likewise of the Corne already carryed, or intended to be carryed into Spaine. For the fyrst, he saith, he spake with a Frenche Marchant very lately com out of Spaine, who had travailed 150 Leagues along the Coast there: Who affirmeth, that the Preparations are to the number of 150 Sayle of Ships, whereof 12 Galleons, betwene 8 and 900 Tuns apeece; that the common Speche is, That after they have fought with the Hollanders and beaten them, (whereof they make no dowbt) they are to go presently for Ireland. This Advertifement, althoughe I see no reason to creditt, yet I thought not good altogether to contemne yt, and thereupon went this Day to Monsieur de Believre; who assures me, he nether understands, nor beleives any suche thing; and that the King is advertized altogether otherwise: That yt is thought rather, they will not dare to meet the Hollanders; for besydes the Galleons, all the rest are Shipps of small Burthen and Strength, being taken up as he could get them; and the most of them Frenche Shipps; whereof he told me there were not able above five to rendre any Fyght. For the matter of Corne, they do lykewise vary; Otwell Smythe affirming by his Intelligence, that there is suche Plenty brought thither, as yt beares no Price; and the other maintaining that there is exceeding Scarcity there.

Whiles I was with Monsieur de Believre this Day, there came in the Pope's Nuncio Bishop of Modena, betwene whom and me there passed no manner of Compliments; but by that occasion I brake off with Monsieur de Believre sooner then I would; only he promised me, that yf he received any further Advertizements of those Points we had talked of, he would forthwith acquaint me with yt, or any thing els that might concerne the Queene my Mistresse; acknowledging the King's great Obligation to her, and the common Interest that each had in the other's well doing. Of the Seige of Bomell he told me assuredly yt was withdrawn, but told me they had received but very little Certayntie from thence of late. He said further; he had received this Day Advertifements, that the German Princes were entred with Forces into Cleves; with a purpose to dislodge the Spanishe Garrisons that were left there.

I send your Honor here inclosed, a Letter received lately from Mr. Lock. Mr. Edmonds I suppose hath advertized you of the Stay of Monsieur le Grand's Journey, and that Monsieur le Motte Fenelon was appointed for that Service; since, I heare he lykewise excuseth himfelfe, by reason of his Age and Weakness; but thereof I shall learne more at the returne of him I sent to the Court. I send your Honor lykewise herewith, two Letters I received from Charles Pagett and Tre-

* Lettres d'Etat, Vol. 2. p. 376.

An. 1599. Sham, which I could not well avoid to receive; yt may please your Honor eyther to take knowledge of them, or suppress them, as you please.

Towching the 20000 Crowns, I doubt not but Mr. Edmonds hath advertized you what their Answer is, viz. That yt shall be ready, whensoever the Bonds be sent over hither. I am in hope very shortly to hear from your Honor how I shall further proceed in the matters I have written of. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 21st June 1599. O. S.

THIS Bearer Coombes offering himselfe so opportunely unto me, though I were not fully ready for a Dispathe, yet I would not let him passe without a word or two, to let your Honor understand that I have received your Letter of the 9th of this Moneth, the Answer whereof I referre till the coming of your Dispathe which you promise therein, for my full Direction in those matters I have written of. The King came to this Town upon Sunday laste, and goeth not away till Satterday or Monday; I have made meanes to have accesse unto him, but I have yet no Answer, and I feare I shall scarce obtaine yt, because he is here only for his Pleasure. He dynd the first Day he came at Monsieur d'Entrague's House, and this Day he feasts all that Company at the Tuilleries. I have sought to speake with Monsieur Villeroy, but he hath flunned me as yt seemes of purpose; for yesterday after I sent him word of my coming, he went to his House at Conflans within a League of this Towne, where he pretends to take Phy fick, and will give Accesse to no Man. But I have wrytten to him, to put him in mynd, that this were a very fitt time to begin to consult of giving me Satisfaction in the matter I have proposed, seeing the King is in the Towne, and the Principall of the Counsaill about him, and namely, those of the Finances, with whom he must cheefly advise in a matter of that Quality. At least I prayed them, yf their leysure served them not to consult of yt now, to take order to make all Searches and Verifications that were requisite; that when I came to treate with the King's Counsaill of that hereafter, I may not be put off upon any suche matter, that can be dispatched no where but here. I will send agayne to morrow unto him, and yf I can by any meanes, I will speake with him myselfe.

The King's Journey to Blois is now resolved, and he appoints to be there upon the fyrst or second of July, where I purpose also to meet him; and hope in this meane tyme to receive your Honor's full Direction how I shall proceed in all things, and namely, towching the Contents of my last Letter sent by Peter Brown.

I heare the Archduke and the Infanta are arrived in Italy; and yt is thought he will make more haste then he fyrst intended, being thereunto provoked by many Messages from the Low-Countries, which seeme to need his Presence very much: By reason of the great Dissension among the principal Commaunders their, and the Discontentment of the Spaniards; who returne daylie homeward throughe France in greate numbers, saying, they will serve no Man but their King.

The Plague is exceeding great in Spaine, not only in Lisbone, which is wholly desolated by yt, but in many other Parts of Spaine, as namely in Arragon and Catalogna. Yt is commonly believed here, and that by the King's Counsaill, that the Spaniards are not able to issue out to fyght with the States Navie, but keepe their Fleet within the Harbour of Ferrol, and other Places, where they have fortified themselves.

By

By my next, your Honor shall understand some Matters of Importance. In the mean tyme, beseeching your Honor I may be informed what Customes and Impositions have bin raised upon Forreigne Marchants in England; and namely upon the Frenche, since the Yeare 1572: Or what Restraints have bin made for bringing thither the Commodities of this Countrey; which will be materiall for me to know, when I shall Treat with the Counsaill heere; I humbly take my Leave.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 27th June 1599. O. S.

I Have heretofore signified unto your Honor, that Charles Paget, and one Tresham, had desyred Accessse unto me, and I have sent you a Letter from Paget unto me, and from th'other unto your Honor, whereby you may perceave what their Desyre is. I have fought since, to informe my selfe, as much as I might, concerning their Cariadge in former tymes, and the cause of their retyring hither; and I fynd that there hath growen great Dissension, betwene our Papists abroad, and that they have bin divided into two Factions, the one depending upon the Jesuites, wherof Parsons is now the Head, whose Courses have bin violent to seeke and wishe the overthrowe of the present Estate, by Conquest, or any other meanes; the other consisting chiefly of the Laymen and Gentlemen which are abroad, wherof Charles Paget hath bin the Chiefe; who could not be brought, as they pretend, to consent, or concurre, to the Invasion and Conquest of our Kingdom by a Foraine Prince. This Division beganne amongst them, soon after the Death of the Queene of Scotts, upon whom they did all concurre whiles she lived; but since her Death, could never agree upon any one Course, eyther of Conquest or proposed Title. And this Contention hath proceeded unto great Heat between them, infomuche as eyther Syde hath laboured to supplant and disgrace the other; but especially of Late, since the Title of the Infanta of Spaine hath bin sett on foote, according to the Books written by Parsons under one Doleman's Name. For the Jesuite's Syde promoting that Title by all meanes, and taking a violent Course to urge all Englishmen eyther in Spaine, or Rome, or where els they may prevayl with them, to subscribe thereunto; Paget and his Syde have directly opposed themselves, both by Word and Wryting, as I am informed; and they are so devided thereupon, as there is an extreme Hatred growen betwene them: Infomuche, as these Men do openly inveigh against Parsons and his Adherents, as Men seditious and factious, full of Treacherie, and without Conscience. And being questioned with, by suche as I appointed to conferr with them, to know, what Service they would, or could do to her Majestie, to cancel their former Faults; They propose this as the Cheife and Principall, that they shall be able so to discover these Practizes, and decipher not only to her Majestie, but to the Papists of England, (who now through Ignorance of their Intentions, beleve too much upon them;) as should worke a general Dislike and Detestation of them, and take away that Credit which now they have, and dayly imploy, to the Daunger of Her Majestie's Estate. Being urged to give som present Tast of their loyall Affection to her Majestie, which they so greatly pretend, thereby the better to incline her Majestie to som Compassion or Regard of them; they only discover thus much in generallitie, that there are great Numbers of Jesuites and Priests now in England, and one of them sayeth, at the least 600, which have their Dyet and Maintenance in certaine Houses by turnes. Their ordinary way of repayre thither, is through Scotland, and so into the Northe Parts. They also accuse som Officers of the Ports, and namely, those of Gravesend, for suffering too free

An. 1599. free Passage out of England; whence there com dayly young Men over, which are presently conveyed to the Colleges at Doway, or Rome, and from thence som of them against their Wills, into Spaine; and many forced to professe themselves of som Order or other, when they meant yt not. They also thinck, that This Subscription beforementioned, is laboured in England, by those Jesuites and Priests that are there. But being pressed to som more particular Discovery, their Answer is, they will reserve that, till they see what Hope there is of obtaining their Suit: And Paget sayeth, he had almost bin undone by some Advertisements he wrote over out of the Low Countries, which makes him very wary not to bereave himselfe of all meanes of living on this Syde the Sea with Safety, till he may be assured of a safe Retreat there.

There is also in this Towne, one * Cecill a Priest, who professeth the same intention and desyre with them; and the like they affirme to be in almost all the Englishe Gentlemen in the Low Countries, except Sir William Stanley, and Owen, and som 3 or 4 more.

All this I thought fit to advertise, and althoughe I am not worthie, nor intend to presume to give any Advise in the matter, yet I will be bold to propose unto your Honor's Consideration, these three Points. Fyrst, whether yt may not advantage her Majestie's Affaires, and be without prejudice to her; by retyring of two or three of them, to make tryall of their true Meaning, and of the Service they are able to do her Majestie, that way which they pretend, or otherwise by any Discoverie; considering, that when they are drawn home, they will be engaged and enforced to keepe their Credit there, and will not dare to double with you, for here will be no place for them. And I see there are in this Country, none more forward in obervance to this King, then suche as had most to do with Spaine during the League, having made themselves irreconcilable, as they conceive, unto that Syde; which reason may lykewise prevaile in these Fugitives of ours. Secondly, whether yt be not convenient, that suche Priests or notorious Recufants as shall be hereafter apprehended, be severely examined, whether they have not solicited others, or bin solicited themselves, to subscribe to that Title of the Infanta. And lastly, whether yt will not be fit, when you shall come to treat with the Archduke, to insist upon an Article, of the Infanta's Resignation of any pretended Title; according to the Example practised in the † Treaty with the Scottishe Queene, in the beginning of her Majestie's Reigne. Which yf she refuse, will more discover the Certaintie of these Informations, and yf she assent unto yt, will bothe dissolve the Plott intended, and give Satisfaction to some who have taken too hot an Allarme of yt, and to prevent yt, have almost precipitated themselves into daungerous Counsaills both to themselves and us; I meane f. 150. The King of Scotland, whereof I shall be able to certifie you more, e're yt be long.

Howsoever her Majestie resolveth of the rest, I beseeche your Honor to direct me how I shall carry my selfe towards these Men; for I perceave they will continue to seeke to have Access unto me, and will looke at length for som other Answer then I have hitherto given them, which hath bin only dillatory, that in the meane tyme I myght understand her Majestie's full pleasure. For Tresham, I was bold after I had seene his Letter, to send yt to your Honor, because he had not offended in so deepe a degree, as some others, to my knowledge; and withall, seemes to marche with lesse cunning then the rest, and to stand upon no Conditions but of humble Submission and Pardon.

‡ I have bin acquainted with a y. dwufrmshmf d negotiation of the Lord of q. crauntu Oglebye, from f. 150. the King of Scotland x. erdo with c 100 the King of Spaine, in the Yeare 1596. There are Points of great importance contayned in yt. And yf your Honor have not seene yt, I thinck I shall be able to procure a Copy of yt.

* This is the same Person mentioned before in Oglebye's Negotiation.

I humbly thanck your Honor for your promise of favor, yf I should be occasioned to follow the King to Lions; yt would be a very extraordinary Charge, and such as no Ambassador hath had since the Queen's tyme, and therefore I trust will fynd some Consideration. And so, &c.

Your Honors, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 29th June 1599. O. S.

I Send your Honor herewith, a Copy of the Memoriall delivered to the Pope on the Part of this King, towching the Marquisat of Saluces; I am put in hope of that which was presented lykewise of the Duke of Savoy's Part. That matter is now almost dead in Speeche here, these Men making themselves in a manner sure, that yt will be adjudged and delivered them, in the end of the Terme limited. But I had Conference lately with r. 162. Monsieur de Belleivre, who concurred in Opinion with me, that yt was of so great Importance to the Affaires of Spaine in Italie, that yt was not likely to be so lightly passed over. Surely, yf the Duke set a good Face upon yt, this King will linger the Matter, rather then attempt any thing by open force; for yt is both contrary to his own humor, and the Counsaile of suche as most governe him, to interrupt his Peace and Pleasure.

At that Conference, r. 162. Monsieur de Belleivre entred into a large and ferious Discourse to me, " how necessary yt was, both for a 100. the Queen, "
 " Z. ubp. and 6. 120. The French King, that they should continue united in " Amitie and common Interests, and especially in the Maintenance of a. 120.
 " The United Provinces; for that otherwys, being abandoned, they must needs
 " fall into the Hands of c. 100. the King of Spaine, which could not but prove " in short tyme exceeding dangerous. I answered, that a. 100. the Queene had " alone sustained these many Yeares, the brunt of their Defence, and of the Im-
 " peaching of the ambitious Designs of the King of Spaine; and that this Ho" nor could not be denied her, that she alone had bin the Buckler of Christen-
 " dom against his intended Monarchie; but that she might now very well chal" lenge som libertie of ease and rest unto her selfe, and put over the Burden to
 " som other Princes, who had rested themselves, and gathered rest and vigor
 " during her travails; and by her assistance, were now growen in State able to " bear yt. He confessed yt to be true, and seemed to blame their carelesnes;
 " But yt was not enough, he said, to beginne well, except she did continue;
 " and that otherwise, the Fruit of all that had bin don, would be lost, at least,
 " for the tyme to come. I said, that in generallitic, I was sure the Counsaile
 " and Resolutions of the Queen would be (as they had bin ever) Wise, and " Honorable; but for the particularitie, I could not answer what she was re" solved to do; only I thought she would not respect her owne good alone, but " would have a due Regard unto the good of her Confederats, as farre forthe, as " her Honor and Safetie would permit.

The * Master of Gray hath bin twise with me since my coming hither, of whom I must be bold to wryte that I received no great Satisfaction any way; I take him to be hollow and venall, and his owne Words seem to import no less; for he said, He was free, and owed no Respect or Service to any Prince, further then they should give him cause. His Advertisements are surely but meane, and he seemes to be very credulous to receive and beleive them, without any great Examinations. I am sure he delivered som unto me that were both untrew,

* Patrick Gray, — This Character of him appears to be very just, as the Reader may further see, if he compares what Mr. Cambden says of him, in his Hist. p. 500. And Arthur Wilson, in his Life of King James, p. 688, 689. History of England, Vol. 2.

An. 1599. and utterly improbable. If your Honor intertaine any Intelligence with him, you shall better discover him then I; but for any thing I have seen in him, I would not thinck him a Man worthie to loose muche upon.

Th' Arrest of this Court of Parliament, to stay the Execution of the Edict, (whereof I wrote to your Honor in my Letter by Peter Browne) is said not to have bin definitively pronounced, but only resolved upon, and since stayed by the King's Authoritie. But I beleive rather the former Report, because when I used some meanes to the Greffier to have a Copy of the Arrest, he did not deny that there was any such, but said he durst not give any Copy of yt.

I wrote unto Monsieur de Villeroy, as I signified unto your Honor, and likewise unto the Duke of Bouillon, when the King was at Orleans. I received good general Words from Monsieur de Villeroy, that he would imploy his best meanes and credit, to procure the Queene's Majestie Contentment, when the Counsaill should be assembled about the King. From the Duke of Bouillon I received this Answer, that he had imparted my Letter to the King, who had answered, that his Estate was very needy, but that he would strayne himselfe to surmount all difficulties to give her some Contentment. The Duke is since gon to the Bathes of Pogues, and is not to returne this Moneth or six Weekes.

In perusing the Copies of the King's Bonds and Contracts, I fynd there is a Bond for 20000*l.* for the intertaynement of the 2000 Souldiers in Picardy, for six Moneths, and after those six Moneths, I find by the Contract, that the King was to pay them; But I understand, that they continued here nere 18 Moneths, and at the Queen's Charge all the while; so that I am to demaund, yf yt be so, almost 40000*l.* more: I beseech your Honor therefore, let me be perfectly informed how long they stay'd, and howe muche her Majestie's Charge amounted to, for their whole intertainment; and likewise touching the Charge of the Forces sent over with my Lord Willoubie, and the 20000*l.* disbursed by Sir Horatio Pallavicini, for the levying of the German Army, in the Year 1588; and the 30000*l.* lent in the Year 1587. I humbly pray to have some Verification attested under your Honor's Hand, for I hope, that with importunity, I shall at last extort som reason from these Men; and the more I am able to charge them with, the greater present or yearly satisfaction, they must in reason offer.

The King is yet in this Towne, but to morrow purposeth to go towards Monceaux, from thence to Fontainebleau, and so to Orleans, where his Counsaill are appointed to meet him. But whither he will settle there, or go to Blois, is not yet certain, for he chaungeth his Determination every Day. I used what means I could, both by M. Villeroy, and otherwise, to have had Audience, but could not obtaine yt, nor any of th' other Ambassadors; the King pretending, that he came hither privately, to passe his tyme meerly, and would not therefore be troubled with Affaires. But I wrote unto M. de Villeroy as I signified in my last, and spake with him afterwards at his House at Conflans, to the same effect; but he intreated me to have Patience till the King came to Blois or Orleans, geving me very good comfort, that somewhat would be don there for her Majestie's Contentment.

We had som Speeche of the Peace with Spaine, wherein I assured him " I knew
 " no more then I had already communicated unto the King, and him. I put " him in mynd of the Promises the King had made to her Majestie by Mr. Ed- " monds, soone after your Honor's returne out of these Parts; and told him, I
 " I thought which way soever her Majestie resolved in the Matter, she would " not forget to claime and embrace those kynd offers of the King's towards her.
 " He said, I might boldly assure her Majestie, the King would perfourme what" soever he had offered, and would ever make a Difference betwene her Friend" ship, and any other Prince's in the World. I said the King had made very " good Tryall of the Difference of the Queen's Intentions, and those of other " Princes, and therefore I did not dowbt, but he would discern and esteeme of " their Friendship accordingly. We spake likewise of the Matter of our Mar-
 " chants, and settling of a good entercourse betwene us; wherein he assured me I " should

“ should find the King as forward, as I would desyre.” Your Honor seeth how An. 1599.
they are now disposed, yt may be they will not always be so, for I do not altogether impute it to good Nature in them; but I thinck her Majestie may now make som good Use of them, yf she be so pleased.

Towching the States Navie, Monsieur de Villeroy had received no Intelligence at all, what they did, or where they were; But on the other syde he assured me, there was no Preparation to encounter them at Sea. Of the Archduke's Arryval in Italy, there is this only of certainty, that he is passed by Marseilles; for so muche the Duke of Guise hath delivered, who came hither in Post since his Passage, but further Monsieur de Villeroy hath not understood; yet there be particular Men, that pretend to have Letters of yt out of Italye.

The Duke of Mantua is lately arrived at the Spaw, which is thought to be but a Pretext of his coming, and that the true Cause is to take the Charge of the Army at the Archduke's Returne. Yet I heare that the Marquis of Burgau, the Cardinall Andrea's Brother, is likewise com downe, and as yt is conjectured, for the same purpose. The Spanishe Commaunders have bin at som Dissension among themselves, insomuche as la Berlotte was committed Prisoner for two Dayes, but is since delivered, and retyred to a House he hath near Brussels. The ordinary Advertisements hither do import, that the Spanishe Army is in great want of all things necessary, but especially of Resolution, what to do, or attempt.

There was a Letter lately imparted unto me which came from Collogn, wherein, touching the Attempt of the German Princes, there are these Words: Les Jesuites esperent que ces choses de Allemagne ne seront rien, mais j'espere le contraire, & que les Circles venans à faillir, ung autre prince Alleman sera à la main, pourveu des moyens pour prendre à soy tous ses gens de guerre, & faire ce qui emporte. Som guesse yt is ment by the Lantgrave of Hesse. The same Letter makes mention, that the Spaniards have voluntarilie retyred their Garnisons out of Rhees, Rbinberg, and Guneux, thincking thereby to appease the Germans, which are not so contented, but stand upon three other Points. Fyrst, That they may be assured that the like Insolency shall be no more committed. Secondly, That Recompence be made for the Dommage which the Subjects of the Empire have sustained. Thirdly, That forasmuche as for want of Satisfaction in tyme, the Princes have bin enforced both to assemble often, and finally to take Armes, they may be rembourfed of suche Charges, as they have sustayned for that Cause.

The Voiage of Monsieur de la Motte Fenelon into Spaine is now concluded at last, and accepted by him, and he is to depart within 8 or 10 Days. I have sollicitated Monsieur de Villeroy towching Mr. Lock, who hath assured me he will perform effectually what he hath heretofore promised your Honor by Mr. Edmonds. I understand the Duke of Cleve hath lately married the Duke of Lorraine's Daughter.

There happ'ned upon Corpus Christi Day last at Limoges, a matter which doth easilye discover the Passion and Malice yet remayning in the Popish syde heere, against the Protestants. Certain Priests themselves went into the Church in the Night, and brake down som Images, and (as they say) cast the Sacrament about the Church. In the Morning, the People assembling, a great Exclamation was made by the Priests of this Outrage, and som principall Men of the Relligion in that Towne, charged by Name to be the Doers of yt. The People by and by grew in Fury, and would have proceeded to the present Execution of them; taking Armes as I am informed for that purpose, and the other syde arming themselves likewise for their Defence. Monsieur de Salignac, Governor of the Towne arriving, and examining the matter, found that one of the Relligion was charged by Name to have bin an Actor in yt, who had bin in his Company all that Night. Whereupon suspecting the matter, he caused som of the principall Accusers to be severely examined, and namely one offered to depose, that he had seene this Man there, whom Monsieur de Salignac knew to be absent; and threatning

An. 1599. threatenng him with the Torture, drew the Confession from him of the whole Practise; and that they had don yt, to the intent to have moved the People to a Seditiō, and to have cut the Throats of them of the Relligion. Hereupon som of them were apprehended, and som fled. What Justice will be don hereupon is mucche expected. This Matter will be disguised I am sūre to your Honor by the Frenche Ambassador; but this is the Truthe of yt, as I receaved yt from Monsieur de Bellievre, of whose Sinceritie I find more cause dayly to beleave, then in Monsieur de Villeroy's; who when I was with him at Conflans, denied that there was any such matter at all, and since hath fought to disguise yt to me as mucche as he could, suppressng all that toucheth the Priests.

Your Honor understandeth by Mr. Edmonds, that they require to have the Duke of Bouillōns and Monsieur de Zancy's Bond for the 6000*l.* to be sent over hither, and that thereupon they will pay the Mony. Yt may be that yf I obtaine Payment of any more, they will require the like; which I suppose her Majestie will not greatly stand upon, althoughe in truthe the King be bound by Contract to pay the Mony in London. When the 6000*l.* is payed, your Honor I hope will direct me what course shall be taken, for the convaying or making yt over. Yf any greate Somme be obtayned, methincks the King might be urged to delyver yt at Diepe, and there som of the Queene's Ships to be readie to transport yt: And yf some of yt be in Silver, there will be no great Losse, and perhaps not so mucche as to make yt over by Exchange, besides the Difficultie of returning any greate Somme from hence thither.

I beleche your Honor, yf yt be possible, that I may have answer of this and all my former Letters within 15 Dayes, for about that tyme I guesse I may have Audience. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

S I R,

2^d July 1599.

YOU may not mislike that I have not sooner answered your Letters, for though I knowe yt is convenient to advertise you often, yet being accountable for any Lavishness in Pacquets, I do not love to wryte you Answers, without Answers. To the poynt therefore, Sir, of the Debts in which you dealt with the King, because I know not how the French Ambassador hath reported from hence the Queen's immediate Concurrency with your Expostulation concerning the same, I cannot in particular further direct you; for yt is but impertinent for us to open our selves in a particular Demand, when we cannot yet winne any Consent to come to any thing in the generall: So as for the matter of the Debts, your Dispatches must direct ours.

And now, Sir, for the Peace, in which you desyre to know her Majestie's Resolution. Fyrst, you need not dowbt that Peace would be wellcome, so yt com accompanied with safe Circumstances, which cannot be judged, till they be knowen what will be offered or required. In which case, though I cannot otherwise answer you of her Majestie's Purposes, yet this can be no Error in you, to make them credulous, that yt is possible we may have yt: for these Conceits, according to your own Opinion, will make our Reputation the greater, and facilitate any of our Business with them. Nevertheless I will say this to you, that all we know more then you know, is this Letter newly brought hither for to be sent to him, which may shew you the great Post in which this Matter marcheth.

And now, Sir, to make you know what we purpose, this yt is. Fyrst, we see it good to joyne faster with the French in Civil Contract then yet we are, for seeing we have no Treaty in full Vigour, these things which we should receive in Gratitude from them, are yealded to us, as yf we were in their Debt for them.

them. In the Consideration of all this, we find that of Blois the best Treaty; An. 1599. and that in which France is thus engaged, that Henry III. did revive yt, by his Proposition and Assent. Of thus much I think to send you a Preparative, although we meane here to deal fyrst with the Ambassador, and only to propound the reviving of that Treaty, to see whether he will take Exception to yt in particular, as I doubt not but he will.

Secondly, I doubt he will desire to have those Articles last accorded inserted into the Treaty, which is not good for us; for though we can be content, as we have done, by a temporary Proclamation to free his Shipps as we do, yet we will not incorporate yt into the Treaty in perpetuam rei memoriam; for indeed our Proclamation is too liberall, for now may any Shipps that can buy a false Flagg passe well inoughe, and so the King not able to remedy our Injuries; which would not be, yf we had inserted this Condition, That they should have had the King's Passport also, or his Admirall's. In this Poynt of the Proclamation we have dealt with the Frenche Ambassador, whercof yt may be you shall there have understood.

Concerning the 20000 Crownes, I send you the original Bond, which yf they will pay, you may receive as a Debt not any way belonging to the great Debts. I pray you, Sir, when you have them, certifie me of the Receypte.

Out of Ireland now we heare, that the Lord Lieutenant hath ranged the best part of Munster with his Army, and is com back to Dublin, having some Persons of that Province com in; but the principall, Titulary Earl of Desmoud, and divers others, remaine there as they did; and so I fear this will be, till my Lord hath bin in the North of Ireland, and geven a maine Blowe, of which I dowbt not, for he is preparing with all speed thither; and so, &c. From the Court at Greenwich.

Your very loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

By my next you shall learn more.

Because I understand that certain Deputies of Hamborg are going into France, to the end that you may know how little reason they have to complaine of us, I have sent you our Answer to their Propositions.

Responsum datum Dominis Oratoribus Hamburgensibus, 24 Junii 1599.

CUM nuper Gubernator Societatis Mercatorum adventurariorum Angliæ nobiscum egerit, ut Domini Oratores Hamburgenses, qui nuper in hoc Regnum advenerunt responsum habere possent ad ea, quæ ab ipsis proposita sunt, pro restitutione frumenti, quod in Hispaniam missum in mari interceptum est: Illustres Domini Consilarii quibus Serenissima Majestas Regia hoc commisit negotium, jam ante iisdem significarunt, & aliud responsum dare non possunt, quam quòd frumentum illud, juste confiscatum sit & restitui nec posset nec debeat. Nam Serenissima Majestas sua jamdudum eos præmonuit, ne quid tale facerent in subsidium ejus, qui tam notorium hostem hujus Regni se manifeste declararat. Quinetiam in privilegiorum diplomatibus, quæ Hamburgenses & reliqui eorum Socii Hansatici prætendunt, sibi deberi in Regno Angliæ, disertis verbis exceptum est non posse eos, quibus privilegium illud concessum fuerat, suas mercandisas deferre ad notorios hujus Regni hostes.

Præterea, cum ex antiqua compositione quam Hansatici habent cum Civitate Londinensi, Mercatores Guilde Hansaticæ Loudini residentes, tenentur tempore hostilitatis, unam ex portis primariæ Civitatis viris & armis defendere, an verisimile est, iis qui ad mutua auxilia & defensionem tenentur, concessam fuisse ullam libertatem neutralitatis, quidvis ad hostes deferendi? Sic enim non solum arcana ad hostes (quod jus civile prohibet) deferrentur, sed etiam auxi-

An. 1599. lia quæ per privilegia debentur, ab Hansaticis subducerentur: & hostis redderetur instructior; ad injuriam inferendam, per subsidia missa ab iis qui privilegia talia vendicant.

Domini Hamburgenses de prohibitione à Majestate sua facta satis præmoniti fuerant, tam per literas Regias ad eos scriptas, quam per Aldermannum Societatis Hansaticæ tum Londini residentem, ne quid tale vel ipsi vel reliqui Hansatici præsumerent facere. At ipsi nulla amicitia Majestatis suæ cura habita, sæpius attentarunt hostes juvare, navibus suis onustis frumento, & aliis apparatus bellicis & nauticis, prohibitis missis in Hispaniam & Lusitaniam, tam per mare Hibernicum, quam etiam per ipsum Oceanum Britannicum. Quare si nonnunquam interceptæ fuerint ipsimet & prohibitionis & præmonitionis Majestatis suæ spretores, damuorum quæ sustinuerunt, authores & causæ fuerunt. Nam nisi a Dominis Hamburgensibus, & reliquis Hansaticis Sociis adjutus fuisset Hispaniarum Rex, victualibus & aliis apparatus nauticis & bellicis: nunquam potuisset alios principes adeo molestare: sicque jamdudum bona & firma aliqua pax toti Europæ restitui potuisset. Verum per ista subsidia ab Hamburgensibus & reliquis Hansaticis subministrata, potentior & instructior factus est, præsertim An. Dom. 1588. contra Regnum Angliæ & Regnum Galliæ, quod subjugare & in formam provinciæ redigere conatus est: atque etiam contra ipsam patriam vestram Germaniæ, & Principes & status Imperii, quos hostiliter nuper ut antea alios aggressus est. Quare Serenissima Majestas Regia nunquam potuit hanc vestram neutralitatem (ut vultis prætere) subveniendi hosti suo tolerare: Et sperat illustrissimos Germaniæ principes malo suo nunc demum edoctos, pro parte etiam sua inhibituos, ne ex Germania contra Germaniam communis hostis potentior reddatur.

Huc accedit quod in hoc negotio interceptionis frumenti de quo nunc conquerimini, cum Majestas sua pro sua clementia & dignitate, in animo habuerit, pro aliqua quantitate prætium persolvere, & pro reliqua portione pro hoc tempore talem navigationem vobis permittere; Navarchi vestri non solum admodum contumeliosè recesserunt, sed etiam secum nonnullos subditos abduxerunt, qui in hostium potestate relictæ sunt. Quæ nova injuria non meretur aliquam benevolentiam, sed potius ut priores prohibitiones severius in vos deinceps restringentur, & executioni mandentur, prout factum est. Neque existimamus nudis precibus vestris Serenissimam Majestatem Regiam perducî posse ad id concedendum, quod vos cum Regni sui præjudicio & periculo petitis.

Neque hic modus procedendi, tempore belli & necessitatis, debet cuiquam vestrum videri novus, cum ejus plurima exempla similia in Germania & Regionibus vestris septentrionalibus proferrî possunt.

Anno 1558. occupata per Moschum civitate Nerva, Lubecenses nihilominus eò cum mercibus navigarunt, non intuentes quod ea civitas esset Hansatica, & ab Imperio in subjectionem alterius principis avulsa & redacta. Conquesti de eo sunt magister, & status Livoniæ apud Ferdinandum celebris memoriæ Imperatorem, quod tali importatione omnis generis mercium, commeatuum, armorum & munitionum bellicarum, adversus se totamque Livoniam Romani Imperii Provinciam Moschus juvaretur. Itaque Imperator publico mandato non modo armorum, sed commeatus invectionem in ditiones Moschi generaliter prohibuit.

Anno 1565. Maximilianus Imperator ad sollicitationem Regis Daniæ, & Lubecensium, qui tunc temporis bellum cum Rege Sueciæ habuerunt, mandato suo prohibuit omnium ex Germania vel aliis Provinciis mercium & bellicarum munitionum in Regnum Sueciæ importationem.

Cum Dantiscani navigationem in Nervam impedire conarentur, Anglos multos interceperunt, quorum merces & bona omnia in fiscum relata sunt, neque ad ullam intercessionem Majestatis suæ quicquam potuit recuperari.

Cum Serenissimus Polonia Rex Stephanus Anno 1577. Dantiscum obsideret, nonne scripsit ad Illustrissimum Electorem Brandenburgensem, Duces Pomeraniæ & reliquos principes vicinos, ne obsessos ullo modo juvarent? Nonne idem Lubecensibus becensibus & civitatibus Hansaticis denunciavit, requirens ab ipsis certior fieri An. 1599. an vellent amici esse Regis, vel Gedanensium, & amicitia ipsorum erga eum hoc fore signum, si Dantiscanis nil subsidii mitterent?

Nonne vos ipsi Hamburgenses antebac prohibuistis exportationem frumenti ab utraque parte fluminis Albis, & intercepistis frumentum aliorum, qui id vobis evchere conabantur? Sic Ericus Rex Sueciae, qui tum Rivalia in Livonia civitatis Hansaticae Dominus factus erat, interdixit & vobis & ceteris Hansaticis, ut à Russicis commerciis, & Nervicensi navigatione prorsus abstineretis. Sed Rivalia & Wiburgi solummodo cum Russis deinceps negotiarentur. Naves Lubecensium Nerva redeuntes hostiliter cepit, & merces omnes in fiscum redigi curavit. Idem postea fecit Johannes Rex.

In bellis quæ olim gesserunt Lubecenses, contra Johannem Regem Daniae, & nuper contra Johannem Regem Sueciae, nonne tales prohibitiones fecerunt & multas naves Anglorum, cum mercibus confiscarunt?

Ex chronico Prussiae multa similia exempla proferri possunt, Dantiscanos molestasse Belgas, Hollandos, Suecios, Dacos, Livonienses, Lubecenses socios & alios imperii & Regni subditos, qui tempore belli quod inter Magistrum ordinis Teutonici & civitates Prutenicas, gestum est, vel commeatum vel provisiones bellicas in terras magistro subjectas importarunt. Et Angli ratione istarum prohibitionum plurima & magna damna sustinuerunt.

Si ista aliis regibus tempore belli & hostilitatis licuerunt, & Hansaticorum Democratia idem jus sibi arrogarunt? Annon tantundem licebit Serenissima Angliae Reginae? Sane inter actiones illas, quarum jam mentio facta est, & per quas Angli gravibus damnis affecti sunt, & modum procedendi quo Serenissima Majestas sua instantis belli tempore usa est erga Hansaticos, hoc est discrimen, quod in plurimis nulla data fuit mercatoribus Anglis præmonitio, quo sibi & rebus suis prospicerent, & deinde quod naves & bona omnia confiscata sint, mercatores & naves hostiliter tractati & in carcerem conjecti: Hic autem tantum ablatae post legitimam præmonitionem fuerint res prohibitae, relictis & restitutis ceteris, ac navibus & personis semper salvis & intactis.

Satis libera Hansaticis omnibus relicta est in Hispaniam Navigatio cum omnibus aliis mercibus, iis solummodo exceptis quæ propter necessitatem publicam fuerunt interdicta. Neque quicquam à Majestate sua commissum est, quod non in talibus necessitatibus ab aliis principibus & statibus non sit factum, & fieri consueverit.

Idcirco civitates Hansaticae sæpius præmonita suorum detrimentorum causa fuerunt, cum scientes contempserint amicam Majestatis suae denuntiationem, ut notorium hostem juvarent iis rebus, quibus instructior & potentior redderetur ad Majestatem suam & Regna sua, ipsum etiam Imperium Germanicum invadendum & opprimendum. Atque hæc de confiscatione frumenti in Hispaniam ad hostes missi sufficiant.

Quod verò in colloquio cum Dominis Consiliariis, Domini Oratores Hamburgenses protulerunt de benevolentia sua erga Nationem Anglicam: Domini consiliarii cuperent, eam non tantis verbis proferri, sed rebus ipsis demonstrari, nam adhuc nulla talis benevolentia apparuit, cur Domini consiliarii eorum relationibus plenam & indubitam fidem adhiberent.

Nam in decennali illa transactione quæ inter civitatem Hamburgensem & Societatem mercatorum adventurariorum inita est, conventum erat ut ea privilegia concederentur ad decennium tantum, & decennio elapso diutius, si (quod non sperabatur) ista negotiatio in dispendium civitatis Hamburgensis non cederet. At in intimatione illa, qua revocatio privilegiorum ab Hamburgensibus denunciata est, expressè continetur Mercatores Anglos, eo decennio elapso, honestè se gessisse, & integritate sua bonorum virorum benevolentiam commeritos esse. Undè ex verbis conventionis privilegia diutius duratura erant, cum negotiatio illa non esset civitati Hamburgensi dispendiosa. Verum Anglos ejici oportuit, ut hostibus nostris & Imperii gratum officium præstari posset.

An. 1599. Civitas Hamburgum non est ignara eorum, quæ post istum tempus, inter Serenissimam Majestatem suam, & civitates Hansaticas acta sunt: & qualiter (concessa mercatoribus suis priori residentia) Majestas sua contenta fuerit, patres Hansaticis cum naturalibus subditis immunitates concedere in Regno suo. Et vos ipsi Hamburgenses videbamini in talem conventionem proclives, ut ex literis vestris, 6^{to} Septembris 1584 apparet. Sed quid inde consequutum est? Augmentum ingens vectigalis in urbe Hamburgensi & alibi super mercibus Anglicis impositum: Querelæ contumeliosæ præter veritatem in Imperio contra nationem Anglicam publicatæ: Suggestiones falsissimæ Cæsareæ Majestati & Germaniæ principibus factæ: Legationes, Coitiones, Conventiones Hansaticorum de bello inferendo huic Regno, & vi extorquendis privilegiis veteribus quæ jamdudum in commissum ceciderunt.

Cum hæc molimina initio non succederunt, Hamburgenses per literas suas Regiam Majestatem suam iterum interpellabant, ut de residentia in civitate sua, pro mercatoribus adventurariis transactio fieri posset, sub tolerabilibus conditionibus; ac spes certa facta est, si modo idonei homines ex Anglia eò mitterentur, rem perficiendam: Missi sunt Legati Hamburgum: sed re infecta recesserunt. Nam eodem tempore advenerat Doctor Westendorpius à Principe Parmensi ablegatus. Is sic prævaluit, ut neque Majestatis suæ, vel subditorum suorum ulla cura sit habita: nec ea præstita sint, quæ in literis ab Hamburgensibus fuerunt prius promissa.

Subsequentum postea est mandatum Cæsareum proscribens commercium Anglicum. Id continet falsissimas calumnias & injustas suggestiones Hansaticorum, Cæsareæ Majestati & principibus imperii factas, quæ nulla nitantur veritate, vel verisimilitudine. Quare jamdudum Majestas sua obtulit Cæsareæ Majestati principibus & statibus imperii, se contenta, præfati mandati missis legatis, coram refutaturam, cum locus & tempus in communi aliquo Imperii conventu concedi possint, & recepto eorum responso, factura est ulterius quod suæ dignitati Regiæ convenit.

Cumque in præfato mandato sæpius asseratur, commercium mercatorum adventurariorum illegitimum esse, & monopolare, extant etiamnum Hamburgensium literæ in quibus apertè apparet, ex decennialis Residentiæ experientia, ipsos ab omni tali crimine quod nunc infligitur esse alienos.

Huc etiam addi potest, non abstinuisse nonnullos Hansaticos à contumelia Serenissimæ Majestatis suæ, cum in eorum urbibus publicati & sparsi sint libelli famosi, Ecclesia quoque & Religio hujus Regni pro diabolica & hæretica pronuntiatae sunt in scriptis & concionibus ministrorum suorum, tanta acerbitate, ut Serenissimus Rex quondam Daniæ Fredericus, cum non multo ante mortem in civitatem Hamburgum veniret, publice in concione redarguerit quendam ministrum Hamburgensium qui (relicta sacra scripturæ explicatione) tali maledicentia tempus triverit.

Rex Angliæ Edwardus ejus nominis tertius, Anno Regni sui 35^{to} propter leviores contumelias in civitate Brugensi in Flandria, adversus se & nationem Anglicam prolatas, in Anglia omnia Hansaticorum bona arrestari fecit, donec ei de injuria illata condigna satisfactio esset facta.

Hæc in causa sunt, cur non possit facile Majestas sua fidem adhibere, nudis verbis vel dominorum Hamburgensium vel aliorum Hansaticorum, donec intellexerit primum generalis communitatis Hansaticorum decretum, per quod Hamburgensibus erat interdictum, ne aliquam ulteriorem residentiam mercatoribus Anglicis in sua civitate concederent, fuerit revocatum: & etiam mandatum illud Cæsareum abolitum quod subreptitiè partibus non auditis à Cæsare impetratum est, contra jus gentium & tractatus, qui inter hoc Regnum & Sacrum Imperium olim intercesserunt. Consentaneum namque est, ut unde controversiæ quæ per aliquot annos intercessit causa & origo processit, inde etiam fiat initium reparationis novi commercii & concordiæ. Tum si more pristino absque prærogativæ & dignitatis suæ regiæ præjudicio, vel Hansatici vel Hamburgenses, cum Serenissima Majestate sua agere velint, major fides adhiberi poterit; & Majestas sua non

non denegabit: Ea ipsis concedere quæ rationabiliter peti poterant. Interim An. 1599. Domini consiliarii non dubitant hac responsione Dominos Oratores Hamburgenses fore contentos. Datum Greenwici 24 Junii 1599.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Orleans, 13th July 1599. O. S.

I Came to this Towne upon Saterday last, and upon Sunday, being the 8th of this Moneth, I had Audience, where I repeated unto the King, what I had proposed at my former Audience, and what Answer I had received, and told him in every respect, as I had before written to Monsieur de Villeroy, " that I " thought that Answer so cold, and to favour of so little respect towards the " Queene my Mistris, considering her present occasions, which I had acquainted him with, and the Sinceritie of her Affection, which he had so often made " proofe of; that to prevent the Unkindnes she might justly conceive of yt, I " was bold to suppress yt for a tyme, and to desyre Monsieur de Villeroy, to " deale with him to readvise of yt, and to streyn himselfe to give the Queen " som better Contentment. That Monsieur de Villeroy had thereupon written " unto me, that he had moved him in yt, and was commaunded to assure me, " that as soone as his Counsaile came about him, he would advise seriously with " them, of the meanes to give her Majestie som better Satisfaction. That I was " therefore now come to wayte upon him for that cause, and to receive his " Answer, which I prayed might be fuche, as might give her Majestie Argument of his assured Affection towards her, and that she might have no cause to " thinck her selfe too little regarded". And the rather to induce him thereunto, I alledged bothe those Reasons, which I had before written to Monsieur de Villeroy, and the Duke of Bouillon, and som other, which I will not trouble your Honor to repeat.

The King answered, " that I had no reason to charge him with want of respect towards the Queene my Mistris; though he knew himselfe, and every " Man els would confesse him to be the fyrst King of Christendom, yet he had " always professed himselfe to be her Servant, and her Souldier, with many " words to that purpose. I desyred him not to conceive me to meane any want " of personal respect towards her Majestie, for I did both remember, and had " advertized her of those, and other Speeches, he had before used unto me to " her Honour: But my meaning was, to note a want of respect and regard to her Estate and present occasions, in not seeking to render her at least som " part of those means, she had need to use now for her own Defence, seeing " the Cause of her being disfurnished of them, was only her Care to preserve him. He said, he did confesse that he had received great Pleasures of her, " and in requitall thereof, would imploy himselfe, and the Forces of his whole " Kingdom in her Defence, yf she had need; but more could not be had of a " Man then was in his Power, and for Mony he had utterly none, and repeated " yt three tymes. I told him yt would be a straunge Answer to proceed from " a King of Fraunce, who though he commaunded not a Countrey so flourishing and wealthie as somtymes yt had bin, yet was never so low, but upon so " just an occasion as this was, he would be able to fynde so muche, as would " serve to give her Majestie som reasonable Contentment, and enable her to " expect his better Conveniency, for the Discharge of the rest. He began to " protest he could not do yt this Yeare, but the next he hoped he should be better able, untill which tyme he prayed her Majestie to have Patience. I told " him this Answer would be found so straunge, after so long expectation, and " promise of better Contentment, that I should scarce be beleaved in relating " yt; and therefore prayed, yf he were resolved to give me no other, that yt " would please him to give yt in writing, which he promised to do.

" After

An. 1599.

“ After this Speeche so ended, I proposed again the Maintenance of the intercourse betwene the two Realmes; and the Confirmation of suche Liberties and Privileges, as had bin graunted by his Predecessours unto her Majesties Subjects, and namely, of the Exemption du droit d'Aubeine, graunted by King Charles; which was a thing contrary to the Custom of all other Nations, and without any ground of reason, and served rather for a Pretext to his Officers, to extort by wrong and violence upon our Marchaunts, then for any Profit to him”. He willed me to give a Note to his Counsaill, and they should consider of yt, and of the Treaties and Graunts made by his Predecessors; and willed me to assure my selfe, “ that in that, or any thing els which was in his Power, he would be ever willing, to give her Majestie Argument of his good Affection.

“ From this, he fell into Questions of the State's Fleet; I told him I understood nothing of yt. He asked me also, how Matters went in Ireland. I told him since the last Occurrents I had acquainted him with, I had hard nothing, but that my Lord of Essex was gon to Limmerick, a Town almost in the middle of Ireland, which might be the occasion that Advertisements came the slowlier from him. He wish'd the Queen had well composed those Matters, and said, he feared she would find a difficult Matter of yt. I said, yt might perhaps prove of more length then was hoped at the fyrst, which would always inforce her to urge repayment of her Mony at his Hands, but in the end I did not doubt, but God would give good Successe to so good a Cause. He said, he had hard, that Tiron would have accepted a Peace, yf your Honor and my Lord of Essex, would have becom Pledges for the observing of yt. I told him, there was never any suche thing spoken of, and though there had bin any suche demaund made by him, yt had not bin fitt nor honorable for her Majestie, that the Assurance of her Word or Promise, should depend upon the Credit of any other but her selfe. Then he asked me, yf in the Articles of the Treaty betwene the Quene, and the King of Spaine, she had not inserted one to this Purpose, that he should free her from the Warre in Ireland. I told him, I thought he knew very well, that the Treaty never came so farre, as to talke of Articles: He said Coomans, as he passed this way had assured him, yf the King of Spaine would assent to those Articles he carried with him, the Peace was made. I told him, the Queene had communicated unto him, both by his own Ambassador, and by me, as much as had passed in that matter, which I hoped he would give more credit to, then to Cooman's Report, for he might well speake of their Resolution, but he could not speake of ours”. Monfieur de Villeroy, who was present at all my Audience, said he thought yt never came to Conditions.

Of the Marquisat of Salluces, I find the King to speake more doubtfully then he did before, as yf he feared Spaine would intermeddle; the like in dark Speeches I received from som of his Counsaill. He told me, * the Pope had bin earnest to prolong the Terme agayn, but that he was not determined to graunt yt, † but would be at Lions about six Weeks hence, to be nearer unto his Buifnes there. And so this Audience passed, saving, that when I saw no hope of obtayning any more, I prayed him, “ that the 20000 Crownes, which he had promised and assigned already, might be payd out of hand. To which he answered, he knew not how soon yt would be ready, but he had made good assignations for yt, and he would speak with his Financiers about yt, and then I should have answere when yt should be payed”.

The next Day I went to Monfieur de Villeroy, and told him, “ I was sorry to find my travails so infortunate, that instead of advancing my Mistress's

* Letres d'Offat. Vol. 3. p. 376. Memoires de Bentivoglio, Vol. 1. p. 303, 304.

† Cardinal d'Offat, in one of his Letters to Monfieur Villeroy, makes this Remark: — La venue du Roy à Lion, dont vos Letres font mention, viendra tres-bien à propos, & comme je vous ai écrit autrefois, il n'y aura raison si forte pour nous faire rendre ledit Marquisat, comme sera, si on voit que nous sommes pour le reprendre par force, si on ne nous le rend de bon gré, Vol. 3. p. 344.

“ Service, by my Sollicitation, I found yt rather reculed, and the King growen An. 1599.
 “ colder, then the last time I moved him, or then he had given me hope of by “ his Letters. He very hotly replyed, that he had written nothing, that might “ be construed to imply more then the King had now said, that he had written “ in Frenche, and knew well what yt was. I was not disposed to take the Mat“ ter so hotly, but answered only, that he knew very well when I took excep“ tion to the King’s fyrst Answer, because yt seemed to promise payment of no “ more this Year, but of the 20000 Crownes, and made my complaint thereof “ unto him; he made me answer, that he had moved the King in yt, and was “ commaunded to assure me, that when the Counsaile cam together, the King “ would consult with them how to give her Majestie better Satisfaction; where“ as now I fownd him so farre from any Resolution of paying more, that me“ thought he began to make the Payment of the 20000 Crownes very uncer-“ taine, which was promised and assigned, before my coming, and which her “ Majestie looked for ere this tyme; and that I thought her Majestie deserved
 “ to be better regarded. He told me, I seemed to insist muche in my Speeche “ with the King, upon that Point of want of respect towards the Queene, and “ yf I had repeated yt a little more, I might perhaps have bin answered little “ to my contentment. To that I answered, I had patience to beare whatsoever
 “ the King should say, and would referr yt to my Mistres to interpret, but I “ would not leave for that, to deliver whatsoever she should commaund: And “ that for mine own Part, I must needs say again, that I thought yt an Argu“ ment of small Respect, that a King, who could find the means to give away
 “ in pure Gift, this last Year, 15 or 1600000 Crownes, should plead disabili- “ tie to pay the Queene any thing, in so great occasions as he knew she had:
 “ That I was not to interpret her Conceptions further then she was pleased to “ impart unto me, but that I saw she had great Cause to be muche discontented “ with yt; and therefore as I had desyred the King, and as he had promised me, “ I prayed him I might have the Answer in Writing. He told me, yt was “ not the Fashion to give Answer in Writing, but to those things which were “ presented in Writing, and I urging the King’s Promise, he said he hard yt not, “ (tho’ the King had twice promised yt in his Presence) and that he had no suche “ Commaundment: Thereupon I told him, rather then fail, he should have the “ Proposition in Wrying.

We fell after to talke of the other Point of the Treaties, and droict d’Aubeine, wherein I desired, “ that the King would make yt appeare, that he did acknow“ ledge the Service her Majestie’s Subjects had don him, and that he thought “ them no less worthie of his favor, then som other Nations, to whom he had “ lately graunted the same of his free good Will, not being tyed unto yt by any “ Treaty of his Predecessors; whereas we had yt graunted directly by the “ Treaty of Blois. He answered, that we had not performed that Treaty on “ our Parts, and alledged the Words of the Treaty, that there should be a Sta- “ ple or Fondique established, of our Marchandise in Fraunce, as was hereto“ fore at Antwerpe and Bruges; and when that was done, we might claime the “ Exemption required, and not before. I told him, the Exemption was graunt“ ed (as appeared by the Wordes of the Treaty) in favour of the Traffick, “ which was intended to be established betwene the two Nations, to worke a “ good Communication and amicable Disposition betwene them, whereupon a “ firme and durable Friendship might be grounded betwene the Princes; and “ therefore, to stand upon the Fondique, which was but a Circumstance, and ac“ corded rather in our Favour, then for any benefit to them, argued, that they “ did but seeke Evasions, from giving her Majestie or her Subjects Contentment “ in any kind, which was farre from that which she hath cause to expect. And “ as for the Matter of the Fondique or Staple, I told him yt was a thing that “ beganne to be misliked in England, and was thought to be prejudiciall to the “ State, to make any more Corporations or Fraternities, which might be the “ cause, that hitherto there had bin no suche course taken, nor perhaps would “ be;

An. 1599. " be; and therefore wished, yf he were as desyrous to intertayne good inter-
 " course betwene the two Realmes, as he had heretofore seemed to be; not to " frustrate so good an Intention, upon a Circumstance so little materiall unto " them, but to referr yt to her Majesties Choice. He said, the Treaty did di" rectly mention yt, and though we cared not for yt, they did require yt ;
 " yet yf her Majestie would signifie unto the King, that she desyred to have that " Point forborne, as being prejudiciall to her State, he thought there might be " some Conference upon these Points and the whole Treaty; which the King " was willing to confirme, eyther in that kind, or in any more streight fort,
 " that should be thought fitt for the Subjects of both Realmes, and offered me
 " to treate whensoever I had Commission. I told him, the Intention of that " Treaty, for that which concerns the Entercourse, was chiefly to establish the " Traffick of our English Commodities in France, and all the Conditions ap" pointed to be considered of by especiall Commissioners, runne that way ; and " therefore yt was fitt yt should be treated of in England; where the Mar-
 " chants, whome yt chiefly concerned, might be at hand to declare, what they " required to be provided for. He said, there was muche to be required like" wise on the Part of their Marchants; I said, all that concerned them, was " common to us, as well as to them, and there was muche in that Treaty be" sides, that particularly belonged to our Side: He said, we might treat of that " which concerned us there, and of the other here; I said, that were in vaine,
 " for one labour might serve both.

That Matter ended, we came to speake of the third Point of my former Proposition; wherein I found my selfe not satisfied, because the whole Proposition seemes to be limited, to the carrying out of the Commodities there mentioned hors de son Royaume, which extends not to suche as should be bought in Forraine Parts, and carried directly to our Enemies, without ever coming into France;
 for that which was never in France, cannot be said to be carried out of France.
 We debated this Matter a while, not without som heat, and Words I might justly have excepted to on his Part: But I told him resolutely, I would not so accept yt, and I did not doubt to be advowed in yt.: Then at last he was contented to alter yt, and hath promised to send yt me so altered.

He seemed to complain, that notwithstanding the Counsail in England had affented unto, and signed the Reiglement towching Depredations, your Honor had since refused to reduce yt into a Treaty, or to execute yt. I could answer nothing particularly in this Point, because I had received no Letters from your Honor since the Ambassador's Audience, the last I had received being of the 9th of June; but in generalitie I told him, (as I had don once before) " that I " thought her Majestie had reason to forbear to proceed any further in yt, till
 " she saw more forwardnes on their part to answer her: For she had both establish" ed a Commission, which had already don Justice in these Causes, and made
 " since a Proclamation, for the Freedom of their Trade, as themselves desyred;
 " whereas they had neither appointed Commissioners, to whom her Majestie's
 " Subjects might resort, for remedie in their Wrongs, which were many and " great; nor yet made any of those Proclamations and Prohibitions, which on " their part were to be made, for her Majestie's Service. He said, your Honor had not so answered; but yf the Queene insisted upon that, he would " cause the Commission to be dispatched out of hand, and the Proclamations
 " to be likewise made, in suche fort as yt was agreed upon". This is the Effect of our Conference at this tyme; I have since delivered a Somme of my Proposition in wryting, but shall not receive answer, I doubt, till I com to Blois; for the Counsail removes thither to morrow, and the King likewise, after a Step to Malleherbes, will repayre thither towards the end of the Weeke. In the meane tyme, I thought good to send this Dispathe, that you may see what to trust to from hence, and because I would not have the Ambassador there, advertised what hath passed here, before your Honor.

In somme, your Honor seeth an Alteration in the matter of my Negotiation, and I assure you I found yt likewise in the manner. What to impute yt to I know not, unless they should have discovered som more Coldness in the Demaund there, then I have used here. Som have underhand let me know, that the King doth assure himselfe that the Queene will make Peace, and therefore makes no haste to pay her any thing; and againe I learne, that Monsieur de Villeroy took in som snuff the Letter I wrote him, upon the Receipt of the King's fyrst Answer, whereof I sent your Honor a Copy; I leave all to your Honor to judge of. Since I spake with Monsieur de Villeroy, I was with Monsieur de Rosni and Bellieure; who used me with good Respect, and confessed it was very reasonable the King should make her som good Satisfaction, but doubted that at this tyme he was not able. Monsieur de Rosni asked me, " what would content the Queene the next Yeare: I said I had no Commission to divide the Debt, but generally to demaund the Restitution; but I thought the Queene would not be too rigorous in her Demaund, but would be content to accept som content Som, so she might receive the rest in reasonable tyme after." He seemed to professe much Affection to her Majestie, but the Effects must discover his Inclinations, whereof I cannot promise much, this being the first tyme I had speeche with him.

Since my coming hither, I understand that at o. 194 Rochell, there hath bin stayed three Englishmen, seeming by all Circumstances to be Men of the Churche, and professing Papistry. They pretended a purpose to go into England, and were fownd leased of certain Letters to som in England, containing an Advertisement, that the Zwgtklm Clergy of m 173 Spaine — had offered c 100 the King of Spaine an extraordinary Subsedy, to continue u 205 War against a. 101 England: Which 6. 120 the French King understanding, would first have had them brought q. wtiwug hither, but the snv. bghm wfo. Deputie of o. 194 Rochell perswaded him yt were better they should be x. kwfd sent z. eb to a. 100 The Queen, which I thinck will be don very shortly. Yf yt be so, yt may please you to thinck of examining them of the emq. iau Title of the t by. of d h s Infanta, whereof I * wrote lately.

Of the King's Marriage I know not what to write; in Speeche he seems to resolve to marry, and the Princesse of Florence is in every bodies Mouth: But in his particular, I verily beleeve he hath no Inclination to leave this free Lyfe he now leades; and withall, I cannot learne that there hath yet bin any direct Motion made at Florence on his part. On the other syde, I heare that the Emperor, (belike to crosse the King's Purpose in that Alliance,) is now growen very earnest in the poursuite of that Princesse, which he had once seemed to have given over.

The Archduke arrived at Genoa about the 15th of the last Moneth after this Account, and went thence the 26th towards Milan, where he purposed to stay but eight Days. He was visited by Ambassages from all parts of Italy; and the King told me, the Pope had sent a Legat to him, which was very extraordinary, and not used to be don to any, under the Degree of a King. But I spake with a Gentleman who was at Genoa till he departed, who said, there was a Legat looked for there, but there came none. He doth also assure me, that he brought no Souldiars with him at all, but only his ordinary Traine, and that not great. He takes the way of Germany, by reason that the Plague is so hot in Piedmont; which is also said to be so great in Spaine, that the King was faine to returne from Barcellona by Sea into Valencia, to the Marquis of Denia's House, who now possesseth him wholly, and draweth from him for himselfe and his Friends, exceeding great Guifts, and namely, the Bishoprick of Toledo for a Nephew of his. The Harvest is exceeding good this Yeare in Spaine, and the Plenty as great both of Corne and Wine, as has bin these 20 Years; the like is generally expected in this Countrey.

* See his Letter of the 27th of June.

An. 1599. There happened a great Disaster upon Monday last in the Forrest of Bierre, hard by Fountainbleau; eyther by Lightning, or other Mischance, the Wood fell on fyre, and hath burned, as I am informed, about 40000 Acres of Wood, to the los at the least of 200 thousand Crownes; one whole Village is said to be burned, and Fountainbleau, both Towne and House, was hardly saved. Yt is said to burne yet, and no Man knoweth when it will cease; for when Men thinck yt is quenched, it will run into the Ground, and breake out in some other place.

Upon Sunday last the King bealed a great many, both of Spaniards and others; and there went with him to the Church among others, the Duke of Guise; to whom yt was observed that this People shewed more true Affection, then to the King himselfe; many thancking God for his good Escape, and praying God to blesse him, and divers taking occasion by his Sight, to revive the Memorie of his Father.

The Princes of Germany keepe their Forces still together about Wesell, and treat of drawing Recompence from the Spaniards of their Domnages and Charges, but I thinck yt will hardly com. In the mean while they loose much Advantage of Tyme, and make all Men talke of their Dulness and Irresolution.

Here is an Ambassador of the Duke of Wirtenburgh, who came to complementise with me, and in Discourse let fall so much unto me, as I perceave his Master would be very glad her Majesty would honour him with sending som Gentleman unto him; and surely, Sir, in my poor Judgment, the sending of som Man of Worth into those Parts might be to good purpose, both to discover som Desseines, and to keepe those Princes in good Devotion.

Of the States Fleet here is nothing knowen; yt is thought they are gon to the Islands, or to the Indies. I understand by their Agent they are victualled for a Yeaere, and that there is another Fleet preparing, to be ready to succeed them in the Action, against they returne. The States have drawn little from hence this Yeaere; the last Yeaere they should have had 200000 Crownes, but received but 100000; this Yeaere they were promised 300000 Crownes, to supply the Defect of the last, but have received yet but 50000.

Towching Collisford, of whom I made some Motion in my fyrst Proposition; Monsieur de Villeroy tells me he is avoyded out of Calais, according to my Desire. I dealt with him also about the Seminary at Rheims, which I understood our Fugitives were in hand to renew, and had gotten the Clergies Consent thereunto. I prayed him to take order to impeach yt, being contrary to the Treaties that they should have any such Receptacle here. I have moved him againe of yt, but he has don nothing in yt, pretending the Archbishop of Rheim's Sicknes to have bin such, as he was not in case to be troubled with any thing.

In my last Conference with him, perusing the Treaty of Blois in his Book, I found yt to differ from my Copy in som Points. Indeed I cannot warrant the Credit of myne, being taken not out of your Honor's Book, but out of a Copy of my Father-in-Laws, which was not very perfect. Therefore I beseeche you, yf her Majesty's Pleasure be that I shall deale any further in that matter, to let me have a true Copy sent me of the Treaty. The King went yesternight after Supper to La Faye, four or five Leagues hence, with a purpose to hunt the Stagg, and as som thinck to see Fountainbleau, (and Paris perhaps) before his Returne, so sodain Excurfions we are here subject to. The Counsaill remaines here som few Dayes, but no Man knoweth any Certaintie when or whither the next Remove will be, though they speake of Blois. For my part I remaine here partly to receive an Answer to my Proposition, but cheefley in hope to heare from your Honor whiles I am here, least I should have any occasion upon your Letters to returne hither, as soone as I com to Paris.

I mentioned before, that Monsieur de Villeroy told me, I answered not to one Point of our Conference as your Honor had done; he did the like in som other Points. I beseeche you therefore consider, what Disreputation, and what Disadvantage yt is to me in my negociating, to want Advertisements how things passe there. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

Proposition

An. 1599.

Proposition de l'Ambassadeur d'Angleterre faite à Messieurs du Conseil du Roy le 19 Juillet 1599. S. N.

Comme il a plu à sa Majesté, sur la proposition que je luy avois présentée de la part de la Royne ma Maistresse touchant le remboursement des deniers, dont elle l'avoit accommodé durant les troubles de son Royaume, de me faire respondre, qu'il commanderoit à son Conseil d'adviser aux moiens qu'il auroit de le faire; mais pour ceste année, estant si avancée qu'elle est, & ses moiens qu'il doit recevoir en icelle, desja departiz, il seroit difficile de luy paier plus que le vingt mil escuz, prestz en l'an 1596, sur l'obligation de Messieurs de Bouillon & de Zancy; sur laquelle responce, ie prins occasion de luy faire plus vive Instance, luy remonstrant les grandes occasions & necessitez de la Royne, qui la contraignoient de l'en importuner à present, ven les grandes guerres qu'elle avoit sur la bras, tant en Irlande qu'ailleurs; à laquelle micune remonstrance il me respondit, que quand son Corsil seroit aupres de luy, il adviserait aux moyens de mieulx faire pour le contentement de ma Maistresse. C'est donc maintenant, puis que Messieurs de son Corsil sont tous assemblez aupres de luy, que je supplie tres humblement sa Majesté, d'y adviser, & d'y pourvoir tellement, que la Royne ma Maistresse ayé occasion de se rendre contente de luy, & de continuer la mesme volonté & sincerité d'affection, qu'elle a souvent tesmoigné avoir en son endroit.

Et pource que aux propos que le Roy me tint dernièrement, il me declara, qu'il y auroit de la difficulté de faire mieulx pour ceste année; mais pour l'année qui vient, il auroit plus de commodité & de moien de luy paier quelque bonne somme; je supplie tres humblement sa Majesté, de m'esclaircir son intention la dessus; & combien c'est que la Royne pourra faire estat de recevoir de luy l'année prochante, & à quel terme.

Et si en cas que le Roy apres avoir consulté sur ce fait avec son Conseil, trouvé qu'il n'a pas le moien de luy rendre remboursement de quelque notable somme pour le present, je le supplie & requiers au nom de la Royne, d'accomplir le Contract † fait en l'an 1591, entre la Royne & Messieurs de Beauvoir & de Preaux, ses Ambassadeurs & Commissaires authorizes pour cest effect, & puis apres confirme par le Roy, & verifié par la Cour de Parlement & Chambre des Contes, qui porte comme s'ensuit.

Here followed the Words of the Contract.

Duquel Contract le Roy ne se peut exempter, pourceque les dicts Villes de Rouen & Havre de Grace sont à cest heure en sa puissance; estant raisonnable, qu'en l'une sorte ou l'autre, il donne satisfaction à la Royne, qui l'a secouru si à propos en son besoign.

Outre ce, a fin que le Roy sache que c'est qu'il a de payer, & la Royne combien elle a de recevoir; je supplie humblement sa Majesté, d'en faire verifier & arrester le coute, & cependant de donner ordre pour le paiement des 20000 escuz, qu'il a promis de payer ceste année.

Et pourcequ'il est raisonnable & expedient, que nous Sachions à quoy nous sommes pour le regard des Traictes entre ces deux Royaumes; d'aucuns desquelz, (& singulierement, de celui de l'an 1572, fait a Blois avec le Roy Charles le 9^{me}) il s'est meü quelque doute, s'il demeure en sa force ou non, comme n'ayant, esté confirmé dedans l'an apres la mort du feu Roy; je supplie le Roy de m'esclaircir de son intention la dessus; A Sçavoir, s'il tient pour bon & valide, ou non; & s'il ne l'estime pas estre demeure en force a cestheure, pour la raison que dessus; qu'il luy plaise de declarer son intention à la Royne, s'il a delibéré d'accepter les mesmes conditions, & de contracter la mesme confedera-

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Orleans 14. July 1599. O.S.

Since the Dispatch I sent away yesterday by Simons, I received these inclosed Letters from Bayonne, which I send by the same Messenger which brought them me, being an English Marchant called Jackson, who is returning homeward. I have nothing more to wryte then I advertised in my Dispatch, but that I am differed for mine Answer to my Proposition till the King com to Blois, which when yt will be I know not; but the Counsaill is yet determined, to move thither upon Munday next.

I am told, that beydes the Fyre which happened in the Forrest de Bierre, there is another great Fyre fallen out in Bourges, which hath burnt a Church and 20 Houses; both are supposed to be by Lightning.

I have received Letters from som Marchants at Bayonne, that there are certaine Letters of Mart graunted out against them, and their Goods, for som Wrong done by our People at Sea. I fynd yt directly contrary to all our Treaties, that any Letters of Mart should be graunted but against the principall Delinquents, and their Goods and Factors; and that, in casu manifesta denegationis justitiæ, which I suppose hath not bin on her Majestie's part; therefore I mean to deale with the Counsaill for the Repeal, and Stay of them. And so I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's most humbly to be commanded,

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

S I R,

14th July 1599.

I Have stayed this Bearer, to give you some good account of our dealing with the Freuche Ambassador, and now do send to you with such Matter as the Tyme affordeth. In which Delaye, I pray you suspect no Negligence, for none shall ever be used to you, eyther as a publick Minister, or as a private Friend; but these things which depend d'aultruy, must receive Construccions accordingly for Expedition.

The best part of your Negotiation which will best please, is to recover us some Money; wherein yf upon lack of Verifications, or Scruples in Bonds, they seek to spend tyme, you shall do well to tye them to the plaine things, and let those that they will insift upon as uncertayne, be cleared as they may; and not serve as an Evasion for all, because they eyther make themselves ignorant of part, or would have all formaly digested.

Secondly, We have resolved on the Treaty of Blois, and to incorporate the Article of late accorded on, concerning Justice for Marine Causes, into yt, as by this Course which followeth shall appear unto you.

The Ambassador hath bin let to understand from my Lords, by the Judge of the Admiraltie, and other Commissioners; that because he had informed, that he could not yet receive Satisfaction in the Complaints presented by him of Depredations upon the French, they were sent to justify the Care taken therein, and to know in what Particular he remayn'd unsatisfyed; and thereupon proceeded to deduce unto him all the Complaints exhibited by him, and the Order taken in them.

The

The Ambassador acknowledged, that all the said Causes had received Hearing and Judgment, but excepted that som had received unnecessary Delay, and others rested yet unsatisfied in the Execution. Yt was declared unto him what was the Impediments thereof, to the which as he could not further reply, he undertooke to procure that reciprocally all her Majestie's Subjects shall receive speedy Justice in France, and desired to receive their Complaints. Afterwards he was dealt with in the matter of Marseilles, upon the Arguments expressed in her Majestie's Letter, that the said Ship was taken and declared good Prize, by the Authority of the King's express Edict, and her Majestie's Proclamation made conformable to the same at the King's Request, for the confiscating of all the Leaguers Goods, and those which should trade with them; bothe the Marseillians to whom the Ship appertained, being then held to be revolted from the King's Service, but especially those of Newhaven whether the Ship was going, being of the most declared. That a Matter therefore so donne for his Service, ought not now to be subject to after attempt: and the King having abolished and remitted to his Subjects, the Memory of all Actions that passed during the Troubles to a later tyme, hath no reason to suffer that matter, don before, and so well authorized, to be revived against her Majesty. And although he would favour the Marseillians in that Recovery, yet he cannot dispose of the Right of a third Person.

The Ambassador answered, That the Marseillians had not at the tyme of the taking of their Ship, as yet put themselves into any Action of Rebellion against the King, and therefore were not declared Rebels. And touching their Fault of Trading to Newhaven, that yt must be proved, whether after the publishing the King's Edict of Restraynt in that behalf, they had sufficient tyme to take notice of the said Edict: And that there having ben always a good Correspondency of Intercourse, between her Majestie's Subjects and them, that they ought not to be so rigorously dealt withall, unless they had bin declared Rebels to the King. Notwithstanding, he promised that he would relate to the King the Reasons alleadged by her Majesty.

Lastly, It was declared unto him, That her Majestie having understood as well by Mr. Edmond's at his Returne, as by her Ambassador's Letters, that the King is content and willing to renew with her Majestie the Treaty of Blois passed with Charles the 9th, which her self conceaving also to be necessary and behovefull for the strengthening of their Amitie, and to incorporate their Subjects into a firm Friendship, that she doth likewise assent thereunto: And therefore that she doth now hold yt to be more convenient, That the late conceived Articles for the Redresse of the Marine Causes be inserted into the Treaty; but only that of one Point, her Majestie was forced upon just and urgent Considerations, to desire the King to allow of Reformation in the said Articles, which is touching the Power of the Article, wherein the Liberty given to all Ships to passe freely that shall carry the Banner of France, is of too great Prejudice unto her; and therefore that her Majestie upon better Knowledge now of the Abuse thereof, cannot allow of that Tolleration; for there were four Spanish Ships chased by certain English Ships, and they immediately shewing a French Flagg, her Majestie's Ships gave over, and missed a Purchase worth 30000*l.* to the great Scorn of her Men of Warre. And withall she will make yt appear, that she will insist upon nothing, but that which themselves have practized, and authorized by severall of their Ordinances.

He was desyrous to be satisfied, whether we could maintaine yt by any such Presidents and Examples: Whereupon that part in the Code of Hen. the 3^d, was shewed to him, which when he saw did clearly and fully make to that Purpose, being staggered, he was then forced to change his Argument, and to alleage, that the tyme was now much differing from his former Being and Condition, and therefore that yt could not admitt and receive the same Rule. That heretofore when those Laws were made, they were strong by Sea, where now they have no Forces at all; and that the King might not tolerate to have his Sub-

An. 1599. jeēt's Shipp's to be always subject to search, both in respect of the Indignitie unto himselfe, and the notable Prejudice which his Subjects shall receive, to have always somthing taken from them by the Occasion of such Searches, whatsoever shall be pretended to the contrary.

It was answered him, that yt could not be dishonourable, for that the Law should be reciprocally, and for the avoiding that no such Abuse should be committed by the Cullor thereof, that he saw her Majestie would prescribe extreme Penalties. Yt was moreover told him, what Inconvenience her Majestie had lately received by that Toleration, by the two Biskanier Shipp's that came into Ireland with Provisions for the Rebells; and thereby he was desyred to consider, how the same might be often very prejudiciall unto her Majestie. He concluded, that he would of all these things make Report to the King, and also of the two new Articles, that were desyred to be inserted by the Treaty; but against the latter, which concerneth the not permitting the Hanses to have any Staples of Corn in France, he did except against as not reasonable. He assured, that the King was most willing and desyrous to renew the Treaty of Blois with her Majestie, although he knew yt to be of greatest benefit for her Majesties Subjects, but yet so muche the more in that respect, to shew his Love and Affection to her Majestie. So as you know what we desyre. And surely, for this manner of Toleration of all Shippes to pass unsearched that have French Flaggs, you must stand upon yt, for the Queen cannot endure yt: And yf he doth urge still, that under that color his Subject's Shipp's shall be abused, yt is too great a Diffidence in us, for that Justice shall be with all Rigour executed upon all Offenders; and for proof how reasonable yt is, I have sent you an Extract in the precise Words of the Codes of France, reduced into Order in Henry the 3^ds Tyme: You shall also see what Reasons we have to doubt Spaine, and to prevent all Assistance, so as yf this Course be suffered, not only the Queen shall be extremely prejudiced, but the King shall do her wrong against his Will.

* You shall understand, that the Flemishe Fleet is quite gone past all the Coast of Spaine, and passed to the Islands of the Maderas. Yt was little expected, that those who published so brave a purpose to interrupt all Supplies for Spaine, and to keep that Coast blocked up from Trade, would now thus fondly and mechanically, put all upon a Journey to the Islands for Wines and Sugars; and now that Spaine is clear and secure of them, and hath in readines Forces to have defended, he may in all probability convert som of those hetherwards, and for more Evidence thereof, he bringeth divers Ships from South Spaine to the Groine; and as we are also credibly informed, he hath sent two Spaniards to Brest to Monsieur Sourdiac, for leave to Ancker with his Fleet in Brest; whose Lady being at home, and not her Husband, referred them over unto him; for which purpose they are gone (as is informed) to the Court to him. Yf this be true, her Majestie conceaveth the King will be advised not to harbor them, yf he com to invade. But what is true, or false of yt, her Majestie requireth you in any wise to understand, and yf you find the King or Counsail not curious in a matter of so great Consequence, then to speake earnestly in the matter. For considering our being unprovided of a Fleet at Sea, and so many of our best Men absent, yt may be a Desseign that may disorder us, both by Diversions in Ireland, (when the Action shall be in most warmth in the North,) and may do som Exploit of importance here, though in the Conclusion, we shall turn their Audacities back in their own Throats.

The Queen wrote this Letter to Monsieur Sourdiac to learn the Secrets of the Message; to which Office, reason would think, that both the King is tyed in Honour, and he particularly, to whom her Majestie whilest he governed that Port, in the tyme that yt was in Danger, and his whole Government in Perill, did give so great Assistance. The Queen is informed of this matter of Brest by this Means, Mr. Simon Kelligrew being at Brest when the Message came, was bidden by the Lady, to tell yt the Queen. An. 1599.

* Grotii Annales de Rebus Belgicis, Lib. 8.

Of Ireland, this is only the Substance, that the Earle is by this returned to Dublin, and prepareth to go into the North; he hath done as muche as could be done by the Sword, on the Rebells in Munster and Lemister; for he hath passed at his Pleasure where he listeth, notwithstanding all the Plots they could use, ether of Force or Stratageme. But the Rouges shunne fight, and so know how to spend us, and eat us out with tyme. Of some other Particulars, this Note shall inform you that is inclosed.

And now, Sir, for the Depts, in which you make some doubtfullness how they can be verified, I send you as muche Light as can be had. Fyrst, the Queen doth very seriously presse the Ambassador here, for Payment of some present Portion, as I dowbt not but he will wryte. Secondly, when I acquainted her with your Opiniion, to receive some Payment in Corne, her Majestie did not muche mislike it; but she is muche curious to open her self so farre, least they think she should be content with any thing; but yf yt be carried on by you, and all Circumstances considered of Price and Measure, and where yt shall be delivered, I fynd yt here thought not inconvenient to hearken to yt, so as yt be a Motion made from them, and not by you.

And for the Depts in which you desyre to be more cleared, this Sir will be your best course, to shew your Demaunds, which are to be some verified by Bonds, some depending upon Accompts, according to the Lyfts agreed on by Contract; for when a Contract was made for 2000 Men in Picardy for six Months, and they were continued by the King's Desyre for nyne Months more, though we have not a Bond for that Payment, yet yt hangs all upon one reason, and one Truthe; and therefore we think, when you ask those things, they should not presse you to prove that by Bonds, which is by other Assurances so demonstrable.

You shall also understand, that the Frenche Ambassador, as I think, hearing that the Queen was informed, that Monsieur Betunes was arryved in Scotland, and so extraordinarily used, did let the Queen know by me, that he was only sent to visit the King, and to show that he did not any way neglect him, and that he should give him no ill Counsaile, but should perswade all good Amitie, and returne this Way by the Queen, as a more exident Token of his Sinceritie; which when he told me, he also spake of his being purposed to be the Person, which must be installed here for him. But I was commaunded to tell the Ambassador, as of myself privatly, though his returne back this way will be most acceptable, and a great Evidence of his Correspondency; yet to do the other Office by a casual Jorney, and being not quallified with the Degrees, which here is much expected, yt would shew a more Neglect, then her Majestie knoweth the King would wish of. So as I have tanquam aliud agens, informed the French Ambassador of this, and to the intent you may be provided to speake of yt yf yt be spoken of there, with the Reasons, I do herewith touch yt to you. This Note will also inform you of some particular of the Accompts, all which you must use and urge as cause is; for when we know yt is due, we need not forbear to urge yt, because we have not all Bonds ready, which shall be sought out as soon as we may find them, and must in the mean Season be managed by your good Discretion, so as not to work protraction of all, for part.

Lastly, concerning Paget, her Majestie will not willingly that you should entertayne him, except you see that he doth indeed ingage himself with some effectually particular Service; for yt may be well said, that he that by notorious Faults hath lost his Sovereaigne's Grace, must by more then Words ransom the same againe: In this Sort you must use him, and so discover, what is the Scope of his Overture; for that yt will never be beleaved that he is well enclined hetherwards, because he sayeth he misliketh some Courses which the rest of his Fellows follow, (her Majestie will not be so overtaken,) till he do demonstrate yt by Effect; which yf he do, you may then in generall Termes assure him, that

An. 1599. the Queen will be good unto him, but that will be, when he hath made himself as irreconcilable to the other Syde, as he hath made himself to this.

For Tresham, he is not worth the having, nether will the Queen have you meddle with him. Denmark hath used us very ill, as you may see, so as her Majestie hath little to Trust to, but God and her own quarrell.

Because I know not but there may be brutes in Scotland, of some unkindness like to grow between the King and the Queen about a Prisoner lately arrived out of Scotland, you shall understand this to be true, though to be reported according to your Discretion. There was a Gentleman of Buckinghamshire called Aishfield, who coming to Berwick, obtained Licence from the Lord Willongbie, to see the King of Scots, with promise to return within six or eight Days; to this my Lord assented, but after understood from Sir William Bowes her Majesties Ambassador, that he was entred into high Matters with the Lord of Seaford, a Man very ill affected to this State; whereupon, my Lord Willongbie began to suspect yt might turn to his own Displeasure, to have suffered a Man to have passed so slightly, and thereupon he resolved to revoke him home, and so did by his Letter. But he knowing well how far he had gone, intended nothing less, and so made frivolous Excuses, without returning; in Conclusion, the Lord Willongbie resolved to have him home by fair or foul means; and so dissembing his Displeasure, sent into Scotland a cople of his Servants, who put themselves into his Company; and one Evening going to make merry at Lietbe, carried him into a Coach of the Lord Ambassadors which was then in that Towne and going empty to Edinborough; wherein as soon as they had him, they carried him ten Miles towards Berwick, and there set him on Horseback with such Horses as they had provided, and so brought him into England.

This was done, I assure you before God, without her Majestie's Knowledge, though not now misliked; for so soon as the Ambassador heard that he was taken away, he sent to an Englishman's House where he lay, and there did fynd divers Papers of his, by which yt appeared how far he had entered into Practise with Seaford, all tending to offer the King from Priests and Catholics in England assistance for the getting of the Crown, yf he would give assurance of Toleration of Religion, with divers other particular things not fitt for Paper. With this accident, Seaford, (who is in great Favour with the King) hath incyted him to be displeased; for yt greveth him to fynd that his dealing with Aishfield is thus discovered. And therefore the King after this fell out sent for the Ambassador, and told him, that his People did think this a great Indignitie to have this Man stolne away, being in his Kingdom and so in his Protection. The Ambassador answered, that of a Truth he was not privie to yt, and so the matter past on with some Sharpness, which is all that is worth your knowledge; for the King is pacified againe, and imputeth yt wholly to my Lord Willongbie's Care to avoid her Majesties Displeasure, and yet chaffeth much against him. The Man is a Papist since his Birth, a Banckrupt, and of lewd Conditions: He is now brought up hither, and likeinough to receive the Reward of a Traitor. Thus have you the whole Truth, though it hath bin so carried, as since his Imprisonment he hath confessed that he came away with his good Will, culling his Actions now he finds himself taken with this Affirmation, that all the Offers that he made, was but to trye how they were affected and then to have revealed yt. Whereof, though there be nothing more false, yet are we content to take advantage, the better to quit my Lord Willongbie's Practise in taking him away. Now you know all, you may use all as you please. And so I commit you to God.

From the Court
at Greenwich.

Your very loving Friend,
and affectionate Kinsman,

RO. CECYLL.

P.S. Since the Writing of this Letter, I find her Majestie resolved not to wryte a long Letter to the King, concerning the Matter of Marseilles, but only a Letter ter of Credence for you to relate yt to him; for which Purpose I have thought good to send you that long Letter which she should have signed, for your better Information, and the other Letter of Credit. An. 1599.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Orleans, 18th July 1599. O. S.

I Have this Morning receaved your Honor's of the 2^d of July, together with Monsieur de Bouillon's and Zancie's Bond for the 20000 Crownes, and likewise the Copies of Cardinal Andrea's Letter, and the Answer to yt, and of the Answer made to the Hambourghers, for which I humbly thank you. By the same Letters, I perceave her Majesties purpose to insit upon the Confirmation of the Treaty of Blois, wherein I suppose you will fynd no great Difficultie here, for Monsieur de Villery seems very forward in yt; and beydes, I understand, as I have wrytten heretofore unto your Honor, that upon my fyrst Motion of yt, yt was proposed here in Councail, and agreed upon. And therefore, because in your last Letter before this, yt pleased your Honour to commaund me to inform my self what was fyt for us to require therein, wherein I conceived you meant, what was fyt to be added or altered in yt, I am bold to send you my poor Conceit of yt.

First, Whereas the Exemption of the Droit d'Aubeine and some other Poynts, seem to be conditionall, and to depend upon the Erection of a Staple or Fondic of our Commodities in Fraunce, as was somtyme at Antwerpe and Bruges; for that I fynd by the Marchants trading in these Parts, that they are not desyrous to have any such Company or Corporation established here, by reason of the chargableness of yt, and not being don, yt may always minister them heare occasion of Quarrell and Cavill against their Privileges: I do therefore wish, That all Gravants of Priveleges and Immunities, therein accorded to our Nation, may be absolute, and founded only upon the respect of the intercourse and Amitie between the two Princes and Realmes, and upon no other Condition.

Secondly, Yf they insit still upon that Poynt of the Fondic or English House, I thinke yt fyt that her Majestie require free Exercise of Religion for her Marchants, in suche Places, where those Fondics shall be established.

Thirdly, I wish that it be especiallie provided for in the Treaty, that there shall be no Letters of Mart or Represall executed eyther upon the Land or in any Port, but upon the Sea only; for this is a Poynt our Marchants do especiallie feare, and therefore desyre yt may be prevented.

Fourthly, that the Taxes and Impositions raised since the Year 1572, may be put downe; wherein her Majestie hath the Advanrage, for by that Treaty, the King of France is barred from raising any new Impositions upon our Commodities, and the Queen left at Liberty.

Fifthly, that the King shall not suffer any College, or Seminary of our English Fugitives, to be erected, or continued here.

Sixtly, that no Bark or Shallop of Dunkerck, or other Port under the Enemies Obedience, armed or provided for the Warre, may be suffered to have Harbouring or retrait in the Ports of this Kingdom; which yf yt be performed, will take away that great Liberty and Boldness which they have used upon the narrow Seas of late, to her Majesties exceeding Dishonor, and the Dammage of her Subjects.

To this would likewise be added some Clause, touching the Warranty of the Sale of our Clothe, Kersey, Bayes and Cotton here, in such Sort as yt is made, wherein our Marchants are most trowbled, especialie about the Northern Clothes, which I perceave is one of the cheefest Commodities here: For the Officers do continually pick quarrells to the false making of them, and threaten them with

An. 1599. Confiscation, and by that means dayly draw Mony from the Marchants, and yf yt be not especially provided for, is like in tyme to serve for a Pretext to banish that kind of Clothe wholly. Which besydes the present Prejudice, being uttered here in good quantity and to a good valed, and not being vendible almost in any other Place; may happily be a Step and a Precedent, to proceed further against the rest of our Cloathes upon like occasion; for in very Deed, the Marchants themselves confesse, that all our Cloathes are made more faulty then heretofore. The Way how to provide for this, the Marchants which Trade hither will best inform your Honor, and what yt is they desyre in that Poynt.

For the third Point, of executing Letters of Mart only at Sea, I think yt greatly for our Advantage, because we are stronger then the Frenche at Sea, and therefore not so subject to Represalls there; and have more Goods and Comodities alwayes in their Cōuntrie, then they have in ours, and thereby more in Danger of Seafure at home. And I do the rather mention yt, because in my Conference with Monsieur de Villeroy and Bellievre, about the Letters of Mart graunted against our Nation to certaine of Bayonne, whereof I wrote in my last; I found that they both inclined to that Opinion, that yt was not fit that Marchants should be touched by such Letters eyther at Land, or in any Port; and therefore they have promised me, when we come to Bloys (where the Chancellor is already,) that Matter shall be conferred of, and Order taken in yt. I find them both to insist upon the other Point; which I pressed upon that particular out of the Treaties of 1559 at * Cambresis, and 1564. at † Troies, which are the latest that mention that matter; viz. That Represalls should be contra Delinquentes, eorum bona Factoresque, & hoc in Casu manifesta denegationis justitie: Which they say is not equall, for a Man may do a Spoile at Sea, which eyther may be nothing worth, or being of some Worth, may perhaps never go to Sea againe, nor happily have any Goods out of the Realme wherein he dwells, whereupon Restitution may be made; so that they seem to stand upon this, that Letters of Mart may be executed against any of the Nation which doth the Wrong, at Sea, but not at Land, or in any Port; and that, after requisition of Justice, and refusal of yt by the Prince to whom the Requisition was made. And this surely in my poor Judgment, with some good Explanation of the manner of the Requisition, and a competent Tyme to do Justice in, and to make Certificate of the Proceeding to the Prince requiring Justice, before which Certificate, Letters of Mart should not be graunted, would prove a very good and indifferent Course for both Nations. But howsoever, I thought yt my Duty to advertise your Honor of this their Opinion in tyme, because I verily beleve yt will be proposed unto you in the poursuite of this Treaty; wherein I also suppose, you will find no Difficulty on their Part, to adde that Condition of the King's or Admiral's Passport, to such Shippes as you intend shall pass free: And so to make the Clause copulative, which is now disjunctive, eyther to Flagg or Passeport.

As to the Matter of the Corn to be carried hence into Spaine, althoughe for this present Yeare yt is not like to come greatly in Question, because the abundance in Spaine is suche as they shall not muche need their Neighbours; yet will yt be very necessary to be thought of in other Years, and to be provided for; wherein your Honour shall find a direct Precedent, in the Treaty ‡ 1546 between King Henry the Eighth and King Francis the First of Fraunce, Article the 2^d, viz. Quod Neuter dictorum principum, alterius regna vel dominia invadenti aut expugnanti, invadere vel expugnare conanti, auxilium, favorem, subsidium, naves, pecunias, gentes armorum, victualia, aut aliam assistentiam quamcunque publicè vel occultè, directè vel indirectè, dabit aut præstabit, nec à subditis suis dari vel præstari consentiet, aut permittet, sed realitèr & ex- presè renitetur, prohibebit, & effectualiter impediet. Which must needs be An. 1599. understood of furnishing Victualls and other Aid there mentioned, by way of Marchandise, as well as otherwise: For yt cannot be thought, that any Subjects would furnishe suche things to another Prince, but upon Sale, and for Mony; and so at the least must this King be bound to prohibit yt, at such tyme as the Spaniards make any Army to invade us; and yt may be he will sooner condescend to make the Treaty in those generall Termes, then particularly to name Spaine, unless her Majestie be contented that he shall in his Prohibitions name in like sort, both England and Spaine, which perhaps will not be any thing to our Prejudice, consydering we are neyther victualled nor furnished with Armes or matters of that Nature out of France; but especially yf that Clause be added, without the King's express Licence, for of that we are always to hope more at the least at this King's Hands, then our Enemies.

I must also advertise your Honor, that at my last Conference, I dealt with Monsieur de Villeroy, as I had likewise done before, to move the King to forbid the new erecting of the Colledge of our Seminary Priests at Rheimes, which I did upon Information that yt was very much laboured, and that the Consent of the Clergy of the Towne was already obtained. His Answer was, "That he had already by the King's Command wrytten to the Archbishop of Rheimes about yt, whose Answer he expected very shortly. Likewise I dealt with him about the forbidding of the Dunkerker's Retrait into the Ports of this Realme, wherein he told me the King had already taken Order:" But what in particular he told me not, neither did I greatly press him, because I mean to learn the Truth of yt by som other means.

Monsieur de la Motthe Fenelon is upon his Departure for Spaine; and Monsieur de Villeroy hath assured me, that he hath recommended Mr. Lock unto him in such sort as your Honor desyred. I have wrytten unto him where he shall meet with Monsieur la Motthe. Monsieur de Villeroy will not own to me that the * King hath prolonged the Terme for the Marquisate of Salluces, neither will Monsieur de Bellievre acknowledge yt, which makes me a little stagger; yet I am prone to beleve yt, because I heard yt from one of good Place very familiar in Monsieur de Villeroy's House; and besydes I hear the Generall of the Cordelyers who treated yt, departs very shortly towards Italy, well contented as yt is supposed.

As soon as I receive Answer to my written Proposition I sent you by Simons, I will send yt with such other Advertisements as shall occurre in the mean tyme. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Blois 28th July 1599. O. S.

IT may please you to understand that I receaved your Dispatch of the 13th July the 23^d of the same, and thereupon sent to the Court to pray Audience, which was granted me against the next Day. At my repayre unto the King I delivered him her Majestie's Letters, shewed him the Effect of them, and related at length the State of the Cause, as yt is contained in the Copie of the Letter which her Majestie fyrst intended to wryte; avowing on her Majestie's Behalf, "That the Prize of the Marseillian Ship by her Majestie's Ship of Warre, was justifiable by the Law of Armes and by his own Ordonances, and a thing done in his Service and not any way be called in question: Whereas on the other fyde, the Marseillians, in taking of the English Ship, had utterly no

An. 1599. " Cullour or Foundation, but that yt was done altogether without any Form of " Justice, of their owne Authority, without any Commisson or Letters of Re-
 " presall from the King, and without requiring Justice fyrst in England, as all " the Treaties, both old and new, do in that case require: And therefore, al" though there might be some Doubt conceived of the former Prize made by " her Majestie's Ships of Warre; yet, for as much as the second Prize made by " them of Marseilles, was manifestly unjust and against the Treaties; yt was " just and reasonable, and so I did require on her Majestie's Behalf, that her Sub" jects might be reintegrated in the Ship and Goods then taken from them, and " recompensed of the Dommage, Losse, and Charges they have sustained about " that Cause, and that afterwards the Right and Justice of the former Prize might " be debated; wherein her Majestie would be always content to yeald to that " which was just and reasonable. The King answered, he would be very sorry " any Subjects of his should offer wrong to any of his good Sisters, and that he " would by no means permitt yt; and therefore willed me to deliver a Note of " the matter to his Counsaill, who should consider of yt and give me Answer.
 " Then I told him, that upon relation from me of the Complaint he had used at " my first and second Audience, of want of Justice on our part upon Offenders
 " and Offences at Sea, (as he had received Information from his Ambassador)
 " her Majestie had sent those she had deputed to deale in those Causes to his " Ambassador, to know wherein he found himself greeved, and to let him see
 " the Particularities and Reasons of their Proceedings; who upon that Confe" rence confessed, he had in all Points received very good Justice, and that " touching the Delay used both in the Judgment and Execution of some Causes,
 " now he was informed of the Reason thereof, he was likewise very well satisf-
 " fied: And that her Majestie thought yt fitt to let him know thus muche,
 " that he might see the Regard she bare to him, and her Desyre to give him and " his Subjects all good Contentment. He told me, he took yt in very kind " part, that her Majestie was so carefull to see Justice done unto his Subjects,
 " and willed me to assure her of all good Correspondency on his part.

Then I came to speake of the Advertizements her Majestie had received, of the two Spaniards coming to Brest, and their Errand thither, which the King would in no wise beleeve, saying, " that Monsieur de Sourdiac parted from him
 " at Orleans but fower Days before, and he was sure would have told him yf
 " there had been any such thing. I replyed, that the Queen was advertised by " so good means, that she could not but give some Credit unto yt; and therefore " prayed him to inform himself of the Truth of yt, and to acquaint her Majestie
 " with yt, that she might thereby discover the more of the King of Spaine's
 " Desseigns; and to take order, that neither there nor in any other Port of his " Kingdom, they might receive any Harbour or Succour, yt being a thing al" together contrary to the Treaties, and farr from that Friendship that her Ma-
 " jestie had cause to expect at his Hands. He willed me to assure the Queen,
 " that there should not be any such thing permitted in any place of his King" dom, and seemed to wonder that the Spaniards should presume so muche upon " him, saying, there was no suche good Intelligence between them, but he " would send to Monsieur de Sourdiac:

" After this I told him, that his Ambassador had signified unto her Majestie,
 " that he was willing to continue the Treatie of Blois made between her and
 " King Charles the 9th, which she took as an Argument of his good Affection,
 " in that he was desyrous to confirm a Treatie of so streight Amitie between " them and their Subjects as that was, and had willed me to let him know,
 " that she did likewise very willingly assent unto the Continuance and Confirma" tion of yt; and that she was also well content to annex and incorporate into
 " yt, such Articles as had been moved to be established, for Reformation of " Abuses committed at Sea; only she desyred him to allow of some Alteration
 " in one of them, which concerned the free Passage of all Shippes carrying " French Flaggs, wherein she had already found great Inconveniency, as I par" ticularly

“ ticularly rehearsed unto him, of *the four Spanish Shipp*s which escaped by An. 1599.
 “ that means, and of the two Biscainiers which brought Succours to the Re- “ bells in Ireland; and therefore desyred that some other Expedient might be “ thought of, which might effect his Purpose and Desyre, without such notable “ Prejudice to her Estate, and Benefit to her Enemies.

“ The King said, it was reason there should be a Distinction made betwene “ Friends and Foes. I asked him how that could be, yf the carrying of a Flagg “ (which all Shippes that feared us would be sure of,) were made a sufficient War“ rant for any Shipp to pass unsearched, or uncontroll'd; and therefore prayed “ him againe to consider, how little Reason and Safety there was for the Queen “ in that Course.

“ I told him also, that there are some few Points likewise which her Majestie “ desyred might likewise be added to the Treaty of Blois yt self, which I hoped “ upon Conference would appear so reasonable, as they would not be disliked.
 “ His Answer to all was, that he would depute some of his Counsaill, to treat
 “ of these Poynts with me, and would be ever willing to give the Queen his “ good Sister all Contentment reasonable;” and so dismissed me, having fyrst shewed me where the Duke of Guise was killed; and made the more haste to dispatch me, as I guess, because the Ambassador of Savoy was attending without in the mean time for Audience.

That Afternoon, which was the fyrst Opportunity I could have, I was with Monsieur Villeroy, and repeated unto him what had passed between the King and me, and desyred I might receive some Satisfaction in the Matters I had moved. “ For the Matter of Marseilles, he said Monsieur de Boisfisse had wrytten
 “ of yt, and had advertized him that the Commissioners were all of Opinion, “ that the fyrst Prize made by the Queen's Ships was not good, and that Resti“ tution should be made thereupon; which being done, those of Marseilles “ would likewise restore the Prize they had taken; but that since some of the “ Counsaill had bin of another Mind, belike upon some particular Respect and “ Interest. I told him, no particular Man could have Interest in that Prize, be“ ing made by one of the Queen's Ships of Warre, and therefore that was but a “ mean Surmize without Ground. He said he was informed, that at that very “ instant, the Marseillians did ordinarily trade, and were wellcome into Eng- “ land, and were not at that tyme actually declared against the King, and “ therefore had no Warre with us; and yf they had bin so declared against the “ King, yet as we justified our Prize upon them by the Warre, so would they “ justifye theirs upon us; which I seeing to be his cheefe Anchor-hold, told him, “ that we did not so much justify the Prize we made by the Warre, (for that in“ deed the Marseillians were not then in actual Rebellion against the King) as
 “ by the King's Ordinance, confiscating all Goods that his Subjects should carry
 “ to any Towne revolted, which gave Authority to any in his Service, to seafe “ and take them: And that those Ships of Warre were then in his Service, and
 “ at his Request appointed to keep the Coast for that only purpose, to impeach
 “ the Traffick, and to interrupt all suche things as should be carried to any of “ those revolted Towns. On the other fyde, the Prize made by the Marseil- “ lians upon us, which were then the King's Friends and theirs, and without “ eyther Letters of Represall from the King, or without any Requisition of “ Justice made on their parts, and refused on ours; was without any Ground “ or Collour of Justice, and contrary to all the Treaties betwene the two “ Crownes: And therefore that yt was just and meet that the Queen's Subjects “ should be first reintegrated in that which was taken from them without any “ Form of Justice, and afterwards the Right of the other Prize might be debated “ likewise. He replied nothing, but only wished me to deliver a particular “ Memoriall of the Case in Wryting, which he would present to the Counsaill, “ and procure me an Answer.

Touching the Justice done upon their Complaints, he confessed their Ambassadors had given very good Testimony of his Satisfaction. “ For the matter of

An. 1599. " Brest he answered as the King had done, but promised to be thoroughly informed of yt; assuring me the King would permitt no such matter, to the Hurt or Disfavour of her Majestie, with whome he so muche desyred to hold all good Amity and Correspondencie.

" He told me also, that the Queen should not need to doubt any such Attempt now; for though the King of Spaine had assembled a good Army at length, yet he thought he had no Intention to provoke her Majestie anew; and althoughe he had, yet at this tyme he was forced to imploy his Forces another way, by reason that the States Army had taken the Great Canarie, as certayne Advertisements came yesternight.

Hence we came to speake of the Treaties of Blois, and the Reglement for Marine Causes: " For the fyrst, he said, the King was ever willing, as he had often told, to make streight Amitie with the Queene, eyther by renewing that Treaty, or in any other fort that should be reasonable; and said, your Honor had desyred to add two Articles unto yt, which their Ambassador had sent him, and that they were likewise desyrous to add som in Behalf of their owne Marchants." Whereupon fearing they might be fuche, as might marr all the rest, and take away the Advantage we have now in that Treaty: " I told him my Commission was double in this matter; Fyrst, To propose the renewing the Treaty as yt is, where the King seems tyed by the Treaty to declare his Intention to her Majestie, she being the Survivor, and he the Successor of him who last confyrmed yt. Secondly, To move the Addition of those Articles that had bin spoken of to Monsieur Boisfisse and som other, in which case they might likewise move Addition on their part; but yf they should not agree upon the Additions, yet the Queen conceived that the King had offered her Confirmation of the Treaty as yt is, to which he seemed to assent:" And thereupon he entered into som Speeche of Dislike of the second Point required to be added touching the Staple of the Hanses; " I told him, yt was a thing might be greatly prejudiciall to her Majestie, yf they might be suffered to make France a Bridge and Passage to convey their Commodities of that kind into Spaine, and would neyther agree with our Amitie, nor greatly advantage France, that their new and scarce assured Friend, should be so strengthened against us, their so well approved Friends. He bad me assure my self that the King would never suffer yt; but in som things he said we must trust them, or yf we would needs require an Article for yt, yt must be generall, without naming any particularly, eyther to whom, or from whom, those Commodities should come.

Lastly, We came to speake of the Alteration requyred in that Article of Reglement touching the free Passage of all Ships bearing Frenche Flaggs, which he insisted much upon, saying, " That it was agreed upon after long Debate and Consultation on both Sydes, and that yt was the only way to prevent the Abuses and Spoils which would be committed, yf liberty of searching were permitted. I told him, for the first Point I was very well acquainted with the Proceedings of this matter, and I did know very perfectly, that this Point was very much insisted upon by your Honor, and absolutely refused to be passed in that fort he requyred yt, and that Monsieur de Boisfisse had assented to admitt som Exceptions; but that afterwards her Majestie, upon new Instance, being ever desyrous to give the King all Contentment that her Estate would permitt, had condescended to make som Tryall of the Course he propounded, and that upon tryall thereof she had found so great Inconveniency already happened, and like to happen dayly, as she had just Cause to refuse yt, and to pray the King to be contented, that som other more indifferent course might be thought of, which was the surest way to make the Treaty to have Continuance; whereof otherwise Necessitie would enforce them to breake yt, who found so great Inequality and Disadvantage in yt. For the second I said, the Experiencé they had lately made of her Majestie's Care and Indulgence to minister Justice in the like Complaints, might secure them from all Dowbt or Danger of any Abuse to grow that way; and therefore I prayed him not to do her Majesty that wrong to distrust her any more then she did them, but that in confidence one of anothers Sincerity, as was meet to be among good Friends, we might think of som equall Courte for bothe. He sayd, he did not see how there could be any other safe Courte devised for their syde. Thereupon I told him, I was sure Monsieur de Boisfisse had acquainted him with that which had bin propounded from your Honor out of their owne Ordinances, which I also shewed him, together with another Article I had collected out of the same Ordinances, whercof I send your Honor a Copie: And I sayd, as their Kings had thought yt reasonable to prescribe that Law not only to their Subjects, but their Aliyes also, so was yt as reasonable and as lawfull for her Majesty to do the same: And therefore I wished that we might follow those Ordinances as a Ground, and add thereunto such other Conditions, as should be reasonable.

His Answer was, that we might make what Ordinances we would, for Government of our own People, and so might they for theirs; but in penning a Treaty, both Sydes must agree, and nether Interests must govern the other.
 I replied, that they had made that Ordinance, to take hold of their Allies as well as their Subjects; and yf we now required them to be contented to receave the same measure they had given to others, they could not with any Reason or Justice refuse yt; for yf yt were just on their Syde, yt is as just on ours. At length being thus pressed upon that Point, he said, I should conferr with the Counsaill upon all these Matters, and they would consider of them, and give me Answer.

After this, because I would give him some occasion, to discover the Cause of the Hamburgers coming hither, and their Negotiation here; I told him, “ I understood there were such Ambassadors here, who had lately bin in England, and not having obtayned their purpose there, yt may be they might make a partiall Report of their Differences with her Majesty, to her Disadvantage and Dishonour; and therefore I thought good to let him know the Truth of yt, which I did sommarily, according to the Wryting your Honor sent me.
 He seemed very glad to be informed of it, and said “ he would be always ready to justify her Majesty’s Honor, in her Proceedings with them and the rest of the Hanses; but that in Truth, the Hamburgers had made no Complaint of her Majesty’s Proceedings to his knowledge, and that their busyness here, was only to renew such Privelidges, as had bin graunted them heretofore in this Kingdom. I prayed him, therein to have a regard, that there might grow no wrong or prejudice to his other Allies, especially in suche Sort as I had before mentioned; he willed me to assure my self, that there was no such thing required, nor yf yt were, would be granted.

Lastly, I told him I had received Commaundment to make new Instance for the Payment of the Mony, the Queen my Mistress had lent the King;
 but I did forbear yt, untill I had received Answer to my Proposition I had delivered, cheefly touching that Matter: Hoping that the Reason and Justice of the Cause being such as yt spake sufficiently for yt self, they would without any further poursuite, determine to give her Majesty such Answer as might content her, which I prayed him I might receive with som Expedition, having so long already attended for yt, and her Majesty being in great Expectation of yt. He said, I had done well to forbear to make any new Instance in yt to the King, who lacked rather means then will to give her Majesty Satisfaction; for the matter he said, he had the very day before moved the Counsaill, that I might receive an Answer with some Satisfaction to her Majesty yf yt were possible, but he saw so little hope thereof, that he was very loth to make me such an Answer as would so little content me. I said
 I must needs urge him for an Answer, which I would be gladd might be suche, as her Majesty might reap som Comfort and Contentation for her Kindness towards the King; which had not bin an ordinary Kindness, but such as all the Allies of the Crowne of France put together, had not performed so much

An. 1599. " much; which, added to her more then ordinary Occasions, to require reimbursement, deserved more then an ordinary Answer. He confessed all to be true that I said, and that the King was bound in many Respects to give her Majestie better Satisfaction, and protested he had done and would do, his best Endeavours in yt: But he saw no possibility for this present Yeare; but they were now beginning dresser l'Estat for the Yeare to come, wherein the King had commaunded, that there should be expresse Regard had of her Majestie's Contentation; but what yt would be in particular, could not be knowen till they had finished the State, which would be about the end of August". He advised me to talk with Monsieur de Rosni about yt, unto whom I went afterward, and received in effect the same Answer.

Touching Monsieur de Bethune, Monsieur de Boisfisse had advertised him what your Honor's Opinion was touching his being Installed for the King; which he sayth proceeded fyrst from a Motion made by som in England to the Ambassador for that purpose: But seeing he perceaves the Queen would not like of yt; he sayth the King will think of some other. " I made a Motion as of my self, protesting that I had no Commission to do yt, but that yt came only out of my Desyre that the King would not too much discontent her Majestie, but shew a desyre at least to satisfie her some way, that he should make her an offer of some Corn, to be delivered at some Ports most convenient for her, which perhaps she would accept in steed of Mony, at the least for so much as she should had occasion to use in Ireland, for the victualling of her Army and Garrisons there; or howsoever, yet yt would somewhat moderate the Discontentment which otherwise she might justly conceave, to be utterly neglected. He seemed to hearken willingly unto yt, and gave me thanks for putting him in mind of yt, saying he would propose yt as of himself to the King, and that he verily hoped somthing would be done that way". So that now yt may please your Honor to let me know, how muche or to what a vallew her Majestie will accept in that Sort; for myne owne part, I think all is well gotten that can be wonne out of these Men's Hands: And as for the Prices, I make no doubt but they will be as reasonable, or more, then the Prices in England, for yt is the only thing that is cheape here. Also I would desyre to know at what Places her Majestie would desyre to receive yt, for I think that will be all one to them.

I have procured the King's Letters under the Great Seale, to stay the Execution of the Letters of Mart graunted to certayne Merchants of Bayonne. And for the matter of the Seminary at Rheimes, Monsieur de Villeroy shewed me the Archbishop's Letter to the King, wherein he confesseth, that suche a thing had bin moved and followed by one Barret an English Priest, that had heretofore bin Governour of that Colledge; but that since his Death which happen'd about Whitsuntide last, the Matter hath lyen dead, and now he understands the King's Pleasure in yt, he assureth yt shall not be revived.

I send your Honor a Copie of the Commission graunted by the King to do Justice in Marine Causes, yt may please you to give order to all suche as have Cause of Complaint in that kind, to send som one over at common Charge, which may be throughly instructed in their Causes, and armed with sufficient Proofes, which may attend and follow their Busyness; my self will be always ready to assist him the best I may; but the Stating of the Causes being at Rouen, and I remayning so far off, nether I nor any of myne, can attend to follow their Sutes; I would be gladd they might receive som Justice here, as well as their People have done in England, and I hope to procure yt.

I thought good to send away this Bearer with thus muche, because I understand Monsieur de Villeroy sends away to Monsieur de Boisfisse, and I hold yt fit your Honor should be acquainted with all that hath passed betweene us, as well, and as soone as he. Whiles these Matters are in handling, yt will be necessary that the Curriers be the more set on work; these Matters once ended, there will be no more that Occasion, and the extraordinary Expence now, may be saved afterwards terwards. As soone as I have treated with the Counsaill, and received my Answer, I will send againe.

An. 1599.

In the mean time, I send your Honor a Project of mine owne for the Article of the Treaty of Depredations, which you desyre to have altered, yt may be they will especially except to the Point of Victualls; your Honor will be pleased I hope, to let me understand your Pleasure therein, and generally, what I shall yeald, and what I shall insist upon. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cécyll.

Right Honorable,

Blois 28th July 1599. O. S.

I Understand by many of my good Friends, and especially by mine Uncle Killigrew, the Continuance of your Favour towards me, in accepting my poor Service and Endeavours here, that I hold my self tyed thereby as by many other Favours, to render both the Testimony and Effect of a dutifull and thankfull Heart. I beseeche your Honor therefore, to accept these few Lines as a gage and witness of my most loyall and faythfull Affection towards you, and to assure your self always of my earnest Desyre and Readiness to do you Service; whereunto the more to engage my selfe, I beseeche your Honor to give me leave to be a Sutor to you in the behalf of a Freind of myne, whom I entreated to com over with me in the Place of my Secretary, who is otherwise like for his good Will to me, to sustaine great Prejudice in his Absence; his Name is Rafe Winwood, and his Case is this; he is Tenant to the Queene of the Mannor of Delsbanger, which is annexed to the Honour of Grafton, in the County of Northampton, which (understanding of the Sales) he was desyröus before his comming over with me, to have purchased yt of her Majestie; and to that purpose went to Mr. Sollicitor to conferr with him of yt, who assured him that yt was not within the Commission, as being Parcell of an Honour. Yet since he understands the same is passed in a Book, to the use of one Kettering Receavor of Northamptonshire; whereby he is greatly disapointed, and his whole Staté greatly interested. My humble Sute unto your Honor is, that (forasmuch as he was fully determined to have bought yt himself, and was only hindred by the Error of Mr. Sollicitor, and by his so speedy coming away in my Company,) yt would please you to be a means, that for some reasonable Consideration to be given to him that hath passed yt, the Purchase may be made over unto him; which I shall take no less thankfully, than yf the Favour were done to my self, and shall greatly acknowledge my Obligations increased thereby towards your Honour.

Besydes the matter contayned in my Dispatch, I have nothing more to wryte, but that the 20000 Crowns for any thing I can fynd, will not be paid till towards Michaelmas, althoughe Rosni assured Mr. Edmonds they should be ready as soon as the Obligation was brought; which I told him I now had, so little Trust there is in their Promises.

The King rode Post yesterday to Paris, upon no occasion but to see Madamoiselle d'Entragues; which needs not, for he hath not been idle, neither at Orleans nor here; but hath had varietie brought him out of all parts; and for any thing I see, he mynds nothing else, but that and hunting, and will hardly stay one whole day with his Counsaill. We know not when to look for him here againe, but his Counsaill remains here. The Journey to Lions is uncertayne, because, as I said once before, he hath prorogued the Terme for the Marquisat untill the beginning of January, which being so, there is no great Cause of his going to Lions, For his Marriage with the Princeesse of Florence goerh rather

An. 1599. backward then forward, there having bin yet never any Motion made of yt directly on his Part, and the Emperour pursuing yt very yearnestly.

Of the Archduke's Arryvall in the Low-Countries we hear not yet, but suppose he is well onward in his way thither. Here is a secret muttering of an Enterprize intended by the States, with some secrett Favour from hence, for the Kingdom of Portugall, in favour of the Duke of Braganza; not without the secret Allowance of the Pope, as I am informed. And surely yf the Matter of the Marquisat breake out into Warr, I thinke verily yt will be set on foot, and will be communicated unto her Majestie. In the mean tyme, some Speeches have bin cast out afar off of such a Matter, whereof I have laid no hold, because I had no Commission to warrant me to deale in that Matter.

The Princes of Lorrain, absolutely refused to come with the King to this Towne, saying they would not march in the Blood of their House. And so hoping e're yt be long to have Occasion to wryte again, I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

The * Chancellor is dead since my comming to this Towne, and Monsieur de Bellievre hath his Place. D'Incarville, Controller of the Finances is likewise dead; and Monsieur de Vienne, before Tresorier de Espargne, hath succeeded him.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Blois 1st August 1599. O. S.

I Was yesterday in Conference with the Counfail, viz. the Chancellor, the Archbishop of Bourges, Monsieur de Villeroy, Monsieur de Messe, and Monsieur de Rhosni, and proposed unto them, fyrst the same Things I had before presented in Wryting at Orleans, " desyring I might after so long Attendance
" at length receive an Answer; and in the Matter of the Mony, adding what " weight of Reason and Perswasion my poore witts were able to afford. Their
" Answeres were full of very good Words, acknowledging the Queen's many Fa" vours, and the King's great Obligation to her: That they were already entered " into Consultation which way to give her Satisfaction, and that very shortly I " should receive an Answer". Afterwards we entered into Conference of the Points I had last in Charge: First, touching the Matter of Marseilles, which I related unto them, as I had done before to Monsieur de Villeroy, and certified in my last Dispatch. They answered, " they would with all convenient Speed in" form themselves of the Particulars of the Cause, and then I should receive Sa" tisfaction. Secondly, we spake of the Article of the Treaty or Reglement of " Depredations, which I desyred might be changed, and quallified in such sort,
" as her Majestie might be freed from such Inconveniencies as had thereby alrea" dy happened, and were dayly like to happen; which I declared in particular,
" shewing that the Matter imported us muche more then yt did them; for yt con" cerned them only in Profit, but yt concerned us in our Preservation, and " that the Queen was resolute not to suffer so notable a Prejudice any longer;
" and therefore wished they would enter into Consultation of some other Course,
" more equall and indifferent for us both; and for the more speedy proceeding “ therein, I said her Majestie had proposed unto Monsieur Boisfisse, certaine Ar- An. 1599.

 “ ticles taken out of their owne Ordonances, which she thought not impertinent
 “ to be put in Execution on both Sydes. Which being redd, were absolutely re“ fused by them all, alleadging that those Ordonances were made for a tyme, and “ on a speciall Occasion, ever resisted by their Allies as unreasonable, therefore “ we must not think to thrust them upon them now. I told them yf they were “ just then when they made them, they were as just now, no Prince having “ ever had more occasion to be jealous of that which is don at Sea, then her “ Majestie hath now; besydes, we required nothing of them but that we were “ content to yeald them, which would be no disadvantage; and therefore they “ must be contented to secure her Majestie cyther that way, or some other way “ to the same purpose; for the greatest Law of all, was that of a Man's owne “ Preservation; and they might be assured, the Queen would not betray her“ self and her Estate, nor suffer her Enemy to be armed and strengthned a“ gainst her, when she had Power to impeach yt; and yf they were such “ Friends to us as they pretended, they would not upon such pttit respects of “ Profitt, urge any thing that they saw by evident Proove so prejudiciall unto “ us; but would rather according to the Nature of true Amitie, bear or suffer
 “ a little for the good of their Friends; and this was the only thing wherein “ we had hitherto had occasion to make tryall of their Friendship towards us;
 “ all that hath passed untill now between us having bin burden and charge unto “ us, without any returne on their part. They answered, yt was not reasonable “ they should presse any thing that should be so prejudiciall unto us as yt seemed “ this might be; yet on the other Syde, they could not any way endure that “ Yoke of Servitude, to have their Ships searched; assuring themselves that “ Course would never pass without great Wrong and Injustice to the weaker; but “ they would consult of yt; and conferr with their Admirall and other Officers;
 “ who understood more of these Matters then they did, and thereupon advise of “ som Course which might be more to our Contentment, and advertise their Am“ bassador of yt, to impart unto her Majestie and her Counsaill.

I understood since by Monsieur de Villeroy, That he had received fresh Advertisements out of Spaine, contayning Confirmation of the taking of the Great Canaries by the Hollanders, and withall that the King's Fleet is assembled at Ferrol, consisting of 250 Sail or thereabout, and 12000 Men. His Opinion is, yf the Hollanders possess and hold the Island, then the King will send his whole Fleet that Way; otherwise, if they leave the Island and follow after prey and gaine, he beleeves that a great Part of this Fleet will come for Ireland, or some Part of England, and therefore wisheth the Queen not to be unprovided in both.

Of the Matters of the Low-Countries, your Honor is better, and more speedy-ly advertised then they be here, therefore I forbear. I send you a Copy of the King's Letters of Prohibition, to receive, harbor, or favour any Ships of Warre in the Parts of this Kingdom. I thought good to send this Bearer expressly, the rather, because this Advertisement out of Spaine seems to be of Importance. I send your Honor a Copy of the Advertisements that came yesterday out of Spaine, which because they seem to be of much moment, I have willed the Messenger to take Post that he may make hast. Yt may please your Honor to consider of him in his Allowance accordingly. You must looke for no Money hence till the next Year, and then, without all doubt, you may make some certaine Account, to receive some good Somme.

The 20000 Crownes will not fail to be ready at Michaelmas, and shall be paid at Rouen or Diepe, which her Majestie will.

The * Germain Army is already com to the Rhine, with a purpose to attempt the Fort the Spaniards have built at Rees, to defend their Bridge. The Princes that deal in this Action are, the Duke of Brunswick, the Landgrave of Hess,

* Grotii Annales de Rebus Belgicis, lib: 8.

An. 1599. and the Marquis of Onoburk of the House of Brandenburgh, the rest have retired themselves. We hold they have already taken Berk. The Spaniards are gone out of the Isle of Bomell to meet with them, having left in the Fort 3000 Foot and 400 Horfe. The States labour by all means to joyne the Germain Army with theirs, whereunto most of the Germain Commanders have assented, and yt is hoped yt will be effected, though some be unwilling. The Duke of Brunswick and the Landgrave are looked for in Person in the Camp every Day. And so I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 7 Aug. 1599. O.S.

Y^T may please you to understand, that within a Day after I sent away my last Dispatch, "Monsieur de Villeroy cam to my Lodging at Blois, and after long and solemne Protestations from himself and the rest of the Counsaile, how sorry they were that the King's Diffability at present would not suffer him to give the Queen better Satisfaction at this tyme; acknowledging the great Justice and Reason of her Demands, the King's great Obligations towards her, and assuring me of a full and settled purpose in the King and them all, to give her Majestie very good Contentment this next Yeare:" He delivered me Answer in wryting, to that I had likewise presented in wryting at my fyrst coming to Orleanse; "excusing the long deferring of yt, upon his Desyre to have given me som certaintie of that her Majestie should expect this next Yeare; for which Cause (but for the Instance and Earnestness I have used) he would still have deferred yt, untill the State of the Receipts and Payements for the next Yeare had bin perfected, which would be within five or six Weeks. But for my Satisfaction, and likewise for my Discharge, that there might appear no Default in my Diligence, he had brought me this Answer in the mean tyme, which he prayed me to interpret the best of, and to assure her Majestie, that there wanted rather Means then good Will in the King to satisfye her; and that he would be alway ready, not only to pay her what he owed as soon as possibly he could, to which in Honor and Justice he was bound; but also to expose his whole Force, and his own Person in her Defence, yf she had need at any tyme, to requite the faithfull Friendship he had found at her Hands. When I had received the Answer, I told him, "I was sorry that the great Deferts of her Majestie, and the Reason and Justice of her Demands, which they did so fully acknowledge, together with the Instance and Sollicitation I had used ever since my comming, had wrought so little Effect for her Majestie's Contentation. I put him in mynd of that Speeche I had before used to the Counsaile, namely, That I prayed them to consider to whom yt was that they were to give an Answer, and upon what Subject and Occasion: That yt was to a great Princesse, who had most faithfully and sincerely assisted the King in his greatest Extremitie; and that having means, and great opportunitie to have dismembred and ruined the Crowne of France, and perhaps to have taken a good Portion of yt her self, (as many other Princes would gladly have don, and som did, deteyning yt to this Day,) chose rather to employ her uttermost Means and Forces to preserve yt; and had effected perhaps more therein then all the rest of the Friends and Allies of the Crowne of France; neglecting in som sort her own Affaires for that purpose, and not refusing to bring her self into som want to supply them. That she now demanding nothing but som part of her own, whereof she had disfurnished her self to furnish them; and that not upon any light Occasion, but being as they all knew in actual Warre, both at home within her own Realme of “ Ireland and abroad, against one of the greatest and most potent Princes of An. 1599.

" Ireland

 “ Europe, whose continual Attempts and Desseignes against her she could not “ repell as she had done, but with great and continuall Charge; and therefore “ that this her so extraordinary Occasions, joyned with the great Reason and “ Justice of her Demaunds, deserved at their Hands a more then ordinary Ac“ knowledgment and Care to content her. That this Answer might well have “ bin geeven to the Seignorie of Venice, or the Duke of Florence, who per“ haps out of their Abondance had lent the King som Mony, and being in Peace “ with all the World, had no great occasion to press him for Repayment.
 “ Whereas the Queen my Mistreis, by reason of her present Warre, and the “ continual Burden she hath borne almost alone for many Years to the Benefit “ of all Christendom, in withstanding the intended Monarchie of Spaine, could “ not have Tyme or Means to gather muche Treasure. Therefore I wished them “ to weigh with themselves, First, Whether yt were just, in so great a diffe- “ rence of Merits and Occasions, not to make a difference of their Proceedings
 “ and Acknowledgment: And secondly, Whether yt could be for their Advan- “ tage and the Good of their Affaires, to suffer their Friends to fall into any “ Inconvenience for the good Will they had performed towards them; and that “ the World should discover that the Friendship of France is rather amicitia “ prægravans and burdensom, then profitable to them which imbrace it”. And this I said for the generality of the Answer, but in particular I excepted against that part of the Answer which concern the Customs of Roüen and Newhaven, which I said unto him, “ I marveyled how they could make with any shew or re- “ gard of Honor, giving just Occasion to the Queen to think, that in offering her “ Affurance for her Mony there was an Intention to abuse her, seeing the same
 “ was before engaged to others.”

Monfieur de Villeroy to the fyrst part of my Speeche answered, “ That he con“ fessed all to be true that I said, and that I had all Justice and Reason on my “ syde: But that the King’s Disability was suche, by reason of the Desolation
 “ of his Countrie, and Povertie of the People, from whom his Revenews do a“ rise, that he could do no more for this Yeare; and therefore desyred that her “ Majestie would add this to her former great Favours towards the King, to have “ Patience for a few Moneths. To the second Point he said, That in very Deed
 “ the King knew not in what sort those Customs stood, till the Townes cam in-
 “ to his Hands, and that yf there were any Fault yt was in his Ministers, who “ knew those things better then he: That the King’s Intention was not to abuse “ her Majestie, and that now he found in what Estate those Customes stood, he “ would think of satisfying her by some other means, which he thought would “ be all one to her, so she might receive Satisfaction any way.

I told him, “ I would relate this Answer to her Majestie, which I knew not “ how she would interpret; but I knew yt would nothing answer her Expecta“ tion. And therefore wished him to make her som Amends for this long De“ lay, by Assignation of som round Som for the next Yeare, and to be payd in “ the first Quarter, that she might make use of yt for her Preparations against “ the beginning of Sommer. He sayd he wold do his best to procure yt should “ be so.

Wee had likewise som Speeche about the 20000 Crownes in what Mony it should be paid; “ I urging the Payment in Gold, in lieu of the Charge and Trou“ ble saved of paying yt in London, which the King was bound to by the Obl-“ gation, and because that Frenche Silver Coyne is not current in England. I “ was answered, the King could not pay yt but in such Mony as he received,
 “ which was altogether Silver, and their Silver was so good, that I should be wil“ ling ynough to receive yt here, and to pay yt in London.” The Place of Payment they required to be at Roüen, which I disliked not, but yet desyred yf her Majestie liked better to receive yt at Diepe that yt might be payd there, which was graunted. Yt may please your Honor to direct me before the tyme what course shall be taken for the conveying of yt, or otherwise making yt over by

An. 1599 Exchange; and yf you determine to have yt received at Diepe, and to transport yt in kind, yt may please you likewise to send over one authorized, with Letters of Procuracy to receive yt, and take Charge of yt, for so they seemed to requyre of me. But I told them, that the Delivery of the Obligation, with an Acquittance of my Hand, or his that received yt, was sufficient, which they seemed not much to contest upon: Yet being received by any other then my self, perhaps they will require his Procuracy: For som five or six hundred Pound of yt, I am desyrous yf yt please her Majestie, to receive yt here and pay yt there, to save los of the Exchange in making yt over. I beseeche you Sir, I may know whether she so please to allow of yt, that I may give Order for the Payment of the Mony there accordingly.

The next Day after this Conference with Monsieur de Villeroy, I came away to this Towne, because the King was here in this Towne, and his return thither very uncertaine. The Ambassadors continue almost all in this Towne, but only he of Savoy, and the Spanish Ambassador, who came to Blois two Days before the King cam away. The King is yet here, stayed as I guess the rather by the Accident that fell out betwene the Prince de Joyville and Monsieur le Grand, which was this: * Upon Tuesday Night last, after they had all accompanied the King from the place where he had supped to his Lodging to Zametz House, the Duke of Guise, Prince of Joyville, le Grand and his Brother, and Monsieur de Termes, went all out together; and the rest being already entered into le Grand his Coche, Joyville pulled le Grand by the Cloke, and required to speake with him, who thereupon drawing himself alyde from the Company, Joyville told him, he had bin wronged to the King by a Report, that he should make Love to Madamoiselle d'Enragues, which made the King jealous of him, of which Report he thought him le Grand to be the Author, and therefore, saith he to him, thou shalt dye, and withall pulled out his Sword and ranne him in, the other having no Weapon about him; but with haste, or som accident, his Thrust lighted lower then he intended, and ranne him into the Flank and through the Thigh, without Daunger; but hereupon som Company comming in on both fydes, the Vidame de Mans, and an Escuier of *le Grand*s were very sore hurt, and the Vidame not like to escape as I hear. The King hearing of the matter leapt out of his Bed, and ranne downe in his Shirt with a Sword in his Hand, but by that time the rest were gone, and le Grand was brought in wounded as he was. The King hath taken it exceedingly ill, and hath sent for his Court of Parliament, and willed them to do severe Justice upon the Fact.

The Prince of Joyville is fled into Lorraine, the Dutcheß of Guise and her Daughter have bin sundry tymes on their Knees before the King, but he seems very resolute, commanding le Grand not to seeke Revenge by any means, but to refer yt to him, for that he takes the Scorn as done to himselfe; yet for all this yt is thought the King will be wonne in the end to pass it over.

Since my coming to this Towne, I learn that there are certaine Jesuits com hither to the King from Rome, to intreate for the restoring of their Order into France, which is a matter the Pope hath much laboured. † The cheife of them is called Padre Maggio. They were presented here unto him by the Pope's Nuncio, and presently brought out againe, and referred till his Counsaile and he should come together. Monsieur de Villeroy is a great Favourer of their Restitution, but the Court of Parliament is earnest against them.

The Archduke's Speed in his Journey hath not bin such as was expected. The last Letters that came from Venice, made mention of his being yet at Milan. The King is yet purposed to go hence to morrow towards Blois, where he yet intends to make but small Stay, and from thence go to the Duke of Monpensier's House at Champigni, and so to Tours and Saumur, and divers Noblemen's Houses thereabouts, to pass his tyme till the end of Summer. His Counsaile remains at Blois, and this is thought to be purposely to put off Busyness and Sutes for Mo-ny, wherewith he is continually pestered, but payeth no Man: And by this Separation of the King and his Counsaile, Men are posted from one to the other, which serves for a Delay. An. 1599.

For the matter of the Treaty your Honor seeth what they offer, cyther to continue yt as yt is, or to add on both sydes. I beseech you advise whether yt be not better for us to take yt as yt is now, then by seeking to add on our syde, to give them occasion to add somewhat likewise on theirs, which will take away the Advantage we have in that Treaty. I remember Monsieur Fontaine was talking with me about some such matter before my coming over, and complaining of the Restraint of free Trade used to the Frenchmen in England. Yf yt please you to talk with him, I think you may discover by him what they mean to stand upon. For our part, so all Impositions raised, and all Acts passed since 1572, contrary to the Treaty, may be revoked, I think we are very well; and so much they cannot refuse, being no new Addition, but only a Confirmation and Execution of the Treaty. And for that of the not executing of Letters of Mart at Land, yt may be put in the Treaty of Depredations, without giving them Occasion or Pretext thereby to requyre any Addition on their part to the Treaty of Blois. And so for this tyme I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's most humbly to be commaunded,

HENRY NEVILLE.

Responce du Roy au Derniere Memoire presenté à sa Majesté par le Seigneur de Neville Ambassadeur de la Royne d'Angleterre.

LE Roy desirant s'acquiter envers la Royne d'Angleterre sa bonne sœur & Cousine, de ce qu'il luy doit, & luy donner toute occasion d'attendre & recevoir de la continuation de son amitié tout ce à quoy les plaisirs qu'il a recens d'elle l'obligent; a commandé aux Gens de son Conseil d'adviser aux moyens de la contenter; Lesquelz, apres s'estre plusieurs fois assemblez pour y satisfaire, y contribuans de leur affection, fidelité & Obeissance qu'ilz doivent au service & aux commandemens de sa Majesté, & pareillement à la justice de la demande de la dicte Royne, fortifiée encores de la consideration & recognoissance des bien faictz que la Nation Françoisé a recens d'elle; ont toutesfois reconnu, que les fonds des Finances de sa Majesté de la presente année est si incertain & espuisé, à cause de la generale pauvreté du peuple, de la seul substance duquel il depend, & de ce que l'on est si avancé dans l'année; que ce dit tout ce que sa Majesté peut faire en icelle que payer la somme de 20000 escuz qui luy furent prestez en l'an 1596, Mais aussi elle sera fournié en la Ville de Diepe, au temps qu'il a esté déclaré audit Sr. de Neville Ambassadeur de la dite Dame Royne.

Et comme sadite Majesté avec ceulx de sondit Conseil est encores incertaine quelz seront les deniers qu'elle tirera de ses Subjects l'année prochaine, elle ne peut aussi declarer à present audit Ambassadeur ce qu'elle payera à ladite Royne en icelle année, mais sa Majesté le pourra faire dans six sepmaines ou deux mois quelle scaura ce dont elle pourra faire Estat, sa Majesté ne voulant rien promettre à ladite Dame Royne qu'elle ne soit bien assurée de le pouvoir tenir, comme elle a bien souvent déclaré audit Ambassadeur.

Pareillement, sadite Majesté seroit tresaise de laisser à ladite Dame la jouissance des Impositions & Termes de Gabelles & autres Daces qui se levont aux Villes de Rouen & du Havre de Grace, comme il luy fut promis l'an 1590 par ses Commissaires, si sadite Majesté en pouvoit disposer; Mais sadite Majesté a trouvé toutes lesd' Impositions vendües & alienées par les Roys ses predecesseurs devant son advenement à la Couronne, ainsi quelle a verifié depuis que lesdites Villes se sont remises en son Obeissance; de sorte qu'il n'est plus en la puissance d'en ordonner; dont sa Majesté est tresmarrée, comme elle est de n'avoir autant

An. 1599. autant de moyen à present de Contenter ladite Royne, qu'elle en a la Volonté, & qu'elle recognoist y estre obligée: Mais Elle espere la recompenser à l'advenir, que ses affaires seront remises en meilleur Estat qu'elles ne sont; de façon, que ladite Royne en demeurera satisfaicte, qui est ce que sa Majesté desire le plus tant elle recognoist avoir d'obligation de ce faire, & d'Interest aussy au bien & prosperité des affaires de ladite Royne, & de son Royaume.

Quant aux Traictez faiçts avec ladite Dame Royne par les Roys ses predecesseurs, & mesmes celuy de l'an 1572; sa Majesté a tousjours entendu & entend encores, non seulement les observer & entretenir comme bons & valides, mais aussi les augmenter s'il est besoign de ce faire, pour le commun bien de leurs Majestés, & de leurs Subjectz & Royaumes. Au moyen de quoy sa Majesté sera tousjours preste de les confirmer, renouveler, & y adjouster encores ce qui sera proposé & jugé raisonnable & necessaire, pour l'utilité commune, & sur ce executer & observer de bonne foy ce qui a esté promis & convenu par iceulx.

DE NEUFVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 8th Aug. 1599. O. S.

THE Dayly Bruites Currant in this Towne, of the Spaniards landing in England, have moved me to send away this expres Messenger to learn some Certainty, both to satisfye my self and others, who continually come or fend unto me about yt: Withall I am to let your Honor understand, that notwithstanding the Advice I gave in my last of the Archduke's slow Proceeding in his Voyage homward, I am certainly now advertised, that both he and the Infanta arrived in Lorraine this last Week, and were feasted by that Duke at Nancy, from whence they dispatched the Prince of Orange to do some Complements to this King; who arrived here in this Towne yesterday, and is this Day gon towards Blois to the King. To morrow yt is said the Archduke makes his Entry into Luxemburgh, and about eight or ten Days hence to Bruxelles, where there is great Magnificence prepared to receive him. The King is expected here againe within fifteen Days, having a purpose to see the Queen Dowager at Chenoncaux, and the Duke of Monpensier at his House at Champigni in Poictou, and so to returne.

The Turke is sayd to be recovered of his great Sicknes, and to have shewed himself publickly in the Moschee. * The Peace is treated between him and the Emperour by the means of the Tartars, from whom the Persians have lately recovered a great Country, which they have occupied during the Warrs against the Turke, and have defeated a great Army of them, and slaine their Cham. The Sophi hath lately sent a great Embassage to the Turk to communicate his good Success therein, and withall to demand Restitution of such Countries as have bin in these late Warrs taken from him; which being not performed, yt is thought he will seek yt by Force. The Emperour is thought to be somewhat crazed or distempered in his Braine, and hath discarded and sent home to their Houses two of his principall Counsellers, Rumf and Trantz. The Accident of his Sicknes gives occasion for many Discourses in these Parts, and of direct Practize and Labour as I hear of this King, to be King of the Romans; for which purpose, † besydes Bongars, who remains for the most about Francfort, he hath another at this present in Saxony. I will inform my self of this Poynt more particularly, and accordingly I will acquaint your Honor.

For the matter of the Marquisat, the Ambassador of Venice doth assure me, † Letres d'Offat, Vol. 4 p. 225. and Monsieur Amelot's Note.

according

according to his Intelligence out of Italy, that the Pope will judge yt for the King of France, and that before the End of September. For my part I am very doubtfull of yt, and yf yt fall out so, I shall take it for an Argument, either of exceeding Weakness in the King of Spaine, or obstinate Resolution to bend himself against us; for otherwise Reason of State would not suffer him to give such way to the Frenche into Italy. An. 1599.

For the Matter of the Marriage, no Man knoweth what to conjecture. The King never made more show of Affection to Madamoiselle d'Entragues then at his last being in this Towne, and I hear by some familiar in that Howse, that they are in great Hope the King will marry her. On the other Syde, the King doth not in publique Shew or Specche entertaine the other, and as I learn hopes shortly to receive Contentment from Rome touching his Divorce, for which purpose, (howsoever he be otherwise inclined) * he must make a Pretence of that Match of Florence, for otherwise the Pope, who affects that Matche, will not be drawne so easly to consent.

I was lately to visit the Constable, whom I had not seen before, by reason of his Absence from the Court and this Towne; but I wrote unto him from Orleans, and included both her Majestie's Letters, with such Compliments as I was directed to do unto him. And now I renewed the same, and received as good Contentment from him for his Affection and Devotion towards her Majestie, as I have done from any since I came into France. He hath promised to deal with the King effectually about the Matters I have propoled, and confesseth there is no Reason nor Honor in the Answer I have received. The worst is I feare he bears no great Sway in Counsaile, althoughe he be the cheefe Man.

I would gladly know her Majestie's Pleasure, whether I shall do any Complement to the young Prince of Conde, who lyeth at St. Maure tow Leagues from this Towne; or to the Count Soissons when he coms, who hath yet never ben at Court since my Arrivall. And so, hoping to hear from your Honour, and to receive your further Direction about all matters which I have negotiated heere, I most humbly take my leave, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 14th August 1599. O. S.

SINCE my Returne to Paris, Charles Pagett hath againe made means to me, to know her Majestie's Disposition and your Honor's towards him, and what hope there is of his Pardon and Grace from her Majestie. I let him understand, that yt was not to be expected, that after so great and so long continued Offences as his hath bin, her Majestie would at the first Motion, and as it were upon even hand, receive him to her Grace; but that yt was likely she would make fyrst some Tryall of him, whether his pretended Sorrow, and desyre of returning into her Obedience, were real on his part; and therefore he must make account to give some assured Argument thereof, by some actuall and important Service, as well as his former Actions had given open Testimony of a contrary Disposition. He answered, that he would be ready to give any Argu-

* 'Tis certain the King was never fond of this Match, for de Sully tells us, that after the Articles of Marriage between the King and the Princess of Florence were agreed to by the Commissioners on both Sides, the King asked him one day, (as he was with him upon other Buisnes) from whence he came, — Nous venons de vous marier Sire, luy dites vous; Surquoy il fut demy quart d'heure resvant & se gratant la teste, & curant les ongles sans vous rien respondre; puis, tout soudain il vous dit, (en frappant d'une main sur l'autre) Hé bien de pardieu soit, il n'y a remede, puis que pour le bien de mon Royaume, & de mes peuples, vous dites qu'il faut estre marié, il le faut donc estre: Mais c'est une condition que J' apprehends bien fort, me souvenant toujours de combien de mauvaises rencontres me fut cause le premier, Vol. 1. ch. 93.

An. 1599. ments or Assurance thereof, that he was able to give; and desyred to know what yt was that was requyred of him, protesting with great Vows and Oaths, that he would willingly spend Life, Credit, and all he had to serve her Majestie, and to cancell his former Faults; which he confessed to be great, but yet such as her Majestie in her Mercy and Clemency had pardoned as great, to her eternall Honor.

He let me see a large Discourse of his own Wrytinge against the Proceedings of Parsons, and the rest of the Jesuits, wherein he layeth open some of their Practizes, and sheweth his Dislike of them; which he offers to send to your Honor, yf you shall think good to print yt with his Name to yt, and thereby declare himself a open Enemy, and make himself irreconcilable unto them: Besyds the Disgust he hopes to work thereby in the Mynds of all the Catholiques of England, who are ignorant of these Practises, and therefore believe too well of them.

He seems very desyrous to return with her Majestie's liking into the Low-Countries, yf the Treaty of Peace proceed; pretending to be able to do her Majestie good Service by his Intelligence and Credit there: And afterwards eyther to return and serve her in England, yf yt please her to be so gracious unto him, or to be used; and commaunded by her wheresoever yt pleaseth her: Only he desires that he may end his Days, with that Comfort and Satisfaction of Mynd and Confidence, that he is restored to her gracious Favour, and to the Obedience of his naturall Prince. I beseech your Honor let me understand how I shall further proceed with him, and what Comfort I shall give him, and what particularly I shall requyre at his Hands; I do think there is more in him then in most of the rest, and like inoughe there may be good use made of him, which I leave to your Honor's better Consideration.

I am advertised that Spinola is arrived at Dunkerke with six Gallies, which he hath an Intention to imploy upon our Coasts, in making continuall Spoyles there, and perhaps to attempt somewhat upon our Navy in the Medway. Also that the Infanta will stay at Namure, till the end of their September, but the Archduke goeth presently to Brussels. And so I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

Sir Henry Neville,

17th August 1599.

THE Reports from France, by the Governors of Deipe and of Calais, and from Monsieur de Sourdiac have bin such, as gave no small Cause for us to apprehend some Invasion from Spaine; considering that at that tyme both her Majestie's Fleet was in Harbour, and most of her Commaunders in Ireland; but thanks be to God her Majesty's Navy is now ready to set to Sea, and she hath both an Army in the West, and another here, ready eyther for Kent or Effex, with which we do but attend their coming; not doubting but to pay them their accustomed Wages, which is Ruine and Contempt. These Things I do tell you gave us this Alarm, being these Reports, (whereof I send you herein the Abstract) that you may see with what a Whirlwind they were brought hither; though for my part, yt was ever to me a Paradox, that the Fleet was in Brest; and yet all Circumstances considered of my Place and Fortune, I did choose rather to run with the Streame of Providence, then of too much Confidence upon myne own Intelligences, which I must confess did assure me of Preparations all the Year, for defence against the State's Fleet; of which I did ever think the Enemy would make some use, so soon as he should be secure of them upon his owne Coasts; a Matter wherein they dealt unworthely with the Queene; for yf they had not promised sed to stay on that Coast, her Majestie would have armed, as the King of Spaine did; but they for Gaine, transported themselves to the Canaries, which is a Matter of no Consequence, for now he hath gathered indeed a Head at the Groyne, whether according to his Reports he should bring his Gallies, you must judge that his Desseign must be for England; but for my part I am not advertized that the Gallies are so neer as the Groyne: Though when I consider that those I use are but the Sons of Adam, and that yt is not impossible, but that they might be corrupted or deceived, I have given way to these Preparations that are made, preferring therein the Ways of Safety, before any Matter of Charge.

You shall therefore know, that my Lord Admirall is Generall of her Majestie's Army by Land, and that my Lord Thomas Howard is Admirall at Sea, with Sir Walter Raleigh his Vice-Admirall. If you will say, that of all this you might have bin sooner advertized, I must say we did still expect to have heard by you, what would have com from the French King, to whom we were assured that all particulars of Spanish Preparations, from his Governors must have bin knowen; in Expectation whereof from day to day, I deferred my Dispatche thus long, being very desyrous to have written unto you more certainly; wherein, when you have looked over all these Advertisements, includes (being layd together) inoughe to make a Man in doubt to say the contrary; though for their being in Brest all the Word sees yt is falle. Yet they wryte that the Adelantado hath bin at Lisbone, hastning the Gallies to the Groyne with all possible speed, as is said; of which some conclude that his Preparations thereabout are the rather made, because the Plague hath bin so great in Sivill, and Lisbon, and that he may seek to lye for the Flemings, or thrust into Falmouth, as he meant to doe in October was Twelve-month.

But Sir, I would be glad you should enquire that Poynt of the Galleys being already at the Groyne, as muche as you can; for that is a main Shewe for England, and their Galleys may do exploits here, and return no more this Yeare, but tary at Sluys and Dunkerck; but few days will discover very muche, and I conceive that France hath muche good Means to come to Knowledge there, where Trade is free with the Spaniards; for which purpose I do exceedingly desyre you, yf you can learne of any Frenchman of good Understanding and Conscience not to betray me, that will take upon him to go into Spayne, and live there for a Yeare, to advertise me of all things; that you will speake with him, and send him hether with som Packett, that I may conferr with him and instruct him: I will give him large Entertayment, and you shall do a thinge of very great Importance, both to her Majestie's Service, and of kindness to my self; who value no Charge when yt may be of any use to the Queen's Safety. Of this Sir, I pray you bethink you, and at your Leyfure advertise me what you can do.

Out of Ireland this Day is arrived very cross News; * Sir Coniers Clyfford the Governor of Connaught, is slayne in an encounter with O'donnel, and with him Sir Alexander Ratcliff, and som 200 or 300 Soldiers. This Accident may muche divert my Lord's Journey into the North, which yf yt shall not be attempted at all, the best Part of this Yeare's Expence is lost. I pray you use this with your accustomed Discretion, for though I desyre you may know all Trueth; yet the worse lucke we have, the worse I know we are esteemed by the French.

It remaineth now that I make you Answer to the Contents of your last Dispatches; yt appeareth, that we shall have no Mony, but that Fragment of 20000 Crownes, this Yeare. You need not suspect that the Queen hath not pursued this matter to the Ambassador with a great earnestness, as you have bin required to do yt; for I assure you, she hath bin rather too warm then too cold, seeing our sowre or sweet do make them eyther trot or amble, but as they find for their own ease. For the 20000 Crowns, we fynd that there will be losse by the Exchange, and yet yf yt be in Specie yt coms all to one reckoning, for there

* Camden's Eliz. in the Hist. of England, Vol. 2. p. 615. Morison p. 37.

An. 1599. will be los and more hazard. I do therefore think yt more fit that you do receive yt, and give your Acquittance for yt, and deliver the Bond, in which Case, yf you know any Marchant that would make it over hether by Exchange, I would gladly know at what rate they will do yt; for I can here take up so much of an English Merchant yf he may receive yt at Rouen for a little more then one hundred Pound; at which tyme yf you stay five or six hundred Pounds for your own Use, and assign yt to be payd here, yt shall be all one.

For the matter of the Treaty, I do think yt will be very convenient, even to have the Treaty of Blois renewed, without standing upon new Insertions. For every poynt that we shall seek to enlarge to serve our turn, shall be requyted with another of theirs, of a doble disadvantage. Nevertheless, upon such an Overture of myne to this Ambassador, I see that he could be contented for Satisfaction of some Frenche here, to stand upon new stipulating, about ease of Impositions; but you shall heare further of this Poynt hereafter, and therefore you may keep things in the Temperature they are in the mean tyme, till we may be at a little better Leysure to direct you, as I doubt not but we shall be in a few Days, when the worst of these Spanish Desseigns shall be discovered. In this of our likelyhood to have need of Assistance cyther of Men or Shipping, we fynd the Low Countries very cold; a matter which all wise Men expected ever, that more then out of Policie of State, there is smal Friendship to be found in a popularity. They pretend lack of Abillity, now that the Army still presseth them.

We shall do well inouge I doubt not, while we attend God's Providence, who hath ever blessed those that fight for him, and Trust in him. And thus with assurance to you, that her Majestie well accepteth your Proceedings, I end, &c.

From the Court
at None such.

Your very loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 20th of August 1559, O. S.

I Wrote unto your Honor from Blois, what Answere the King had made me, in that Matter of the Spaniards coming to Brest with Letters to Monsieur de Sourdiac, requesting Harbour and favour for their Navy there yf they need yt; the same Answere I received likewise from Monsieur de Villeroy. Notwithstanding, at my retorne to Paris, I thought yt fit to put him againe in mynd of yt, and thoughte I could have no acceffe unto him, yet I found the means to do yt by a Friend I have nere about him, the rather because I understood the like Request had bin made to som Governors of other Places. The Effect of my travaill therein, will appear by the King's Letters which I understand he hath writen to her Majestie, to assure her of his constant Amitie towards her, and his Resolution not to favour her Enemies, but to assist her with his Forces, and his own Person, yf she have need of yt; and I am informed he hath geeven Order accordingly, to all the Governors of his Port Townes. All which I assure your Honor, is to be imputed cheefly to the King's own good Disposition towards her Majestie. For when the Advice came fyrst unto the Counsaill, from the Governors who had bin dealt with by the Spaniards, there wanted not som in the Counsaill that were willing to have yealded them that they desyred; or yf not wholly, yet at least the Use of Victuails, Water, Cordage, or any thing els they wanted for their Mony; pretending, that they were now to consider of the Spaniard as he was, and not as he had bin. Others of more Honor, and more Fayth, as I beleve, to this King and his State, were of Opinion that they could neyther in Honor nor Justice do that which was required, both in respect of the great and fresh Merits of the Queen towards the King, and his State and Crown, and also of the League Defensive, which yet remained in Force between them.

This

This Disputation divided the Counsaile so, as there could be no Resolution taken till the King's Returne; who as soon as yt was proposed unto him, answered very peremptorily, that all the World should not perswade him to favour the King of Spaine against his good Sister of England, who had dealt so faythfully and sincerely with him; but that he would declare both unto her, and to all Men, that he would imploy his Honor, his Forces, and his Person in her Defence. And thereupon he caused that Letter to be written which before I mentioned, and which I do not doubt but her Majestie hath by this tyme received from Monsieur de Boisfisse. Of all which I thought fit her Majestie should be informed, that she may know the better what Foundation to make of the King himself, and discover likewise the Disposition of some principall Men of his Counsaile, whereof, e're yt be long I hope to wryte more particularly.

The Prince of Orange is returned from the King to this Towne, and goeth away this Evening or to morrow towards Bruxells. He was yesterday to visit the Princess of Orange his Mother in Law. In his Returne out of Italy he passed by Orange, and there established for Governor Monsieur de Blascon, who was before of the Religion, but to continew the Government, hath bin contented to go to Masse. I am informed that in this Journey, the Prince hath obtained main levee of his Lands in the Low Countries, having till now received only a Pension of 500 Crowns a Moneth.

I understand there are lately discovered in Poitou and Auvergne, certaine Mines of Silver, which they hope here will prove very beneficial. The King hereupon is about a Reglement generally for all the Mines in France, determining to take them all into his own Hands, and to content the Proprietors with a certayne Stint, proportionable to the Profit that shall arise, and so to manage all by his owne Officers, a Matter which is like to be very offensive. The Edict I have seen as yt is drawn, but yt is not yet passed the Parliament. Monsieur de Rosni affects the Matter much, and yf yt proceed, is like to be great Master or Superintendent of all the Mines in France.

Monsieur De la Motte Fenelon I understand is dead at Bordeaux, in his Journey towards Spaine. Whom they intend to imploy in his Place, I do not yet know, but I will be carefull to learn yt, and to procure Mr. Lock to be recommended unto him, as he was to the other.

Out of Italy I heare by good means, that the Duke of Savoy upon Pretence of discovering some Practise that this King had, not only upon the Marquisat of Salluces, but upon Turin and other Townes of Piedmont, made severall Prisoners, and amongst the rest the same Captaine which fyrst betrayed Carmagnole unto him, and a Countesse called Delbene; and thereupon hath likewise taken occasion to arme, and make himself strong, both in the Marquisat, and in Piedmont.

The Agent of Geneva doth also assure me, that the Duke fortifyeth himself very much on Savoy syde. All which confirms unto me, that I have always believed, that he hath no purpose to render Salluces unto this King. Yet I am told, the King hath wrote lately unto d. 122, the Constable, that he had received good Newes from Rome, both touching the Matter of the Marquisat, and his Divorce.

Out of Turkey I hear that Ephraim Bassa with 50000 Men is gon to the Siege of Warradin the Towne which the Emperour holdeth in Transilvania, ever since the Accord between him and that Vaiode. On the other syde the Count of Wartzenburgh with 15000 Men is gon towards Buda, intending some Enterprize eyther covert or open upon yt: All which notwithstanding, there is a Conclusion taken between them, that Deputies on both fydes shall meet upon the Confines in the end of the next Moneth, to treat of a Peace, which hath hitherto bin entertayned by Mediation of the Tartars.

The Duchesse of Tuscany is lately delivered of another Son. The Duke of Mantua is still in the Low-Countries, though perhaps disappointed of his principall Purpose in coming thither, by reason that the Marquis of Burgau, Brother

An. 1599 ther to the Cardinal Andreas, is desseigned Generall of the Army, in place of the Admirall of Arragon.

The Count de Ladron passed lately this way in Post into Spaine, with som dozen in his Company, among the which the Marquis of Burgau was said to be, tho' disguised; but that agreeth not with the Advices I have out of the Low-Countries. w. 209 Charles Paget doth continew to do me any good Offices he can, and communicate suche Intelligence as he receaves.

The Z. iufetk Master x. hn. of y. ucwm Gray entertayns me with very frivolous and absurd Advertisements, as may appear by this inclosed, and some other as unprobable. He tells me he hath heard very lately from your Honor, which I do not beleeve, because I have had nothing from you or any body else in England this full Moneth; which makes me almost gladd of that little Distemperature I have now upon me, for a Pretext neyther to visit, nor to be visited, till I may be able to deliver som certayntie of these Bruits, whereof all Men expect to know the Trueth by mee. I hope I shall shortly receive Directions from your Honor in all the matters I have written of since my fyrst going to Orleans. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Since the finishing my Letter, I have thought fit to move your Honor, to be a means to her Majestie, to entertayne Monsieur de Bethune when he comes that way out of Scotland with all Curtesie, and so to use the matter, that his Brother Monsieur de Rosni may think himself honoured and respected in yt; for this Monsieur de Rosni is very great with the King, and like dayly to grow greater, and withall of the Religion, and a very stout Man; so as yf he may be thoroughly wonne, there is no Manne in the Counsaile will more advantage her Majestie's Affaires in my opinion then he. In this last Consultation about the harbouring and favouring the Spanishe Army, there was no Man more fyrme to her Majestie then he, and the Division in the Counsaile as I understand passed thus; for the Spaniards were Villeroy, the Chancellor, and the fyrst President of Rouen, who by accident was then present; against them were Monsieur de Rosni, Monsieur de Plessis, Monsieur de Zancy, and Monsieur de Callignon Chancellour of Navarr and President of Grenoble; a very worthy Man, but one that by reason of his Religion comes but little in Counsaile, and bears no great Sway. I beseech your Honor, direct me whether I shall take any Knowledge that suche a Poynt was debated in Counsaile, or nay; and taking Knowledge of yt, in which sort I shall do yt: For howsoever the King's own Inclination hath presently overgovern'd this matter, surely those Men that have thus declared themselves for the Spaniard now, are like for the most part to carry the Sway in this War, for few of the rest, except Rosni and de Messe, com ordinarily to the Counsaile. Therefore I hold this Poynt in my poore Judgment, as worthy of her Majestie's Consideration as any thing that hath happen'd since my coming hither. Your Honor may assure your self there is no Foundation to be made of 6 122 Monsieur Villeroy for our good, d 100 The Duke of Bonillon is well affected, but dares not shew himself, d 122 The Constable hath no Credit.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 26th Aug. 1599. O. S.

YOUR Honor shall understand by this inclosed, as muche as I can advertise of the Spanish Navy or their Preparations, which might give me occasion not to trouble you with muche more at this tyme; saving that I understand there is one Bennet an English Capuchin lately taken in England, who was thought to have a hand very deep in the Practize of the Duke of Joyeuse, about
the

*the * Woman that was suborned to counterfeit her self to be possessed with a Devill.* In which Practize, yt is thought here, there was a dangerous Reache, and not throughly sifted, because yt would have touched some great ones. So as yt now the Bottome of yt might be extorted from this Bennet, I think yt would be very acceptable to the King. Also I learn, that this same Bennet enticed away Charles Drury from my House in my Absence at Blois, and hath placed him some where secretly, so as I cannot yet hear of him. I beseeche your Honor he may be examined also upon that Poynt; for though I were exceeding weary of him for his Disorderliness, yet I would be glad to discharge my hands in some better sort of him.

I would be glad to know whether those Men were brought from Rochell into England, that I gave Advice of from Orleans.

Touching the 20000 Crowns, I have written to Rouen to the Marchants to know how they will undertake the Exchange of yt, and will certifc your Honor e'er it be long. I will be bold to retayne 600*l.* of yt, and I have already sent into England an Order for the Repayment of yt into the Exchequer in the beginning of the Terme. I have already used some meanes to fynd out suche a one as your Honor desyres to imploy into Spaine, and am in some hope to hear of one very shortly.

I have sought to inform my self of the Quallity of the Haven of Dunkerke, and I cannot learn that yt is meet to receave Gallies, because at Low Water they must lye drye, which Gallies furnish'd with their Tackle cannot endure, as I am informed.

The Duke of Savoy hath imprisoned and executed very many Frenchmen which were in Turin, about this Practize which he hath lately discovered.

The Infanta hath nothing but Peace in her Mouth, whatsoever she hath in her Heart. The fifteenth of September she maketh her Entry in Bruxells. This Day one of the Treasouriers d'Espargne came to me, to assure me the 20000 Crownes should be ready the morrow after Michaelmas-day to be paid in Rouen.

I sent this Bearer with my Secretary to Blois, and now upon his returne I have dispatched him with all the speed I could. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

Cosen,

28th August 1599.

LONG before your last Letter of the 22^d of August, her Majestie heard from the French King, and that in the same Sence that you wryte, full of all Honor and Kindness. For these things which are handled by the Freinds of the Spanish Counsaile, her Majestie will take Advice how to direct you as is convenient; though for the present I am of Opinion yt is better to take notice of their good Dispositions, and to improve their Affections to our best Advantage, then to take knowledge of adverse Humors, and so exasperate those that have little need to care for us. Within this Day or two we have had an Alarm from Brest, that there was a great Fleet of Ships and Gallies in Conquest. The Governor of the Place did very respectfully send unto her Majestie to advertize this, but such was his haste to give us tymely Advertizement, as that proved not true which he apprehended: for there was only six Gallies that have long bin in Biscay, which one Spinola had invited the King to bring into these Quarters, who takes upon him great Wonders.

* The Story of this Imposture is related at large by all the Historians of that Age, but I'll trouble the Reader no farther than by referring him to Thuanus, L. 123, Vol. 4. and to Mathieu's Histoire de la Paix, &c. p. 90, &c. where he will find how it was detected.

An. 1599.

The Fleet which was seen in Conquest by the Frenche was part of the Holland Fleet, † which is returned from the Canaries without effecting any great matter; which bearing near to that Coast at that instant when the Gallies arrived, did multiply that Apprehension; but of this matter a short tyme will make further Discovery, for there remaineth a great Fleet still at the Groyne, and her Majestie hath likewise set out her Fleet to Sea. The States have joyned some few Men of War with them, which together with some of our Marchants Ships will make to the number of 60. These I wish for my part may but meet with the Spanish Braggers, and then I dowbt not but her Majestie shall have her accustomed Fortune.

About five or six Days since here arrived Coomans, who bringeth this only News by Letter from the Cardinal Andreas, That the King of Spayne hath given the Archduke Commission to treat with the Queen, and he with the Infanta will arrive before this Day at Bruxells. To this you shall see by her Majestie's Letters what she replied, which will be sufficient Satisfaction to you to see how far she hath gon, though I doubt not but Rumors inoughe will be brought to you of further Proceeding.

To your self I spake playnly, that yf the Warre may receive an end with honorable and safe Conditions, yt is the thing I much desire; but you know nothing is ended which is not begonne. And therefore, as I presume, when the Archduke shall send word of his Commission himself, that then her Majestie will resolve to treat for the Good of her People, so do I know right well, that yt behoveth her Majestie to do all she can to bring the States to good Conditions; or if she cannot draw them into the Treaty, then to forsee by som good means, how their State may be kept from Danger.

Her Majestie hath imparted to the French Ambassador what she received, and what she answered, whereof I thought good to give you Notice; she having also commanded me to let you know, that yf the matter come to any Head she will be gladd of the Frenche King's Advice in all things, which is all I can say of this matter.

For the Fleet at the Groyne, and the 26 Gallies there, since this Letter began I am advertised, that they have changed their Desseign upon the News of our Preparations, of which formerly they were secure; and this Day twelve Dayes the Adelantado went to Sea with seventy Ships, and follows that part of the Flemishe Fleet which is gon towards the Islands or Indies, there to intercept the Treasure. There hath also bin intercepted at Sea, neere the Groyne, three Packetts of Letters, written by Officers of the Gallies at the Groyne to their Friends to Seville, and bearing Date but of nine Dayes old, for they were wrytten three Dayes after the Adelantado had put to Sea; those of the Gallies that are Captaines do certifie their Friends, that they have had a miserable Fortune to be brought with all the Gallies to the Groyne, considering that when they came, they found yt too late to come further Northward. That in Biscay they see no Sonne, that the Slaves dye, and that the Adelantado would beleve no Counsaile, but carried on the Enterprize for England, against the Opinion of all wise Men, except yt had bin sooner begonne. And now complayne, if they be forced to Winter there, that most of them will dye, and the rest that live, must returne Cavalleros andantes. Many more Particulars are in those Letters intercepted at Sea. And now the Queen calls in her Fleet, and dismisseth all Land Forces. For the King hath countermanded the Desseign, and now he is directed to follow the Flemings. So as he carrieth thither som 70 Saile, and leaves som 20 behind him, and 26 Gallies, besydes those 6 that are com outward to Sluys. Methinks this Concurrence of the coming over of Coomans, and the dissolving her Majestie's Forces, should breed a good Subject for the Discourse of idle Brains, that yt would not be, except yt were in respect that we were neere to a Peace. In which poynt, because you may know as much as is true, I protest to you upon my Fidelitie, that when you have receaved this, you know as much as I. And so let me intreate you to beleeve, That not only in regard of her Majestie's Service, but for my private Love to your selfe, whensoever there is any matter of Importance, I shall still provide that you may know yt; so as whensoever you send to know whether this or that be true, think yf that be true which you have heard, that there is a Dispatch upon the way towards you.

Now, Sir, I have thought good to open a matter to you, which you must use with wonderful Caution. This Bearer hath undertaken to do her Majestie Service in some parts of Spainie, and must passe through Bayonne in France for that purpose. I dare not promise my self so much of the Affection of 6122 Monsieur de Villeroy as to use him herein, because yt might be the undoing of this Party employed. But I would faine by your means, that he might be procured some suche Passport as he might ride safely to Bayonne, where also my cheete Desyre is, that he might by your means be thus far assisted, which would be a wonderfull Security for the Parties Lyfe, and a great means for him to do the Service which he goeth for. I would have you to inform your self, who hath any Credit with Monsieur Grammont the Governour of Bayonne; for yf he could be perswaded when this Party comes thither to protect him in the Town, and seeing there is Peace between France and Spainie, to let him some time have his Passport to go into some of the Coast Towns of Biscay; you may consider what a Safety yt may be for him, yf he should be suspected, and how good a Cullor to passe to and fro.

I have hard that Monsieur Grammont's Mother lives in Paris, and I have also knowen him to be a Follower of the Duke of Bouillon. Now, Sir, you may Consider whether by this means, or any other way, this Man may be recommended to Bayonne. Sometimes I think that yf you knew any Marchant in Paris that hath Friends in Bayonne, peradventure suche an inferior Mean may procure him Credit, as soone as a more publick Recommendation, and with less Note. Yf you cannot learn of any in Bayonne, yf som of St. Jehan de Luz may be thought of, yt is all one to the Busyness; but of all things, what Comendations soever be procured him, let none of the Frenche know he is other then a Scott.

Thus have I lay'd an Imposition upon you, wherein I pray you observe all Circumstances; and even with those whom you best trust, carrie the matter so, as all Favour that is done him, may throw as little Suspicion upon him as yt can. And so, &c.

From the Court
at Nonfuch.

Your very assured and loving Cousen,
RO. CECYLL.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

I Have seen a Note of yours to Mr. William Killebrew, whereby I fynd you would be gladd to receive Allowance for matter of Intelligencie; I have dealt with the Queen in yt, for in my Father's tyme the Queen was angry about an Allowance made to Sir Anthony Mildmay, thoughe truly he was very moderate. Now her Majestie used only to me this Answer, that thoughe in former tymes when the Scottish Queene lived, Mr. Stafford had some extraordinary Bills, because the League was then on foot, and France was full of Practises against her, and that the tyme was since in Mr. Unton's tyme miserable, till the Peace was made: Yet all things being now quiet, and much to be learned without great Payments, her Majestie seemed to intend a streight Hand, and used theafe Words, That there was difference between writing Res Gestas and Intelligences. Thus much I thought to tell you, not but that I will procure you

Allowance

An. 1599. Allowance upon any Bill or Reckoning you shall make, because I know you will make them reasonable; but to let you know that I cannot do as much as I would, and these Tymes are worse then they have bin.

The Queen hath given the Frenche Ambassador a Letter for the King, whereof this is the Copy which I send you, because you may know her Answer.

We heare that the Gallies are upon the Coast of Normandy near Caen, and we do looke that they may run some danger, yf they be not harboured in Newhaven. And thus I end.

Your very loving Friend and Kinsman,

RO. CECYLL.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 1st Sept. 1599. O. S.

I Have received this Morning these two inclosed Letters from Mr. Lock, from whom I had not heard in two Moneths before; and because I knew not of what Importance they might be in these Tymes of Doubt, I thought good to send them away with speed, and have for that purpose entreated my Colen Cook to take paines to be the Messenger. We are full of Bruites heere, which com from Calais and the Coast, that the Spanish Fleet should be come into the narrow Seas. But I had Letters this Morning from this Court, which assure me there is nothing knowen or beleevd there, more then my Secretary advertized me in the Letter I sent your Honor with my last, so ill they are here advertized. I beseech your Honor I may understand how Matters go there, I shall be otherwise in great Payne, and little Reputation heere. The King purposeth shortly to license his Counsaill for a Moneth, and to draw hitherward. The Voiage of Lions is notwithstanding very fresh in Speche now agayne. The Pope hath promised the King to graunt him a Divorce, but yt cannot be dispatched till the Consistory assemble againe, which will not be till October, by reason the Cardinals are all abroad now for their Pleasure.

I have bin trowbled since my returne to this Towne with a Disease ordinary to Straungers in this Country, but I thank God I am now very well, and ready to perform any Direction or Commaundment I shall receive.

I understand by the Marchants, they would undertake the Payment of her Majestie's Money in England without any Losse, were it not for these troublesome Tymes, which makes them afraid to take any Money by Exchange, for fear their Respondents in England should faile them. I will deale with some in this Towne who hold Correspondence with Corsini, and the Answer I receive, I will certifie with the fyrst Commoditie. And so praying God to blefs her Majestie's Forces, and her Royall Person especially, whereof she cannot be too wary now, I most humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Monsieur de Villeroy.

J'Ensse bien desire avoir eu l'honneur d'entendre par vous, ce que j'ay depuis J'ouy par autre Moyen, de la gracieuse lettre & offers fort amiables du Roy presentées à ma Maistresse en ses siennes Occasions. Mais quoy que ce soit qui a esté la cause que vous ne m'en avez donné aucun advertissement, je le veux plustost attribuer à quelque accident qu'à fault de bonne volonté envers moy, en ayant receu si souvent assurance de vostre bouche, & me sentant si fort voüe & dedié que je suis à vous servir & honorer.

Je me resjouis infiniment, Monsieur, de ceste constante & parfaicte bonne Volonté que le Roy declare envers ma Maistresse; & puis dire asseurement, que l'amitié entre leurs Majestes en viendra estre affirmé pour jamais, pourveu que les effectz en suivent. Entre lesquelz il seroit à desirer, que le Roy luy voulut presenter son secours en la sorte qui luy peut le plus profiter, & dont elle a plus de besoing, a sçavoir en argent, dont elle a plus de faulte, que d'hommes, pour s'en estre cy devant despourveu pour luy en accommoder. Mais j'en ay tant dict desia, & vous m'avez si souvent confesse la raison & justice de mes demandes, qu'il ne sera besoing d'autres argumentz en ceste matiere que de prieres, lesquelles je fais treshumbles au Roy, Qu'il luy plaise surmonter toutes ses difficultez pour rendre à une si fidele alliée ung effect d'amitié qui luy est si necessaire; (car c'est au besoing qu'on cognoist l'amy) & à vous Monsieur d'y apporter l'avancement, que je sçay fort bien que vous y pourrez apporter plus que nul autre.

Au Reste Monsieur, pour ne pouvoir encores venir en Cour moi mesme a cause d'une indisposition de ma personne fort commune aux Estrangers qui viennent en ce pais, j'y envoyé mon Secretaire porteur de la presente, pour vous Solliciter tant en cest affaire, qu'autres que je recommanday au Conseil devant que je partis de Bloys. Vous suppliant aussy de me faire participant par son moyen des advertissements que vous pourrez avoir receu du desseing, nombre, & qualité des vaisseaux & hommes de ceste Flotte d'Espagne; & principalement du nombre de galeres, & si elles sont desia arrivez a la Corogne, pour se joindre au reste de la Flotte, ou si on les attend. Vous me ferez une faveur singuliere, & à la Royne ung office d'amitié fort grand, de me communiquer ce que vous entendez de cest affaire, & vous en supplié bien humblement. Monsieur,

De Paris 1 Septembre 1599. O. S.

ESTANT retenu d'une indisposition de ma personne, qui a continué desia quelques jours, de sorte que je ne puis pas si tost venir en Cour que je desirois, j'ay pense y envoyer ce mien Secretaire pour faire mes Affaires jusques à ma venue. Et me confiant beaucoup en vostre faveur & courtoisie, & en vostre bonne affection envers la Royne ma maistresse, & la cause commune qu'elle embrasse, j'ay pris l'hardiesse de le vous recommander, & vous supplier de prendre confidence de luy en tout ce qu'il vous plaira de me communiquer. Par mesme moien je vous ay voulu assurer, que la Royne ma Soveraine sur le rapport qu'elle a eu de vos vertus & dignes qualitez, & du service tres important & tres fidele que vous faiëtez tous les jours au Roy, vous ayme & respecte beaucoup, & desire autant de se pouvoir asseurer de vostre amitié, que de celle d'aucun Seigneur en France; & suis assuré que ce sien desir s'accroïstera, quand elle aura entendu (comme

Dont cependant je vous remercié tres affectueusement en son nom, & vous prié de continuer la mesme bonne volonté, vous assurant que ma Maistresse n'en sera jamais ingrate.

J'ay esté infiniment resjoui de la lettre qu'il à pleu au Roy d'escrire à ma Souveraine, pleine d'affection, & d'offres fort amiables. Je desire seulement qu'il luy pleust de luy faire assistance en la sorte, qu'elle a le plus de besoing d'estre aydé, asçavoir, en argent. Et vous puis dire Monsieur, que cinquante ou soixante millé escus, viendront mieux à propos a cest heure pour faire cest effect, que cinq cens mil un autre fois. Employez vous donc Monsieur pour l'honneur de Dieu, & du Roy mesme, & taschez de surmonter ces difficultez que vous m'avez reppresentées, pour rendre ung effect d'amitié si necessaire à une princesse, qui a postposé ces affaires propres à ceux du Roy.

Au reste Monsieur ce porteur vous dira les nouvelles & l'Estat de nos Affaires, à qui, pour ne vous ennuyer plus je m'en remettray, & vous baisera en cest endroit les mains, priant Dieu,

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris the 6th of September 1599, O. S.

I Make no doubt but your Honor is advertised continually from the Governours of this Coast, of such Intelligence as they receive touching the Spanish Fleet. For so hath the King commaunded them, and so hath the Governour of Diepe assured me, that both he and others will do from tyme to tyme; so that I am sure her Majestie understands as much as they know, before this King himself. And other Advertisements of any Account or Certaynry, I dare avow they have not in this Court; as your Honor may well judge, by the Contradiction of that they have delivered unto me in this Matter, from my fyrst coming hitherto. The Advices they have lately received from the Coast, hath made them againe to change their Mynd, and to be of Opinion that the Fleet will come, and that yt is far greater then they beleaved yt to be. d100. The Duke de Bouillon told my Secretary, that they were advertized that they consisted of 260 Sayle of all Sorts, and that their Desseign was to land about Bristow, or Milford Haven. But in very Truth, I am veryly perswaded that they know nothing, but roave at the Matter altogether. For since I heard from the Court, I received this inclosed from the premier President of Rouen, whereby your Honor may see that now againe upon the Coast they are of another Opinion; and yet I know this Alarum at the Court came from them. But this good is come of yt, that yt hath caused the King to hasten hitherward, and he is already come to Fontainebleau, and hath appointed his Counsaill to follow, and to be heere, or at St. Germaines the 20th of this Moneth.

Tow Dayes sence, there came unto me one that belongs to the Tresorier de l'Espargne, that is to pay the 20000 Crownes, to require the original Bond to make an Acquittance by, and a Warrant from the King unto the Chambre des Contes. I had before shewed the Originall to the Tresorier himself, and sence delivered him a Coppye attested by tow Notaries, in the Prefence of his Deputy, and and therefore have refused to deliver the Originall; for the less Cause they have An. 1599.

to requyre yt, the more jealous I am to deliver yt. But when the Counsaile comes
 I hope we shall end this matter with Reason.

Your Honor seeth what the Premier President wrytes touching m. 175.
Scotland. I assure you there are very strange Bruits here of some Z. publtk quierz.khe. danger to grow that way. w. 209 Charles Paget assureth me, that there have bin great Praedises used to winne f. 150 the King of Scotland, to joyne with c. 100 the King of Spaine against a. 100 the Queene; and that yf there be not some Course taken to prevent yt, he will surely drawe that way in the End. d. 100 The Duke de Bouillon hath received Intelligence, but I know not whence, that f. 150 the King of Scotland hath proclaimed War against the Queen. Your Honor can best consider of what Consequence these Matters are, and how they may be best prevented. Upon these Bruites, I caused one who is inward with f. 154 the Ambassador of Scotland, to sound him about these Matters, but he pretended utterly to know nothing, saying that he hath not heard thence in two Months. I fynd Difficulty in procuring any Man to undertake the Matter your Honor so much desyred into Spaine, because yt is so full of Danger, yet I do offer they should be largely considered. I will not give over the Matter so, and am in hope to fyt your Honor at length, though I stay some tyme about yt. I am perswaded w. 209 Charles Paget is able to discover somewhat touching f. 150 the King of Scotland, which would be worth the knowing; but without some Assurance of that he affects, he is too cunning to open himself too farre. That obtained, I am fully of Opinion, that there may be good use made of him.

There is a Scotch-man here called * Bruce, a Papist, but a good Scholar, that is publishing a Book against the Jesuits, and likewise the King's Advocate, en la Chambre de Contes called Pasquier. They have both made means to me, to furnish them with matter against them. Yf yt please you therefore to impart unto me any Particularities of their lewd Dealings against her Majestie, and her State;
 I think yt might be to good purpose; considering that now their Cause is in question, for their Restitution, or perpetuall Exclusion.

I understand there are 6000 Swissers lately levied among the petit Cantons, 3000 for the Archduke, and 3000 for the Duke of Savoy. I hear also a Report that the King of Spayne is about to make a Levye of 12000 Italians, the Intention is not yet knowne, but supposed to be for the Use of the Duke of Savoy, yf he have need. When your Honor is freed of this extraordinary Care about the Spanish Attempts, I hope you will be pleased to direct me, how I shall proceed in the Matters I have negotiated heere. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 8 September 1599. O.S.

I Received this inclosed Yesterday from Mr. Lock, and fynding this Bearer ready to return for England, I thought good to send yt away by him. I spake lately with one that came from Rochell, who told me that a Captaine of that Towne arrived there out of Spaine upon Tweusday was seavennight, and who reporteth that he had seen the Fleet imbarke, and had bin amongst them, and left them under Saile, and affirmeth for certaine that they tooke their Course for the Islands. w. 209, Charles Paget likewise advertised me this Day, that he had

* Cardinal d'Osat (says of him) — qu'il fait le mal-content des Jesuits, & des Flamans, & neanmoins qu'il fréquente fort chez le S. Baptiste Tassis, Ambassadeur du Roy d'Espagne, & qu'il est fort mauvais home.
 Vol. 5. p. 70.

An. 1599. spoken with a Gentleman of his Acquaintance who came very lately out of Spaine, who confirmeth the same; how this agreeth with your other Intelligences I know not, but I thought yt my Duty to advertise yt as I understood of yt.

Heere is muche Speeche to our Disgrace, that the Gallies were suffered to pass so quietly to Sluis, especially seeing there was so good Warning given of their Approche, by the Governours of these Parts. Those which affect us are very sorry, and those which love us not, laughe us to Scorne. I wrote unto your Honour lately of the Deathe of Monsieur de la Motte Fenelon; I heare now that Monsieur de Rochpott Governour of Anjou is nominated for the Place, but makes great labour to avoyde yt. I beseech your Honour to let me understand your Pleasure touching Mr. Lock, how far I shall communicat of his Employment with Monsieur de Villeroy. I have advertized what my Conceyt is of his Disposition towards our State, your Honour will be pleased to advise how muche to trust him. Mr. Lock hath once or twice desyred me to use Monsieur de Villeroy's meanes to Taxis the Spanish Ambassador to graunt him a Passeport to go into Spaine, which methinks is so fencelless a thing to be moved, and so ready a way to cut his Throat though yt were obteyned, as I have wished him never to thinke more of that Courfe. Yt seemes the Gentleman is very desyrous to do som Services, but the Difficulty is in the Meanes. What your Honor shall commaund me in furtherance of him, I will be ready to do the utmost.

John Mussy arryved here yesternight with a Packet from the Ambassador, and another from la Fontaine, and told me that in the Ambassador's Packet there was a Letter from her Majestie to the King. I would have bin very gladd, yf yt would have pleased your Honor, to have used me for the Delivery thereof, rather then their Ambassador. For my Negotiation hitherto with the King, hath bin, as your Honor knoweth, most abowt an unpleasing Subject, which would have bin somewhat sweetened by the Argument of this Letter, contayning as I suppose nothing but kindness, in Answer to his kind Letter to her Majestie. Besydes I find Monsieur de Villeroy's Courfe to be this, that wherein he can use their owne Ambassador, he will never use me, not so muche as to communicate yt with me, which I synd very straunge. And unless yt please your Honor to do the like with their Ambassador there, I see not how I shall remedy yt; and continuing in that fort, I shall not be able to serve her Majestie, but with great Disadvantage and Disreputation.

I understand by common Fame and not otherwise, that there have bin some Commissioners in England from the Archduke, to treat of Peace. But of that and all things concerning our State, I hope to heare some Certainty by those Letters from your Honor, which Mussy tells me are upon the Way. In the mean tyme, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 16th Sept. 1599. O. S.

I Understand by Mussy, who brought over a Packet from Monsieur de Boisfisse, that he left one at Dover, that had another from your Honor to me. But I hear of none such as yet, and therefore I would not longer differ to advertise your Honor of that I take to be of Importance for you to know, namely, that the Spanish Fleet which was put to Sea, and had taken their Courfe for the Islands, was forced by the Weather to return to Feroll, where it now remaineth. When I fyrst received this Intelligence, I was desyrous to be better assured of yt before I wrote yt, and therefore went unto Monsieur Villeroy, who is now in this Towne with the rest of the Counsaill, to know whether he understood any such Matter. " He told me he had the day before received Advertisement to the same purpose, and his Opinion was, that they would dismiss their " Army,

“ Army, and attempt no more this Yeare. His Reasons were, that part of An. 1599.
 “ the Hollander’s Fleet was already returned home in Safety, and the rest gon “ to the Indies and left the Islands wholly. And as for the Indian Fleet which “ was now to retorne, yt would be cyther faict ou failli before they would “ come to their Succor. But when I replyed, that fecing that part of their pur“ pose fayled, they might perhaps pursue their other Deseign, of attempting “ upon some part of England or Ireland, rather than loose the whole Fruite “ of so great a Charge; he answered nothing, but that he thought they would “ do nothing till the Spring”. Your Honor hereupon can best confidder, what probabilitie there is that they will dismiss such an Armie of so great Charge, and that hath raised so great an Expectation, without attempting somewhat to the disturbance of their Ennemies.

“ He told me also, that there were four Gallies more to come into these Parts, “ besydes the six already arryved at Sluse. Of whose Passage he spake with some “ Tax to us, saying that they put on to the English Shoare, thinkyng that “ the safer, because the other was kept by the Hollanders; which I had not “ hard before, althoughc I had hard much more then I tooke any Pleasure of.

He told me also, “ that the King receaved very great Contentment of a Let“ ter her Majestie had lately written to him. I sayd the King should always fynd
 “ her Majestic a very Royal and Honorable Princeesse, very ready to do him all “ Kindness, and very gratefull for that she receaved; and my hope was, she “ should fynde the like Disposition in the Kyngc, according as I had ever given “ her Assurance since my coming hither; and prayed him to concurre with me “ in all good Offices and Endeavours to entertayne this good Correspondence be“ tween their Majesties, whiche he sayd he would always be ready to do. I put “ him in mynd that the Time did now approche wherein he had promised by “ the Answer he delivered me, to make knowne unto her Majestie what she “ should receive from the Kyngc this next Yeere. I sayd yt was a matter did “ muche import her to know, and therefore prayed him yf they had resolved of “ yt, to impart yt to me, that I might advertise her Majestie of yt. His Answer “ was, that these Bruities and other Occasions had so busyed them, that they “ had not yet had leysure to finishe that Busyness, but that yt was in hand, and
 “ as soon as any thinge was don, I should be informed of yt.

I was likewise to visit the Chancellor, and sollicitted him in that Matter of the English taken by those of Marseilles; whereof her Majestie had written unto the Kyngc, and the Counsaile had promised me to informe themselves, and to give me an Answer. He told me “ the Secretary for that quarter had Charge to “ inform himself in that Cause, and that he would speake with him in it, and “ thereupon propose yt unto the Counsaile. They both assured me of the Kyng’s “ great forwardness, to have imployed both his Forces and himself in her Maje“ sties Aid yf need had ben, and that yt was the only Cause of his Retorne so “ soone into these Parts, and so further yf occasion had bin.

I perceave by them, that in the matter of the Divorce they expect that the Kyngc shall receive very good Satisfaction from Rome; for which purpose the Cardinal Joyeuse coms hither very shortly, pretending privat Affayres of his own, but not without Commission, as the Chancellor confessed to me, to treate with the Queene, and to take her Consent or Confession, that so some forme of Justice may be observed in the Proceeding. The Chancellor told me, “ he under“ stood that Father Bennet a Capuchin that went hence, was Prisoner in Eng- “ land: And sayde that he was a principall Dealer in that lewde Practice about “ the Demoniaque, and that he was in good hands now, where the Truthe of “ all might be known. I sayd yt was true that suche a one was taken and im“ prisoned, and yf the Kyngc did requyre that he should be examined about “ yt, I presumed the Queene would be willinge to gratifye him in that, as rea“ dily as in all other matters, wherein she might declare her Affection towards “ him. To that he answered not in particular, but in generall he recommended “ yt, and acknowledged her Majestie’s good Will and good Offices towards the “ King”.

An. 1599. " King ". This I have thought good to certifie, because I have once before moved your Honor in this matter as of my self. Mr. Edmonds can very well informe your Honor of that Practice about the Demoniaque, wherein the Capuchin late Duke of Joyeuse was the principall Actor, and this Bennet and another, his principall Adherents; and som great Lay-men thought to be de la Partie.

I send your Honor herewith a short Narration of the manner of the late Practise upon Turin, and the Discovery of yt. Since I understand, that the Captain Beaulieu there mentioned, is executed.

The matter of the Marquisat of Saluces stands in the same Terms yt did*. There is now a Specche that yt should be delivered in Deposito unto the Pope tyll yt be judged; wherein I heare there are so many Difficulties propofed, as yt will hardly take place. It seems the Kinge will have great Patience, and bear much before he draw his Sword againe. For the matter of the Jesuits yt is not yet resolved, they were hard at Blois, and put over againe till the Counsails coming to this Town. I hear the King has taken some new Offence agaynst them, because they have entered into their College at Dijon in Burgogne without his leave, upon some secreet Favour of the Parlement there.

The Cardinal Andreas saluted the Kinge at Habier, Monsieur de Vitrie's House, and so passed along to Orleans, and from thence down the River of Loyre with a purpose to see those Towns, and afterwards to take his Journey towards Lions, and from thence into Spaine to Sarragozza, where the Kynge lyeth. His Brother the Marquis of Burgau is also certaynly gon thither, in the Companie of the Count of Lodron, as I wrote before.

I wrote in my last of a Levie of 3000 Suissers for the Archduke, and as many for the Duke of Savoy. I hear now that the Cantons have made a Stay of both, upon feare belike to discontent this Kinge at this tyme, being upon the point to receive some Satisfaction from him in part, for the great Summes of Money, whiche he and the last Kynge did owe them.

Of the Levie in Italy whereof I wrote, I neyther hear Confirmation nor Controulment. I have written unto your Honor heretofore of the great number of Priests and Jesuits which are now in England. I am assured by w. 209. Charles Paget and others, that their number groweth. Yf yt please you to give me Commission to deal with some in this Towne, and to assure them of somewhat from her Majestie to stay themselves upon, I believe I should be able to discover their Nests and Haunts. I would yt would please your Honor to be a means to her Majestie to make some Triall of Paget; I thinke she would not repent her of yt.

I have at length understood of one, that is willing to accept the Employment your Honor intendeth into Spaine. He hath somtymes bin a Priest, but has since become of the Religion, and married; yet for his more Safetye, and to avoyd Suspicion in his Aboad there, he will take upon him the Habit, and for need the Function of a Priest, which will also give him Credit and Trust there, and means thereby to do the better Service. He hath bin already fundry tymes employed by this Kinge, fyrst at Bruxells during the League for tow or three Years together; and afterwards twice into Callais, while the Spaniards held yt. Language he hath none perfect but the Frenche. Spanish and Italian he understands, but speaketh not; but makes account within three Months to speake Spanish sufficiently for his purpose. His Demaund was 600 Crowns by the Yeare, but in the end he was contented to accept 400 Crowns: Hoping that yf his Service was acceptable, that her Majestie would bestow some small Stipend upon him at his returne, whereupon he might stay himself and his Family. He is recommended unto me for a faythfull honest Man whom I may trust. I have promised him Answer with in twenty Days; and yf he be not used, I have promised him somewhat for his Stay. For yf I had not at this instant met with him, he had bin gon into the Low-Countries, to be employed by Monsieur de la Noüe. I beseeche your Honor I may understand your Pleasure herein within the tyme limited. And so, &c. An. 1599.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

S I R,

I know not what to write by this Bearer, because the Substance of his Journey is contained in the Queen's Letter, to which I referr you. The matter notwithstanding is such as her Majestie much affecteth; and therefore yf any Indisposition of yours, or the King's Absence be suche as may make Delay, I would wishe that you did with all Expedition send away this Letter, least yt be sayd that they have their Passport before he receave the Queen's Letter. You may send some discreet Servant of yours with him to bring you answere; but I could wishe that the Post ran over with the Letter.

Of Ireland we hear nothing worth the wryting, for the Tyme of the Year is so spent as the capitall Traytor cannot be assailed but in Fastnesses and Strengths; whereby the Queen's Forces are dayly wasted. My Lord is now on a Journey towards the Northern Frontyre, from which he will be returned to Dublin the 29th of September, and then for this Wynter, only place Garrisons in the inner parts of the Kingdom, so as in my Opinion he shall be revoked. His Lordship; praised be God, is yet in good Health, and therefore in the Wynter Season, yt were not well to hazard him in so moyst a Country.

Our Gallies that are now in Sluce, do harme to the Low-Countrymen. For though there be some Ships before the Haven, yet yt is not possible to keepe in Gallies, that will in calme Weather row by the Strengthe of their Oars, when Shippes stand still, and will before the Wynd out-faile all the Shippes in the World.

If you have any Land in Suffex, where any of my Lady my Cosen's mylche Kyne and fat Weathers goe, Spinola will have some of them next Springe.

Of Coomans we hear nothing since my wryting; of all other News from foreign parts, we must rather expect them from you then you from us; only the Good I can send you is, that her Majestie is well, God blefs her long; and she is well pleased with your Services, and for my self I do and ever will remayne

Your affectionate Kinsman and Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

S I R,

18th September 1599.

Because you may not be Ignorant how all things goe in Ireland, nor beleve all Bruites that fly over, I have thought good to send you this Abstract of the Proceedings which my Lord hath held. Sir yf the Rebells may be had upon any good Conditions, non sunt ponendi rumores ante salutem. Tyronne is gone to Odonnell, to see yf he will consent to his Agreements. At his Returne my Lord will fall to Capitulations more particularly, which will be the way to draw things to conclusion, so as I conceive my Lord will not be long in Ireland, for yf there follow Peace he need not, and for a Wynter Warre, which must be only by Garrisons, so greate a Generall need not.

Between Scotland and the Queen all things are well, for he sends for his Gratuity, and fynds no just Cause to be discontented for the matter of Aishefeld, which was done without the Queen's Privitie; and when he was brought away,

he

An. 1599. he was not forced but entyced, which is a matter very tollerable. I wishe your Health, and my Lady my Cofen well delivered, that I may hear of a Frenche Cofen Germaine. And so I commend you to God.

From the Court
at Nonfuche.

Your loving Kinsman and assured Friend,
RO. CECYLL.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 24th Sept. 1599. O. S.

YOUR Dispatch of the 28th of August, came not to my Hands till the 17th of September in the Evening; neyther cam yt by the Party your Honor mentioned therein, whom your Honor also commended to my Care to be furdered in his Journey and Imployment by me, but by one Honiman who brought likewise Letters from the Governour of Diepe to Monsieur Villeroy concerning some Service, whereunto I procured him Answere I hope to her Majestie's Contentment, and dispatched him away in haste upon Thursday Morning. This Mr. Honiman told me, that Luff who should have brought this Packet, tooke Shipping directly for Bayonne as his best course, which dischargeth me of a great parte of the Care your Honor committed to me to procure his safe Passage thether. For the other poynt of procuring him to be commended to Monsieur Grammont, I will do yt with all the Dexterity and Caution I can: Wherein I assure your Honor I dare not use to Monsieur de Villeroy; and for the old Woman, I am afraid to trust her with it, and besydes I hear she is retired from hence. But I will advise with d100 the Duke de Bouillon, of the best means to do yt, and therein I must be dryven to deal plainly with him, for he will think yt strange that I should be so carefull to recommend a Scott, except yt be for some Service to be don for her Majestie. Mr. Honiman had set down a Cowrse which he saith he did acquaint your Honor with, to have obtayned Letters of Naturalization for him of this King as for a Scott, supposing yt would make his disguising more probable, yf he were brought in question. But having received no such Direction from your Honor, I disliked that Course, bothe for the Incongruity of yt, that I should have laboured in suche a matter for a Scott, (there being an Ambassador of that Nation here, which would have made the matter very suspicious;) and also because yt must have passed under the Greate Seal, and consequently through too many Hands to have bin kept secret. I guesse, by reason your Honor hath employed so many already that way, that you will have no need or use of him that I advertised you of in my last. Yet all Quallities requisite in suche an Employment confydered, I think you should not easily finde a fitter. I will not therefore absolutely discharge him, till I heare of an Answere from your Honor.

Monsieur de Villeroy told me the last tyme I spake with him, that her Majestie had imparted unto their Ambassador, what had passed between her and him that came out of the Low-Countries about the Treaty of Peace. I have in former Communication both with the Kinge and him, signified in generallitie, that yf the Treatie proceeded, her Majestie would be very willing and desyrous to receive the King's Advice in yt; that as their Interests were sincerely joyned, and in a sort common, so their Proceedings likewise might be by common Advice and Counsaile. I could never have other Answere but this, that when her Majestie should require yt, the King would not refuse to give her his faythfull Advice; but he knew her to be so wise, and so well assisted by wise Counsaile, as she little needed his.

Yf her Majestie's Pleasure be that I shall more particularly urge yt, yt may please your Honor to direct me in what sort, and upon what Particularities. I dare not in a matter of this Weight interpose any of my own Conjectures; but surely I am very jealous that this Counsaill hath a great Deseign upon this Peace, supposing that her Majestie will make it without the States, and that they will be forced thereupon to cast themselves into this King's Armes. I have many Motives to be of this Opinion. First, I am informed by good means, that when your Honor came over here, with Commission and purpose to have entered into the Treaty of Peace jointly with this King, yf the States should have bin contented to have treated likewise: The King did underhand dissuade them from Peace, upon Assurance of a standing Supply from him of 200000 Crownes Yeerely, besydes other secret Favours.* This he hath not performed since, but only so much as might keepe them out of Despayre, but not out of Necessitie.

Againe, they do what they can here to put a Jealousy into the States Heads of her Majestie, That she will abandon them. They seeke to breake off the Intelligence between her and them, and have in a manner expressly forbidden their Agent here, to have too streight Communication with me, or to let me know how matters pass between them; in the mean tyme the King fills them full of verball Comfort that he will not forsake them, whosoever else do. All which in my poor Opinion doth infer thus muche, that they would not have them make Peace, but yet they would be content to sever them from her Majestie, and that they should depend only upon Frenche Hopes and Amitie. I remember that Monsieur la Fountaine conferring with me at large the same Day I came from London of these and other matters, told me, that the King would willingly joyne with the Queen in their Maintenance, because she knew his undertaking yt alone might breed some Jealousy between them: But assuredly he was resolved that yt was necessary by all means that they should be upholden; and yf the Queen would not joyne in yt he would do yt alone, rather than they should shrink or yeeld under the Burden. r. 165. The States Agent hath directly told me, the King's Drift is to sever them from this streight Dependance and Amitie, which they now hold with her Majestie. Yf this be not prevented, your Honor can best judge of what Consequence and Danger it may be. For surely, more then in the King's own Inclination, (which perhaps is no very sure Anker neyther,) you can make no Foundation in this Amitie. They which saw and hard, what Rejoycing was heere generally at our imaginary Danger, upon the Rumour of the Spaniards landing in England, might easily conceive what Affection they bare in their Hearts towards us. Besydes, their careles Proceeding to give her Majestie any Contentment, in her just Demaunds and so important Occasions, argueth their little Regarde of her, and their small Desyre of her Prosperitie. I have had yt often answered me, when I have urged the Queen's great Merits, as a Motive to them to give her good Contentment in those Things she required of them, that in doing that, she did as muche assure her own Estate as pleasure them. But that which chiefly makes me to mistrust this Amitie, is the Drift that in my poor Judgment may be discovered dayly in the cheefe Ministers and Counsaillours here, to work a Perswasion and Hope in the King, that he may become Head of the Catholique Party throughout Christendom; for the obeyning whereof, there is no doubt they will likewise perswade him, that he must estrange himself from all Shew and Effects of Friendship to those of the other Syde, and to entertayne streight Amitie only with the Catholiques. Hence comes the pearing of his last Edict graunted to them of the Religion, in suche sort as yt is far worse then that of 77, which was graunted them by the last King in a tyme when they were exceeding weake, and at Discord among themselves. Hence comes also the manifest Neglect and Injury to them of Geneva, not only omitting them out of his Treaty with the Duke of Savoy, though he his Predecessor had taken them into his Protection, but in refusing to pay them that which they lent him, and disboured for his Service. Hence the Inclination, and almost the Resolution to readmit the Jesuits, though great-

* The Reader may find a large Account of this Negotiation in Cambden's Eliz. p. 545, &c. tho' I must observe that these Circumstances are entirely omitted.

An. 1599. by resisted by this Court of Parliament. And of this very Root I suppose that greate Coldnes to arise, which I have found in all things that I have dealt in since my coming. To all which, if the King's Inclination be opposed, and this late kind Offer to her Majestie; I answer the Matter is not yet ripe, nor thoroughly wrought, but what may not Ministers so affected work in tyme, with a Prince that disburdeneth himself of all Affaires as much as he can, and casteth the Care upon them. Besydes your Honor remembreth the Saying of Tacitus, beneficia eo usque leta sunt dum videntur exolvi posse; ubi multum antevenere, pro gratia odium redditur.

I cannot forget however, in * my fyrst Audience the King told me, upon Occasion of some Speeche which then passed between us, that he stood in as good Termes at Rome, and had as good Credit as the King of Spaine. Pardon me I humbly beseech your Honor, that I am entered so far into this Argument, for though yt belong rather to my place to advertise, then to inferre or to inforce, yet my Zeale to her Majestie's Service cannot contayne yt self within ordinary Bounds, and methinks I see somewhat more then I can by a bare Advertizement explaine. What I have written I beseech your Honor to keepe to yourself, and to interpret yt yf I erre, as an Error of Mistake, and not of Presumption.

I received within these two Days, this Book which I send your Honor; the † Author of yt is now sicke of an Ague, which he fears may turn into a Consumption, for the Recovery whereof he is very desirous to goe into England, and hath made means unto me to procure your Honor's Passport to return thither and to present himself to your Honor; which perhaps he intends not, without some pourpose of offering his Service further unto you. I beseeche your Honor to let me understand your Pleasure, bothe touching him and w. 209. Charles Paget.

Concerning the Matter whereof I wished that Bennet the Capuchin should be examined, Mr. Edmonds can very fully informe your Honor. But for the Particularities which may most import the King to know, I will informe my self as soon as I may, and advertise your Honor thereof.

For the Posts which I have dispatched since my coming, I assure your Honor except one or tow, they could have little busyness else but what I delivered them, for I dispatched them upon the foddaine, and other means then by the Posts I have none sometimes in tow Moneths together, and those I have in that Sort, I fynde are very slowe. But if your Honor think well of that uncertayne and slowe Meanes of Convayance of Letters, I will conform my self to your Pleasure therein hereafter, though I am sure that my Advertisements will be very Stale by this means before they come, which perhaps will be imputed to my negligence. And so, &c.

Your Honors, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

P. S. Monsieur Villeroy in my last Conference with him, told me he understood we were towards a Peace in Ireland, and that Tyronne offer'd parley. I did rather take yt for a Scorne then for a Truth, but I replied nothing, because I had not then received your Honor's Letters, and knew not what he might have received in his Packet from Monsieur de Boisfisse.

* See Sir Henry Nevill's Letter to the Secretary 26th May, p. 30.

† The Author of this Book was Dr. John Cecil, who is often mentioned before in these Letters, and was the Person appointed on the Part of Bothwell and the rest of the Scotch Popish Lords to oppose Oglaby's Negotiation in Spain, which is printed before at large. The Book it self I can give no Account of, but it appears by the Letter which immediately follows, to have been wrote in Answer to one Father Criton, (perhaps the same Person that wrote the Life of Cardinal Laureo) but whatever it was, 'tis certain the Jesuits laboured hard to prevent the Publication of it.

* Father

* Father Wardefort to Dr. John Cicill.

Reverend Sir,

Rome, 4th Sept. 1599. S. N.

SO it is, that since my Returne to abide in the Englishe Colledge, I understood by Father Parsons our Rector, that Master Doctor Kellison hath written heather, concerning a certaine Intention of yours to write a Book against Father Criton, touching certaine Differences betwixt you and him. Whereupon Father Parsons willed me, both in his Name and in myn owne, as one you know of old, to write some fewe Lines to dehorte you from such a perileuse and impertinante Action. I could not but obey my Superiour, yeat of my self had I written for that Love I bear you, but the rather (though straightned at this present with time) because Father Parsons in Truth is indisposed upon Phisike late-lie taken, and therefore not able, (as was his Desire) to write himself. He wrote unto you lately by Master Doctor Bishop, and another 8 Daies before that, of neither of which he hath heatherto had any Answere, as neither have I my self had of my last to you, though somewhat since. Wherefore to come to the Purpose, and omitting all Ceremonies of excuse, which between such old Acquaintance is needles, myne oppinion is good Master Cecill, (neither will you I trust contemne myne oppinion, because it is grounded in the Desire of your good as alwaies myne affection hath ben) that in no case you would begin, much lesse perfourm such an odiousse Enterprise. For although it may be as a Man, Father Criton may committ some Errour, in matters especially of Negotiation, wherin the wisest Men slipp; yeat is he generallie holden of all Men I know, for a vertuose and a religiouse Man, as hath his Perseverance of these many Yeares in the Societie now made prooffe more then sufficient. For thus much I can assure you, and I thinke you have seen the Practize, that if there could be proved against him any scandalouse Matter, the Societie ere this had vomited him out, as it hath many others for less then Scandell; the Stomach of our Companie being too delicate to digest any grosser Crimes or offences, especiallie such as deserve the Stamp- ing. Now on the other Side, in my conceite it standeth not with your woonted Circumspection and Wisdome (against one, whose innocencie like Water in a burning Fire doth extinguish all unjust Calumniation,) to put your self in such open Defiance, because it cannot but redound to your owne discredite, according to that Proverb, which sometimes you had oft in your Mouth Η κακή βελή, &c. But put the Case (which for myne owne Part I thinke will never be beleevd) that Father Criton had committed in Civil Affairs some importante and notoriouse Errour; yet is there no other means to correct him, or chastise him, but by publike Infamy? And is there none other Belman to make his Crye, but

* The Reader will I hope pardon me for inserting this Letter, tho' it does not immediately relate to this Negotiation. I am at a Loss to guess how it came into the English Ambassadors Hands, unless it was communicated by Dr. Cecil himself, the more effectually to forward his Design of making his Peace with the English Court. We find by the Letter immediatly preceding this, that he had published a Treatise which he delivered to Sir Henry Nevill, and was by him transmitted to the Secretary. What it was in particular, I must acknowledge my self ignorant of, but 'tis highly probable it was wrote in answer to this Father Criton from the Secretary's Remark on yt, viz. For the Book which you have sent me, &c. I wonder upon what Audacity he thinketh to come over, for writing a Pamphlet against another as himself. Now as to Father Criton, (or rather Creighton) the best Account I can give of him, is from a Pamphlet published by Authority of the King of Scotland about the Year 1593. (Entituled, A Discoverie of the unnatural and traitorous Conspiracie of Scotish Papists against God, his Church, their native Countrey, &c. Set down as it was confessed and subscribed by Maister George Ker, yet remaining in Prison, and David Grahame of Pentrie justly executed for his Treason, &c.) By which it appears, that he was employed in Spaine, and that the King (of Spaine) had opened unto him, that he had bene deceived by Englishmen, and would from thenceforth embrace the Advice and Way which the said Master William (Creighton) would shew him, both for invading of England, and for Alteration of Religion within this Realm, &c. I will not trouble the Reader with a farther Account of this Treatise, (in which there are Copies of several Letters directed to Creighton, and others from the Earls of Huntlie, Angus, Errol, &c. to the King of Spaine and Duke of Parma.) but I cannot omit observing, that the very first Letter in this Collection, is from F. Cecil himself, (who was then in Scotland) by which 'tis evident, he had had some Difference with the Party, and was endeavouring to reconcile himself to them again.

An. 1599. my old Freind John Cecill? And shall this be the first Fruicts of your Witt (to speake without Flattery) of so great Expectation? And must your Fame be first blasted with religious Men's Infamie? Cannot your Name appeare in print but with the Disgrace of a Catholike Priest? And that One that hath suffered Bandes for the Faith Catholike? Heu Quanta de spe decidi! Of you I would rather have expected some Booke against Calvine and Luther, against Reynolds or Whitaker, then against a poor Jesuite: Or if you would needs shewe your Tallent, or exercise your Style rather in politique Matters, are there not some of your owne Name whom you might with more Commendation impugne? Wants there in England, Tophyes Tyrants, and Termagaunts, against whom you may wryte whole Philippicks, and fill all Printer's Shops with Invectives? I pray God our old Acquaintance in Oxford do not take occasion to use some other such Proverb against you as in such a Case may be said, Egregiam vero laudem, &c. Vide that Master Doctor Cecill, that Catholike Priest, that Seminary Priest, that jolly Schollar, that famouse traveller, that notable Witte, whom many Men hoped to be another Blackwell, a second Saunders, &c. languisheth about private and politique Quarrells, and can fynde no better Butt to shoote all his Arrowes against, but a poore old Jesuite, which neither for his Age is able, nor for his Modestie will, nor for his Profession can ever have leave to make Answer. Ipsò sibi cavet non loco, (etsi & locus jam jurvat,) sed quod Julius est hoste. This I spake not in myne owne, but (as you see) in others Name, to whose Knowledge this thinge must come, and particularlie those that have knowen you of so great Expectation in Oxford. And truelie, I my selfe cannot but blesse our Trinitie Colledge Men in this Behalfe, who though they never printed Bookes, yeat with their Bloud in godlie Silence have stamped the Catholike Truthe, to the Benefite of Thousands of Soules, in the Hearts of all that ever heard of them. Neither can I but blush, (for old Friendship) to think that your first Antagonist shall be one, whom I must still hould as a Brother; and it will be no small Grief unto me, that I cannot be able to defende our Societie, but with disclaiming your Acquaintance; albeit to Men that have any insight in these Affaires, it will seem but an artificiall Thrust with a poysoned Rapier againste the Company of Jesus, through the Sides of poor Father Criton; and there are so many Circumstances which lead unto this Conjecture, that it will be harde for you to distinguish, or com betweene this Barke and his Tree. Now how sweet a Savour it hath that you should enter into this Ranke, I remitt me to your own Discretion; wher I omit to consider the Perill that you put your self in to have your Name and Actions examined, and run your Reputation upon the Pykes: And having by suche a sober Retirement as you have of late made now with such Credit, to put the same (being as you know but yet tender,) upon the Anville againe; I leave all these and other like to your prudent discussing. I only at this present Request, that at the least, upon my loving Advice, you will suspend this Deliberation, till you heare some one more Reply from me and Father Parsons upon your Answer. And forasmuch as it is reported, that * Master Bruce a Scottishe Gentleman hath the same Deseignment, you would take occasion to deall with him in the same Matter, and to put some of these, or other better and more pregraunt Reasons in Consideration also with him, to th' end he thinke at least tenn Times (as the Saying is) of the Matter, before he put this Tentation in Execution; the more, because I understande the Societie hath well deserved of him, and is particularly affected towards his good Partes and ingenioue Qualities; and Father Parsons principally, whom he knowes to have alwaies faithfullie favoured and assisted him in his Trobbles. That albeit he might have peradventure just Cause to offer this Disgrace to Father Criton, yeat for the common Societies sakes, that he would suspend his Displeasure from using such a sharpe Remedye, as dothe so directlie prejudice the whole Bodye, and that amongst Heretiques, and now in Fraunce, in time when eaven the weakest may insult upon us; for

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 24th Sept. 1599. O. S.

TouChing that Part of your Honor's Letter which concerneth my Allowance for Intelligences, I most humbly thanke your Honor for the Offer of your Favour therein towards me. I will presse nothing, but what may stand with her Majestie's liking and your Honor's; yet I could alleage great Reason, why neyther Sir Edward Stafford, nor any of those that went before him ever since the Queen's Raigne, had more neede of Allowance in this kynd then I. For althoughe those Tymes were more dangerous, and fuller of practice, yet the Queen had then an assured Party within this Realme, whom it imported for their own Preservation to be vigilant over all things that passed here, and to communicate their Intelligence to her Majestie upon whom their Safety depended; so as her Ministers needed not take any great Care, or be at any great Charge for the Matter, for it was brought home to them; but now that Syde hath no more need of her Majestie, they are so far from offering any Intelligence, that they shune all Communication with her Majesties Ministers, and are afraid of nothing more, then that yt should be thought they have any Correspondence with her. Besydes Sir, I do not succede an Ambassador who hath settled any means of Intelligence here; but a Gentleman, who having no Allowance for yt, was forced to supply that Want by the Acquayntance and Confidence he had gotten in his long Aboade here; whiche he could not transerre to another. At least if these Reasons will not serve, to equall my Occasions to Sir Edward Stafford and those that went before him, yet surely there can be no difference alleadged between these tymes, and those wherein Sir Anthony Mildmay served, or if any, the Disadvantage must be confessed to be in these; for then the King was not established as he is now, but had continuall need of her Majestie, and was therefore enforced to use a more respective and real proceeding towards her, then she shall synd hereafter. Therefore I would be glad as my Burden and Charge is equall, so to be made equall likewise in the Allowance; least the Diminution thereof beginning in me, be made a note of evill Service, and so remayne a continuall Taxe upon me hereafter. But as in taking upon me this imployment I chiefly relyed upon your Honor's Commaundment and Comfort, and put my Credit, Estate, and Fortune into your Hands, so I do referr my self to be disposed of both in this, and any thing else that may concern me, by your Honor's Direction; and do therefore humbly pray, that if you think that Allowance of 400*l.* a Yeere too much, which was made to Sir Anthony Mildmay, yt would please you to set down in certaintie what you think good, that knowing yt, I may not offend in exceeding yt.

TouChing the reviving or continuance of the Treaty of Bloys, I am of Opinion, yt will not now suffice that the Kinge signify by his Letter or Ambassador that he is willing to observe yt, but yt must be newly sworn on bothe Sydes as a new Treaty, for the former is absolutely determind, for want of that Signification on the King's part within the Yeare after his Predecessor's Deathe. I believe the King will urge to have the Staple at Quillebeuf, which he hath newly fortified and called Henriemburgh, and hath a great Desyre to do yt good; but our Merchants have no liking to remove from Rouen, and think yt would much hinder their Commodity.

I sent

An. 1599. I sent your Honor a Note of the Greevances and Impositions raised upon our Commodities since 1572, which is wholly contrarie to the Treatye. Her Majestie on the other Syde as I am informed hath rayfed little or nothing, and the greatest Matter they can complayne of will be some few Licences, which I suppose her Majestie will make no great Difficultie to revoke, rather then that they should hinder so great a Benefit to her Subjects. And so hoping to receive Answer of my Letter touching the 20000 Crowns, and the Party I have stayed to be employed into Spaine, within the tyme limited. I humbly take my leave, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

S I R;

25th of September, 1599.

I Cannot deny but at your last Dispatch by Mr. Beale, you had great Reason to be sensible of my Silence in diverse Things, when neither the Packett which Mussy left on the Way, nor the Letters by Simons and Peter Browne were arriyed; but yt will appeare to you before this come, that diverse Things are mistaken there. But now to answer some of the Points of your late Wrytings; fyrst for w209 Charles Paget, I see a100. the Queen is not mynded to pardon him and restore him, upon any such Merit as the givinge Intelligences, which may be true and may be false. For we do know, that he is out with the y. mwagmba Jesuit's Faction, not out of Love to a101 the Englishe, but out of other private Ends, which do devyde most of these Fugitives only in this Proportion, to emulate and supplant each other, but ever to Convehire in tertium; so as I should make you falsify your Word to say that the Queene meaneth to promise Pardon to him or restore him upon any suche Proposition, untill she may see that he will effect some matter of Weight, worthy the remission of his vile Treasons. To the effecting whereof yf he shall make overture, let yt be entertained with Formallitie. Againe, yf yt prove effectually, as yt appeareth, he shall fynd recompense, by some Rewards that shall proportion his Meryt; yf these Services multiply, then will yt be time to propound for his Restitution, and then may the Queen more honorably assent; but hitherto, such is her Majesties Diffidence, and of so petty Consequence or Truth are his Offers, as they do very ill fort with his great Demands. Between these Lines yf you walke with him, a100. the Queen will allow yt, and so yf you make some use of him he shall have some Crowns, yf he do nothing he looeth nothing; and yf this prove to any good Successe, then her Majesties Favour may follow Merytt, and not Protestations.

* For the Reports of d.100 the Duke of Bouillon, you shall know that f.150 the King of Scotland professeth still Amity hitherward in shew, though I thinke his Mynd is troubled, † because a.100 the Queene hath had understanding, that x.mrkz. fntgp Aishfield had offered Projects to compass Friends after God should call a.100 the Queen (whom God blefs.) All which Things, though they were treasonable in an Englishe Subject to offer, and in him only Matter of Unkindnes to hearken to, yet doth his fynding Fault with Aishfield's being convayed away, and his sending to a.100 the Queene to expostulate yt with her, and his desyre to have the Queene to punish z. ghkpxercchbpourw Lord Willoughbie's Action and Mr. y. pfewa Bowes, stir Choller in the Queene, and make her give hard Answers to his Ambassadors; but to any other open Breache, or any Profession of yt, there is no manner of Declaration; and for Confirmation of yt, even now he sends to the Queene for his Gratuity, which is no Act An. 1599.

of Hostillity.

Thyrdly Sir, where you wish you might be the Instruement of pleasing Matter as well as sower, and that you note that f. 158 the French Ambassador had the Queen's Letter delivered to him: You may please to understand that he hath here very frequent Accessse, is at hand with the Queene, and in this tyme of the Spanisb bruided Invasion, had dayly some Matter or other from the Maritime Governours to advertise her; and did delivere indeede a most honorable Letter to the Queen with his own Hands, and desyred Answer to yt, which could not be denyed him. And yet, that you might know all Particulars, I sent you the Copy of yt at the Instant; so as you both have found, and every Day shall fynde, that there shall be no neglect used towards you in that kynd. And this I must say, howsoever yt is handled, that he will send more Letters and with more speed for 40*l.* then you and I can for a 100*l.*, such are the Diligence of the Frenche, and the Laziness of ours.

For the Matter of the q. kgtudi Preist Z. nthte Benet, I did immediately upon your Writing hether of that Poynt send to f. 158 the French Ambassador, that on what things soever he would have him examined he should be, and so shall he, yf you will procure any Matter to be sent over to charge him: But I believe 6 122 Monsieur Villeroy loves a q. kgtudi Preist too well, to have him touched. I did also let the f. 158 the French Ambassador know that you had written to me of the same.

For the Poynt whereof you speake of one that will be employed into Spaine, this Sir do I say, that y. bcmwabwa Priestes are comonly simple in Judgment of warlike Preparations; yf he be English he will certainly never do good, yf he be Frenche, I had need well instruct him, and set things into a Method before he goes, to make him know, what is fit for him to enquire of and to advertise; and I would gladly see how he can bestow himself. These things cannot possibly pass by Letters, and therefore yf you will send him over hither privately, he shall be instructed by me and dispatched speedily, and for his 400 Crowns yearly, yt shall be answered him, but not before-hand more then an Imprest, and the rest continued as he continueth good Service.

Lastly Sir, the two great Poynts behind, are the Matters of the Money, and the renewing of the Treaty. For the fyrst, yf yt be no greater a Losse that we are to receive by yt then that which you speake of, we can be content to dispenche with it. And for the Treaty, true yt is, that yt hangeth very loose: But one thing here troubles us, That the Queene hath raised many Impositions and Customes of late Years, and some upon the Frenche; Yf she shall desire Abatement for her Subjects, the King will do the like for his. Hereby are Questions made by the Queene's Financiers, whether this be good for the Prince, though it be for the Subject: For my owne part I hold these two Bodies relative in all Circumstances. But very shortly this will be reconciled, and therefore by the next you shall receive further Direction. Thus being glad to hear of my Ladies safe Delivery, I committ you to God.

From the Court
at Nonfuche.

Your very loving and assured Friend and Kinsman,

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 26th Sept. 1599. O. S.

I Received your Honor's Letter with her Majestie's to this King inclosed upon Monday at Noone being the 24th of this Moneth, having the Morning before written by Mussy unto you; and because I understood that the King was at Malles Herbes, and was therefore uncertaine of my Audience, I sent away my Secretary presently with the Letter to Monsieur de Villeroy to Fountainbleau as your Honor commaunded me. I received his Answere this Afternoone, which I send herewith, which confirmed what I have heretofore written, that where he may use Monsieur de Boisfisse, he will impart nothing to me. Your Honor I hope will use the like measure, or else my Disadvantage will be great.

Your Honor shall likewise receive herewith, a Copy of a Letter from the fyrst President of Aix to the Kynge, touching the Prise of an English Ship made by those of Marseilles, about which her Majestie wrote unto him. Yt seems they mean to insist upon two Poynts, the one, the Town was not then in the King's Obedience, and consequently discharged of all things done then, by the King's Pardon granted upon their comming in. The other, that the Prise made by her Majestie's Ship of theirs which went to Newhaven was not lawfull, because there was at that tyme free Trade between the English and the Marseillians.

For the former, yt is a Poynt by all meanes to be insisted upon, for otherwise we shall continually be choaked with that Answere, and shall be without Remedy in most of the Complaints which I have seen, the Wrongs being cheefely don by them who were at that tyme of the League; whom althoughe the King might pardon for Offences don against him, yet he could not pardon those that were committed against his Allies; or yf he will, he must of his own make good the Dommages. Therefore I beseech your Honor to be well advised of this Poynt, and to insist upon it, and rather then fail, to make stay of Execution of Judgment given upon their Complaynts in England, till you see how we shall be dealt with here; otherwise I foresee playnly that we shall be at an after deal.

For the second Poynt, I have already answered yt, and told them, that the Queen's Ship did not make that Prise as upon the King's Enemies or Rebells, but as upon his Subjects that disobeyed his Proclamation, by trafficking with Leaguers, and consequently incurred the Penalty of Confiscation, which thereby he inflicted upon them; and that yt concerned the King in Honor, to justify that which was don in his Service and by his Commaundment. Your Honor will I hope deal roundly with the Frenche Ambassador upon these Poynts, and direct me how I shall further proceed, bothe about this and the rest of the Matters which I have begon to negotiate here, namely about the Demand of Money for the next Yeare. I willed my Secretary to know of Monsieur de Villeroy what he understood more of the Retorne of the Spanish Fleet into Ferroll, and yt seemeth by his Speeche to him, that his Advertisement came but from Monsieur de Sourdiac; but to me, I assure your Honor, he said he had received yt out of Spaine. He saith now, he hard they were dispersed by Tempest, but nothing of their Returne thither. I know not what his Meaning is by these forgetfullnes

ses or rather Contradictions, but I hope your Honor is too well advertised, to build upon those that shall come from hence for Spanish matters. An. 1599.

The Cardinal Joyeuse is expected this Night at Fountainbleau, where his Lodgings are already prepared. The Proposition presented to the Pope by Monsieur de Sillery, for the Separation for the King from his * Wife, as I understand, was committed to Consideration in full Consistory to eight Cardinals, † whereof Bellarmino was one, and the Archbishop of Florence, late Legat here another; He, for his Experience in these Parts, the other, for his Sufficiency in Learning. Yt seems they seek to have this Marriage pronounced esse nullum. For a simple Divorce (which the Church of Rome doth peremptorily defend to be à thoro non à vinculo) will not give place to a second Marriage. ‡ The Queen hath been often sollicitated to acknowledge, that the Marriage was enforced by Feare and never consummated between them, to which she protesteth never to condescend; so that yt is likely many more Difficulties will arise in this matter then yet are thought of, or can be determined in so short a tyme as the King at fyrst did expect.

I send your Honor a Letter from Mr. Locke which I received this Morning. d 100 The Duke de Bouillon hath been hitherto at Fountainbleau, but this Day returned to this Town as I hear. I will speake with him about Luffe whom your Honor recommended unto me. And so craving Pardon for my Shortness at this tyme, by reason of some domesticall Misfortune in the Losse of my Son lately born, I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 5th Oct. 1599. O. S.

I Wrote unto you by Simons, and sent you the Answer I received from Monsieur de Villeroy to her Majestie's Letter, and likewise to the Offer I made to have Bennet the Capuchin examined. I understand since by d. 100 the Duke de Bouillon, that the * Irishmen were set at Liberty before that Letter came; and for the Examination of Bennet, he told me, the King would gladly it were done, but would not be seen in yt. I answered, yf I might have Instructions delivered me whereupon to examine him, yt should be done without the Knowledge of the King's dealing in yt; he promised to furnish me with them, but hath not yet don yt. Your Honor may see how fearfull the King is to displease them of the Church.

Sence Mr. Honniman's Departure, I received Advertisement from him, that by his means the Governor of Diepe had imprisoned at Treport a Frenche Captaine, who had served some time in a Ship of Dunkirke, and therein don many Spoils to our Nation; but he wrote me neyther the Name of the Man or the Ship, which was an Errour in him. Notwithstanding, upon that Ground I had I dealt with the Counsaill, and have obtained Letters to the Governor to proceed to inform against him, and yf he be found guilty, to do Justice upon him. I was the more earnest to prosecute this Matter, because I am informed 'tis an ordinary

‡ Cardinal d'Offat in a Letter to Monsieur Villeroy of the 28th of June 1599 tells him, — il faudroit bien rehausser la force & la crainte faite à la Reine pour faire épouser le Roy, d'autre façon qu'on ne l'a jusques ici articulée. And in another Letter of the 14th of July, after he had told him he had drawn up a Memorial to present to the Pope, he adds, — En tout événement, j'ai articulé la force & la Crainte en la façon qu'il le falloit: car autrement elle ne seroit suffisante, & même, si ledit Expedient (which I take to be the Letter De Sully tells us the Queen wrote to the Pope) nous defalloit. Auquel case il faudroit bien que Vous vous disposassiez par delà de prouver ladite Force & Crainte toute telle que je l'ai couchée. Memoires, Vol. 1. c. 91.

An. 1599. matter for Frenchmen to serve in Ships of Dunkerke, and sometimes to take upon them the Name of Dunkerkers when they be none, thereby to have the freer Scope against us; so that we are dayly spoiled by bothe, not only to the loss of her Majesty's Subjects, especially the Coast-men, but to her great Dishonour, who was wont to be Mistress of the Seas, and is now affronted by every base Fisher Town. I do labour therefore to have some exemplary Justice don upon this Man, as well to bridle others who will take that Course hereafter, as to recall those that are already in yt; and for that purpose I have intreated a Marchant at Rouen to go to Diepe to solicit the Cause, and to produce what Informations he can against him. And yf he cannot be sufficiently furnished here, I have willed him to make bold to signifye so much unto your Honor, and to pray that either from Mr. Houman, or by some other means from the Coast, he may be furnished with matter against him. I have also willed him to deal with the Governour for the Apprehension of some others, of whom I have like Information; and I beseech your Honor to deal earnestly with the Ambassador there, that there may be some publick Proclamation made for the recalling of all such as serve in the Gallies or Shippes of the Enemies, upon paine of Confiscation; for by Frenchmen comes a great part of our Mischiefe dayly, who pass under the Name of Dunkerkers. I mean to deal to the same Effect with the Counsaill here, and the more reason we have to insist hereupon, because as I learn by one which is familiar with the Spanish Ambassador here, that Spinola hath undertaken, by Promise to the King of Spainne, to build ten Gallies more this Wynter in the Low Countries, which no doubt he hopes to furnish (cheesly at least) with Pilots out of France; in the mean time he is Captaine of these six, and hath Allowance for Payment of 1000 Men. d. 100 The Duke de Bonillon hath undertaken the commending of Mr. Luff to Monsieur de Grammont in as ample manner as I desired. The Cardinal Joyeuse having been a Week with the King at Fountainbleau, goeth shortly to the Queen, and with him the Bishop of Arles come lately from Rome. The Cardinal comes with very large Commission in that Cause, and yt is thought yt will shortly be determined; for which purpose the Queen Dowager at the King's Intreaty goeth likewise to the Queen, to dispose her to Conformitie in such things as are requyred of her; † whereunto fear of worse which she begins to apprehend, will in the end perswade her.

‡ The King hath now at length wonne the Fort at Malles-herbes which he hath so long laid Siege to; the Conditions are 100000 Crowns in ready Money, and an yearly Pension: The next Newes we shall hear I think will be, that she is made Countess of Moret, and her Father Marshall of France, by the Resignation of the old Marshall de Rhetz. What Alteration this may breed in the King's Marriage is very doubtful; for my part, yf the Divorce were once throughly dispatched, and she with Child, I think verily he would marry her. In the mean tyme I assure my self he will make no haste to any other, though that Marriage of Florence be still in speeche to content the World, and to draw on the Divorce the more easly.

The Restitution of the Jesuits goeth on with full Sails in the Jurisdiction of all the Parlements but Paris, where yt is thought the King being turned, will likewise turn those Messieurs too in the end. The Reasons that have wrought this Alteration in the King are partly these; A need he hath now of the Pope, who labours yt very hotly; but cheesly as I conceive, the Dryft and Scope of his principall Counsaillors whereof I wrote in my Letter by Mussy, and of which I think we shall see more Effects dayly. † The French Historians labour to give another Turn to this Affair, and tells us, the only Reason why the Queen opposed the Divorce was, * because of the King's Design to marry the Dutches of Beaufort, (which he undoubtedly did.) But that after her Death she was more complying; and in order to effect it, — Elle escrivit (says de Sully) de sa propre main au Pape en tels termes & substance qu'il avoit esté jugé necessaire. But, (howsoever this Fact was) certain it is no Use has been made of it at Rome; on the contrary, d'Offat tells Monsieur de Villeroy, — nous avons ôté l'Article, qui concernoit l'Expédient, &c.

the better, hath assured the King, that he will so bridle them with Orders and Ecclesiasticall Censures, as he shall not need to doubt they will exceed the Bounds of their Calling, or intermeddle with Matters of State. They do here likewise speake of a Restraynt to be joyned to their Re-admission, that they shall not be capable to receive any Guift or Legacy above a small Valew. One great Difficultie ariseth, how they shall be restored to their Colleges, Lands and Goods, which in divers Places have been confiscated and sold to the King's Use. There are two in this Town (as I wrote lately) wryting bitterly against them. This Day Pasquier was with me again, to request some Instructions of their Proceedings against her Majestie's Person and her Estate, and particularly of their late Dealing in Spayne * with Squyre for the poysoning of her. Yf yt please your Honor to afford me an Abstract of their bad Practices, set down by some of her Majesties learned Councill, I think yt might be to good purpose.

The Estate of the King's Finances for the next Yeare is not finished, therefore I cannot yet advertise what her Majestie shall look for from them; but I sollicite them as much as with any good Manners I may, to have a due Regard of her.

d. 100 The Duke of Bouillon told me, that yf the Spanish Invasion had proceeded, the King was resolved to set all other Respects asyde, and to have furnished her with a good round Sume, which indeed I urged much at that Instant, instead of his other Succours offered. But of this your Honor may believe as much or as little as you will, and these Words now cost them nothing. All my Care is that her Majestie may receive some good Satisfaction the next Yeare, and in som reasonable tyme, to make use of before Sumer be too far spent for her Wars in Ireland; although these Men here will needs perswade me, that Things grow near a Pacification there, and that Tyronne offers to come in. They also tell me, that her Majestie and the Archduke intend to send both shortly to the King to desyre a convenient Place in his Kingdom to meet and treat of Peace in: But I deny all that I hear not from your Honor.

The matter of the Marquisat depends as yt did, but the King sheweth himself unwilling to put yt into the Pope's Hands. The Duke of Savoy offered him in Exchange Bresse and Savoy, but he will not accept yt. Cardinal Andreas is gon to be Governor of Milan, and hath therein left many deceived, who thought rather he had gone into Portugall. Of the Germaine Army we hear nothing but Shame, for their weake and irresolute Proceeding. They have lewyed the Siege they had undertaken, and have at length joyned the Reliques which remayne with the States, having purchased Dishonour with a very greate Charge.

I have at length received the 20000 Crownes in this Towne, as I was enforced through the Unreasonableness of the Tresorier d'Espargne with whom I had to deal: I expect your Honor's Directions to whom I shall delyver yt. I could put yt into the Hands of three Italians here, called Spada, Sesto, and Ferrarno, after the rate I wrote of, but I dare do nothing before I hear from your Honor. And yf you shall direct me to deal with these Italians, yt were good fyrst to know, whether Corfini and Ricci with whom they have Correspondency, will accept their Bills for such a Somme or nay.

The Parlamentz of Brettagne, Tolosa, and Burdeaux, stand hitherto very obstinately against the Edict for the Liberty of Religion, neyther is there hope that hereafter they will be induced to admitt of yt. The Marquiss of Pisani Governour of the younge Prince of Condé is lately dead, into whose Charge is substituted Chevalier Ramboulet. This Week the Count de Lude is set forward to Bruxells, to congratulate with the Archduke and the Infanta for their safe Arrival in those Parts.

I understand that the Duke of Arscott is sent from the Archduke and Infanta to treat with the States of a Peace, or at the least t'endeavour to induce them

* Cambden's Eliz. 611. Hist. of England, Vol. 2.

An. 1599. to treat to that purpose, whereof I rest assured your Honor hath more perfect Advertisement.

Out of Hungary we hear that the Emperour and Turk do treat of a Peace. The Cham of Tartary is the Meanc between them, who useth in this Negotiation Paleologo. Deputies on both Parties are appoynted for the Treaty, and Motion hath bin made, that Acts of Hostilitie in this Interim might be suspended. And so for this tyme I humbly take my leave, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

S I R,

8 October 1599.

THE Opportunitie of this Gentleman's Returne doth make me send my Dispatch by him, in the which I will acquaint you with such Things as here hath passed. I will fyrst beginne to let you know, that the Archduke Albert hath now written to the Queen in his own Name and the Infanta's of Spayne, wherein he approveth the Overtures of Andrea, declareth to have Commission from the King of Spayne in ample Fourme to treat with the Queen, either joyntly or severally from the States as she pleaseth; and doth assure all sincere Proceeding in this matter, beyng desyrous to know in what Tyme or Place, or by what Persons the Negotiation shall be handled. To this I send you the Copy of her Majestie's Answer inclosed, which will best satisfie you. For any further Dealing with the King of France, you shall not need to urge yt yet.

For the Book which you have sent me, yf the Author be he that I take yt, (a lewd Priest, though of an honest Name.) I wonder upon what Audacity he thinketh fit to come over hither, for wryting a Pamphlet against another as himself. For the other Poynt conteyned in your Letter, if you shall keep your self within the President of Sir Anthony Mildmay, I will see Allowance made.

And now to come to the Matter of Ireland, wherein you desyre to be informed: You shall understand, that since my last Dispatch by the Post, (at which tyme I sent you an Abstract of the Earle of Essex's Action) * he is now arrived himself, and was in the Court before ever her Majestie knew yt. A matter that did displease her in the Forme very much; for not two Months before, when the Spanish Alarm was hot in England, her Majestie doubting that his Desyre might have brought him hither, whereby that Service he had in hand might have received Prejudice, and yet the Bruite have proved untrue, as after yt did; yt pleased her to write unto him, absolutely commanding him not to presume to come over, (for those were her Words) until he had advertised her to what State things were reduced in the North, and thereupon to receive her Warrant for his returne, and her Direction whom to leave in Charge with the Kingdom; being indeed resolved to have no more Justices, but some Noblemen to govern that Realme. Notwithstanding his Lordship, after his meeting with Tyronne whereof I last advertised you, finding his Offers of Submission not such as the Queen was like to be induced unto by his Letters, he resolved to come over and acquaint her Majestie, not with the Goodness of the Offers in themselves, but with the Necessity of her Affaires to which the Offers were suitable. This being but a sovere Relation, added to the Breach of her Commaundements, did so much exasperate her Mynd, as she resolved to commaund him from her Presence, and to commit him to the House of the Lord Keeper, where he is. A matter which must have an end, and will have shortly; though for Example sake her Majestie hath kept this Forme with him. For the rest which concerneth Ire- land, I think this will be the Resolution taken, to take in the Rebels upon any honourable Condition, thereby to breake the Band of Combination. There is already a Cessation taken, and shall continue untill her Majestie send her Pleasure which of the Articles she allows, and which not. Now you know as much as I of all things fit for an Advertisement: I will only add this, that the French Ambassador had but a private Audience of the Queene, for yt seems that the King made haste to give Passports to the Irish for whom she wryt, for fear they should be demanded, as they were. I will now conclude, that I do condole with you for the Death of my little Cosen, but I doubt not but you will bothe rejoyce, seeing God that gave hath taken away, and so I commit you to God's Protection.

From the Court
at Richmond.

Your assured loving Kinsman and Friend,
RO. CECYLL.

I cannot draw any thing from the Capuchin concerning the Demoniaque, because you send me no particular Matter wherewith to charge him, nether doth the French Ambassador meddle in yt.

For the matter of the Marseillians, I will acquaint the Commissioners that are appointed for those Causes with that which you have written, and by the next you shall understand what they can say to yt.

* Tyronne's Propositions, 1599.

1. THAT the Catholike Religion be openly preached.
2. That the Churches be governed by the Pope.

An. 1599.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 11th Oct. 1599. O. S.

I Received your Honor's Letters of the 25th of September the 6th of October, and the morrow after, Peter Brown arrived with your Letter of the 18th of September. By that which Brown brought your Honor hath imparted unto me the Substance of the Parley between the Earle of Effex and Tyronne, for which I most humbly thank you, and bescech God there may grow a good Conclusion thereof to her Majestie's Quiet and Contentment. That Opinion of your Honors I hold for an Oracle, that rumores non sunt ponendi ante salutem, and that tuta are to be preferred before speciosa. I assure your Honor, that by compounding these Matters in any sort, your Honor shall greatly establish her Majestie's Reputation in these Parts, where yt is holden for a Maxime, that the Honor of a Prince consists en bien faisant ses affaires, and where the Opinion hath been conceaved and delivered, not without Shew of Rejoycing by some principall Persons, that her Majesty would never see an end of those Troubles in her Tyme. The King himself, at my Audience at Orleans, used these Speeches unto me, talking of the Warre of Ireland: The Queen your Mistrefs thought I dealt too basely in making Composition with my Subjects, and buying my Peace; we shall see whether shall speed better, she with her Gloriousness, or I with that she calls Baseness. The rest I certified at that tyme: Thys I forbore, because I would not breed Offence. But I see, howsoever tho' for their own Interest they would be loth Spayne should prevail against us, yet they would be contented we should be humbled, and kept as low as might be; as well in Envy to our Prosperity, as upon a Desyre that we may be enforced to stand in more respective and regardfull Terms towards them. But yf this Pacification succeed, you shall greatly disappoynt them, and fynde that they will treat with you with much better Respect: The want whereof hitherto, considering her Majestie's great Merits and Quallity, I must confesse, hath moved me to some Indignation. I do not doubt also, but you shall fynd great Advantage by yt in your Treaty with Spayne, when they shall see you treat with them upon Pleasure, and not upon Necessity.

By your other Letter of the 25th of September, I understand her Majestie's Pleasure touching w.209 Charles Paget, which I made known unto him in such fort as I was therein directed. I found the Man exceeding sorrowfull, and to bewaile very much the Loss of his Hope therein, the rather for that he hath been born in hand these two Yeares, (by such as he used for his means) that her Majestie was very graciously enclined to have taken Compassion upon him; but for the matter thus he answered. That yf yt would have pleased her Majestie to have pardoned him, and thereby given him the Right and Quallity of her Subject, which he stands now deprived of, as he might have justified whatsoever he would have done for her Service with good Credit and Reputation, so he would have done yt faithfully, and not only to have revealed whatsoever either himself hath treated with others, or others with him, or whatsoever he had understood to be treated by others against her Majestie; but also to have imployed his Credit and Acquaintance in forreign Parts, for the Discovery of any Practice that might be used hereafter. But not standing in the Quallity of her Subject, nor in any Assurance of her Grace or Protection, to serve in the Quallity of a Spye, to the Prejudice of them from whom he was to receive Maintenance and Protection, yt was a thing he could not do eyther with Credit or Safety. And prayed me to assure my self, that yt was not want that he eyther felt or feared, that had moved him to seek her Majestie's Grace and Favour; but a Remorse of Conscience, and a Desyre to end his Dayes with that Peace and Satisfaction of Mind, that he dyed in the Obedience of his naturall Prince, and that before his Death he had done her some Service. Which though he was not so happy to attaine unto, yet

yt was a great quieting to his Conscience that he had fought yt, and fayling of yt, though he should be enforced to accept the Offers of other Princes that were made him for his Maintenance, (which must needs tye him to a Duty and Service towards them,) yet yt should be ever with the same Mynd and Respect he hath always born to her Majestie; namely, to oppose himself as he hath often done, and to hinder as much as lay in him, all violent Courses against her Person or her Estate: And though he should be never so well accommodated in the Service of any other Prince, yet whensoever God shall move her Majestie to take any Compassion upon him, he would leave all to come to prostrate himself at her Feet. I replied not much unto him, because I found him resolute not to deale in that kind I proposed, only I promised at his Request to relate his Answer.

I have according to your Commaundment sent over the Party that I have stayed to be employed into Spayne. I have made him Bearer of these my Letters, and have given him 30 Crowns for the Charge of his Journey. He doth not require to have his Money before hand, except yt be some reasonable Portion to carrye him thither, and to maintaine him till a Supply come. Yt seems he would assigne a good Part of yt to be received quarterly by his Wyfe, whom he intends to leave at Diepe, unless your Honor think better he should leave her in England for a Pledge of his Fidelitie, which he will be contented to do yf you please. For his Abillitie to judge of warlike Preparations, although his Profession were not that way, yet his Imployment by this King fundry times, and for that purpose cheefly, is an Argument that there was some sufficiencie discerned in him. He is born a Frenchman, upon the Frontiers of Picardy towards Artois. I am assured by such as recommended him unto me, of his faithfullness and honesty, the rest your Honor can best judge of.

For the 18000 Crowns, I stay the Delivery of yt to these Italians till I may hear from your Honor that Corfni and Ricci will accept their Bills; for the other 2000 Crowns I will be answerable for them, and have already given Order for the Payment of so muche into the Exchequer. I beseeche your Honor to speake to the Lord Tresurer that my Entertainment be not stayed hereafter as yt hath been. By that tyme this Letter come to your Hands there will be three Moneths owing me, whereas by the Privy Seale, I was to be allowed ever three Months beforehand. Surely Sir yf my Entertainment be stopped, I cannot continue here; and even this Stay of yt already hath put me much to my Shifts.

For the Money that is promised from hence this next Yeare, I can yet say nothing: I was yesterday with Monsieur de Rhosni about yt, but he could give me no Answer. I think yf yt would please her Majestie to wryte to the King of yt, yt would work some good Effect.

Out of Spayne I understand, that of the Fleet which went from Feroll the 25th of August, consisting of Fifty three Ships, whereof Thirty were Galleons, there returned Seven driven back by Tempest, whereof the Admirall was one with her Masts broken; the rest pursued their Voyage towards the Terceras, where they were in hope to meet the Hollander's Fleet. The King departed from Sarragossa the 24th of September Stilo novo, and was expected at the Escorial within ten Days after. The City of Sarragossa, to obtayne the King's coming thither presented him with 100000 Crowns, besydes 20000 Ducats to the Queen for Chopines, and 6000 to the Marquis of Denia. The King at his being there, was contented that the Heads set up upon the Towne-House in the last Rebellion should be taken downe, and the Houses re-edified which were then demolished. Antonio de Perez I heare is restored to his Lands, and his Wife and Children all at Liberty.

I have secret Intelligence that there is some unkindness growing between the King of Spayne and the Duke of Savoy, and the Duke thereupon begins to make some Overtures to this King to the Prejudice of Spaine; as I learn more of yt I will advertise your Honor. I hear a Bruite that the Earle of Effex is returned, and come already to the Court, and that there are Commissioners arrived in England from the Low Countries.

An. 1599. Your Honor's Nephew Mr. William Cecyll arryved here on Sunday last, and went away the next Day towards Lions. The King is not yet come from Orleans, whether he went upon Sunday last to meet with the Queen-Dowager; but upon Thursday or Fryday next he is expected at St. Germain's, and shortly after here in this Towne.

The Matter betweene Prince Joyville and Monfieur le Grande, hath occupied the Constable and Marshalls of France a good tyme; at length they have set downe an Order, that Joyville should say to the other, that he is sorry for that he did, and should pray him to forgive yt, which I heare Joyville refuseth, and so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 22^d of October 1559, O. S.

I Wrote so lately unto your Honor by him that I sent over to be employed into Spaine, that I have not muche to add now; yet the Opportunity of this Bearer's Returne provoked me not to be altogether silent. I do fyrst therefore acknowledge the Receyte of your Honor's Letter which he brought of the 8th of October, and do most humbly thanck you for the Advertisements therein contained.

The Newes of the Pacification of Ireland (for so yt is beleaved here) hath bin current here a good while, but I do not thinck that the other of my Lord's Restraynt is yet knowen, at least within these two Dayes I am sure yt was not. I am very glad to perceave by your Honor's Letter, that your Resolution continueth to accept of the Rebells Submission upon any tolerable Conditions; In my poor Opinion her Majestie will fynd infinite Advantage in yt, especially for her Reputation abroad, which was mightily impeached by the Conceyt Men had generally received, of the irrecoverableness of that Kingdom. The Ambassador of Venice came purposely to congratulate with me of yt, and said he had dispatched of purpose to Venice with the Advertisement; where he assured me yt would be most acceptable Newes, in respect of the Danger and Consequence they did apprehend might grow of that Warre to her Majestie's Estate; and he added this Epiphonema (which I beleave to be trewe) That States are governed by Realities and not by Punctilio's, and that the Queene did shew trewe Judgment and Wisdome not to formalize too muche upon the outward Appearance of Matters, but to establishe her Peace by any Meanes, wherein consisted indeed her trewe Honor and Prosperitie. The Constable and the Duke of Bouillon cam likewise to visit me since the Arrival of this Newes, and both spake with me to the same Purpose. So that your Honor seeth what the Opinion of all Men is here for the Point of Honor, which being a Matter wholly consisting in Opinion, the trewe Conceyte of yt is the general Conceyt; and therefore as I said, I am exceeding glad that her Majestie's Resolutions tend that way.

For the Matter of the Capuchin, d. 100 the Duke of Bouillon told me, the Cause why he had hitherto given me no Instructions as he promised me, was the Sicknes of the Leutenant Criminel who had dealt in those Examinations; but that now he was almost recovered, and I should heare from him. I understand for certaine, that both Bennet and Campbell (who was taken with him) were sent hence, and furnished with Necessaries by f. 154 the Ambassador of Scotland, and that Campbell knoweth much of his Secrets. The Cause of their sending, was to second a Project they have (which is greatly favoured and laboured by f. 154 the Ambassador of Scotland) to introduce a Liberty of Religion into Scotland; for which purpose there were two sent thither a little before my coming hither, the one called the Laird of Pornington, the other a Preist a High-land-land-Man called Macroigh or som such Irishe Name. Their Returne is shortly An. 1599. expected, and I am promised to have som Understanding of the Successe of their Employment there. It is a thing much laboured, and greatly feared, by the best affected to that Nation, yt were a dangerous President for their Neighbours. I beseeche you Sir, let me know yf Bennet confesse any thing about Charles Drury.

Out of the Low-Countries I understand, there are two Gallies building at Sluce and two at Dunkerke; there is an Expectation likewise of more to come out of Spaine this next Spring. The Spanishe Army is much discontented, and being commaunded to muster refused yt flatly, till they were payed their Arrearages unto a certaine Tyme. To the Requisition of the States of Brabant for the Dismission of the Spaniards, the Infanta hath answered, that she cannot do yt, unlesse they will undertake the Burden and Charge of the Warre, for the King of Spaine will be at no Charge any longer, yf the Spaniards be sent out of the Country. She hath also demaunded of them, an increase of their ordinary Contributions, for the Maintenance of her State and Port; pretending that by reason of the Separation of the other Provinces, and the losse of that Revenue which they yeilded, she shall not be otherwise able to uphold her State, according to her Dignity. These be very offensive Propositions, which together with the Archduke's displeasing Carriage of himselfe, discontent very many, especially the Nobillitie; whom somewhat to content another way, he hath obtained the Order Toison d'Or for the Duke of Arschot, the Prince of Orange, the Marquis of Havre, Count Egmont, and one or two more. I understand they have a Dessein to build as much Shipping as they can in the River of Sluce, wherein they intend to proceed, though they should make Peace with us.

The Duke of Mercœur is arrived at Vienna with 200 Gentlemen in his Trayne, intending to imploy himselfe in those Warres against the Turke; where notwithstanding yt is beleevd that Matters are growing towards a Pacification, and that the Deputies are already assembled about yt.

The Generall of the Cordeliers, otherwise called Patriarche of Constantinople arrived here upon Friday last, with a Secretary of the Duke of Savoy's called Roncas, who hath bin oft employed here. Their comming is to propound unto the King an Exchaunge of other Seigniories for the Marquisat, or that he will be contented to put yt in deposito in the Pope's Hands till yt be judged. The Opinion is the King will agree to neither, and that he doth temporize till the Matter of his Divorce be throughly dispatched, mynding afterwards to shew himselfe more warme in that of the Marquisat. The Discontentment of the Duke of Savoy against the King of Spaine, and the Overtures thereupon made to this King, is judged to be but a cunning, and therefore embraced by this King accordingly.

The Quarrell betwene the Prince of Joyville and Monsieur le Grand, was ended Yesterday, for the finishing whereof the Constable, the Mareschalls de Bouillon, de Biron, and d'Ornano met at Villette, a Village within a Mile of this Towne: And thither came from St. Denis the Prince Joyville, accompanied with the Dukes of Guise, de Maine, and de Nemours; and Monsieur le Grande from this Towne, accompanied with the Duke of Tremouille, the Count de Rochepot (who goeth into Spaine;) and Monsieur de Liencourt, premier Escuyer. The Conditions were fyrst signed by both Parties, and afterwards redde, and thereupon they both embraced with som Words of Complements. Notwithstanding, the King is not yet appeased for the Affront don to himselfe therein, but hath willed that the Prince de Joyville shall absent himselfe out of his Presence for a tyme, and som say out of the Realme; but I beleve he will not persist in that Rigor.

I wrote unto your Honor lately, that one Pasquier was writing a Book against the Jesuites, which he intended to Print here. Since, at the Instance of the Nuncio yt is forbidden to be prynted here, but the Man is resolved to set yt notwithstanding, and hath made som Meanes to me to know yf yt might not be prynted

An. 1599. printed in England, though bearing the Name of Doway or som other Place; I told him I would answer within this Moneth, by which tyme I thinck his Booke will be ready for the Presse; I desyre therefore to know what I may fay unto him.

Monfieur de Betunes is returned out of Scotland: He geveth forth that he came to Yarmouth, and there took Shipping; but I am assuredly informed that he came to London in disguised Manner as a Scottish-man, and hath brought a Packet from Monsieur de Boiffille. How this proceeding agreeth with the Promise of the Ambassador there to her Majestie, and with Monfieur de Villeroy's Words to me, (whereof from Blois I advertized your Honor) I leave to your good Consideration. Monfieur de Betunes or his Pacquet hath brought the Newes of my Lord of Essex's restraynt, which hath filled this Court full of Discourse.

The Duke of Savoy is looked for here very shortly, he presumes that his Presence will determine all Differences betwene him and the King. The King is now come to St. Germain's. I understand that the Master of Gray, when he departed out of this Towne, went to Brussels, where yet he continueth, and converseth much with Count Bothwell, betwene whom (as yt is suspected) som secret Practizes are intended against their King. — Yt is constantly reported here, (by Advice out of Italy) that there is a great Revolt against the Turke in Natolia, and that Mehemet Bassa is slayne, who was sent thither to repress the Rebellion.

There is a great Discontentment growen in Genoa against the King of Spaine, by Reason of the Purchase he hath made of the Marquisat of Final, which borders neare upon them, and hath some antient Pretensions upon Castel Franco, Valle di Pia, and som other Places; but cheefly they feare he should go about to make another Port in som Place belonging thereunto, which would be the Ruine of their Towne. Hereupon they have sent one of the House of Doria unto him, who being returned without any Satisfaction, they have held a publicke Consultation about their Affaires, and have resolved to put in a Readines 20 Gallies, to be imployed as occasion shall serve. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

S I R,

24th of October, 1599.

I Have spoken with Corsini concerning the 18000 Crownes to be delivered over to certaine Italians, but I fynd by him, that he will not meddle with those Parties. There is one Baptista Madelana, to whom yf you pay yt, Corsini will deliver yt heere; for which purpose I send you his Letter. Concerning the Entertainment due to you, I do thinck yf you had som Person resident to follow those things, (which are Matters of your private Reckonings) you could not be so behind hand. But yf you thinck yt enough to wryte to me, and then that no Man follow me, both my great Buifness permits yt not, neyther is yt a thing proper to me. You must therefore wryte to my Lord Treasurer what is due to you, and to whom he shall delyver yt; I will let him know that you must be payd yt, and yf he do sticke, I will tell him those Reasons which he will not deny; but to every Officer belongeth a particular Adresse; so as althoughe I will never be wanting in the Substance, yet we do not agree in the Forme, which is the hinderance of your Expedition. I have considered of the great slackness of our Marchants, that do not fend about their Buifnes, and I have acquainted her Majestie with your Care, that she may see there is in you no Want.

Concerning

Concerning the Purpose you have to advance the King's Remboursement by your timely Suit, and the Motion you make that yt may from hence be quicken- ed; her Majestie will both wryte her selfe, and will cause the Ambassador here to expresse, that she expecteth a better reckoning then she hath had; in the meane tyme you may go on as you do. Of the Matter concerning our Treaty, I know you are already by my last sufficiently advertized, and till we heare from the States, no more can be said then I have written.

a. 121 The Earl of Essex is yet retayned in x. ar my chitw Lorde y. lwbwca Kepers z. ohaft House. And the Displeasure of a. 100 the Queen is the more, because yt is written from a. 102 Ireland, that within three Dayes after his so abrupt Departure, b. 102 Tyrone streight discovered, * that he had no Resolution to do other then betray the Kingdom as soon as he could get advantage, towards which he did prepare all things.

For the Man whom you have sent to me I have largely conferred with him, but I fynd fyrst that he hathe no Spanishe at all, neyther is he a Man fytt for the Employment, but I do exceedingly thanck you for your Care. And thus, &c.

From the Court at Richmonde.

Your, &c.

RO. CECYLL.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 1st Nov. 1599. O. S.

SINCE my last Letters, I have had occasion to deale with the Chauncellor and Monfieur de Villeroy, about the verifying of the Commission for Marine Causes in the severall Courts of Parlements without which we fynd by Experience, (in a Cause of one Alden recommended by my Lord Treasurer unto me) that the Commission will be to little purpose. For the Complaynt being against them of Crotoy, which is under the Jurisdiction of the Parlament of Paris, the Officers of this Court and Jurisdiction, refuse to obey any Warrant made by the Commissioners. The Chauncellor at my fyrst proposing yt to him, thought yt very reasonable yt should be verified in all Courts, and made shew as yf yt should have bin dispatched presently. Since I fynd him colder, which I conceive to arise from others. Monfieur de Villeroy when he was fyrst moved of yt, began to except to our Justice in England, as yf he had had som freshe Complaynts; but in the end being urged upon the Poynt, he sayd he thought fyt there should be two Commissions established, the one for the Admirality of France at Roïen, the other for the Admirality of Guienne at Bourdeaux. This for my part I think very unequall and inconvenient for her Majestie and her Subjects, and so I have signified, my Reasons are thease. The Ambassador of France assured her Majestie there should be but one Commission for these Causes thorough all France, and thereupon she hath established the like for her whole Realme; the ancient Presidents have ever bin so. Yt were an excesssiife trowble and charge, and very unequall for her Majesties Subjects to travell to Bourdeaux for Justice, when no Frencheman need go further then London. Yf any Difficulty or Impediment should arise, or any Cause of Complaynte of the Slacknes or Partiality of the Commissioners, her Majestie's Ambassador to whom yt appertaynes to procure Justice to be done, is so farre off, as yt would requyre a great lengthe of tyme to acquaynt him and receive his Direction, as often as shall be need; and so instead of abridging the Length of these Suts, and easing the Subjects of England, yt would rather lengthen them and burden them with a new Charge, of sending up and downe to the English Ambassadors. The Counfaillors of those Courts of Bourdeaux and Thoulouse are very stiffe against those of the Relligion, and particularly evill affected to our Nation, and therefore little hope of good Usage at their Hands. For these Reasons I have made bold to signifie that my Opinion is,

* See Cambden's Eliz. pag. 575.

An. 1599. her Majestie will not like of yt. Notwithstanding this Day agayne having sent to Monsieur de Villeroy to sollicite the Dispathe of this Matter, he answered, that he could say nothing till he knew how her Majestie would like of that he had proposed about the double Commission. Yt was answered him, that he might notwithstanding cause this to be verified in the meane tyme in this Parliament: And though her Majestie should assent to another Commission for Guienne, yet this Commission as yt is might serve for these Parts, and so we might procede to do somewhat. Which were very reasonable and very meet to be don, seeing her Majestie had a full Yeaer sence established a Commission on her Part, which had travailed in these Causes with good effect and contentation of the Complainants, as himself had acknowledged unto me at the Counsaile Table here. Being thus urged, he said at length that he would speake with the King's Procureur in yt, which was all that could be drawn from him. In the meane time the Party that followeth the Sute lyeth at Charges, and repynes muche, being assured (as he saythe) before he came over, that he should have Justice with Expedition. But yt seemes they make noe great Regard of giving her Majestie Satisfaction in this, more then in other matters of neerer importance to her. I thought yt my Duety to informe your Honor of these unlooked for Stops and Traverfes in a Matter so playne and just, that by them you may judge (as you best canne) of their generall Disposition. I am sure they could not be ignorant of this Concurrence of the Parliaments about their Jurisdiction: And therefore yt argues a Meaning rather of dalliing then of playne dealing, thus to delude us with a Commission that they themselves knew would not, and as yt seemes meant should not be executed in these Termes. My poor Opinion is therefore, that you be not too forward in contenting them in their Demands, for that will be the Way to draw most Reason from them.

I understand, that a Priest which escaped this Sommer from Rochell, when Alabaster and his Fellow were apprehended and sent into England, hath procur'd the Nuncio to deale with the King, to wryte unto her Majestie in their Behalfe; but that the King refused yt, and hereupon tooke occasion to use some Speech to the Nuncio, that he marvayled the Pope used no good meanes to the Queene to deale more favorably with the Catholiques. The Nuncio answered, that he thought yt would not prevaile coming from the Pope, but rather irritate her. The King sayd yes, so as he would assure her, they should not practise against her as they had don: And upon these and the like Speeches, they concluded that the Nuncio should write to the Pope, what the King's opinion and advice was. Yt is somewhat noted, that her Majestie hath not communicated with this King, her successe in the pacifying of Ireland, being conceived here to be of very great Importance.

I heere that the Treaty of Peace is broken off betweene the Emperour and the Turke, and the Warr is begon very hotly. I hear also that the Pope is about to marry three of his Neces very honorably, viz. one to the Duke of Parma, another to the Duke of Mantua's Sonne, and a third to the Duke of Modena's Sonne.

The Duke of Savoy will be here about the 24th of this Moneth: No dowbt seeing he coms in Person, all things are accorded betweene him and the King. Yet the Chauncellor assured me, they were not yet accorded, * but that he thought the Duke was too wise to com hither, but with a Resolution to give the King Satisfaction. The Spanish Ambassador is muche discontented, and gives out that he will be gon. I cann learne no cause, but that he takes his Master

* There was a further and deeper Design in the Duke of Savoy's Journey, then was at that time known, which was to perfect his Negotiation with the Mareschal Biron, — Il n'y eut personne (says Cardinal Bentivoglio) d'assez mauvais esprit, pour croire que le Duc n' estoit allé en France que pour y machiner une horrible Conspiration contre le Roy & le corps entiere du Royaume comme fut celle du Mareschal Biron. Cependant lorsque cette Conspiration fut decouverte, Ce fut le bruit public & l'opinion de tout le Monde, que cela avoit été le principal motif du Voyage du Duc de Savoy en France, & qu'il l'y avoit tramée & concluee secretement avec le Mareschal de Biron, &c. Memoires, Vol. 1. p. 312, 313.

deluded, because they have yet sent no Ambassador to him from hence; for although Monsieur de la Rochepot be desseigned, he makes no great hast yet to be gon. An. 1599.

Towching Monsieur de Betune, that Poynt of my last Advertisement was mistaken, that he gave out he cam by Land to Yarmouth, and there tooke Shipping for France. For the truth is, (and so he doth acknowledge) that he cam by Sea to Yarmouth, and there landed, and tooke Horse. He denieth that he cam by London, and sayeth he went directly thence to Dover, but I am assured he brought a Packet from Monsieur de Boisfisse, and the same Day he arrived he sent yt to Monsieur de Villeroy, desyring to be excused himselfe till the next Day, because he was weary. I am also credibly informed, that the Satterday after his returne, he was five Howers with f.154 the Ambassador of Scotland, and lay all Night in his House.

A certayne Gentleman that hath often Accessse to 6122 Monsieur Villeroy, talking with me of that matter, sayd, it was very likely that yf a.100 the Queene renewed Frendship and Alliance with c.100 the King of Spaine and c.101 the Archduke, that 6120 the French King would seeke to do the like with m.175 Scotland.

Here is great enquiryng of me towching a.121 the Earl of Essex. I answer according to your Honor's Letters, but as little as I may. There have bin strange Bruits raised heere about that matter, but I suppress them all I may. I expect your Honor's Direction whether I shall deliver the Mony to these Italians I wrote of, or nay. For any more for the next Yeere, I can yet understand nothing, though I sollicite yt as muche as I may. So, &c.

Your Honor's most, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

I send herewith a Letter which cam out of the Low-Countries from the Master of Gray, who I understand hath had very privat Accessse with the Archeduke and Infanta, and much inward Communication with Bothwell, which is not the best interpreted.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 13th Nov. 1599. O. S.

Since my last which I sent by a Marchant called Beauois, there hath bin an Englishman with me called Eliot, who hath served in Spayne about three Yeares, and came down now in the Gallies with Spinola. This Man, partly upon Sorrow (as he pretends) for his Offence towards her Majestie, but chiefly as I conceive upon Discontentment against the Spaniards for their bad Usage of him, hath entered into Cogitation, how he might with som notable Peece of Service cancell his former Fault and purchase his Pardon, and likewise be revenged upon them. And for that purpose he hath entered into Practise with a Spaniard borne in the Indies, whose Grandfather and Father were of the fyrst Conquerors of Peru and el nuevo regno di Granada, whom he found likewise muche discontented for som privat Greevances of his owne, and for the Execution of som of his Parents about a Yeere since in the Indies. This Spaniard, as he sayeth, will deliver unto her Majestie the Meanes to possesse her of the Havana, and will undertake to performe yt with 2000 Men upon the Perill of his Life. What these Meanes are, himself will relate yf the Offer be embraced, and will for that purpose com into England with this Eliot, yf yt please her Majestie. He is now with Spinola and very inward with him, and privie to his cheefe Desfeynes; so as he will be able also do do her Majestie Service in the Discovery thereof. His Demaunds are for the present about 150 or 200 Crownes, to discharge

An. 1599. charge som Debts he hath made, and to furnish him for his Journey, which he will pretend to be into Spayne to facilitate his leave to com away, and so fyrst repayre hither, and hence into England. He demands also som Maintenance till the Action be imbraced, and suche Recompence, as her Majestie shall thinck him worthie of when yt is performed. For Eliot who is the Worker of yt, he requyres only his Pardon and Protection from Arrest for a tyme, and to be imployed in the Action yf yt proceed. Eliot pretends both to have drawn this Spaniard into these Parts, and himselve to have likewise com downe with Spino-la only for this purpose, and to have sold suche things as he hath to furnishe both the other and himselve. Therefore fynding him in som want, I have ventured a few Crownes with him to intertayne him till I hard from your Honor whether you will give any Ear to the Overture or nay, which I desyre to be with as much speed as conveniently you may.

I send you herewith a Copy of the Pope's Bull, for the authorising of an Arche-Priest in England among the Papists. Yt seemes they are growen very confident of setling there, seeing they beginne to establish an Order of Gouvernement amongst them; assuredly there Number and Hope groweth dayly. Towching Bennet the Capuchin, d. 100 the Duke of Bouillon who promised me Instructions for his Examinations, hath given me the Slipp and is gon to q. dus lb Sedan, whence he will not returne this Moneth. Therefore seeing they be here so negligent, (whom yt cheefely concernes) your Honor in my poore Opinion shall not need to be more carefull in yt. I understand that 6 120 the French King is much troubled about your w. 200 Treaty of Peace. Monsieur de la Noüe is com home out of the Low-Countries, and yt is thought he is to make som y. bcfz. dbfmembbq. ic Proposition to 6 120 the French King from a. 120 the States. l. 160 The Protestants are mightily discontented, and hardly kept from breaking out. Themselves thinke yt cannot long continue; especially seeing the Jesuits are to be restored, and 6 120 the King dayly more and more given over to l. 165 the Papists.

I can yet obtayne no Dispatche for the verifying of the Commission, and now Monsieur de Villeroy is gon to his House to solemnize the Aniversarie Obit for his Father's Deathe, and hath put me off till his returne, though I have sollicited the Chancellour and him in it almost this Moneth. Your Honor may do well in my poore Judgment, to suspend the Proceeding of our Commissioners for those Causes, till you see them here in som more Forwardness to yeeld her Majestie her due Respect, whereof I can hitherto give them but little Testimony. For my selfe also, and that which concernes my Particular, I assure your Honor I fynd as little Favour. I moved Monsieur de Villeroy almost three Weeks sence for a Discharge from Impositions in suche Provisions as I make for my House, which hath bin ordinary to all former Ambassadors, but yet I cannot obtayne yt; he doth not deny yt, but sayeth still he forgot yt. Not long sence the Lieutenant Civill cam to me, to give me Knowledge that the People murmered that I had a Sermon in my House, and that some Forayners resorted unto yt, and would needs insinuat som Danger of Mutiny that might grow thereby in the end, and therefore advised me to prevent yt. I asked him if he had any Commission from the King or his Counsaill to say any thing unto me on the matter; he sayd no, but that he spake it out of good Will, and a Desyre to prevent any Inconvenience that might happen. I told him, I did nothing but that which was warranted by the Liberty and Privilege of my Place, which had bin always enjoyed by former English Ambassadors heere, and the like by the French Ambassadors in England, and that I would not dishonour my Place, nor quitte any Privilege belonging to yt. Yf the King commaunded me to surcease, I knew what I had to do: But otherwise I purposed to continue as I had don, which was nothing, but that which my selfe in myne owne Experience had knowen former Ambassadors to do. And as for the People, I would not subject my selfe to their Passions, but looked to be protected by the King as belonged to my Place, and as he would looke that his Ambassador should be in England, where his Masse was as distastfull full to the People there, as my Sermon was here. Since I have have hard no An. 1599.

more of him.

There be many things that I have heretofore written of, wherein I expect your Honor's Direction, especially about the Delivery of this Mony I have in my Hands, the Demaund of more for the next Yeere, or at least new Assignations in place of them, which they answere were engaged to others before they were assigned to her Majesty, and the reviving of the Treaty of Bloys. And so, &c.

Your Honor's very, &c.

ABout a Moneth since I had secret Intelligence given me, that the Drapers of this Towne, Orleans, Tours, and other Citties, went about to renew the Attempt which was made the last Wynter, for the banishing of our Clothes, and all Manufactures of Wooll. "Whereupon I went to the Chauuncellour, shewing "him what Intelligence I had receaved, and praying that yf any such thinge "were proposed to the Counsaile, I might be hard for the Interest of the Queene "my Mystris, hoping I should be able to shew sufficient Reasons, why yt could "neyther be honorable nor profitable for the King and his Realme, to make any "such Prohibition. The Chauuncellour answered, That to his Knowledge there "was noe such thinge proposed yet in Counsaile; and yf yt should be, he assured me I should be made acquainted with yt, and hard in any thing I would "propose; and should always fynd, that the King and his Ministers would have "a due regard of the Queene my Mystris, and of the Amitie and Entercours "betwene their Realmes and Subjects." Notwithstanding, I am now againe freshly advertised, that yt is very hotly laboured, and favoured by some Persons that have Credit with the King. I meane to deale with all the Cheefe of the Counsaile about yt out of hand; and with the King himselfe as soon as he returns from Monceaux, which will be within these fyve Dayes.

In the meane tyme I thought yt not amisse to give your Honor to understand of yt, and to desire to be directed how I shall carry my selfe in my Opposition to yt, yf I fynd that yt be likely to passe. Yt were good in my poore Opinion, that the Ambassador there might understand, (by Speeches geven out underhand) that yf yt proceede, the Queene will revoke her Subjects from trading in these Parts, or at least forbidd the bringing in of any Frenche Commodities into England, which is a thing they will never endure.

This Morning before he tooke his Journey, the King gave Audience to the Ambassador of Savoy, who came to advertise him, that for some Occasions the Duke had put off his Journey for fifteen Dayes. He intends to com with a great Trayne as I understand, and for that purpose hath given Ordre to all the Principall Gentlemen of Savoy to put themselves in a readines to attend him.

The Discontentment in the Low-Countries of the Archduke's syde is sayd to be accommodated, and that the Countrie is contented the Spaniards shall remaine there one Yeere, to see yf a Peace may be concluded in the meane tyme. Our English Fugitives are all turned over into Spayne for their Pensions, and dismissed only with some three Moneth's Pay to a Man, instead of all Arrerages due unto them. I call upon the verifying of the Commission every Day, but they make little the more haste for any thing I see.

The King's Procureur would fayne have the Commission established at Paris; but yt were to loose much tyme, in the nominating and allowing of new Commissioners; and I have a very good Conceyte of the fyrst President of Rouen that he is very well disposed to do us Justice, being both a very honest and a wise Man,

An. 1599. and not many of better Reputation in all France of his Coate. And for my Assistance, I am not so farre off, but I shall be able to afford yt them well inoughe. I wrote unto your Honor so lately by my Secretary, (to whom I gave also in charge to deliver some things by Mouth,) that I have not muche more to trowble you with now. And therefore humbly beseeching the Continuance of your Favour towards me, whereupon I do only depend, I humbly take my leave.

Your Honors very, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 19th Nov. 1599. O. S.

UPON the Receyt of your Letters of the 28th of October, I sent for Magdalena to treat with him about the making over of the Mony, wherein I found him dearer then the other Italians I had before spoken with, for he made difficultry of receaving yt, without Allowance of Two-pence upon every French Crowne for the Exchange; but in the end we concluded for Three-halfe-pence upon the Crowne, and so I have delivered him seventeene thousand and twenty Crownes, for which he is to pay fyve thousand Pound Sterling in this sort, viz. three thousand Pound within twenty Days after the Sight of his Bill, and the two thousand within fytie Dayes after Sight, which is a Moneth after the fyrst. Spedier Payment I could not get at his Hands, so I have sent your Honor his fyrst Bills heere inclosed, reserving the second for more Surety till another tyme. Because I found that by the Bond the Mony was to have bene payd to the Lord Treasurer, and I have received no other Direction, I caused the Bills to be made in the same sorte. For the other two thousand nyne hundred and fowrescore Crownes, I detayne two thousand Crownes with your Honor's liking, which is payed I hope ere this tyme. And I have made bold to detayne the other 980 Crownes now, and have given Order for the Payment of yt, at the tyme that Corsini payeth in his second Somme, which I hope will be all one to her Majestie, and will save her 20 Nobles losse in the making over, and me as muche in the returne; wherefore I hope her Majestie will not disallow of my doing in yt. When this is all discharged, because I take it that I stand accountable for this Mony, and subject to the last Statute, I beseeche your Honor to favour my poore Estate so muche, as I may receive a sufficient Discharge for yt. Wherin, as in my former Requests of like Favour, I humbly pray you not to conceave me to have eyther so little good Manners or Discretion, as to desyre your Honor's further Trowble then your good Word and Recommendation to my Lord Treasurer by whose Order yt must be done, and to whom I will use (as I have don) all meanes to procure yt; having for that purpose, before my comming over, authorised one under my Hand and Seale to demaund and receive my Intertaynement and other Allowances, and to sollicite the Dispathe of my Busines there.

I wrote unto your Honor in my last by Mr. Lock, that I understood the Drapers went about to procure a Prohibition of bringing into this Realme any Clothes or Manufactures of Wooll; I was since with Monsieur de Villeroy about yt, " who confessed that suche a Matter had bin offred to the Counsaill, but in no
" Likhhood or Forwardnes to be accepted. I prayed him to consider, how con" trary yt would be to that Promise and Offer which the King himselve, and he
" in the King's Name had so often made me, not only to continue all former " Treaties made with her Majestie, but to make the Bonds of Amitie streighter
" yf need were; whereas this debarring of our Traffic, were rather to cutt off
" the Roote and Foundation of all true Friendship. He bidd me assure my selfe,
" that before any thing should be concluded in yt to the Prejudice of the Queene
" or her Subjects, I should be called to yt, and hard as I desyred at full; but his “ Opinion was, yt should never com so farre. This Speeche ended, I mooved An. 1599.
" Opinion

 “ him about the Captayne which was slayed at Treport by Mr. Houman's Pro“ curement, that he might receave some Punishment for example; and like“ wise in generallitic, towching those which served the Enemies against us, bothe
 “ as Captaynes, Souldiours, and Pilotts, that they might be revoked by some “ publique Proclamation, and all other forbidden to take any suche Course “ hereafter. For the Captayne he answered, that the King had written to do “ Justice upon him yf he were found faultie; but no particular Prooffe coming “ against him, he was set at Liberty upon Bonds not to depart the Realme with“ out Licence: and he sayd that he marvailed there had nothing bin spoken to “ Ambassador about yt. For the publique Proclamation he did absolutely re“ fuse yt, but sayd, yf any of them cam back into France, upon Complaynte
 “ and Prooffe made against them, they should be punished. We debated the Poynt
 “ a little, I shewing how muche more the King was tyed to her Majestie then to “ the Spaniard, by reason that he had with her an Alliance defensive, and with “ him but Peace only; and yet at his Instance he had bin contented to revoke “ Monsieur de la Noüe and his Troupes from the States Service, and therefore “ he had no reason to refuse the like to her Majestie. But he persisted still in his “ former Refusall, saying, that they would performe what was spoken, but af“ ter their own Fashion, not after oures. We spake also of the matter of the “ Prize taken by those of Marseilles, wherin he sayd they had already sent
 “ the King's Answere unto their Ambassador, agreable as yt seemes with that I “ wrote by Symons. Lastly, I put him againe in mynd of the King's Promise “ of Mony this next Yeere, and prayed that her Majestie might understand what “ she might assuredly trust to, being a matter whereupon som of her Resolu“ tions might happily depend. He said he medled not with the King's Finances,
 “ and could give me no Answere in that matter; but when the King commaund-“ ed him to make any Answere, he would eyther impart yt to me, or to their “ owne Ambassador to relate.” Thus your Honor seeth how little Contenta- “ tion I can receave in any thing I propose. I am sorrie I am so unprofitable to her Majestie heere; but my Hope and humble Sute is, that she might not impute the Blame to want of Zeale or Dilligence in mee, but consider I am com hither in a tyme when the King hath no more need of her, as he hath had, and is besydes governed by those which are not the best affected to her.

The Conclusion of the King's long desyred Divorce will not be long defferred, for those which were sent to the Queene about yt, are returned fully satisfied in those Poynts they required of her. *The Nullitie is grounded upon these three Points: That they were too neere of Kynne, being in the thyrd Degree: That the Queen's Father Henry II. was Godfather unto the King, which is spirituall Alliance; and that she was inforced to the Matche by her Mother. For the fyrst there was a Dispensation from the Pope, but not sufficient in some poynt of Formallitie as they say; for the second there was no Dispensation at all; the thyrd was not knowen till now. This may serve the King's turne for the present, but God knoweth what the Consequence of it may be hereafter. The Speeche of the Matche with Florence groweth every Day colder as the King's Affection to Madamoiselle d'Entragues groweth warmer, who is now openly shewed as his Mystresse in all Meetings; and they are contented to give out Speeches out of her House, that she is with Child, which if yt prove true, your Honor knoweth what I have written heretofore, which I verily beleewe will follow.

The Duke of Savoy sets forth from Turin eyther this Day or upon Monday.
 I understand there are som Deputies expected here from the States very shortly. Monsieur de Villeroy told me he understood there were some to go thence into England, but of any to com hither he would not be acknowen. I beseeche

* Thuani Hist. lib. 123. Memoires de Sully, Vol. 1. lib. 81. Inventaire de Serres, fol. 916, 917, &c.

An. 1599. you remember what I have written of that Poynt heretofore. There is a Bruite that the Spanishe Navie is returned to Lisbone; but Monsieur de Villeroy eyther could not, or would not deliver me any Certaintie of yt. In Italie there hath bin some little styrring about the Marquiât del Finale, during the Marchese Sicknes; the Spaniards preparing to seafe upon yt after his Deathe, by Virtue of the Purchase; and the Imperialls who have certayn Garrisons there, reinforcing themselves to prevent yt, pretending yt is to devolve to the Empire after his Death; but his Recovery hath ended the Controversie for the present. There hath bin one of the Grimaldi's heere with the King from them of Genoua, his Pretext was, to demaund Recompence of som good Offices don by himselve to the King in the tyme of the League; but they which observe the King's Carriage towards suche Sutors; note, that he should not have bin so well receaved, yf he had had no other Arrand.

The Party by whom I had the Advertisement sent by my Secretary, offers yf yt please her Majestie to go to x. i. h. w. Rome in the Company of z. e. o. t. d. u. y. h. c. m. s. c. r. t. w. the Patriarche, and remaine there as long as shall be thought meete, with such Allowance as may reasonably maintaine him; I desyre your Honor's Answere in yt. Insteed of Monsieur de Rambouillet who was fyrst nominated to be Gouverneur to the young Prince of Condé, the King hath now appoynted Monsieur de Belin, who was Gouverneur of this Towne for the League, and afterwards rendred Ardes to the Spaniards, for which he should have lost his Head, which makes many marvail that he is preferred to suche a Charge.

As I was wryting hereof, there was Advertisement brought me that the Deputies from the States were arrived at Calais, with Commission to treat with this King about their Protection, which undowbtedly he will accept, to get som Entry and Footing amongst them. The Archduke fearing yt above all things, hath sent a principall Man in trust with him to Callais to meet with the Deputies, and to offer them almost la Carte Blanche, that they will not proceed in this Negotiation with France. Sir, I am bold to put you in mynd of that I have heretofore written of the Desseign of the Frenche upon this Peace; yf yt be not very warily dealt in, I feare undowbtedly yt will com to passe as I have signified, and then I dowbt our latter end will be worse than our beginning, and that in weakening one Enemy we shall set up another more dangerous. Your Honor remembers that they never put themselves into the Protection of England till both * Monsieur had discovered his Purpose to betray them, and the last Frenche King had refused them, when they offered to give themselves unto him; suche an Inclination they have had ever this way. This King, whatsoever his Meaning is, hath bin very carefull of late to furnish himself of Ordinance, and hath taken order for the casting of 50 or 60 Peeces heere in the Arsenal, whereof 30 are already cast and tryed; he hath also appoynted great Stoare of Armes to be bought in sundry Townes as I am informed, wherein he may happily have a double end, to furnish himself for all Occasions, and to disfurnish the Townes. I send this Messenger in some speed, as well that you may receive the Bills of Exchange the sooner, as also to give you Knowledge of those Matters which are here a working. And so till farther Occasion I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's most, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

* The Duke d' Alençon.

An. 1599.Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.Right Honorable,Paris the 20th of November 1599, O. S.

I Have stayed my Packet one Day after it was ready, upon an Advertifement I receaved from my Secretary, that he had met at Diepe with r.165 the States Agent returning out of the Low Countries, and that he had som Speeche with him which seems not to agree with that I have advertifed, as namely to this Effect, that a.120 the States should have a Disposition to joyne with a.100 the Queene x. rf in w.200 the Treaty, which I was willing to discover somewhat more of before I sent away my Dispathe. For the Arrivall of the Z. pt daemt feb y. r s k s m a Deputies to Calais, I cannot learne any Certaynty of yt; but yt is confirmed unto me that there are some to come, and that c.101 the Archduke hath sent one thither to meet them as I wrote. g.142 The Spanish Ambassador hath confessed that he hath had Advertifement to that Effect from c.101 the Archduke, and hath offred by a third Person whom he sent unto me to meet with me secretly, and to conferre of the means to prevent yt, supposing be like her Majestie would not be well content with yt. I put yt off upon pretext that I did not beleve there was any suche thing; but in deed I durst not venture to do yt without Warrant, not knowing how yt would be taken. But yf yt please her Majestie to give me Commission to meet him upon any suche like Overture hereafter, I hope her Service shall receave no Prejudice by yt. The Partie that came unto me upon the Message was w.209 Charles Paget. I am no way prone to beleve that which r.165 the States Agent sayd unto my Secretary, for yf a.120 the States make u.206 Peace, I see no use for him here longer then till w.200 the Treaty be finished, and for so small a tyme as that is like to be, I thinck he would not have remooved his q. h t m u l b s x n m a r c r w Wife and Familie hether, as he hath don at this instant; therefore I rather thinck yt a disguising: But of this your Honor may be perfectly informed from those Parts. In the meane tyme I hold it my duty not to neglect the Advertifement I receaved, but to acquaint your Honor with yt, especially seeing g.142 the Spanish Ambassador takes the Allarme likewise of yt. And so I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.Right Honorable,Paris 29th Nov. 1599. O S.

U Nderstanding of this Bearer, Romain's Returne, I was willing to take the Opportunitie as likewise any other that shall be offered to add somewhat to my former Advertifements; though much yt cannot be at this tyme, both by reason of my late wryting, and of an Indisposition and Infirmitie befallen me in my hearing, which hath forced me into a Course of Phisicke for these five or six Dayes past, though with littell Profit hitherto. The Substance of that I have learned since my last is this, r.165 the States Agent is com to this Towne with his Wyfe lately married and her Mother, he hath not yet bin with me though I sent to visitt him the next Day after his Returne, and receaved Word from him, that he would have seene me the morrow after: Which I note, because yt differs from the former Course he was wont to hold with mee before his going into those Parts. His common Speeche is futable to that he delivered to my Secretary for his Master's Resolution; but the contrary is assured me; and this that he delivers is supposed to be don but to indeere his Marchandise here, where yt will not be refused at any Price. Your Honor I hope remembers

M m

An. 1599. bers what Speeche I wrote la Fontaine used to me of that Matter before my comming over, and will compare that with the present Jealousies and your other Advertisements, and thereupon conclude (as you best canne) what is like to be the Sequele.

I am informed by siche as saw Monsieur de Bettunes Instructions, that there was nothing containd in them any way prejudiciall to her Majestie, but only a Commission to do Complement to that King, which had bin long omitted, and to offer the Confirmation unto that Nation of the Exemption from the Aubeine, and som other Priviledges about their Service in the Gard which they have long enjoyed. But of any League, Treaty, or Alliance to be made, or renewed betwene the tow Kings, there was not a Word: Particularly he was directed to advise that King, to hold all good Respect and Amitie with her Majestie. But withall I learne, that whether by Direction verball, or otherwise of his owne Mynd, he recommended very affectionatly unto that King the Cause of the Catholiques, and the Liberty of Relligion, which they labour for making knownen that yt would be acceptable here. Your Honor will add this to that I have heretofore advertised. f.154 The Ambassador of Scotland maketh very fayre weather to me, and seemes willing inoughe to communicate any thing he knoweth with me; but surely he doth mucche harme among those of his Nation here, labouring by all meanes to seduce them in Relligion; which he hath effected with fundry young Noblemen and Gentlemen, as namely the Erle of Southerland, the Master of Paysley Sonne to the Lord Claude Hammilton, and sondrie others, who are returned into Scotland resolute Catholiques, whereas they came out good Protestants. The Lord Hume also since his comming hether goeth openly to Masse, and now they labour to seduce the young Lord Oliphaunt, Sonne-in-law to the Lord Hume.

The Duke of Savoy will be at Orleans upon Satterday next, and comes to Fontainebleau upon Monday; whether the King removes upon Fryday next to receive him, yf he be well; but for these two Dayes he hath bin evill at ease by reason of some Surfait he tooke upon Monday, for which he hath this Day taken Phisick. Yesterday Monsieur de la Tremouille was admitted in the Parliament Payre of France.

This Day r.162 the Chancellour sent his Secretarie to visitt me, and communicated unto me an Advertisement which he understood came lately out of Spayne, that the King hath raised a new Imposition upon the Salt and some other Commodities in his Kingdom, which will amount by Estimation unto six or seven Millions; that he intends to levie thirty thousand Foote, whereof tenn thousand in Italy by Don Piedro di Medici, whom he sends thither for that purpose, and som six thousand Horse: That of these he intends to leave a good Number upon the Frontieres towards France to assure his Countrie: That with the rest he meanes to go in Person to Lisbone where his whole Navie is, the Adelantado being for certaine returned thither; that he makes an Arrest of all Shipps, and meanes to make a Fleete of one hundred and fifty Sayle wherein he intends to imbarke himselfe, as he yet gives out: That he hath likewise commaunded d'Oria to bring thither all the Gallies he can make. Of this since I received the Advertisement, I have sought to learne what I might from some of this Counsaile, but I canne heare no Confirmation: Notwithstanding comming from so good a Hand, I would not utterly contemne yt, but thought good to fend yt as I had received yt, together with my Author. I will be carefull to sifte yt as I may.

I have at length received your Honor's Letter sent by the Frencheman; he fell sick by the Way as he saythe, which made him to be so long e're he delivered yt. I received the Duplicat of yt before by Mussy, and have returned Answere unto him already. And therefore I do heare for this tyme most humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's very, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.Right Honorable,Paris, 1st Dec. 1599. O. S.

SINCE my last unto you sent by Romain, there came an Englishman hither from Brest, to advertise me, that two English Barkes, the one of Dartmouth, the other of Plimmouth, comming from Rochell, were taken by two Spanish Men of Warr which were going to Brest to fetch away certaine Spaniards which remayned there; and that the Spaniards after they had taken them, carried them with them to Brest, where upon the sute of som English Marchants, the Lientenant and Counsaile of the Towne, in the Absence of Monsieur de Sourdiac, stayed both the Prises and the Men taken in them, until the King's Pleasure were knowen, for which purpose they sent a Messenger pourposely unto the Court. Upon this Advertisement I sent to Monsieur de Villeroy and other of the Counsaile about yt, (being my selfe in Phisick, and not in case to go out of my House,) to pray them to move the King in yt; who presently gave Order that the Men should be set at Liberty, and that both the Barks and Goods should be restoared unto them. Whereof I thought fitt to give your Honor speedy Advertisement, that her Majestie or your Honor may yf yt please you take knowledge of yt unto the Frenche Ambassador there; for I perceeve they think they have don her Majestie a great Kindness in yt, and more then they were bound to doe, and perhaps will looke yt should be acknowledged by her.

The King is this Day gon to Fountainebleau to receive the D. of Savoy, who coms thither upon Munday; he would gladly, if he could patche up an accord with the King, to yeeld up the Propriety of the Marquisat, but to retayne the perpetuall Gouvernement of yt for one of his Sonnes, as the Duke of Lorraine did of Toul and Verdun; he hath also somewhat in his Fancy (as I here) about the Duchy of Milan. r. 165 The States Agent hath bin this Day with mee, and telleth me yf 6 120 the French King do not give them good assurance of Assistance, his Masters meane to Treatate, and that in Treating they will choose to do yt rather severally then joyntly; 6 120 the King differreth his Resolution, till the Matter of the Marquisat be accommodated. I thinck to renew my former Correspondencie with him, and therefore desyre your Honor's Direction how I shall comport my selfe towards him, and within what compas of Speeche I shall keepe my selfe. I canne yet learne none Confirmation from any Hand, of the Advertisement I received from r. 162 the Chancellour, which I communicated in my last; only I heare yt advowed, that the Adelantado is returned to Lisbone with his Fleet muche Weather beaten. Before my comming over your Honor willed me to indeavour to settle som Intelligence for you, with som one of the Ambassador's Companye, that went hence into Spayne. There is now offred me a very good opportunitie to do yt yf you please, for there is an ancient Acquaintance of mine that upon my Motion will pourposely put himself into his Service, and hath promised to performe carefully that I requyre of him. He hath bin a Travallour in Italy, Germany, and England, and a Souldior; so that I hold him very able for that pourpose. There remaines therefore to be knowen whether your former Desyre continue; and yf yea, what intertainement you will thinck him worthie of, and what instructions you will give him, and what addresse for the Convayance of his Letters: This must be determined without his comming thither, and with som reasonable speede, for he must take his Journey soone after the Hollidayes. And so not having any farther Matter to impart at this tyme I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's very, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir

An. 1599.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

S I R,

Paris 20th Dec. 1599. O. S.

I Might very well have bin silent at this tyme, this being a Season that affords noe great Alteration for Matters of Action, and my selfe having received noe one Letter from you of any Direction since that of the 24th of October, the other of the 28th, contayning nothing but a Duplicat of that. Yet to hold my former course, and to performe that which I take to be the Dutie of my place, I would not let this Messenger returne without some few Lines from me. The Duke of Savoy arrived at Fontainebleau upon Friday the 17th of December according to this Account. The Order taken for his receiveing and intertainment, I send you a Copie of, which was only altered in the first Poynt of his Meeting, because the Duke pourposely to prevent yt, tooke Post, and came thither early in the Morning while the King was at Masse: Upon the Tuesday after, the King brought him to this Towne, and lodged him and himselfe for two or three Nights at Zametzs House, and afterwards brought him to Madame de Nemours House, just upon the Day that the Duke of Guise was slaine, and which that House was wont to keepe very religiously: But notwithstanding the King would needs have him feasted there that Day, and Madame de Guise to be present at yt. The Duke hath lodged there ever since till yesterday; that he removed to the Louvre. d. 100 The Duke of Bouillon told my Secretarie, that c. 131 the Duke of Savoy offers to discover to 6120 the French King such Practises both against him and a. 100 the Queene, that should give him just occasion to break the Peace he hath with c. 100 Spaine, and to a. 100 the Queen, to proceed no further in the w. 200 Treaty; but before he do yt, he would be assured bothe to be supported by 6120 the French King, and that a. 100 the Queene had not gon so farre in the w. 200 Treaty, but that she might (upon this Advertisement) desist. Hereupon he motioned that I would be contented, upon a Visitation fyrst performed by the Ambassador of the Duke unto me, to go to visit the Duke. But for my part I am jealous of all that procedes bothe from d. 100 the Duke de Bouillon and c. 131 the Duke of Savoy in this Matter; therefore I resolve not to doe any thing in this Poynt without warrant. d. 100 The Duke de Bouillon sent me word, he would very shortly com unto me of purpose to conferre with me about yt. Yf his Conference yeeld any matter worthie of Advertisement, I will presently dispatche a Messenger unto you. He hath dealt to the same purpose with r. 165 the States Agent, who hath communicated yt with me, and hath promised, yf at his going to c. 131 the Duke of Savoy he can discover any thing, to acquaint me with yt. The Duke of Savoy hath offred to deliver up the Marquisat to the King, but he would gladly that the King should promise him to abandon those of Geneva, and hath bin very earnest in yt; but the King will not heare of yt by any meanes. I had some secret Understanding of yt, by the Party I sent your Honor word of by my Secretary, which I communicated to their Agent here, and gave him occasion to labour in tyme against yt.

The Sentence of the King's Divorce was pronounced upon Satterday was sevennight, and published upon Thurseday last. I wrote unto your Honor in some of my last of an Advise that was communicated to me out of Spayne; I have bin carefull to syft as muche as I might, yet the Letter yt selfe I could not see, but these Poynts were delivered me collected out of yt which I have here inclosed. This Court hath no Confirmation of any particularity, but I understand for certaine, that all the Souldiars and Mariners which returned with the Adelantado are retayned in pay, and Monseigneur de Villeroy acknowledged to a Friend of myne, that he was advertised the King of Spaine made some Preparations, but not in that Proportion that might give his Neighbours cause to feare much. Yt is holden here, that our Treaty with the Archduke groweth cold, and the like

I saw written out of the Low Countries. The Commission is now verified at length in this Court of Parlament, yf yt prove so difficile in all the other Parliaments, yt will be a long peece of Worke: And I belceve althoughe the Verification be passed, we shall fynde muche difference in the Execution. I have at lengthe with muche Opposition of the Farmers, gotten the ordinary Allowance of Impost of Wine, which former Ambassadors have had.

The Earle of Craifford is arrived here, with a Brother of the Secretarie's of Scotland. Yt is thought they are both to goe to g. 140 the Pope about the Employment I have heretofore written of. I send your Honor Copies of the King's Letters written to Brest, about the delivering of our two English Barks that were brought in thither by the Spaniards. More I have not to trowble your Honor with at this tyme, and therefore, &c.

Your Honor's very, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

Sir Henry Neville,

7th December 1599.

I Have received diverse Letters from you of late, both of the 13th, 19th, and 20th of November, to neither of which I could returne you sooner any direct Answer, and therefore do intend to lapp them all up in one Letter. In that of the 13th, the Matter that requireth fyrst Answer is concerning Eliott, of whom her Majestie understandeth, that you are perswaded he may do som Service. True yt is that he hath bin a practizing Fugitive a great while, and yet her Majestie is not so vendicative, as not to be contented to take any good colour whereupon to ground Mercy, especially to one who doth voluntarily seeke yt, and promifes to deserve yt: So as her Majestie hath commaunded me to give you Warrant in her Name to give him this Assureance, that yf he doe com into England, and as soone as he is arrived, make yt knowen that he is come from you, and directed unto me, that I will send for him to some other Place then to the Courte; where she will appoint my Lord Admirall and my selfe to conferre with him, for she would not have him com thither at fyrst; And in this fort you may assure him; and give him your Passport as her Majestie's Ambassador for his comming and going, which her Majestie meaneth to make good, and so you may be assured by this Letter, but she will send him no Pardon over. Concerning the Spaniards Offers, they are of littell vaw, and yet his Demaunds are of Charge; and therefore her Majestie meaneth to lett them alone, except he will come of his owne accord; which yf he will doe he shall come and goe safely, so he bring your Passport.

Concerning the bruits of our forwardness in Treaty, I know you cannot stopp your Eares to them; but for the matter, you may assure your selfe confidently (for I protest yt is true) that there is no one Circumstance of yt further then you know, only now Mr. Caron is arryved from the States, who have refused for this tyme to enter into any Treaty, pretending (besydes their generall Indisposition) that the Stay of the Spaniards for one whole Yeare longer in the disunit-ed Provinces (whereof they had contrary hope) doth worke in them no small difference; but seeing her Majestie intendeth in respect of her own Estate, to enter into Treaty, they must leave yt to her owne Wisdom to do what yt shall please her. So as her Majestie doth resolve presently to make answer to the Archduke, that she hath now hard from the States, whom she invited to joyne with her in the Treaty, which they having refused for this tyme, she will proceed alone; and by my next I shall advertise you what place she will treat in, and what Commissioners she will send: Of which (I protest before God) you know yet as muche as I doe.

An. 1599. For the other Poynts of the double Commission, her Majestie hath commaunded the Embassador to be spoken withall, who pretendeth that he did conceive, that Commissions in severall Places, would have bin most beneficiall for her Majestie's Subjects, especially because the Jealousies of one Courte of Parlament above another is fuche, as Justice would often tymes be the harder administred, when yt should appeare that one Place should draw away the Resorte to the other. But he concluded, that he would wryte againe thither in fuche sorte, that any fuche Courte may be taken as you shall like of. For the second Poynte that you suspected, concerning the Bannishment of our Cloathes, the contrary is assured here by him, so as that matter is at an end. For the matter of Marseilles the Bearer hereof Mr. Winwood was called to the Consultation, who can so well deliver you all Particulars, as I will leave yt to his Relation.

And now Sir to come to the Report of the Low Countries Agent delivered to your Secretary, and to divers other Advertisements from divers Parts of the World where I hold correspondencie; Yt may playnely appeare, that now they thinke the matter groweth ripe, all States that have Interest relatively in these late Diffensions betwene Spaine and England, doe beginne to play their Parts, every one in their severall quarter; and to that end, do seeke to sow suche bruits, as they may thinck may best concurre with their owne particular ends. But I doe see, and so doth her Majestie, that though you must heare and advertise all, yet you can well make judgement, what is probable, and what is delivered to serve turnes. And therefore her Majestie hath commaunded me to let you know, that she likes well that you should have Conference with the Spanish Ambassador, so that you do cary the same in fuche forme, as that the World may see that yt is not you that seeke him, but rather he you. You must therefore observe in dealing with him these Cautions, fyrst to hear him what he would propound and what he would reveale, without propounding any thing unto him, more then to confirme unto him this, that her Majestie doth hate fraudulent Dealing; and though her Injuries, even personall to her Lyfe, might have bin sufficient to have hardened her Hart against all Reconsiliation, yet seeing she hath gone thus farre, upon an opinion that there is Fayth meant to her, she will give Eare and Faythe in respect of the publick good of Christendome, wherein so much blood may be saved; and you may assure him she meaneth all Sinceritie. Yf he shall seeke to speake broadly of the Frenche King unto you, you shall passe yt over, and only conclude, that the amitie of Burgundie hath ever bin formerly more firme and sollide then the Frenche, and that so we may be dealt withall, as we shall esteeme yt above any Frenche in the World. Yf he shall aske what her Majestie meaneth to doe, and when she will send to Treat, or upon what Conditions she will conclude; you may narratively tell him how things have hitherto past, and that her Majesty having hard from her Confederats that they dare not as yet enter into any Treaty, because they have bin soe often deceived, but will forbear a while untill they see some tryall what Fayth will be kept with her, (marking already how at fyrst they have broken Promise for the Demission for the Spaniards now at the Entry of the Archduke;) That in respect of this Answer, her Majestie for the present canne presse them noe further; but will send over now, to agree of the Tyme, Place, and Personns for her selfe to Treat. In this manner you may cary your selfe, and for the particular Conditions, yf he will lett fall any thing to you what he thincks will be required, you may heare yt; but to seeme to understand what the Queene will stand upon, you may avoid yt: Only this, that she will never yeald to any thing that shall be dishonorable.

Concerning the point of Reinboursement, I have perused the State of the Debts, and I do fynd some of good ancient Date, and therefore am easily induced to believe he will not be very quick in Payment; but surely yf the Debt might be payd by 100000 Pounds a Yeare, I would her Majestie had geven after tenne in the hundred to receive yt so; or yf a lesse Somme of necessitie, then so ratible for any Sommes she shall receive. Wherein, (according to your Secretarie's Speche with me) I fynd her Majestie well inclined to referre the Offer to your Discretion) and with whom to deale in that Nature, she knowing that suche Fashions must be followed in that Place. An. 1599.

Speche

I saw a particular Letter written to your Uncle Killegrew, wherein I see you have animum revertendi, for which I cannot blame you, but will to my power assist you; although I may not allow all your Reasons, for where you thinck you are of no use to her Majestie, nether she nor the World hath cause to thinck so, unlesse yt be of noe use to be well served, when of necessitie she must be served. Thus have you answered to the maine Poynts of your Letters, which I protest I could not sooner send you, though you will hardly beleve yt. But I am of Opinion your owne Secretary will report unto you how busy a tyme we fynd yt. And thus with my affectionat Commendations to my Cosen I take my leave.

From the Court
at Whitehall.

Your affectionate Kinsman, &c.

RO. CECYLL.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

My good Cosen,

28 Dec. 1599.

I Have now sent over this Bearer with this Dispatch, to acquaint you with her Majestie's Proceedings in the matter of Treaty, having otherwise advertysed you before of all things necessary. The States, whom her Majestie made acquainted with her purpose to treat, have by Mr. Caron absolutely refused to treat. Her Majestie promised (as you know) to send over Word to the Archduke upon that Answer, both when, and in what sort she would treat; according to which Promise, now at last her Majestie hath sent Mr. Edmonds to him with a Letter of Credit, and with this Instruction: That he shall impart unto the Archduke the States Refusal, that her Majestie is forrie for yt, but cannot compell them; that now her Majestie is resolved to appoint Commissioners for her selfe to treat. And in the matter, fyrst to propound unto him, whether Commissioners should not be sent hether unto her Majestie, seeing he is a thyrd Person in the Treaty, and under qualified to her as Queene of England, that yt was also once so offered. Secondly, That yf she shall treat in France as a Newtrall, she must sue and trouble the Frenche King for a Place; the which (besydes Consumption of Tyme) will be subject to other Circumstances. Upon this point her Majestie hath willed him very formally to insist, but yet I thinck good to let you know, he hath provisionall secret Instructions not to come away yf they should utterly mislike yt, but rather to yeald to treat in France; and then immediately after his Dispatch at Bruxelles, to make his Repayre towards you at Paris, and so to the King: Where he hath Letters of Credit likewise to him, to demaund Bulloyne for a place nearest the Sea-coast of England; with all which Directions he is to make you particularly acquainted, and with all things else. Till which tyme you may please to forbear to take any more notice of this Particular to any body there: For Mr. Edmonds, that is imployed thether, went away but on St. Stephen's Day, and staves at Calais for a Passport from Bruxelles for his safe comming; so as yt will be near 20 Days before he can be with your Lordship there, yf they should by deniall, force him to go to the King for the Meeting in France; which (under Secrett be yt spoken) the Queene would fayne avoyde, because she would not have the Frenche King send Commissioners. In short this is all the Substance of her Majestie's sending, eyther publickly or particularly in the matter; so as whatsoever you heare, yet believe that you know all that is.

For Matters of Ireland they are as my Lord of Effex left them, and the Queene sends over the Lord Mountjoy as Deputy, with a good and powerfull Armye of

An. 1599. 13 or 14 thousand Men, but not with such superfluitie of extraordinarie Officers as went before. For himselfe, his Case and his Punishment is at a stand. He hath bin very sicke, but is now well amended; and though I cannot certifie you of any other hard or severe Course intended against him, yet I assure you the Queene holds a very strict hand over him, and doth exceeding sharply throw all her late Misfortunes upon him in Ireland; which though yt was heavy to him at his fyrst Apprehension, because he had disobeyed her Commandements, yet yt had some Qualification, because his Lordship alleaged, that the Counsaill of Ireland had advised him to that Jorney into Munster, which did overthrowe the Service; which now they have all with one Voice utterly disavowed, as a thing never perswaded or allowed of by them. And thus in haste I end

From the Court
at Richmond.

Your very loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 28th Dec. 1599. O. S.

According to your Honor's Direction, I have geven a Passeport unto this Bearer Mr. Elliott, and have also delivered him for his Maintenance heere (till your Direction came for his Jorney into England) 80 Crownes, without which he had not bin able to have sturred out of this Towne. I was willing to give him this meanes to come unto your Honor, because I have perceaved by some Conference with him, that he is able to discover muche of the Enemies Purposes against us. Her Majestie and your Honor will be pleased I hope to give an Example in this Man, that may provoke others to offer the like Service and Submission hereafter, wherein also my Credit is ingaged, which I humbly beseeche you to have a regard of, that others may not be discouraged from treating in like kind with me. I thinck not fitt to write any more by this Party, but referre all other Matters to my Dispatches, which shall be sent shortly. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 3^d Jan. 1599. O. S.

Since my last Letter unto your Honor, because I had not seene the King a good while I tooke occasion to pray Audience, though I had no great matter to deale with him of. " At my Accesse unto him, fyrst I gave him " Thancks for the Favour he shewed to the Englishmen which were taken by " the Spaniards and brought to Brest, assuring him that her Majestie had received very great Contentment thereof, as of a certaine Argument of his Friendship and good Affection towards us, which she held more deare then the " Friendship of any other Prince in the World; and that for her part, knowing " that Amitie is preserved by the same meanes yt is bredde, she would also " strive to correipond in all good Offices towards him; as being assuredly perswaded, that this good Union and Intelligence betwene them, would breede " both Honor, Safetie, and Contentment unto them both. I said, I doubted " not but he was of the same Mynd, and in that Confidence I would be bold to " remember him of some Poynts wherein I conceived there was some Default on " the part of his Subjects and Ministers, which I trusted he would give order to " reform, “ reform, according to his good Intention which he had often declared unto me. An. 1599.

 “ Fyrst I told him, yt was an ordinary matter for his Subjects to serve in Dun- “ kerke Shippes against us, and that by meanes of their Skill and Knowledge of “ both Coasts, and the favorable Accesse and Retraict which they found in the “ Havens and maritime Townes of France, they had geven the Enemies oppor“ tunitie to do us muche more harme then otherwise they could have done :
 “ Which being so directly contrarie to the Treaties he hath with her Majestie,
 “ and namely to that of 1596 made by himselfe, I prayed him to do as muche
 “ for her Majestie, as he had don for the King of Spainne this last Sommer in like “ case, though with lesse Obligation by Treaty ; namely to revoke those which “ were there, and to forbid all other to serve them any more, against the Sub- “ jects of the Queene my Mistrisse. For the second, I prayed him to remember,
 “ that yt was more then a Yeere since that her Majestie, at the Instance cheefe“ ly of his Ambassador, had established an absolute and sufficient Commission to “ heere and determine marine Causes, which had bin seriously travailed in, and “ good Justice done to divers of his Subjects, to the Contentment of his Amba“ sador ; as he had acknowledged to her Majestie and her Counsaile ; that the like “ was promised to have bin established on his part from the beginning, yet that “ at my fyrst comming into France I found nothing don in yt ; but that after “ some Pursute thereof made by me, yt pleased him at lengthe to graunt suche
 “ a Commission, which being taken to be, as absolute and as sufficient Power as “ the Queene’s was, and that there would have bin no Opposition in the Execu“ tion of yt, there came some over hither to pursue a Complaint before these “ Commissioners against some of Crottoy ; and that entring into the Cause, in the “ very beginning they found the Commission insufficient for want of Verifica- “ tion in the severall Parlements, and the Commissioners Precepts were abso“ lutely refused to be obeyed. That hereupon I had sued above three Moneths “ to have yt verified only in this Parliament, which was scarce yet effected as “ yt should be ; the poore Complaynants being driven to attend here in the “ meane tyme at an excessife and unnecessary Charge, which would deterre all “ others to come to sue for Justice heere, and so hinder the good Intention both “ their Majesties had to reforme those Abuses, and to settle a good Amitie and “ Agreement betwene their Subjects, by removing all suche Causes of Difference “ and Discontentment : Therefore I prayed him to give Commandement, that “ the Commission should be verified in all the Parlements out of hand, and that “ Justice should be ministred with Expedition, to suche as came to complaine.
 “ The King answered to the Thancks I gave him, that he would be ever found
 “ as ready as he had now bin, to give the Queene and her Subjects all good “ Contentment, and that he hoped the Queene would now remitte her Anger
 “ she had conceived, because he had not delivered her the Irishmen which she “ demaunded.” To that I could replie nothing, because I neither knew what “ he had answered the Queene in that point, nor what she had thereupon sayd to “ his Ambassador. “ To the fyrst of my Demaunds, he said he would do it with- “ out Difficultie,” for those were his Words ; which I noted the rather, because “ I found Monsieur de Villeroy before so peremptorie against yt. “ To the se“ cond he also promised all Contentment, although he sayd the Proceeding in “ England was nothing solide, but that he would do that which belonged to him “ notwithstanding ; and the Fault, yf any were, should be on our syde. Lastly, “ after his Answer to these Poynts, I told him I must be bold to put him in “ mynd againe of her Majestie’s great Expence this last Yeere, which was not “ like any whit to diminish this Yeere, seeing the Trowbles of Ireland were in “ all appearance like to continue. And I therefore prayed him to remember his “ Promise made me at Bloys, to give her Majestie some ample Contentment of “ that she had demaunded of him ; and that he would shew himselfe suche to “ her in her Occasions, as she had bin to him in his, and not to blemishe the “ glorious Memorie which he should otherwise leave to all Posteritie with this “ one Spott, to have too little regarded, or too ill requited, the worthiest and “ faythfullest

An. 1599. " faithfullest Freend that ever Prynce had. And I prayed him to confider, " that by his dealing herein with her Majestie, the World would ground a Judge- " ment, how to esteeme and vallow his Frendshipp towards others. In parti- " cular, I desyred him to streine himselfe to pay her some round Som of Mony " this Yeare, that she might be the better inabled to make a short end of her " Trowbles, and have the lesse occasion to presse him hereafter. To this he an- " swered shortly, that he was about yt, and would doe the uttermost he could " for her Majestie's Satisfaction; acknowledging himselfe infinitely beholden to " her, and that he would ever remaine her Serviteur." Then demanding of her Majestie's good Healthe, without any other Questions or Discourse he dismissed me, (because the Nuncio was likewise attending for Audience) willing me to deliver a Note to Monsieur de Villeroy of the Points I had proposed, which I have don accordingly.

Of the Duke of Savoie's Treaty with the King I canne wryte you noe Certaintie; many Offers have bin made by the Duke, but all so, as he would not depart with the Marquisat. They have bin sometimes at the very point to agree, but after have broken off againe. Upon Munday last the King went a hunting, leaving the Duke behynd him, and came not hither againe till yesternight. In the mean time the Duke made shew of much Discontentment, and as yf he would take his leave of the King as soone as he returned. Notwithstanding the Opinion is, they will accord in the end to this Effect; that the Duke shall retayne the Marquisat, and rendre in exchange to the King all Bresse, and the Valley of Barcellonetta, and re-edifie at his owne Charges Centall, a Frontire Towne of Provence, which he had surprised during these Warres, and demolished. This Men gather, by reason of the King's Disposition, which seemes wholly bent to take his Ease and Pleasure, and to shunne all Occasions that may divert him from yt. On the other syde, the Duke of Savoy speakes highe about the leaving of the Marquisat, and sayeth, he will rather make yt the Tombe of himselfe and all his Race. By this your Honor may see, that I conceived aright of those Overtures which I signified were made by him at his fyrst comming, wherin I wonder d. 100 the Duke of Bouillon could be so abused, unles I should thinck rather that he had a purpose to abuse me in yt.

Our Advertisements of the Preparations in Spaine do still continue among the Marchants which have responce there, who have lately received advise not to be hastie in sending some Commodities thither which they intended to do, because there is little Mony stirring there, by reason of the Fleete and great Preparations which are now making there. Notwithstanding, the Gouvernor of Diepe told me yesterday, that he hath Newes that a Shippe of his which hath bin detayned there the last Yeere is now released absolutely, and many other likewise by the King's expresse Commaundement, the Adelantado refusing before the Commaundement came, to discharge any, but upon sufficient Bond to returne to his Service, yf he did require yt. I send you also inclosed an Extract of a Letter out of Spayne, importing the great Scarcitie of Mony and almost impossibilitie of making any great Preparations; yet as I sayd, the Marchants here have contrary Advise, and the Opinion is, that the King of Spaine doth not intend Peace: But of that I doe assure my selfe, your Honor hath better Meanes to judge then they here. And for his Preparations, (which are the best Discouersours of his Intention) I suppose your Honor is also very perfectly advertised, by such Meanes as I know you have employed for yt: Yet I thinck yt my Duety also to adde what I can learne or here thereof.

The Irishemen that live in this Towne and the Low Countries, give out very confident bruits, of the great Weakenes of her Majestie's Forces there, and the Strengthe of the Rebels; of Tiron's Resolution to pursue the Warre, till he have established the Catholique Relligion, and of his purpose to approche the Warre to the Gates of Dublin. Their Intelligence yt seemes they receive from some Jesuits there, and namely from one Fitzsimon resyding in Dublin. Those which are well affected to the Queene in these Parts, wishe these trowbles ended ed with any Conditions, saying that whatsoever she graunt now to establish her Peace, she shall not want just Pretexes to revoke when she is ready for yt; and in the meane tyme they say she shall secure her Estate, from the greatest dishonour and danger that yt was subject to since her Raigue. These discourfes I cannot refuse to heare, proceeding as I am perswaded of good Affection, and I thinck yt my Ducty to relate them, although I know that her Majestie is so wise, as she needs no suggestions from hence, or any Place.

Our Advertifements here out of the East Parts are, that the Cardinal Battory, to whom the Prynce of Transylvania resigned his Country, is defeated in Battail by the Wayvode of Vallachia, and in his Flight drowned in a River he sought to passe: And that the Treaty of Peace, betwene the Turke and the Emperor, is resumed againe. Out of Germany we heare, that the Protestant Princes, apprehending the dishonour they received the last Sommer, resolve to recover their Reputation this Yeere; and that some other Princes which withdrew themselves then; are now contented to joyne in the Action: Particularly, that the Duke of Brunswick is most sensible of the Disgrace, and hath executed divers of the Commaunders of his Troupes about yt. The Duke of Wirtemberg upon a Jollitic, is gone to Rome to the Jubilee. There is like to be some trouble againe about the Bithopricks of Strasbourg.

I was bold by my Secretary to moove your Honor againe about Charles Paget, and upon the Report he hath made me of your Answer, I am bold now once more to recommend yt unto you, being fully perswaded he may be of very great use unto her Majestie's Affayres; and where she may reape more advantage by his restoring then his rejecting, I should thinck yt most honorable for her to do that, by which she should receive most good. Befydes he hath done me many good offices here, hoping he might receive som comfort by my Mediation unto your Honor. And many more will do the like to me, and those that shall succeed, yf they fynd his course to speed well. But yf they once see wee have no credit, nor power to do them any good, they will all forsake us, and deale noe further with us. Therefore sometimes to give a Minister that grace, cannot prejudice her Majestie's Affayres, but rather further them. I humbly beseeche your Honor therefore at my sute, to moove her Majestie once more about him. As for his Land which he seekes to be restored unto, yt is but a State for his Lyfe which the Queene hath in yt, and yt is now let since yt cam into her Majestie's Hands for lesse then a hundred Pound: So that upon the matter that which her Majestie should depart with, would be but as a Pension of suche a value.

Touching the Enterview betwene g. 142 the Spanish Ambassador and me, I heare noe more of yt. The Jealousie belike is past for this tyme, but yf the like occasion be offered againe, now I understand her Majestie's Pleasure, I will imbrace yt, and gouverne my selfe as I am directed. My Secretary tells me, that your Honor referres to my Discretion the imploying of x. dowlhy. nwkmcwchfz. kbit the Cordelier to Rome yf I thinck him faythfull. For that point I dare undertake, for he is secretly of the Relligion, and meanes ere long to declare himselfe; and in the mean time is willing to do suche Service, as he may deserve somewhat to stay himselfe upon, when he shall retyre hence. I do therefore determine to use him, and will send him away very shortly in the Company of eotduq. igtbgown the Patriarche.

For the Practises which I imparted to your Honor by my Secretary, I have a very extraordinary meanes offered me of late to discover them, which I will communicate when I have a fitt Messenger. In the meane tyme I humbly beseeche you, that what I shall wryte thereof at any tyme, may not be communicated but to her Majestie alone, and that yt will please your Honor, to reserve those Letters in your own Custody; for seeing her Majestie's gracious Pleasure is to have that Confidence in me which your Honor wrytes, (for which I humbly kisse her Royall Hands) I will indeavour with all Faythe and Dilligence to answer her Expectation, and to serve her without respect of any hazard; and I hope I shall be able

An 1599. to discover somewhat worth the knowing. This Day Monsieur d' Aliencourt hath taken his Journey towards Rome, to thanck the Pope for his Favour don the King about his Divorce. In his way he is to visit the Gran duca, and his Niece the Prin cesse, of whose Matche with the King there is now freshe Speeche againe. And so, &c.

Your Honor's most, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

From the Lords of the Privy Council to Sir Henry Neville.

27th November 1599.

AFTER our hartie Commendations to your good Lordship. You shall understand by the Petition we do now send unto you, exhibited unto us by her Majestie's Subjects, that do trade unto Rochell, that there is a suddaine and severe Course taken against them by them of Rochell, and such as is contrary to the Treaties and Amitie betwene those tow Crownes. Yt seemeth straunge unto us, that such strict Orders should be taken by that Towne against our Marchants, which of all other Places hath bin most beholding to her Majestie and unto the Cytie of London. Therefore we dowbt not but when the King shall be acquainted with the same, yt will greatly be to his Misliking, which her Majestie's Pleasure is you shall at your next accessse for Audience make knowne unto him; and how the same is not only contrarie to the good Intelligence that is betwene the two Realmes, but directly against the Treaties; and therefore to require him to give present Order, that this their uncivill Decree may be repealed, and our Marchants permitted to trafficque and negociat their Busines by their Factors, and to abyde and remaine their as they have heretofore accustomed, and doe in Roan and in other Cityes of France, where they have entercourse of Trafficque; and not to be limited and restrayned to a certaine tyme to sell their Goods and dispatche their Busines, which cannot but be greatly prejudiciall unto them. We leave yt to your Care and Discretion to sollicite this Matter (being of Moment, and the president very prejudiciall) with that Instance you shall thinck fitt, and to certifie unto us the Order that the King shall take to redresse the same. So we bidd your Lordship very hartily farewell. From the Court at Whitehall.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

S I R,

9th January 1599.

IT may appeare to you by my Letters by Mr. Winwood, within what lymitts her Majestie directed you for Conference with the Spanishe Ambassador, from whom her Majestie was and is contented you should receive any Overtures, so yt be of his seeking and not yours. Concerning the Point for the Duke of Savoy her Majestie wisheth also that you should retayne the same Observations, for by hearing can her Majestie receive no Prejudice; neither is it inconvenient; yf he will seeme to make any Profession of respect to the Queene, that you doe with dew Compliments receive them; and professe, that you are so well acquainted with her Majesties Mynd towards all Prynces that professe honorable Regard towards her, as you both will be gladd to relate any good Office of his; and dare assume, that her Majestie will be ready to requyte them with princely Correspondency. But Sir I feare the meane of this Overture hath his particular
Dryft

Dryft in this, to nourish or create some Dissidencie, of which kind of Artifices you know he is very full. For any Newes since my last we have here none, all things being yet as my last Dispatch left them. From Calais only Mr. Edmonds wrote to me, that he had received a Passport from Bruxelles, with which he passed from thence the 2^d of January, so as he is long since there. And thus for this tyme I committ you to God.

Your loving Kinsman, &c.

From the Court.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 14th of January 1559, O. S.

I Wrote unto your Honor in my last, that I had light upon a very extraordinary Meanes to discover the Practises x.r.f in m.175 Scotland. And surely I doe for my part, acknowledge yt to proceede from the same miraculous Favour of God which he hath so often shewed towards her Majestie, being otherwise a thing that noe Witt nor Industry of Man could have projected, the matter is this. One of the x.i.w.z.stkktbpuq.gtudie g.140 Referendaries to the Pope of principall Credit and Estimation, wrote a Letter unto lby.mbskmsd an Italian in this Towne whom he hath knowen long, whereof this is an Abstract which I send here inclosed, for as muche as concerns that Matter. The Party, having been 7 or 8 Yeares in England, and bearing some Affection to our State, and perhaps loking for some Reward; but especially as I conceive guided by the very hand of God, and by the happy Destiny of her Majestie, came to me, and communicated the whole Letter unto me, offering to entertayne the Matter yf I would, and to reveale from tyme to tyme unto me the whole Proceeding in yt. I embraced the Offer very willingly, as I had cause; and the better to enable him to make suche a Relation of England as might give them liking of him, and induce them the rather to imploy him, I have furnished him with some Notes which he hath already sent away, offering his Service further as they shall please to command yt. He makes full accownt to be used in this Busines: By meanes whereof wee shall be able to discover their whole Deseignes, which surely are worth the harkening after, and further advanced I feare then is conceived. I have promysed the Party, yf he performe what he pretends, that he shall be rewarded according to the Importance of the Service. In the meane tyme he shall receive some remembrance from me, to intertayne him in good Devotion to pursue yt. This Party is Nephew unto one q.kcgitblgt Portinari, who some tyme served her Majestie as an Engeynier in the beginning of her Raigne, and wrote a Booke (as this Man tells me) of the meanes to reduce Ireland to perfect obedience; which was written out in this Man's Hand, and delivered unto my Lord your Father, when he was Secretary. I beseeche you to insert these Characters following into your Cifte, r.163 to serve for the Fryar whom I imploy; l.163 for the Party from whom I had this inclosed Letter; and m.177 for Roome, for of these I shall have often occasion to wryte hereafter. This Negotiation being once begoune, I may manage yt as I will, and therefore I desyre that yt would please your Honor to give me suche Directions as you shall thinck fitt for my proceeding in yt. I have not yet hard of Mr. Edmonds since he went from Calais, yf I have noe Newes of him this Weeke, I shall imagine him to be returned into England; but otherwise yf the Treatie proceed heere, and yf your Honor commes over about yt, (as all Men conceive you shall) I shall take yt for a great Honor yf I may be permitted to wayte upon you wheresoever yt be: Which I thinck I may very well doe, for here will be noe suche great Busines for me in the meane tyme, but that I may be well inough spared. I hope Captayne Elliott be long ere this arryved in England, I dispatch-

ed

An. 1599. ed him hence the Morrow after our Chrystmas-day. I fend here inclosed the second Bill of Exchange to Corsini, for the 5000 Crowns he is to pay her Majestie.

The King and the Duke of Savoy are not yet accorded, they rather seeme to grow every day the farther off. Presently after his Departure, the King intends a posting Journey to Calais, and the Frontier Townes thereabouts: And towards the Springe Men talke already of a Journey to Lions and Marseilles, supposing the Treaty of Marriadge with the Princes of Florence will be well advanced by that tyme. I heere that Monsieur de Syllerie shall goe to Florence about yt, presently after the Arrivall of Monsieur d'Aliencourt at Roome. By my next I hope to fend you the Conclusion of this Treaty for the Marquisat, or that yt is broken of; but I think rather the former, for what shews soever they make to the contrary, I assure my selfe they both desyre an accord.

I have sollicited Monsieur de Villeroy for some Resolution in the Poynts I proposed to the King in my last Audience, but he excuseth himself yet upon this other Busines with the Duke of Savoy. Yf her Majestie would be pleased to wryte unto the King somewhat earnestly about the Mony, I veryly thinck some good would be donne: In the meane tyme I will not desist to urge yt as I may.

The Lord Hume, who was gon out of this Towne towards Italie (as he pretended,) is retourned againe, and as I learne hath bin at Brussels. Yt is more then tow Moneths, since I was advertised that he was reconcyled (by Parsons's interposing) with the Earle Bothwell. I did not then much credit yt, but this Journey of his to Brussels, where Bothwell is, makes yt more probable; besides the Confirmation I received lately of yt by a Scottish Nobleman here. Yf this Reconciliation be true, there is a Mystery in yt, and yt is not donne without the Privitie of f.150 the Scots King, for there are non greater with him then the Lord Hume, and his Uncle Sir George Hume. In summe Sir by all Advertisements I receive, I fynd a great Concurrence towards some Alteration in those Parts, and many are wonne to the adverse Syde; which will not declare themselves till the instant, and in the meane tyme hold false Fellowship with our Syde, to doe the greater harme. I hope to discover more dayly. And soe, &c.

Your Honors very, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 25th Jan. 1599. O. S.

SINCE my last, which I sent by my Brother Trelawny, I have dispatched r.163 the Fryer mentioned in my last Letter q.ic.m.177 to Rome. Before his Departure I caused him to make streight Acquaintance with som doc iud Scottes heere, whom I suspected to be Practizers in the Busines I have so often written of; which was easie for him to doe, because they perceaving the Credit he had with z. eot duy. bcm scrt the Patriarch, were very glad to becom inward with him, hoping to make good use of him towards the other I last mentioned. In this Confidence (he having governed himself discreetly, and seeming very zealous and passionat in the common Cause) they have opened themselves in generall termes very farre unto him, and confirmed all that I have heretofore advertised, and have given him Letters of speciall Recommendation to Rome. The Letters he brought to me, which I perusing, I tooke Copie of one of them which I fend here inclosed, fynding yt to import more then the rest. And perceaving that the Wryter had willed his Freend to communicatt their Cifre unto him when he came there, I caused him, under Pretence of his Desyre to wryte from Lions, where x. dow gm q. igt lgow the Patriarch was to make som Stay, to demaund a Cifre of him; whereupon he gave him the very same that he had used in his Letter, by meanes whereof I cam to read yt: which I have the

the rather noted to your Honor, that you may Judge by this Beginning, both of his Dexteritie and Faythfulnes. I have willed him to certifie what he can learne both by i.w.u.z. f.w.h.l.f the Scots, with whom he is like to have great Confidence by reason of the Commendation he carieth, and likewise by y.h.t.w.m.d.u.k.m.a.t the English, of suche Poynts as I have given him Instructions of. And yf any of them lyst to wryte hither, I have willed him to offer his Meanes of conveying their Letters, which they will never distrust; and thereby their Letters will fall into my Hands: So that befor May-Day, I am in hope your Honor shall know the very Secrett of their Dessignes. I have given him for his Journey and Maintenance for a tyme 25 l. Sterling, and besydes furnish'd him of a Horse which cost 15 l. I have promised him 150 Crowns a Yeere while he remaines there; and upon his Returne, when he shall be mynded to declare himselfe, I have undertaken that her Majestie will bestowe a Prebend or som suche other Meanes of Maintenance upon him to live upon, so he performe this Service faythfully. In perusing the Names for the which he useth Speciall Characters in the Ciffre, I fynd of Englishe these contayned in the Note enclosed: Her Majestie, your Honor, my Lord of Effex, my Lord Admirall, Lord Willoughby, Lord Hunsdon, Lord Cobham, Lord Treasourour, Earl of Northumberland, Sir John Fortescue, Sir Walter Raughley, the English Ambassador, Sir Henry Broomley, Mr. Bacon, Father Parsons, Doctor Cecylle, Henry Constable, Bishop a Preeft, Mr. Pagett, the Englishe Colledge at Rome. I humbly pray that this whole Matter may be kept very secrett, for yf the least Vent of it com Abroad, yt will both endaunger his Life I use, and disapoynt as likely a Meanes to discover those Practizes as can be imagined; which I assure your Honor, upon Concurrence of many Advertisements, to be farre advanced, and that they expect undoubtedly a speedy Effect of them. The Author of the Letter, labouring of late to seduce a young Nobleman to Popery (as he is a very great Intermedler in this Busines) when he could not prevayle by Reason, told him playnly, That within few Years, and possibly within few Moneths, he would repent him yf he refused to becom Catholique. There is continually great Consultation and Meetings held at f. 154 the Scotch Ambassador's House about yt, at which are present, the Wryter of the Letter, the Earle of Crayfurd, his Brother lately come out of Scotland, the Lord Hume, John Elfeston Brother to the Secretary, and som others. They are very confident, and speake bigg, that they will have the Masse in Scotland ere many Moneths. They stay only for the Mony from m. 177 Rome: I hope to get Knowledge both when and which way yt comes. Yf f. 150 the Scots King be not too farre imbarcked in these Matters, the rest will easily be prevented, receaving such Information, as I hope we shall, from tyme to tyme of their Proceeding. And so, &c.

Your Honor's very, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 26th Jan. 1599. O. S.

SINCE my Brother Trelaunie's Departure I was with Monsieur de Villeroy, to sollicit the Resolution and Dispatch of those three Points I had dealt with the King in, whereof I gave Advertisement in my Dispatch by Boucharde. " To " the fyrst he sayd, the Proclamation the King made this last Sommer to revoke " his Subjects from the States Service, was generall, to all suche as served any " forraine State without his Licence; more particular Declaration he might " not make; and with that we might very well be satisfied. I told him I could " never obtaine a Sight of that Proclamation, although I had used meanes both " to the Chancellor and others for yt, the Copies being all taken into his own " Hands, and therefore desyred yt might be communicated unto me. He sayd " yt

An. 1599. "yt should be sent to Monsieur Boisfisse to shew her Majestie:" But I feare he will play false in yt, for I had once a Sight of yt, thoughe I could not be permitted to take a Copy; and I remember no generall Revocation, but only particular, to those which were in the States Service. But the best is, yf the Peace proceed, this will not be greatly materiall to be stood upon. "To the second Point of verifying the Commission, he sayd yt should be donne in those Parlaments whole Jurifdictions reached to the Sea Coast, for the rest he thought yt needfull. But hereupon he fell to exclaime more bitterly then ever against our Nation for the Piracies they committ dayly at Sea (for so he termes yt) against the Frenche, and said they had continual Complaynts of yt, and namely of som of theirs spoyled and thrown over-board by some of our Marchants Ships in the Levant Seas, almost as farre as Tripoli, and towards Constantinople, and som upon the Coast of Barbarie; and that yf there were no better Order taken, il en avientroit du mal. I told him yt was possible, there might be some evill disposed Persons of our Nations, as well as of theirs and others, that to gaine, would adventure the Breache of any Law: But as long as they found her Majestie so willing to do Justice upon suche Offenders, they had noe reason to charge her with yt, either in Honor or otherwise: But let them make Proove of these Acculations, and they shall see the Offenders punished with all Rigour according to Justice. Nay, sayd he, yt is that we most complaine of, for we can get no Justice done in England, and repeated the Words point du tout twise or thrice. Then I said I perceaved the Informations he had received proceeded more of Passion then Truth, and that I would disprove them." And therewith I pulled out the Certificat I received from the Commissioners, of the Causes they had done Justice in since my comming over, which being in Latin, I delivered him to reade. When he had read a little of yt, finding yt to be very particular, and to carry good Credit, he desired me to give him a Coppy of yt, that he might send it to their Ambassador, for he had received contrary Information from him. But by this meanes he began to be calmer then before, and said, "he did assure himself of her Majestie's princely Disposition to have Justice done, but he feared it was hindred by some of her Ministers, that either had Interest in these Matters themselves, or favoured those that had. I prayed him to confirme that Persuasion he had, of her Majestie's princely Intention that way; and to be further assured from me, that her royal Purpose being knowne, there was no Minister of hers, that ether durst or could impeach it. But they must not measure Justice by the partiall Report of the Parties, nor the passionate Information of such as would be paid with no Reason. Yf they would have Patience, and suffer Matters to have their due Examinations, I would undertake they should have absolute Justice in the end. And to that purpose I offered to imploy all the Credit and Meanes that my Place did afforde me, provided they did here correspond with the like towards us; for otherwise we were not more obliged in Justice or Honor to them, then they to us. After this we spake of the third Point touching the Money, wherein he acknowledged (as he had often done before) that the King was bound to have a great regard of her Majestie's Occasions, and to give her all the Satisfaction his Estate would beare. But what that was he knew not, as not meddling at all with his Finances, nether had the King made knowen his yet Purpose unto him. I pressed much that I might receive an Answer, for that it might import her Majestie much for some of her Resolutions. And I prayed him to remember, that since we made so streight Alliance with France, the Profit and Benefit of it had bin wholly theirs, and the Charge and Burden ours. And it must be confessed that the Queene my Mistris had discharged the part of a true and perfect Friend and Confederate, and that her Succours had been a principall Cause of the Preservation of this Estate. That now they were in Peace and Rest, and we in Warre, her Majestie was to looke for some Recompence of her Kindenes, and some Fruit of the Alliance. That lesse could not be expected by her, nor offered by them, then that which she “ demaunded, which was but the Repaiement of some of that Money which she An. 1599.

"demaunded,

 “ had so frankely lent the King, and disbursed for him in his great Necessitie.
 “ Yf this were denied, she could little hope for any greater matter; and she “ should have just Cause given her to repent her, that she had left a more an- “ cient and constant Amitie to embrace this, wherein there was lesse Assu- “ rance,” I shewed him the Note of the Debt since the Yeare 1581, which amounts to a million and three hundred and forty thousand Crownes, or there-about. “ I required that all above a million might be paid this Yeare, which “ being done, I was in hope her Majestie should be inabled to make so good an “ end of her Busines, as she should have lesse neede to importunate the King here“ after, and would perhaps be contented to receive the rest with more Commo-“ ditie to him. I remembered unto him also, that the Assignations which were “ made unto her Majestie of the Customes of Roüen and Newhaven, were found
 “ as he had answered, to be engaged before to others, which among private “ Men had bin a matter mala fidei. And therefore that the King was doubly “ bound in Honor, either to assigne those into her Hands, according to his “ Contract, or to content her some other way. To all this he answered, he “ would relate my Speech to the King, and give me such Answer as he should “ be commaunded.

The next Day I went to Monsieur de Rosni, and repeated in effect what I had before said to Monsieur de Villeroy, and added, “ that I was perswaded God had “ not advanced him to that place of Honor and Authoritie that he beares in this “ Kingdome only for his owne Good, but to the end also, that both the King’s “ Subjects and Allies of the Religion, should reape some Fruict and Comfort by
 “ it. That no Man knew better than he, how profitable her Majestie’s Friend“ ship hath bin both to the King’s Estate in generall, and to the Cause of Religion “ in particular; and that she thought she might challenge thereby an Interest in “ him, and those which were affected that way. I prayed him not to disappoint
 “ her Expectation, and seeing he had so good an Occasion offered him to gaine
 “ the Freindship of a great Princeesse, (which had both Power and Will to requite “ them that deserved well of her,) I prayed him not to neglect it, for it could “ not but be of great use to him in all Events. I put him in mynde of that him“ self had told me, that yf the Spanish Army had come on this last Sommer, “ the King had willed him to make shift for 300000 Crownes to have sent to “ her Majestie; and I said, he was much better able to do it now then at that “ tyme, having the Revennue of this Yeare to come in, and that her Majestie’s “ Occasions to use it were nothing lesse; and therefore prayed him to be a means “ she might enjoye now, that good Satisfaction intended her then. His An-“ swere was full of good Wordes and Respect towards her Majestie, and in kind“ er sort then his manner is. But he said he thought the King could not de“ part with so great a Summe this Yeare, yet assured me he would do what lay “ in him, to further her Majestie’s Contentment.” In the end he discovered a matter unto me, which I perceave hath lyen upon his Stomack some tyme. “ He “ said, he understood the Queene was offended, that * his Brother did not see “ her when he came through England, whereof he said he was the cause. For “ when he understood that the Queene had refused to suffer him to performe the “ Ceremony for the King’s Installation, as it was intended; he, conceiving it “ grew upon some Dislike or Mesprise (for so he termed it) of his Brother or “ him, had written unto him to returne some other way. And added, that for “ the Performance of such a Ceremony, his Brother might very well have bin ac“ cepted; for tho’ there were many richer in France then they, yet there were “ few of better House or Bloud, being descended of a King of France. I told “ him the matter was never directly propounded to her Majestie, nor refused by “ her. But their Ambassador having lett fall some doubtfull Speeches, as yf the “ King meant to discharge that Ceremony by one that should doe it obiter, and

* Monsieur de Bethunes.

An. 1599. " not be sent purposely: Yt was wished by some of his Majestie's Counsaile to " whom he spake it, that the King would not use greater neglect in it then his " Predecessors had done, who had allwaies sent solemnly and purposely about " it. And that if the Queene were grieved that he saw her not in his Passage
 " through England, it was only because she was deprived of the meanes to doe
 " him that Honor which she intended to do him, for his Respect; of whose " good Will and Affection to her Affaires, she doth as much desire to be affu" red, as of any Mans in France. He toke my Speech well, and seemed to be " very well satisfied, and prayed me to assure her Majestie, that he was her " humble Servant, and would be as glad to do her any acceptable Service as to " his owne Master. Notwithstanding I dare not assure you of any great Summe
 " this Yeare, but some reasonable Portion I hope will come about Midsommer,
 " and sooner I doubt there will be nothing had, for the King will receive the " first Quarter himselfe.

The matter of the Marquisat of Saluces is not yet accorded. The King demaunds so much in Exchange, as the last Speech hath bin, that the Duke would rather yeeld up the Marquisat upon some Conditions concerning Geneva, which the King yet refuseth absolutely to assent unto; so as the Opinion was, within these two Dayes, that the Duke would depart without any Agreement. But Yesterday and this Day they have mett againe, but concluded nothing that is yet knowen. The Duke hath caused some to be spoken with, that he understands have Access to me, to learne certainly whether the Queene intendeth in truth to make Peace with Spaine or no. I suppose he ymagines, if that King had Peace with us, he might be the easlyer drawen to embrace his Defence. But other Motion, or Offer of any Complement he hath not made unto me, therefore I refrayne likewise to do any to him; interpreting her Majestie's Commandement and Direction, in your Letter of the 9th of Jan. in that Sence: And the like for my Conference with g. 142 the Spanish Ambassador, from whom I have had no more since the fyrst Motion by d. 100 the Duke de Bouillon.

The Spanish Ambassador hath delivered lately 54 Articles of Doleances to the Counsaile here, most of them touching the King's Intelligence under-hand with the States; and namely, his Toleration of their Placard against trading into Spaine, and their actuell impeaching of it.

There are Ambassadors come hither both from the Marques of Brandebourg, and the Cardinall of Lorraine; ech seeking to winne the King's Favour, or at least not to have him averse, in their Contention about the Bishoprick of Strasbourg. Which being once composed, by an arbitrary Sentence of the Emperor's which divided the Profitt and Revenne betwene them, is now revived by those of Lorraine, that are not satisfied with the Partition, but would enlarge their Portion.

The Treaty betwene the Turk and the Emperor is continued by some Persons, that goe betwene the Governors of the Emperor's Frontiers, and Effraim Bassa; but there are no Deputies yet assembled about it. The last Meeting was broken, upon a feare the Deputies had conceived ech of other, of some Treachery intended, and not upon any Difficulties in the Treaty, or Commandement of their Masters; so as it is probable they may come to some Accord. But the Christians complayne, that during this Parle of Peace, the Tartares, by the Turke's Procurement, have entred Upper Hungary and done great Spoyle there, and carryed away many Prisoners, which they require to be restored before they enter into further Treaty. Of the Revolt in Caramania, we heare that the Heads of the Rebellion, having by their Insolencies and Oppressions lost the Harts of the Multitude, which favoured them at the first, have bin since forced by the Bassa that pursued them to quitt the Field, and to betake themselves to some Townes where they are now besieged. So as it is thought that Matter will have a speedy end, or rather that it is ended already. The Georgians, who it was conceived would have stirred likewise upon such an Opportunity, have kept themselves quiett, and moved not at all.

This

This King hath taken it very offensively at the States Hands, that their Shippes of Warre have staid certaine French Shippes that were going into Calais laden with Salt and Wine, which they refuse to release till they have paid a certain Exaction which they require, under the Name of Licences. The Reason that moves the States to such a Resolution, I understand to be this: They fynd that the Provinces subject to the Archduke, have sought to establish at Calais a Staple of all Commodities which they want, and which they were wont to be furnished of from Holland and Zeland; and upon that Hope principally, they adventured to breake of all Commerce with the United Provinces, which otherwise they could not have wanted. And they are perswaded, that yf they be disappointed of that meanes of furnishing themselves from Calais, they will be enforced to renewe the Commerce, and take Licences of the States, as heretofore they have done; which will be very beneficiall unto them, and make them the better to subsist in their Defence. And having dealt with the King to be contented with it, and finding him and his Counsaile absolutely to refuse it, (though the last King as they say gave secret Consent unto it) they have taken a Resolution to impeach this Staple at Calais of themselves, or at least they intend to exact that Commodity by meanes of it, which they know they should make otherwise. The King and his Counsaile have bin very bitter with their Agent here about it, and threaten not only to withdrawe the French which are there, and all other Assistance, but to declare Warre against them, and to banish them wholly from trading in France. Notwithstanding, I do not finde but they meane to persist in their Course: And these Men beginne to be more calme (as their Nature is) finding the other resolute, and are contented to hearken to some Overtures of devyding the Profit that shall be made of these Licences. Monsieur de Villeroy in speech of this matter with r. 165 the States Agent, said the Queene would have attempted such a matter, to have barred the King's Subjects from trading into Spaine, by staying and taking them at Sea; but that the King would not endure it, and would rather have declared Warre against her; which Speech I could not but note, and thought good to advertise.

I received a Letter from the Lords of the Counsaile of the 27th of November, but not delivered me till the 6th of January, wherein their Lordships will me to deale with the King about the Proclamation of the Rochellers, forbidding any Englishman to remaine in their Towne above four Moneths. Before I moved the King in the matter, I thought good to speak with a Gentleman that remaines here in Court continually for the Affaires of them of Rochelle and others of the Religion of Poictou; who understanding of it, hath given me some hope of accommodating the matter otherwise, and prayed me to forbearé to deale with the King in it, till he had written and received Answer from Rochelle, for which he required 20 Daies. The Terme is almost expired, and if I receive not Contentment by his Answer, I will presently move the King about it. From Mr. Edmonds I have heard nothing since he went from Calais; but I heare by other meanes, that he hath had twice or thrice Audience, is very well entertayned, and shall accompany the Archduke to Cambray. The King is advertised from his Ambassador in that Court, that the Queene desires to have that Treaty in England, but that they will not yeeld, but desire rather to have it here in France. I send your Honor here inclosed a Letter I received from Bayonne. And so I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's most, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

S I R,

Paris 27th Jan. 1599. O. S.

I T may please you to remember that I wrote unto you from Blois, in Recommendation of one John Mangas of Olone, who complained, that a Shippe of his called la Catholique, was taken by one Mr. Morgan, and detayned contrary to a Sentence given by the Commissioners in his Favour. As he reports his Cause, it caryeth a very evill Shew of apparent Injustice, and gives an evill Taste of our Proceeding here. There be som Men of Qualitie interessed in the Cause, which lett not to spredd their Discontentment to our Disadvantage. I have written to the Commissioners the State of the Complaint, as he reportes it, and have prayed them to cleere her Majestie's Honor and their owne Reputations in it. I beseech your Honor to recommend the Cause earnestly unto them, that all Mouthes may be stopped, and her Majestie's Proceeding may be justified to be, as it hath bin alwaies, most just and princely. So shall I have also the better occasion to urge Satisfaction in the behalf of her Majestie's Subjects that be grieved in the like kinde. And so shall the Amitie so much desired, betwene their two Majesties and their Subjects be best preserved. And thus I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's very, &c.

Right Honorable,

Paris 17th Feb. 1599. O. S.

I Shall not neede to trouble your Honor much at this tyme, seeing this Gentleman was present at those Audiences I had since his comming, and can very sufficiently relate what passed between the King and us in them. For the Place required for the Commissioners to meet in, it is very frankely accorded, with offer of Diepe or Abbeville if we list; because it is conceived Bollogne will scarce afford good Commoditie for the Trayne. The King had conceived a Jealousy, as yf we had intertaigned him but with Shewes of Formalities, and had bin agreed in the meane tyme in the Substance of the Treaty, which he seemed to take offensively; but in the end both he and his Counsaile remayned well satisfied. At our first Audience, upon fresh Advertisement brought me of the Proceeding of the Practize to bannish our Clothes, I dealt directly with him in it, because I had received but a slight and doubtfull Answer from the Chancellor and Monf. Villeroy, when I sent unto them about it. His Answer was good, "that I had not " seene him hitherto to do any thing rashly [to the Prejudice of his Allies, nor " should not finde to do yt hereafter, especially towards her Majestie, to whom " he renewed his former Professions, and promised that I should be made acquainted and heard before any thing were concluded. But withall, he spake
" somewhat of the Necessitie of his People, which he was bound to regard, and " complayned of the Wrongs done by our Nation to his Subjects, and want of " Justice when Pursute is made." To the latter Point, both my selfe answered as I had done before to Monfieur de Villeroy, and Mr. Edmonds particularly related what had passed betwene my Lords of the Counsaile and his Ambassador at a Conference purposely held about those Causes. Many Discourses he had with us, of the Wants and Weaknes of Spaine, of the Necessities of the Archduke, of the Duke of Savoy, of the Scottish King, and of some other Points, which I leave to him to relate.

" At our second Audience I remembred him againe of his Promise to give her Majestie some Contentment in the matter of his Reimbursement, and urged an " Answer;

“ Anſwere; ſhewing that the Delay of it was almoſt as prejudiciall to her Ma-“ jeſtie as the Refuſall, and uſing the beſt Reaſons I could to move him to take An. 1599.
 “ ſome ſerious Conſideration of it. His Anſwere was, that his Counſail had bin “ very buſy about this Negotiation with the Duke of Savoy, but he would now “ commaund them to intend it ſeriously.” Notwithſtanding, the Duke of Bou- illon's Speech to Mr. Edmonds promiſeth but little Satisfaction. His many Interlocutoric Speeches of his Journey to Calais, and Inclination to ſee her Ma- jeſtie, and of the Newes he had that Morning received from his Ambaſſador touching my Lord of Effex, I leave unto Mr. Edmonds; as alſo many other Particulars of his Conference with theſe Men here, and of the Spaniſh Ambaſſador comming to my Houſe, and his Diſcourſe with us; Aſſuring my ſelf I cannot commit them to a better Relation then his. And my ſelf having an Infirmity in my hearing grown upon me, which cauſed me to looſe much of that which was ſaid.

For the matter between the Duke of Savoy and the King, we heare that this Day they are accorded, That the Duke ſhall within two Moneths either ren- der the Marquiſat, or deliver in exchange Breſſe, and the reſt which I have heretofore ſignified. I received lately your Honor's Letter of the 18th of Janu- ary, by which I am inſtructed what to anſwere if I be dealt with about the Complaints exhibited by the French Ambaſſador; but no Man ſpeaks yet to me of any ſuch matter. This Gentleman is well furniſh'd with all the Occurrents that this Court yeeldes. Therefore with Remembrance of my humbleſt Duty, I conclude and reſt

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 20th February 1599, O. S.

I Send this Meſſenger expreſſely, and with as much ſpeed as I can, to lett your Honor underſtand, that yeſterday there arrived here two Curriers one after another, with great ſpeede out of Spayne: And I am ſecretly informed, that they brought Newes ether that the King of Spayne is dead, or deſperately ſick.
 I cannot abſolutely ſay it is true, but I received it from a good hand, and one nere about the King, which makes me bold to advertiſe it with ſpeede. I will be carefull to underſtand the Truth, and if I learne certainly ether Confirmation or Controllement, I will diſpatch another Meſſenger preſently.

The Duke of Savoy is this Day gone out of this Towne towards his owne Country, and hath tyme till the end of May, to reſolve whether he will render the Marquiſat, or the Exchange required of him; having bound himſelf by a Writing ſigned by himſelf, to do ether the one or the other in that tyme. The King I heare hath taken ſome Diſcontentment with a Letter which the Pope wrote lately unto him, both touching the Duke of Savoy's Cauſe, and the Reſti- tution of the Jeſuits. In which point, he hath challenged the King for not performing his Promise, ſeeing he hath on his part accompliſhed as much as was deſired of him touching the King's Divorce. The King I heare made a round Anſwere to the Patriarch about it, and the ſame Day dealt as ſharpely with the States Agent, upon freſh Complaint to him of more Shipps taken by their Men of Warre upon the Coaſt of Calais.

The laſt Letters I ſawe out of Spayne, made mention that the King was going into Portugal, and that the Adelantado was committed Priſoner to his Houſe at Madrid. That the Indian Fleet was not heard of, and therefore not looked for till September. That there were ten or twelve Galcons prepared to go meet them. That the Scarcitie of Money continued there very great, but that the

An 1599. King had notwithstanding, given order for twelve hundred thousand Ducats to be sent with all Expedition into the Low-Countries. That the Count de Fuentes was established Governor of Milan and one of the Grandeas of Spaine, and was to come away presently with 4000 Spaniards. These Letters were written in the beginning of their February, but the King's which he received, came thence as I am informed, in eight Daies.

For the Prohibition of the Manufactures of Wooll, notwithstanding the King's Answer and his Counsailes made to me and Mr. Edmondes, I do much doubt it will proceede. And I am credibly advertised of Levies of Money and Contributions made in divers Townes of this Kingdome for the effecting of it, and that the Drapers make full account of it. I have gone as farre as I can in the stay of it, unlesse I should descend to a direct Protestation against it, as a Breach of the Treaties, and the Amitie depending upon them, which I dare not do till I have warrant from her Majesty. But assuredly Sir they are so careles and confident in their Proceeding with their Allies, especially with us, that if they be not very roundly dealt with, they will adventure upon any thing for their Profit But if her Majestie will but follow their Example, and banuish their Wines for a time, you shall see them humble ynough, and drive them to seeke to you: For those Contries live wholly by the Vent of their Wines, and will be ready to rebell, rather then be put by it. In the meane time, the Queenes Custom will not be much impaired, for if French Wines be forbidden, there will be the more Spanish Wine spent, which pay as great an Impost or greater then the other. And moreover, such a president would greatly establish her Majesties Reputation, and teach them to proceede the more respectfully with her, in all things els. I am bold to extend my self a little beyond the Bounds of my Charge in this Point, out of an Indignation and disdaine to see her Majestie so ill requited, where she hath so much deserved; which if it hath carried me too farre, I crave Pardon.

Since Mr. Edmondes Departure, I went to complementise with the extraordinary Ambassador of Venice, who is now, (though late) come to congratulate the Peace with Spaine; and finding him lodged right over against the Spanish Ambassador, I could not avoyde to see him, seeing he had bin here with me before. Our Speeche was little besides Complements, and that little was in generalities, in Commendations of Peace, and Detestation of Warres. I would willingly have drawn from him what the Points were they meant to insift upon. And to that intent, " when he prayed God to dispose the Harts of both Sides to passe by " all Difficulties, and to conclude a good Peace; I told him, that they must then " dispose themselves to require nothing unreasonable nor dishonorable, and that " if any difficultie arose, it was in all apparence to growe from their Demaunds,
" not ours, for difficulties did growe alwaies from Particulars: And I did not " conceive that our side were likely to propounde many Particulars, but only
" the generall incidents and consequents of Peace, and the Particularities were " rather likely to be proposed on their part. Which he confessed to be true, but " said he was fully assured that the reasonableness of their Demaunds should well
" testifie their sincere Intention and Disposition to Peace. I answered that that " being so, there was no doubt to be made of the like Disposition in her Majesty,
" who both by Sex and Profession was ever peaceably inclined, untill she
" was by too great Provocations forced to a necessary Defence of herself. We parted with kind Complements, he giving me the Prescence in his owne House, as the Custome is, and as I had before done to him in myne. This is all I thinke fit to trouble your Honor with at this tyme. And so, &c.

Your Honor's very, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 26th Feb. 1599. O. S.

THE Report of the King of Spaines Death or Sicknes, whereof this Court was full for three or four Daies, begins now to growe cold, and instead of that Danger of the Kings, they pretend to have advise of a burning Fever of the Queenes, which it is thought she will hardly escape. This is confessed by the Spanish Ambassador, and avowed unto me by Mr. de Villeroy. Notwithstanding, I knowe the King was very pleasaunt upon the first Newes, and began to talke of the Recovery of Navarre and of other Desseignes. So that many do yet believe the former Report may be true, but that it is covered for a time by these Men, upon some purpose. The opportunitie of Sir Robert Druryes Returne, is the Cause that I sent no Messenger purposely with this Advertisement, (as I promised in my last,) hoping it will come by his Meanes in reasonable tyme. If I discover any more certainty of this Matter, I will certifie your Honor of it with speed.

The King's Journey into Picardie is broken, and instead thereof he intends to take the Dyett for a Fortnight or three Weeks, for some of his old Griefes, which are growing againe upon him. I understand he hath appointed the Bishop of Bollogne to repaire thither, to give order for all things necessarie against the Commissioners comming. I would gladly urge an answer about the Queenes Money before the Treaty be concluded, and for that Purpose I have desired Audience any time these eight Dayes, but am still put off; which makes me feare that they linger purposely, till they see what will become of the Treaty. I am often sollicitated by our Marchants, to deale with the King and his Counsaile about the Abatement of the Impositions, raised upon our Commodities since the Treaty of Blois. But because it is a Point that depends upon that Treaty, which is offered here to be renewed, I thinke not fitt to meddle with that Particular alone, but to include it in the generall Confirmation of the Treaty, if it be her Majestie's Pleasure to renewe it. I beseech you Sir therefore I may understand her Resolution in it, and how I shall otherwise satisfie the importunate Desire of our Marchants, who thinke me very negligent in my charge, that I have so long differred to sollicite that Point for them. Surely somewhat will be necessary to be done, if you intend to continue any traffick here. For now all is at liberty, and the King bound to nothing; the Treaties that concern the Commerce being determined, and that of Troyes and the last of 1596 which be only in Force, ether not meddling with that point at all, or in such generalitie as we can take no great hold of them for our Benefit.

The unkindnes betweene the King and the States, is aggravated by the continuall Complaints which come of French Shippes taken by them. I am told that there is fresh Complaint brought hither also, of two Shippes of Newhaven sonke by some of her Majestie's Shippes. If any such thing be, I beseech you to direct me what answer I shall make unto it, for I make no doubt but they will expostulate it with me. And so, &c.

Your Honor's most, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Since my last, I have seene a Letter from Madrid of the 7th of February, wherein it is certified, that there is a Caruile of Sinigaglia arrived, which affirmeth that the Indian Fleete is at the Havana, and expected to be at home by the end of March.

Sir

An. 1599.

THE Earle Gowry, a Nobleman of Scotland, who hath spent some time in these Parts, is purposed to returne home through England, and desires to have the Honor to kisse her Majestie's Hands as he passeth. And because I know him well, and have had good Communication with him, and therein found him to be of very good judgement, and exceedingly well affected both to the common Cause of Religion, and particularly to her Majestie, and that which may concerne her Honor and Service; I have thought good to recommend him especially unto your Honor; and to beseech you to be a meanes that he may receive that Honor and Favour that he is worthy of, that so he may depart confirmed in that good Devotion and Respect, which he beares allready towards her Majestie. If your Honor please to conferre with him about these Alterations feared in Scotland, I beleeve he will give you good Satisfaction, and that you will finde him to be a Man of whom there may be exceeding good use made. I have given him my Passport, to serve him till he come to her Majesties Court, in as ample and favourable fort as I could. The rest I referre to your Honor's good favour towards him, whereunto I humbly recommend him. And so, &c.

Your Honor's very, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

The Lord Hume purpofeth shortly to returne likewise as he telleth me, and hath allready prayed my Passport, which I cannot denie him. But you will be pleased to have regard to some of my former Letters.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.Right Honorable,Paris 2^d March 1599, O. S.

I Am bold to recommend unto your Honor this Nobleman of Scotland the Lord Hume, who is now returning into his Contry, and mindes to take his way through England; beseeching you that by your Meanes he may have a Passport for his free Passage, and receive such other Favour, as her Majestie useth to extend to Men of his Qualitie. It hath pleased him to do me the Honor to visite me often, and to make me many kinde offers. In requitall whereof, I would be gladd to be a Meanes, of any Honor or Favour to be done him in England. Wherein because I know your honorable Disposition to be very prone, I shall need to use no more Wordes, but will only present my Service unto you, and so humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's most, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

S I R,

2^d March 1599.

Although I would be gladd at all times to advertise you of Certainties, (it being a touch to both our Offices to affirme things that fall out contrary) yet because I see conjecturall Reports often flye before Resolutions, and when those fall out to be true, that then you may thinke your self neglected; I have thought good now to advertise you in what case things stand. Immediately after the Arrival of Mr. Edmondes (to whose Negotiation you were privy) there followed Verbeyken the Audencier, he hath had an Audience of the Queene within three Daies after his Arrivall, which was the 18th of February; the Effect whereof was complementary on both Sides, he protesting that her Majestie should fynde nothing but sinceritie, and she affirming to requite it with the like. He was then referred to be treated withall by the Lord Treasurer, the Lord Admirall, the Lord Chamberlen, and my self. The Substance of his comming we plainly discovered, which was rather to propound and receive answer, then as having Commission to give us Satisfaction. Which when we discovered, we carryed our selves accordingly, as shall appeare unto you by this inclosed. For it is true, that as there be some things, which needes not to be decyded untill the Commissioners meet; so seeing they in Spaine and the Low-Cuntries, may get many more Advantages by wayne Treaties (without Conclusions) then we may, her Majestie hath reason to be precise in ingaging her self, by sending her Commissioners over Sea, except there be some probable Assurance that the extreme Points should be better reconcyled, then will appear unto you by his Proceeding here, who could give no other Satisfaction. Only I found by himself, (though he durst not speak it as a Commissioner) when I expostulated with him the strangenes of them, he answered me privately, Ab Monsieur, les premieres Propositions ne sont point logeés, à la Conference ou en aviserà mieux. You shall therefore now understand, that this Day the Resolution was taken to send this Letter, and within four Dayes or five Mr. Edmondes shall goe with an Instruction, whereof this is the Project which I doe send you, being yet in minute, because I was lothe to stay till you should heare any other Reports. And therefore if some Particulars be altered before the Queene signe it, you may judge of it accordingly. I have had a great Desire that you might be one at this Conference, both because I am not sure whether I shall be exposed to it, (where I do infinitely desire to see you) but also because you are able to do the Queene Service, and because in so doing it may intitle you to a better Place hereafter. You may therefore please to knowe, that I do fynde the Queene resolved you shall be a Commissioner, as the Spanish Ambassador is on the other side. And therefore, allthough by this inclosed you may see how uncertain the Day is, yet it is good that you do prepare, and accommodate your self against you be summoned. Only this was one direct Speech the Queen used to me, that she would not have you think of comming over, though you came so nere the Sea; it being her full meaning, that you shall compleat your second Year. For she did plainly tell me, that there could be no greater wrong to her Service, then to be ever sending those, who as soone as they have gotten one Yeares Experience, then they make sure to come home; and yet shall be see, (saith she) at his two Years end that I will take care of him. Thus do you see that I do write you truth, howsoever it please or displease; Wherein the rather I do advertise you beforehand, because you may not be deceived in any Expectation: Hoping you will also assure your self, that you shall ingage me at all tymes in any thing that concerns you, as farre as any Friend you have. It remaineth now that I take notice of Jaspar's Arryvall, and of those Letters, with which the Queene was exceeding well satisfied: saying, that you were too like some body in the World (who is now in Heaven) to whom she is afrayde you are a little kin, to be content to carry Coales at any Frenchman's Hand. For the matter, she will deale plainly with the Ambassador here concerning those Manufactures of Wooll, and you shall receive Directions in all things belonging to the same. And so, &c.
the

From the Court
at Richmond.

Your very assured Friend, &c.

RO. CECYLL.

Though now you know what Mr. Edmondes carries, yet I pray you Sir keepe it to your selfe, for it would not be there divulged; considering, that the opinion of a Peace toward, keepes up the Queenes Reputation.

§ f

Sir

An. 1599

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cécyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 12th Mar. 1599. O. S.

I Was desirous (as I wrote in my last) to have drawn some Answer from the King in the Matter of the Money due to her Majestie, before the Treaty of Peace with Spaine had bin so farre advanced. And for that purpose, I have any time these three Weekes desired Audience, as also to the intent to have dealt with him about the Proclamation of the Rochellers, whereof my Lords of the Counsaile wrote unto me, and to have procured some favour to poore Captain Thynne, who is imprisoned here. But I have bin continually put off upon one Pretext or other, and sondry Assignations disappointed; although in the mean time both the Nuntio, the Venetian Ambassadors, the Scottish Ambassador, and the Patriarch, have all had Audience. Which is a kind of Proceeding that argueth small Affection or Regard to her Majestie, and whereof in that respect, I cannot but be sensible, and have thought good to advertise it, that it may please you to direct me, how I shall carry my self if these Courses continue, and what Resentment I shall make of it. The Matter is evident, ether to be done as a skorne, or upon desseign to avoyde the Answer I am like to presse them to. Both are injurious to her Majestie, and the latter a kind of Mockery, not to vouchsafe her an Answer, but to shift her off by these Delusions. I have occasion, and will ynough to be warme in this matter, but I am not willing to presume too farre without Direction, which I do therefore humbly desire, that I may have a Rule to guide my self in all such occasions.

The King is this day gone to Fontainebleau a Hunting, and promiseth to returne upon Satterday. He altered his mynde for taking the Dyett, but about fifteen Dayes since he toke Phisick two or three Dayes. He doth undoubtedly purpose a Journey to Lyons in the beginning of May, so that he may be at hand when the tyme expires which the Duke of Savoy hath taken, to resolve ether to deliver up the Marquisat of Salluces, or the Exchaunge demaunded, of which many are of opinion he will do neither. And that opinion is confirmed, by the Count de Fuentes comming to be Governor of Milan with 5000 Spaniards, and with a very large and extraordinary Authority and good Store of Treasure, to be provyded against all Events that may ensue in Piedmont. This is one cause of the King's Journey into those Parts, Another is to receive the Princesse of Florence, whose Match with this King is thought to be secretly concluded by the Grand Duke's Secretary, which hath bin here closely for that purpose these four or five Moneths; and Monsieur de Sillery is by this tyme I suppose at Florence, with absolute Power to conclude the Contract there publikely. In so much as they beginne heare already to designe the Estate of her House, and appoint her Officers. It is very probable, that the King will marry her upon her first Arrivall; so that if her Majestie intend to send any Nobleman to assist at the Marriage, (as her use hath bin,) it will be tyme almost to think of it; for I am perswaded the Princesse will be at Marseilles in June at the farthest. But I will endeavour to learne the Certainty of her comming as soone as I may, and advertise it forthwith.

I have seene Letters out of Spaine of the last of their February, wherein is mentioned that a Caravell of Advise was arrived at Seville, which brought word, that he left the Indian Fleet on this side of a place called Bermuda, and that it would be arrived in all likelyhood by the middle of March, the Windes having bin so fitt for their course, and so strong. The Valew of it in Coyne, Bullion, and other Marchandize, was esteemed to be sixteene Millions. That Count Fuentes was dispatched for Milan, and that d'Orta attended him at Barcelona with 12 Gallies. That the Nuncio, which was sent thither extraordinarily about the matter of Final, was now to remayne there in ordinary, and that the Pope seemed to be growen cold in that matter; and that there was great Expectation peclation and Hope of the Peace with England: but withall, some feare that there might growe some Prejudice to the Christian Faith, by the free Accessse and Conversation which the Heretiques were like to have thereby into those Parts. That Don Christofero di Mora is elected Viceroy of Portugall, wherewith that Nation is much discontented, pretending that that Dignitie ought not to be conferred upon any but a Prince of the Blood. Here is arrived out of Spaine on Sunday last, and departed yesterday towards Bruxelles, Fernando Carrillo, a Spaniard that hath lived long in the Low-Countries, and served as a Judge Marshall in their Armies; a Man of good Learning in the Law, and otherwise sufficient, as I am informed. His coming is as I understand to be of the Counsaile of State in the Low-Countries, and one of the Commissioners in the Treaty; which makes Men conceive it may prove more full of Difficulties then was expected. For this Man is knowne to be no great Favourer of Peace, and withall very haughty and peremptory, like a right Spaniard.

An. 1599.

Of the Queene of Spaine's Sicknes or Recovery, there is no more Newes come since my last. I received lately this inclosed from Mr. Hawkins out of Spaine, and likewise the other from Bayonne. I am informed that there are two Irishmen, the one a Lieutenant called Jenkins, the other a Enseigne called Staniburst, esteemed good Soldiers, to depart shortly out of the Low-Countries into Ireland, with the Archduke's Leave and Passport.

The States have at length suspended their proceeding against the French, and have rendred the Shippes they had taken; which hath pacified the King and his Counsaile, who were greatly exasperated against them. But withall I understand, they labour still by request to the King, to hinder the Staple at Calais, and the furnishing of their Enemies by that meanes, which they are in hope he will be wonne unto by Intreaty, though in Honor he could not indure they should extort it from him. But for my part I scarce believe they will obtaine it, because I see 6 122 Monsieur Villeroy so ready to traverse their Dessaignes in all things: But d. 100 the Duke of Bouillon and Monsieur du Plessis, with others of that side, do what they may to counterpese the Ballance in their Favour.

The Princes of Germany have assembled themselves at Francfort, and given hope of some new Enterprize this Year in the States Favour, or at the least of some Succour both of Men and Money. But there is a Fire kindling (as I learne) among themselves, which if it be not warily and speedily suppressed, I feare will prove very dangerous to the whole Party of the Religion in Germany; and that is the Administrator of Saxonie's Pretence to the Electorat, from which his Grandfather was dejected by Charles the 5th: whereof being now in Possession, as Tutor to the young Electer, and the Emperor favouring his Clayme, (upon desseign to nourrish Division among the Protestants;) it is thought it will be an easy matter for him to hold it, which cannot but engender an eternall Strife betweene the two Houses and their Partakers; whereof in all likelyhood the other side will prevaile, to the Ruine of them both.

I have heard nothing from m. 177 Rome of the matter I have intertayned there; only l. 163 (the Person I employ) shewed me another Letter from the same Partie, of fresher Date then the former, (but yet written before his Answer he made could be arrived there) wherein he desires to know, whither l. 163 my Agent will take the matter upon him, wishing him to be well advised, because he feares it may prove an Action of Daunger to them that shall deale in it, and like ynough to preferre them into the Ranke of Martyrs before their tyme. But we expect shortly to heare from thence at the full, in answer of that he wrote, upon the first Letter.

Mr. Thinne, poore Gentleman, is here in the Chastelet, arrested for a Shippe called the Holy Ghost of St. Jean de Luz, which Sir Robert Crosse and he toke in the Year 1591, in that Voyage wherain the Revenge was lost. Mr. Thinne pretends that he did nothing but by Sir Robert Crosse's Commandement, who was Reere-Admirall of the Fleet, and was to command him, being severed from the rest; and saith that he brought her safe into England, and presently advertised my

An. 1599. my Lord your Father, and my Lord Admirall, by whose Order some part of the Goods were sold; and that afterwards upon Prooffe made, that the Shipp was French and not Spanish, there was Restitution awarded both of Shippe and Goods; but that the Shippe and the greatest part of the Goods were cast away in the Haven by Mischance, after she was out of his Charge, and without any Fault of his. Upon which Consideration, when the Owners pursued him and others to Justice in the Admiralty, he saith he was discharged of it. All this we alleage here, but because it hath no other Credit but of his owne Word, who is the Party, we can gett little help yet for him. We have evoked the matter before the Counsaile, where I labour to gett him enlarged, upon his Juratory Caution, and such other Caution as he is able to give, (out of his Wive's Estate which he hath recovered here) that he shall answer the Sute, and abide and performe that which shall be judged. This is all I can doe for him, if I can effect that. They require Caution of Burgessees, or Men knowen here to be of sufficient Estate; but the Summe is so great of 23000 Crownes, that it deterreth every Man. Yf your Honor will be pleased to do him any Favour from thence, either by the Queene's Letters, or otherwise as you shall think good, you shall do a Deede of great Charitie; for surely he is much afflicted with it, and is in Danger to sustaine some Misery. And so for this tyme, longing very much for your Letters, which I suppose to be upon the way, as having received none since that of the 18th of January. I most humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's most, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir, after the King's Departure to Fontainebleau, he sent Monsieur de Leoncourt to excuse my long delay for Audience, by whom I am assured that at the King's Returne I shall have present Accessse.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 20th March 1599. O. S.

I Have received your Letter by Jasper of the second of March, with an Advertisement of her Majestie's Proceedings with the Audientier since his coming into England, for which I humbly thanke you. It may please your Honor to remember, that I have often written, that it was not beleevd the King of Spaine had any sincere purpose to make Peace. These exorbitant Demaunds, to my simple Understanding, do import as much: And for more Confirmation of it, g. 142 the Spanish Ambassador doth affirme directly (as I understand both by 6 120 the King himself and w. 209 Charles Paget) that unlesse the Cautionary Townes be rendred, they will make no Peace. Withall the said w. 209 Charles Paget doth assure me, that he knoweth by very good means, that there are three Shippes dispatcht from m. 173 Spaine into a. 102 Ireland, with Mony and Munition, and that in one of them there goeth a Knight of Malta, called the Grand Prior of Ireland, Brother to c. 132 Odonel with Commission to consider throughly the Estate of the Affaires there, and to make some Contract with b. 102 Tyrone and the rest, who offers to acknowledge c. 100 the King of Spaine absolutely, and to do nothing without his Direction; proffering likewise, when he list to make any Attempt upon a. 101 England, to furnish him with six or seven thousand expert Men. These things, as I am not too credulous of, so am I not willing to despise them, being related by one who hath good Intelligence with that side, and who in this Report can have no Dessein in particular. For as of one side he delivers his Concept, that they intend not Peace, but with great Disadvantage and Daunger to us, by the Delivery of those Townes, joynd with infinite Dishonor; so doth he likewise assure me on the other side, that Peace not succeeding, c. 100 the King of Spaine resolveth to sett up his Rest, and venture his whole Fortune upon us; which notwithstanding he thinks safer for us to endure, then to render those Townes, which would in the end make them Masters of those Seas, and inable them to give us the Lawe for our Trade as they would. This Advertisement I was willing to relate with speede, that if you finde it to concurre with the rest of their proceeding to that Purpose, and see that you are not like to have a Peace with safe and honorable Conditions, you may, if you please, advise in tyme, what Use or Advantage may be made of 6 120 the French King whiles the matter rests doubtfull. For undoubtedly he could be contented it were broken, and whiles it is in ballance, would perhaps be drawn to somewhat, which afterwards when he seeth it broken of itself, he will hardly be brought to. The Points that I could with he were urged in are these; To renewe the Alliances defensive in case of Invasion, in such sort as they were made betweene King Henry the 8th and Francis the 1st; to pay the Queene a certaine Somme of Money yerely, till his Debt be discharged. To establish our Traffick in France, with such Freedom, Abatement and Exemption from Impositions, as the Treaty of Blois appointeth. To forbidde all Armes and Munition, to be carried into Spaine. To forbid his Subjects to serve at Land or Sea against us. To continue his Assistance to the States, that they may be enabled to subsist. To interpose his Credit with the Emperor and Princes of Germany, to restore our Trade there. To do the like in m. 175 Scotland. To stay such Practises as c. 100 the King of Spaine may have there, and to keep that part in good Devotion. And lastly, to ayde the Queene in Ireland (if she list to require it) with two or three thousand good Shott at her Charge. Which I mention, because it seemes that Service, is of most use in these Warres of Ireland, and that our Men newly levied, do not commonly make the best Proof that way.

There is a Report here of a Preparation of divers Gallies in Spaine, that shall come downe to the Stuce and joyne with the rest. The Indian Fleet is returned as the King is advertised, for so he told me at my Audience some two Daies agoe; at which tyme I likewise pressed him for som answer in the matter of the Money, which he hath promised to give me presently after the Hollydayes. I dealt with him also about the Ordnances made by the Rochellers in Prejudice of our Marchants and Trade there, which he hath promised to redresse. I gave since to Monsieur de Villeroy the very original affiche under the Mayor of Rochelle's Hand, which was sent me from thence. As soone as I have any particular Answer in it, I will advertise my Lords of the Counsaile of it, as they commanded me by their Letter.

I have bin carefull not to divulgate the Difficulties growen in England about this Treaty; but it needed not, for I found Monsieur de Villeroy well advertised of them all, in the same sort your Honor wrote unto me. Therefore being forced to acknowledg somewhat, I said for the other Points, that they were proposed indeed, but not with intention (as it seemed) to be insisted upon; but for that of renewing the ancient Alliances offensive and defensive, I was willing they should conceive here it to be much stood upon by the other side, but yet refused by the Queene, and so like ynough to breede the greatest Difficulty and Stoppe in the Treaty.

The Advertisements I mentioned to come from w. 209 Charles Paget, and the faithfull Affection which he seemes to beare in Sinceritie to a. 100 the Queen and his Country, (notwithstanding the cold Comfort I gave him lately) I would be very gladd might breede some Compassion and Alteration in the Hart of a. 100 the Queen. Questionles if your Peace succede not, it cannot be but profitable to reclaime and recall as many of that kinde as sincerely seeke it, and have any worth in them. For so you shall disappoint the Enemies of many serviceable Instruments which they intend to work by, and give withall some Contentment to those at home, of the same Disposition; with whom also, these Mens Perswasions, and Discoveries of the Enemies tyrannous Intentions, under his faire Pretexts, will more prevaile to assure them in their Obedience, then any meanes els

we can use. I am bold to discover my poore Concept in the generall, although I am in a manner desperate of prevailing in this Particular. There is none of these I meane, but offer Oath of absolute Obedience to the temporal Governement, and to employ Body, Goods and Life against any Invadors, renouncing all Benefitt of Dispensation, or other Evasion from it.

There is a fresh Complaint come to this Court, of 12 of our Shippes that should be within the Streights upon the Coast of Provence, which are said to spoyle and take all Men. The Letters came that Day I was with Monsieur de Villeroy, yet he said nothing to me of it; but d. 100 the Duke of Bouillon gave me knowledge of it. They say the King takes it very ill; as I heare more I will advertise.

I do prepare my self according to the Warning your Honor gives me, to come to Bullogne, and shall be very willing so to do, so as I may waite upon your Honor there; which I purposed to doe howsoever, if you came over. But otherwise if your Honor come not, considering what a Journey I am to take presently upon my returne from thence, and perhaps before the Treaty be finished, I would take it for a favour to be excused. I would have bin gladd after so extraordinary a Charge as this Journey to Marseilles will be to me, to have found her Majestie disposed to have shortened to me the ordinary time of Residence here, considering my Estate so unable to beare it. But if her Service will not permitt me to attayne that Favour, I shall depend yet with Comfort upon her gracious Promise at the two Yeares end; and be bold to put your Honor likewise in mynde of yours made me to the same effect, at my first undertaking the Charge. In the meane tyme I will endeavour to serve her Majestie with all Diligence and Fidelity, and to my abilitie omitt nothing that may be for her Honor or Service. And so for this time I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's most, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 2^d April 1600, O.S.

An. 1600.

UPON occasion of many probable Conjectures, that this intended Treaty will have no such ready Passage as was conceived; in which case it cannot be amisse her Majestie should know, what Assurance and Foundation she may make of her Allies: I presumed (though I had no speciall Direction so to do) to presse the King at a late Audience, for a direct Answer in some Points I had heretofore moved him of. I found him in a very good Humour, and very willing (as he pretended) to give the Queene all the Satisfaction and Assurance he was able, of his sincere Affection towards her; with very liberall Offers of his Person and all his Forces, to be employed in her Defence, if she needed. And for the Points I had proposed, he willed me to make a short Note of them, and to deliver it to Monsieur de Villeroy, promising to advise of them throughly with his Counsaile, and to give me an expedite Answer. " He fell of himself " into Discourse of this Treaty with Spaine, wishing that her Majestie should " give them the Lawe in it, as he had done, [rather then receive it from " them; and was of opinion, that if her Majestie would stand off a while, " they would come to any Reason. He found great fault with their exorbitant " Demaunds; and told me that his Opinion was ever, that the King of Spaine " desired not Peace, but in respect of the Archduke's Necessities; which for the " Interest he had in them, would inforce him in the end from his owne Inclination. He willed me to lett her Majestie knowe from him as a Secret, that he " was certainly informed that the Archduke and Infanta had received Advise " out of Spaine, that the King had bin desperately sick, but recovered so as he " is past daunger of his Life; but that in this Sicknes of his, it hath bin disco- " vered “ vered that he is impotent, and not able to have Children. Whereupon the An. 1600.

 “ Marquis of Denia and other chief Men (despairing belike of the King’s long “ Life or likelyhood of Issue) begin to make Court to the Infanta, and to infi-“ nuate themselves into her Favour by Presents and all Serviceablenes. He told “ me also, that the States intend to sett out another Fleet this Yere, but not to “ make any long Journey, but only to keep upon the Coast of Spaine; and seem“ ed to be very affectionate to their Conservation, wishing that her Majestie, “ though she made a Peace, would do for them as he did and would. He con“ cluded my Audience with many Protestations of his sincere Affection to her “ Majestie, and his Desire to continue that freight Friendship he had ever held “ with her.

This Day I delivered the Note of that I had proposed to Monsieur de Villeroy, (whereof I send a Coppy) who hath promised to procure me a speedy Answer. In the three latter Points I am perswaded you may have any reasonable Contentment. In the first I have some hope, though it be feeble. I have not found Monsieur de Villeroy in better tunc at any time, which confirms me in mine Opinion, that if her Majestie intend to make any use, or to drawe any assurance from hence, this is the true tyme for it, and the Opportunity would not be omitted. I have presumed thus farre of my self, which although I had no direct Warrant for at this time, yet I hope her Majestie will interpret it graciously, considering I have not any way ingaged her, but only sought to ingage the King in those Points I have heretofore had Commission to propose; that so her Majestie being cleared of his Intention, may resolve the more freely in this weighty Business. If it be her pleasure to sound the King in any of the other Points I mentioned in my last Letter, I beseech your Honor I may understand in tyme. The King is of opinion, that the Meeting will be put off yet a good while, and that there will be sending to and fro about it twice or thrice before it be agreed on. w. 209 Charles Paget is advertised from his Friends at Bruxelles, that they have little hope there now of the proceeding of it. The Scottish Ambassador here told me, the like was written from thence to him. Monsieur de Villeroy spake to that purpose the King had done, that if her Majestie held off, they would fall in their Demaunds.

I understand by him, that the King intends shortly to send a Man of Qualitie into England to be installed for him. I would gladly have knowen whom, but he said it was not yet throughly resolved upon, yet assured me it should be a Personage of such Qualitie as we should well like of. Now, Sir, it may please you to direct me with some speede, (which in this time is very necessary) how I shall further carry my self in the prosecuting of this I have begon, or any things you thinke necessarie to be proposed, in this seasonable time. For the renewing of the Treaty, (in my simple Judgment) it will be very profitable, partly in regard of the Assurance of the Traffick depending upon it, but chiefly to ingage the King, and to be somewhat retentive to him, that he be not caryed away with so maine a streame towards Rome and that side, as he hath of late seemed to be; but rather that some diffidence might be renewed by this meanes, betweene him and that side: which I would hold a point of very good Advantage for us, and I know would greatly rejoyce all those of the Religion in this Realme, who begin to apprehend very much of his Declination in Affection from them, and are jealous of his too strict Combination with the Pope and that Party. And no doubt but it would be some good stay to the Motions and Deseignes in m. 175 Scotland, which are greatly nourished by the Concept of this King’s Alienation from us, and consequently of the Declination of our Party, and the Growth of the other. Yf there be any Opposition made, in respect of Abatement of Customs that must follow on both Parts, I suppose you may rule that Point as you will, and begin a new from this Day; leaving the matter of Customs and Impositions, in the same State it is in: For they have reason to be well contented with it, having raised since that Treaty three times as much upon our Commodities, as the Queene hath done upon theirs. But I think rather, the Marchants

An. 1600. chants that trade hither, might be induced to make good unto her Majesty, that which she should lose by it, so there might be an abatement generally of all that hath bin raised since that Treaty, and some certainty established for their Trade hereafter.

For the Complaint I made against those of Rochelle, as well upon the Proclamation sent me over from my Lords of the Council, as likewise upon another they have published since, (injoyning all forrain Marchants upon a paine, to bestowe the fixt part of the valewe of all the Marchandize they utter there, upon Wine of that Contry and other Commodities proper to that Place;) Monsieur de Villeroy told me yesterday, that the King had written unto them, commanding them to informe him upon what grownd they had presumed to make such Ordinances of themselves without his Privy; and forbidding them to put them in execution till his Pleasure were knowen. Monsieur de Villeroy complained unto me, (but in some milder sort then he hath used at other times,) of great Spoiles done by some Shippes of ours within the Streights upon the Coast of Provence; and the King himself told me, they had taken six or seven French Shippes. I gave them the best assurance I could, of her Majesties Intention to doe good Justice upon such Offendors, upon Prooffe made against them; and said that these Outrages might perhaps be committed by some Pyrates, which were not avowed by the State, but proscribed and proclaimed for such, which were intertaigned as we understood, by some Princes of Italy. And therefore I prayed him to suspend his conceipt, untill it were knowen who were the actors in the Offence. Monsieur de Villeroy said we did our selves much dishonor, and made our Nation infamous generally for such Misdemeanors; and alleaged, that the Signorie of Venice had upon like occasion stayed all our Shippes there; that the Grand Duke had once done the like, but that the King temporized, hoping in the end to receive some Satisfaction. By occasion of these ordinary Complaints against us, for Spoyles committed without any Restitution, I have had a perticular Conceipt which I will be bold to impart to your Honor; That for such Offences against this Nation as fall out to be plaine, and whereupon it will be fit to award Restitution, her Majesty should take the Benefitt of that Restitution, and assigne over to the Complaynants, so much of the King's Debt to her for their Satisfaction; they likewise resigning to her, all their Action and Demaund against the Offendors. This Course the King cannot except against, and by this meanes ether he will become lesse egre in the prosecuting of such Matters, or at least her Majesty shall receive some part of her Mony, sooner then otherwise she should doe.

Of the King's Journey to Lyons, we are not yet certain when it will begin, depending much upon the assurance or doubt of the Duke of Savoyes performance of his Treaty; whereof * I send your Honor a Coppy, though it have bin kept here as a very great Secret. The common Speech is, he will be at Lions by the end of May. But if that occasion hasten him not, in respect of the Princeesse of Florences comming, he shall not neede to sett forward so soone; for I understand she stayeth till the Grande Dutcheffe be delivered, who is desirous to accompany her, and who is not yet passing five Moneths gone with Child, so as it will be the end of September or later ere she can arrive; before which time the King will have six Gallies ready to conduct her, which are now building at Marseilles. The Duke of Guise is already departed towards Provence, to assist at the States holden there, and to prepare for the King's comming, and the intertainment of him and the Princeesse when she arrives. The Marshall of Biron is likewise gone into his Government of Burgundy, and Monsieur Lefdiguieres into Dauphine.

I have received Advertisement from sondry Hands, confirmed also by Monsieur de Villeroy unto me, that there are 25 Gallies prepared in Spaine to be brought downe into the Low Contries as soone as the Seafon will permitt it; and for that purpose perhaps, they will take the opportunitie of this Treaty. But if you see no likely hood of the Proceeding of it, I hope order will be given that they shall not have too easie a Passage. I remember Elliot told me, their purpose was the last Sommer to have brought their Gallies to Milford, so to have kept both the Channell to Bristowe, and to have barred the Passage into Ireland. We knowe not what Desseign they may have now, but me thinks before there be any meeting, it would be accorded on both sides, that there should be nothing innovated nor attempted by either, during the Conference, nor in certain time after.

Sir James Lindsay, Brother to the Erle of Craifurd, is shortly (as I heare) to goe for Spaine. The Erle Bothwell is already gone thither, having receaved but only 400 Crownes of the Archduke at his Departure, to carry him thither.

Here hath passed of late certain Challenges betweene Monsieur du Plessis and the Bishop of Eureux, whereof I send your Honor Coppies. Whether it will come to any issue or nay I know not, but beleeye rather that the Sorbon will hinder it; for I heare they interpose themselves, and that the Nuncio hath likewise excepted against it, as done without the Pope's privitie. In the meane time here are certain Gentlemen, whereof one of good account called Sainte Marie de Mont of Normandy, which forooke their Religion, and became Romanistes against this Easter. But in exchange, there was a Sur-indendant of the Finances called Maupeau, of good account, that declared himself of our Religion, and came to the Communion on Easter day.

Of the Progresse of the States Forces in Bommelrewerdt, against the Forts of Crevecœur and St. André, I am sure your Honor is better advertised then we can be here. The Archduke's Forces are drawn into the Field under the Command of Don Aloyse de Velasco and the Marquis of Bergben. The Admirante was removed from that charge, upon an intention to imploy him in the Treaty; but by the comming of Carillo he is eased of that paine, but not restored to his former Place, at which he is much discontented; and the matter had like to have growen to a great quarrell betweene him and Velasco, the Spaniards taking part with the one, and the Italians with the other. It is thought if they can reduce the Mutiners, they will be able to bring into the Field some 15000 Men of all forts. This is all I have to advertise your Honor at this time. And therefore I will here conclude most humbly taking my leave and resting.

Your Honor's most, &c.

S I R E,

Sur ce qui a esté respondu de la part de vostre Majesté par Monsieur de Vilcrocy, à la Proposition faicte dernièrement par l'Ambassadeur de la Royne d'Angleterre: Le dit Ambassadeur faict declarer à vostre Majesté, que pour ce qui concerne la Confirmation des Traictes, il en est demeure fort satisfait, & croit fermement, que la Royne sa Souveraine en recevra grande contentement. Mais pour ce qui est du remboursement de quelque somme d'Argent ceste année pour luy soubvenir en ses necessitez & occasions presentes, il trouvé la dite responce imparfaicte & incertaine; & desire partant, qu'il vous plaise luy en declarer vostre plaisir plus ouvertement, & ne le point remettre au temps de la confirmation dudit Traicté, estant chose qui n'en depend aucunement, & qui a esté traictée par ledit Ambassadeur séparément, & à laquelle il a eu promesses reiterées de prompte Responce avant qu'il proposast dernièrement le renouvellement

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

S I R,

I Have now received two Dispatches from you, (one by Vaccondary, and another by Hosier) since I wrote unto you by Jaspar: At which time I could not advertise more then I did, although it seemeth, that many Particulars of the same have bin carried over to others. There hath nothing since that time been heard from Mr. Edmondés, which hath been an occasion that hath made me differre to write unto you; but now that the Opportunity of this yong youth presenteth it self, I will first let you knowe that her Majestie heard your Letter this Day, and that she doth very well like your Courtes, and that you do heare of all sides; only I do find it deeply imprinted in her Majestie's mynde, to be diffident of any thing, that comes from w. 209 Charles Paget. For prooffe whereof, (although it be true, that Verheyken did propound that matter of the Townes) yet as an Argument that his Intelligence is badd, we found full well by him underhand, that if they can obtain of us the Retraction of the Auxiliarie Companies only, the intertayning whereof with her Majestie's avowed Lycence, doth demonstrate her Intention to uphold them against the King of Spaine, (by the Reputation whereof, the incertain Humours of the populer are contained in that State, which is a maine point in their Constitution) they will be easily induced to give over the Demaunds for the Cautionary Townes; because they are not so simple to thinke, that her Majestie will quitt both her Honor and her Interest, for a new Reconciliation.

Where you did write unto me in your Letter by Vaccondary, to be directed how to carry your self, if the King should differre his Audience; because this Letter sheweth you have satisfaction in that Point, I shall need no farther to insift upon it then thus; that when in your Judgement you shall finde the suspense to be voluntary and disgracefull, you shall then doe well to seeme sensible of it, and to use this Argument; that his Ambassador is used here with better forme, being never kept three Daies from Audience, whensoever he desires it.

For the points concerning the Treaty, you doe very wisely and seasonably remember them; not that I thinke he will be brought to many of those things, but because I see the lack of renewing Treaties betweene him and the Queene, makes him think that he doth her Majestie a Pleasure to suffer her Cloth to be vented, or almost any certaintie observed for Imposition. Only I have thought good to lett you know, that I am doubtfull least there will be propounded some Conditions, that will abate her Majestie's Customes, which of late Years have had augmentation. And therefore if you could informe your selfe underhand, what Conditions it is like they will insift upon, I would further carry on the purpose of entering into a Treaty: Although at this time, we have now (as you know) two

Treaties

Treaties towarde, one with Spaine, and the other with Denmarke. In the Treaty of Denmarke these are the Commissioners, the Bishop of London, Mr. Parkyns, and some other Civilian. The Meeting is at Emden, where the King doth send his Chancellor, and an another principall Person. If it seeme strange that a Bishop is employed, it may seeme rather straunger, that all other Princes doe employe them, and only here in England they have Barrons livings, and doe noe Service, but walke in Cloysters. For France, the Erle of Northumberland, yourself, Mr. Harbert, and Mr. Beale shall be the Commissioners. Or if there be any change, it will be some other in the Place of Mr. Harbert, because his qualitie is not sufficient to answer Richardott. Of my owne comming over I hope to make prevention; for besides that I would be loath to undergoe the Burthen, it doth no way agree with my fortune to be at new Charges. For yourself, no Man should be gladder to see you if I did goe: But for the Journey to Lyons or Marseilles you shall not neede to provide, for her Majestie will dispense with it.

Having now imparted unto you as much as the present tyme affordeth, I must conclude my Letter with a Request. This Bearer, is a yong Gentleman whose Name is Townshend; he hath bin well bredd, and by his owne Industrie attayned to a good superficiall Knowledge in the French and Italian Tongues, and would be able with a little exercise to write faire Hands. My end is (at his Returne) to have him attend upon my Boye, in which respect I can be content to be at some moderate Charge with him. Now Sir I shall take it for a very great Favour, if you will please to cause some of your People to place him in la Chambre garnie in Paris, and to agree for all Charges incident. For I know by Experience, that if those yong Men that goe over, were severed from Companie of English, that their Language would increase in much shorter tyme: And I am purposed he shall not stay long, and doe desire his Tongue may be pure. To this I must adde only this Request, that you would be pleased (even for my poore Boyes sake your Wive's Cosen) that Mr. Wynwood or some of yours, may hearken whether he use any riottous Life or Disorder, and certifie me, to the Intent that I may gesse whether he be fitt to be neere my Sonne: And further, that you will direct him to resort to the Exercises of the reformed Religion, and that you will be pleased to give him leave to repaire to your godly Exercises; but in no sort to be conversant in your House, because it is full of English. When you have done me these frendly Offices, (to trouble yourself for my sake) I pray you certifie me how the State of the Charges stands, and I will pay it here to whom you will assigne: A course which I think meeter to be used, then to have left him to make his owne provision for any of those things. And because I meane to Proportion the Charge he shall put me to, I desire to heare from you before I assigne him any other Receipts, especially for uncertaine Expences, both because it may be a Motive to lavish spending, and because my meaning is (though he be a Gentleman born) to have him fashioned in his Disposition to doe my Sonne service. Only I doe desire that your Stuard or Secretary, may give him such Mony from time to time, for Apparrell and other Necessaries, as you shall think fitt; which I will see discharged, though not with ten in the hundred, yet with the Interest of many Thanks. Her Majestie doth very well allowe that you have pressed for the Debts, and meaneth herself to deale straynably with the Embassador. And soe, &c.

Your very loving Friend, &c.

RO. CECYLL.

Since the Writing of this Letter, her Majestie hath commaunded me to tell you merily, that altho' you write one Letter of State Matters, yet she must have allwaies one half Sheet of Court Newes and Accidents. The Erle of Essex's remove to his House, is agreeable to that I have formerly written, and soe will be the rest of the Proceeding, sutable to the Queenes benign Disposition.

Sir

An. 1600.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 9th April 1600. O. S.

I Wrote unto you lately by a Servant of mine owne, advertifeing you what Propositions I had made unto the King, to discover his Intentions in the most materiall Points I had negotiated with him since my comming; that so her Majestie being fully cleered what account and assurance she could make of him, might resolve with better ground in this her great Busines. The Satterday after I dispatched him, Monsieur de Villeroy came unto me, and brought me this Answer, " That the King's Intent and Desire, was not only to entertayne all former Treaties and Alliances made with her Majestie and her Predecessors, and " namely that of 1572, but to fortifie and renewe them, and if neede were, to
 " increate them; protesting of the King's exceeding Affection towards her Ma-
 " jestie, and of his great Obligation that he acknowledged to owe her; and " therefore made offer, that the King would send purposely into England, as soon " as it should please her Majestie, a Man of very good qualitie; to conclude, and " performe what should be fitt, touching that Treaty. And that the same Par" ty should have Power likewise to agree of the Tyme, and Forme of Repay" ment of her Money, both for this present Yere, and for an annuall Somme
 " till the Debt were discharged: And likewise to determine of some good course
 " to her Majestie's Contentment, touching the two last Points containd in my " Proposition. I replied, that the Answer was unperfitt and uncertain in the " first and chiefest Point I had proposed, touching the Mony; which had no Affi-
 " nitie with the other matter of the Treaty, which I had allways severally ne" gotiated, and wherein the King had ingaged himself by many Promises to give " me a speedy Answer; and said, that if the King had any purpose to give her
 " Majestie Contentment therein, I saw no reason why he should refuse to declare
 " it, his Estate being already perfaited for this Yere, and fower Moneths of it
 " already past, and the Season come, wherein her Majestie might with reason " expect, rather to receive Mony then to debate of it. That no Treaty could " binde the King to the Payment of the Money more strongly, then he was all-" ready bounde, nor yet make him more able to do it. That by performing in " some measure the Contracts he had already made, he should give the Queene
 " more cause to trust the Treatyes he offered to renewe: Whereas otherwise, re" fusing to satisfye herein the least Demaund she could make him, (but wherein
 " she had greatest Reason and Justice of her side,) he gave her little cause to " hope of Favour and Assistance, in any greater measure, if she should neede it.
 " Therefore I prayed I might receive a more direct and plaine Answer in the " matter of the Money, without which I should have little comfort to relate the " rest. And for that purpose I desired him to procure me Audience of the King " with some Expedition. He said he would relate my Speech unto the King,
 " and procure me Audience if he could." The next Day I sollicitd my Audience both by him and Monsieur de Gondy, but could not obtaine it. The Morrow after early the King went to St. Germains, promising to returne that Night, but came not till the next Day after Dinner, and that Evening departed towards Fontainebleau, to be private and take the Dyett for 10 or 12 Daies. Wherefore feing I was not like to have Accessse unto him of a good time, I made a little short Reply in writing, (whereof I send a Coppie) upon Monsieur de Villeroy's Promise to present it to the King, and to procure me an Answer. This Morning
 I went to him to receive the Answer, which he delivered me in this sort;
 " That whereas I desired to knowe certainly what Somme of Money the King
 " would paye her Majestie this Yere, he could not absolutely give me answer,
 " nor would he resolve, till he heard an Answer of his last Dispatch he made " into England, which he hoped would give her Majestie good Contentation.
 " In the meane time he praied me to have Patience, and to interprete the best " of

“ of his Aufwere, both in myne owne Concept, and in my Report to her Ma-“ jestie. An. 1600.

Now, Sir, to deliver you my Concept of this matter, this it is, They are infinitely desirous to breake off this Treaty of Peace, or if that cannot be, at the least to hold the chief Place and Interest in her Majestie's Amitie: and for that purpose are willing to renewe the Treaties. But they are jealous that her Majestie hath no Intention to do it, and found themselves therein, (as Monsieur de Villeroy himself discovered in speech unto me) upon some cold Aufwere, Monsieur de Boisfisse receaved in that matter about two Moneths since, ether from her Majestie or your Honor. And I learne for certaine, and by good meanes, that Monsieur de Villcroy takes all this that I have done, to proccede from me, d'Office as they terme it, only to sound them, and drawe some Promise of Money from them; which done, her Majestie (he thinks) hath no purpose to renewe the Treaties. But if it please her Majestie to cleere them of that Doubt, and to offer to renewe the Treaties, upon Condition they will pay her such a Somme of Money as she shall think fitt this Yere, (which notwithstanding will hardly be above 200000 Crownes, if so much,) and assure her of an annuall Payement till the Debt be discharged; ether you shall drawe that Contentment and Assurance from them which you would, (as I verily beleve you may at this tyme) or you shall gaine another Point of no small Advantage, namely, to discover that you are not to trust or build upon any thing from them at any time. For if they will doe nothing now, (her Majestie's Occasions to maintaine her Warres, and their owne Interests to assure her Amitie so seasonably requiring it,) you may make a sure Conclusion, that no other occasion will drawe it from them. And if there be no other Fruit but that made of this Negotiation, I thinke it not impertinent nor unfruitfull for her Majestie, that she may not be deceived in the account which happily she makes of this King. But as I said, I rather beleve the former: And the better to drawe them to it, it will not be amisse to enter-tayne the Treaty with Spaine, whether you think to conclude it or nay, at least till you have receaved from hence the Satisfaction you looke for. And though you should both intend and see likelyhood to conclude a Peace with Spaine, I see not why it should not be good for the Queene to differre it soe long, till she might both assure her Marchants State and Trade here, and drawe hence per-adventure fifty or threescore thousand Pound: whereof the Peace being once made, she is in daunger never to see a Penny. They will not offer to binde you not to make Peace with Spaine, but only seeke to assure themselves, that you will not make Alliance with Spaine against them, which is the thing they extremely feare, and whereof in my poore Opiniion they would be held in doubt, till you drawe Satisfaction from them. If her Majestie be pleased to continue this Negotiation, she must first advowe my Proceeding with them, els your confirme Monsieur de Villeroy's Suspicion, and overthrowe the very Ground of all. Next I desire to have an Aufwere with all possible speede. Monsieur de Villeroy receaved a Packett upon Munday last from Monsieur de Boisfisse in four Daies: I suppose it imports somewhat; comming in such haste, though I cannot learne what. The last Weeke before he brought me my Aufwere, he sent away in great speede, which made me likewise send away my Servant at the same tyme. I understand he sends againe to morrow, and therefore I have dispatched this Messenger, willing him to take Post all the way, that he may prevent his Currier if it be possible. Your Honor will be pleased to have some Consideration of him accordingly, for sure the ordinary Allowance in that case will scarce defraye the Charge.

The King purposeth about the 10th of May to beginne his Jorney toward Lyons, which argueth that he is not fully assured of the Duke of Savoy, though his Ambassador here intertaine him with many faire Promises. Your Honor seeth, that if you will have any thing negotiated with this King, you must lose no time. Monsieur de Villeroy told me, if the Queene would, the King would send within these three Weeks to renewe the Treaty. I beseech your Honor, if you will

An. 1600. have any thing done, use speede in directing me, and send by an ordinary Messenger, for Gentlemen that bring Packetts make no haste. And so, &c.

Your Honor's most, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

The Party whom the King doth purpose to send to be installed in the Order for him, is Monsieur de Chattes Governour of Diepe; who, as Monsieur de Villeroi doth assure me, shall have Commission to treat likewise of these Points which herein have bin mentioned. The States have already this Yeare received 50000 Crowns here, and are promised 50000 more in June next, with assurance also of 100000, to be payed them before the end of this Yere.

Memoire presenté au Roy le 11 d'Avril 1600.

SIRE,

L'Ambassadeur de la Royne d'Angleterre ayant receu commandement de s'ap-prester pour se trouver à ceste Assemblée Des Deputies à Boulogne, ou il y a apparence qu'il trouvera aussi quelques uns des principaux Conseillers des sa Majesté, qui luy commanderont par aventure de leur faire rapport de ce qu'il a negocié avecq vostre Majesté depuis sa venue, & de la Responce qu'il en a ti-rée, afin qu'estant bien esclaircis de la Volonté & Intention d'icelle, ilz puissent avec plus de Lumiere & Fondement se resouldre & proceder au fait de ce Traicté: Supplie pourtant tres humblement vostre Majesté, de luy faire declarer avant qu'il parte, vostre plaisir & resolution determinée aux points suyvans, lesquels il vous a cy devant à diverses fois proposés, sans toutesfois en avoir peu recevoir la satisfaction qu'il desiroit.

Primierement, que suivant la promesse que vostre Majesté a souvent faicte à la dite Dame Royne, par le dit Ambassadeur, que par le sien en Angleterre, de luy repayer ceste année quelque bonne somme de ce qu'elle luy presta durant ses troubles, il luy plaise declarer quelle Satisfaction Elle entende faire à la dite Dame, tant pour ceste année presente, que pour les années suivantes, jusques à ce, que ladite debte soit deschargée: Et ce, tant en Cas que la paix se face, qu'autrement.

Secondement, qu'ayant vostre Majesté fait entendre par cy devant au dit Am-bassadeur, que vostre intention est, non seulement d'observer & entretenir les Traictés faictes avec Ladite Dame tant par vostre Majesté que par vos prede-cesseurs & mesmes celuy de l'an 1572, mais aussi de les confirmer, & renouvel-ler, & les augmenter si il en est besoyn: Il vous plaise declarer audit Ambassadeur plus particulièrement vostre volonté la dessus, a sçavoir, quant au dit Traicté de l'an 1572; puis qu'il semble, qu'une simple signification de vostre Intention, n'est pas suffisante pour le remettre en force, ains qu'il aura besoyn d'estre expressement renouvelé, quand & en quelle sorte vostre Majesté entend de proceder à la confirmation d'iceluy, & que c'est qu'elle desire d'y adjouster; afin que la dite Dame se puisse esclaircir de vostre Intention, & sçavoir le fon-dement & assurance qu'elle pourra faire de vostre Amitié en tous evenemens.

Tiercement, Puis qu'il n'y a rien plus contraire à la condition de bonne A-mitié & aux Traictés mesmes que vostre Majesté a faict avecq la dite Dame, que de permettre que vos Subjects aillent servir aux Navires des Ennemis de la dite Dame, au prejudice notable d'icelle, ce que vostre Majesté a promis au dit Ambassadeur de ne pas permettre doresnavant, mais d'en faire les defences requises; Qu'il plaise à vostre Majesté declarer, en quelle sorte elle entend d'y proceder, en Cas que la Guerre duré entre la dite Dame, & Le Roy d'Espagne, & l'Archiduc.

En Quatrieme lien, sur ce que vostre Majesté a cy devant aussi déclaré au dit Ambassadeur, que son Intention n'est que ses Subjects abusent de la liberté du

du traffiq & Commerce en Espagne au prejudice de la dite Dame, en y portant de la France, ou d'ailleurs, Armes, Munitions, Artillerie, poudres, ou autres choses propres & necessaires pour l'Equippage & Attelage des Navires, qui de fait ne se peuvent simplement & proprement conter entre les Marchandises, mais ont tousjours esté Subjects à un reiglement particuliere; Qu'il plaise à vostre Majesté, declarer au dit Ambassadeur sa volonte particulièrement la dessus, en quelle sorte Elle a deliberé de l'empescher, ou permettre que la dite Dame l'Empesche, en Cas que la Paix ne se face avec le dit Roy d'Espagne. An. 1600.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

S I R,

19th Aprill 1600.

I Have now received two especiall Packetts lately from you, (since I wrote unto you by yong Townesbend) whereupon I will make you answer, after I shall have acquainted you how Things have passed here. You shall understand that Mr. Edmondes is arrived three Daies since, who hath declared the Substance of his Negotiation, which is this in effect: That those three Points, to which her Majestie gave Refusall, have bin declared to the Archduke with Protestation, as being Things of so extreme and exorbitant Nature, that her Majestie can in no wise yeeld unto them. To the which, (although they seemed mightily to oppose) yet in Conclusion they desire a Meeting by their Letter, which containeth (implicativè) that seeing they desire to meet, we ought to imagine they have a purpose to accommodate; for if they had not, it may be well judged, that it doth behove them to be as sensible of a wayne Colloquie, as the Queene.

Hereupon her Majestie hath returned this Answer, which will appear to you by the Letter inclosed. And you are further to understand, that it is her Majestie's Pleasure that you shall be a Commissioner; for which purpose you shall do well to draw downe to some good Towne nere Bollen, whereby you may meet (upon a Daie's Warning) the rest of your Fellowe Commissioners, that shall be deputed from hence, without being driven one of you to stay for another. It is also her Majestie's Pleasure, (in respect of the Qualitie and Place you hold there) that you shall supplie the supreme Place in this Commission; out of this Reason, that the King of Spaine's Ambassador must not appeare in the World, to be too good to be matched with her Majestie's Ambassador, yea though there were odds in their particular Qualities, (which if it be, the best I am sure is on your side.) When it was thought that the Admirall of Arragon should have bin one, and had the supreme Place, then was it meant to have sent the Earle of Northumberland; but now perceiving this Transposition, and that Carrillo is come in his place, her Majestie intendeth that Mr. Harbart, Mr. Beale, and Mr. Edmondes, shall be appointed to answer him, Richardott, and Verreyken. I pray you, Sir, lett this Letter give you sufficient notice of this her Majestie's Resolution; which I doe send unto you with all Expedition, because you may the better provyde for all things fitt for you at Bollen. For which purpose I thinke you may do well to send over some Servant of yours, that may behold the manner of their Preparations that goe from hence, to whom I will be an Assistant in all things that concerne you as to my owne Brother; protesting unto you, that I am glad her Majestie hath elected you to be a Steerer in this waighty Affaire, because both her Majestie doth take you, (and so doth my self with others assure our selves,) that you have too much Religion and Discretion, to give way to any private Passion or prejudicate Disposition, ether violently to Warre, or blyndely to Peace, more or less then the matter it selfe shall carry, upon safe and honorable Grounds.

It

An. 1600.

It remaineth now, that I returne you this Answere to both your Letters; as well the one containing the first Proposition, as the other wherein you doe advertise Monsieur de Villeroy's Replie. On Sunday last (before which tyme I had acquainted her Majestie with all Particulars) the Ambassador craved Audience, at which time the Substance of his Speech was to take notice of your fyrst Memoryall, and withall to beseech her Majestie to open her self, " what time she would appoint for the Treaty, and what Somme of Money she would aske, to the intent that when there should be any Persons appointed, that matter might likewise be accommodated; still affirming, that although it might be that the Legistes (as he termed them) might conceive the Treaty at Bloys (which Henry III. did renewe by his Letter) to be extinguished, because the King that now is had not observed this Forme; yet he could never imagine but in true Construction, the two Crownes were possessed of all the Interest which could be derived from that Treaty. Upon this Speech her Majestie told him, it seemed wonderfull preposterous to her, that this matter of the Money (wherein she had soe long attended a particular Resolution) should have any new reference to the matter of the Treaty; and therefore told him, that although she was exceedingly disposed, and ready to enter into any Treaty, yet if she thought the Answere for the point of the first Payment, should have any Dependency or Suspension, for any Circumstances that must ether goe before or after the Treaty, she should thinke her selfe unduely proceeded withall. Wherein she still ranne the course, to shewe that she nether intended to treat in respect of the Money, nor to vauewe the Money more then the Treaty. From that he fell still to aske her Majestie what Somme she would have of the French King; who (being not a little moved to heare nothing but dilatory Questions) answered him roundly, " That she had no other Particular to speake of, but to desire to be payed her Debt, and so brake of somewhat discontented." With this he was not a little troubled, and came to my Lord Admirall and my self, and told us what had passed; " saying that the Queene asked Impossibilities, for the King would begin to pay her, if she would be content to take some Portion, but to take all it was in vaine to speake of: Whereupon we required him to forbear to make his Dispatch, untill we might speake with her Majestie, with whom we thought we should so cleere the point, as she would bring him a better Subject for his Letters." Herewith he seemed satisfied, and so yesterday in the Afternoone he had Conference with her Majestie's Counsaile. At our Meeting, we told him " That her Majestie had commanded us (for he had complained the Day before of lack of Justice in matters of Depredations) to declare these three Things. First, the great Care her Majestie had taken, by constituting certayne Commissioners summarily to determine those Differences, wherein we were able to give him some Instances of Justice done on our parts; where (for ought that we know) there was very fewe or none of the French King's part. Next we told him, that (because her Majestie had seene many hard Measures offered in France to her Subjects, and many Priviledges denied, wherein they were interessed by virtue of former Treaties) her Majestie hath caused her Ambassador to presse a Re-establishment of the same; and soe much the rather, because yt hath fallen out, that when Complaint was made by our Marchants, for Courses taken repugnant to such Priviledges as have bin graunted by former Treaties; they have bin answered by the King's Ministers in such cold manner, as though they were beholding for new Curtesies, if old Orders were observed. In which Consideration, her Majestie had commanded you, to propound to the King some convenient way to be established, that the Subjects of eche Prince might knowe what to trust to. Thirdly we told him, he must not conclude that her Majestie had no meaning, to presse the King of all the Debt at once, (because she demaunded no Summe in particular) but that she did thinke it preposterous for a Creditor to aske a Portion of a Debtor, to whom it belonged to make the Demaund in particuler, if he found himself not able to pay the whole. This did a little

" quiett,

“ quiett him, and he thereupon desired, if we would not speake it to him as “ Mr. Ambassador, that we would (out of the Opinion we had of his Intention An. 1600.
 “ to doe the best Offices) declare unto him what we did privately conceave
 “ would be accepted by the Queene, if it were offered. Whereunto we told “ him, though we had no warrant, yet we would thus farre open our selves, that “ if the King would pay 100000*l.* at three Payments in one Yeare, the first in “ May, the second six Moneths after, and the last at the Yeares end; we were of “ opinion, that her Majestie would make some accord (amongest other Articles
 “ of the Treaties to be renewed) for the Payment of the Residue, in such sort
 “ as should be reasonable; desiring only to be cleared in the first Point, what to “ trust to of this first Yeare, without Reference to further Treaty; considering “ that it should discover a Weakenes in her, to have more debating upon that “ which is past Disputation. We did also lett him knowe, (because the Circum“ stances of Commissioners to be employed in the Action of Treaty were subject “ to many delaies) that such was her Majestie’s opinion of his Integritie and “ Judgement, as she meant to require you to move the French King, (and so
 “ you must doe) to use no other Formalitie in that point, then to give his Em-“ bassador here, large and ample Power to treat and conclude all things for Re“ stauration of the Treaties in force. Which she desired so much the more, be“ cause she thought it something detractive from the Opinion which the World “ had formerly conceived of the Perfection of their Amity, when a League “ was made offensive and defensive, there should appeare necessitie of new Trea“ ties betweene them two; which was the Cause that she did wish the same might “ be carried as much as might be sine strepitu; and withall commaunded us to “ adde farther, that if the King and his Counsaile did thinke the Treaties of 1572, “ sufficiently in force without any further Treaty, and that he would by his “ Letter write that he tooke it foe, and meant to hold it so, her Majestie would “ never goe further, but doe the like to his full Satisfaction”. This I write by her Majestie’s Commaundment, both because the Embassador seemeth here to urge it, that the doubtfullnes of the Strength of the former Treaty proceeds first from us, (when they tooke themselves to be absolutely bound) as also, because her Majestie would not have the purpose of sending new Commissioners hither, to be the Cause of delaying an Order for the Payment of the Money. Nether (to you be it spoken under benedicite) doth she much care to renewe Treaties, except it be necessarie for the good of her Subjects Trade, seeing there is so small assurance by them. It is true, that he complayned to the Queene for lack of Justice; but we made him at our Conference confesse, that he had both received Justice and Execution in divers things. Then he began to lay the fault upon the Proceedings at the Common Law, which did graunt Prohibitions oftentimes against the Admiraltie, which bredd chargeable Delaies. Whereof, (when we drewe him to speake of some Particulars) we found he could give us no instance but in one case, which is shortly this. Whensoever an Offence is committed at Sea, the Court of Admiralty may arrest, seaze and graunt Execution upon all that is brought in, in what place soever the Offenders or any for them have bestowed their Goods. But when it falleth out, that Goods taken at Sea are after sold upon the Land, and so the Property changed, it is true they are within the Jurisdiction of the Common Law. Which is nether so frequent, nor of so great Importance for him to mislike, considering that it is provided for by Statute Law in that case, that upon the Parties exhibiting his Bill in Chancerye, the Lord Keeper will give him his Remedy. Whereof when we informed him, he told us that the Commissioners should have directed the French to this Course, which they understood not. To which we answered, that the Commissioners used not to give Counsell, but that it properly belonged to their Advocats, who if they did not put them into the right way, the fault was not ours. Some other Complaints he made, which being examined are things done by the Pyrats, who he is sure (by the Experience he had already) shall receive Justice even by the losse of their Lives, which is the only Satisfaction any Prince can give, except she should

An. 1600. should pay out of her owne Coffers, for the Robberies of Offendors. Besides I pray you to note, and so I pray you to avow, that since the Accord passed, for sufficient Orders and Cautions in these Cases of Reprisall to be putt in when Shippes goe to Sea; he is not able to complaine of one Offence, wherein he hath not had true Execution of Justice: But for as much as he pretendeth here, that divers of her Majesties Subjects have received Execution upon Judgment, and that we doe not heare of any one that is satisfied, I pray you lett me be informed how they are used there. For Alderman Watts (whom he alleaged for one) complayneth, that though he have had Sentence of one of his Causes, he is no whitt neerer Execution.

I doe fend you herewith a Letter written in the favour of Mr. Thynne, wherein her Majestie would be gladd you could procure some good Course. You shall allso doe well (upon your accesse to the King) to say formally, that you were commaunded to impart unto him, her Majestie's further Stepp towards the Treaty, because he shall not think himself to be too farre a Straunger. How things have bin carried heretofore, I neede not repeat unto you, nether is there any great Necessitie of Repetition unto him. It may suffice that you declare now unto him, that seeing her Majestie hath soe discharged herselfe to the Archduke by Mr. Edmond's last Negotiation, as they cannot be ignorant of her Resolution in poynt of Consequence, and yet (that being sufficiently known) he still inviteth her to have a Meeting; her Majestie hath thought fitt (having formerly ingaged her self by promise that she would treat) to take occasion now under the Judgment which she doth make of his last Writings by Mr. Edmond's, wherein he still did presse the Meeting, rather to proceed on to the Colloquie, then to breake off before: Whereby she might receive the scandall of Indisposition to peace and quietnes, (from which humour she hath ever disclaymed.) Though she is pleased that you shall satisfie him from her, that (whatsoever may be their Ends or Artifices) she will never be drawen by all the Conference in the World, to any other then good and honorable Conditions, with care for ever of her Allies. Next you must thank him on her Majestie's Behalf, for his courteous Offer of the Towne of Bollen, whereof she doth accept, and from whence she doth meane to acquaint him as there shal be cause, with the Degrees of her proceeding; being yett but only able to give him this tast of the first beginning. You shall doe well to make choice of some confident Person whom you may leave behinde you, and so to proportion your tyme of comming from him towards Bollen, as he may not take occasion by your too hastie coming away, to deferre that which her Majestie most expecteth; but that (if it be possible) you tarry to procure some certain hold for the Mony, which will be an acceptable Office to the Queene; who hath precisely commaunded me to will you, not to post away from him sooner, then by necessitie you shall be occasioned for your arrivall at Bollen, where your fellow Commissioners shall meet you with Instructions.

I pray you Sir informe your self what you may, of the best Arguments we may use to maintaine our Precedency with Spaine, and by your next Letters give me some tast, what you can learne there of it. For though I meane to furnish my self here with as many Arguments as I can; yet because the matter (as I doe understand) was in question betweene France and Spaine at the last Meeting, I would be gladd to heare with what Arguments ech Partie maintayned their Pretensions. I pray you allso lett me have a coppie of such demaunds as you have made of the Debts to the French King, that I may see to what Somme you drawe them, and by what Authority you maintayne them; that our Conference here with the Embassador may agree with yours there.

Thus I have (as lively as I can) represented unto you the true Image of the Affaires here, wherein allthough it be true, that the Embassador here hath a picquant Spirite cladd with externall Formalitie, yet may you so proceed there at this time, as you shall finde that he by his Letters hath carryed himself; for he hath written a Dispatch this Day, and promiseth to performe Miracles by earnest earnest Recommendation of her Majestie's Demaunds. And thus having tyred you and my self with a long Letter I commit you to God and remayne. An. 1600.

From the Court
at Greenwich.

Your very loving Freind, &c.

RO. CECYLL.

Since the Writing of this Letter, a most unfortunate Newes is arrived: For the Erle of Ormond, in a Parley with a vile Traitor one Onney Mac Rory of Lemster, is taken Prisoner by treachery of an Embuscade. Sir George Cary the President of Mounster was in his Company, and the Rebels had hold of his Horse and him, but by the Strength of his own Horse and his own Resolution, he brake from them. Till this infortunity to his Lordship's Person, (which is a very great dishonor) things went very well for us in Ireland, and good likelihood there is still.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 24th Aprill 1600, O. S.

I Received more then 8 Daies since your Honor's Letter by Mr. Townshend, which I have differred to answeare hitherto for want of a Messenger. And this being the first opportunity offred, I would not omitt it; but was willing to let your Honor understand, that I have placed Mr. Townshend in a Minister's House, where I am sure he shall be very well used, and have many helpes both for the Language and any other Studye he affects; which he could not have elsewhere. The Charge of his Lodging and Dyett will be ten Crownes a Moneth, which I will see disburfed from time to time as it shall be due, and likewise furnish him for his other Wants as your Honor requireth. I will be carefull also to looke into his Conversation, so to make some judgment of him whether he be fitt for that Imployment that your Honor designes him for, which I know to be of great Regard and Importance unto you.

Since my last by Simons, there hath happened no great matter worth the advertising. The King hath bin and yett is, at Fontainebleau in his Dyett, which he began on Fryday last, and will finish to morrowe; during which time there have bin some offers and tenders of a Conference betweene Monsieur du Plessis, and the Bishop of Eureux, but they cannot agree of the forme and method of it. The Journey to Lyons holds, so as the King doth appoint to keep the Feast of the Order du St. Esprit at Moulins upon Whitsonday, having now transferred it from New-yeares-tide till that time, as more proper for it. We beginne to be uncertaine of the Princesse of Florence's arrival; it is thought the King will not lett her stay for the Grand Duchesses Companie, but will hasten her comming so, as she may be at Marseilles in June or July, because he would make a speedier returne into these Parts. Her Dowry will be about 400 thousand Crownes, besides some 250 thousand that the Duke had lent this King, which shall be drowned as Parcell of her Portion. The Count Fuentes Soldiers are allready arrived in part at Genoua, and himself with the rest is expected presently. He comes with the same Authoritie that the Duke d'Alva had in the Warre against Paul the 4th: Namely to command all the Spanish Forces, (if occasion be) in Milan, Naples and Sicilie, and with Commission to levy 6000 Suisses, and to make an Army of 20000 Men, if neede be. He brings with him a Million of Treasure. This maks all Men (as I wrote,) doubtfull of the Duke of Savoy, yet his Ministers entertayne the King with good Words, and in outward Demonstration he seemes to beleeve them: Yet he hath allready sent away the Duke of Vendosmes Companie of Horse to attend him at Moulins, and the Regiment of his Gards hath order to march that way likewise. There is an embleme that passeth here underhand, whereby some shrewde conceited Fellowe would represent the present

An. 1600. present State of France. The Devise is this, a Globe supported by fower Pillers, every Piller representing a principall Personage, as the one the Chancellor, with this Word Inutilis æquitas; another Monsieur de Rosny, with this Word, Utilis iniquitas; the third the Marshall Biron, with this Word, Fidelis temeritas; the fourth Monsieur de Villeroy with this Word Prudens infidelitas: Upon the Topp of the Globe the King is made sitting with this Word, Infelix Felicitas.

After great and long instance made by the Pope's Ministers, the King hath assented to the Reception and authorising the Councile of Trent in this Realme, and there is an Arrest of the Privy Counsaile already given for it. Not long since the Chancellor proposed the Matter to the Presidents and Chief Counsaillers of the Parlament, sent for purposely to his owne House; requiring them in the King's Name, to ratifie that which had bin done by the Counsaile. Their Answer was, that it was a matter that had bin often offered unto that Court, and throughly debated, but allwaies rejected, as dangerous and derogatory to the Estate, Liberty, and Honor of this Crowne; and that they saw not what new Reason could be alleaged for it now, more then had bin heretofore, which might make them differ in judgment and opinion from those that had possessed their Places in former times, and therefore desired not to be pressed in it. The Chancellor in the end replied with some choller, that if they would not doe it with their good Wills, there would be meanes found that they should be forced to do it. Which Speech of his was found very straung by them, and very offensively taken. Since I heare, they are commaunded to certifie unto the Counsaile, all the Acts and proceedings that have bin formerly in that Court, touching that Matter. It is a thing that all Men look after, especially those of the Religion who apprehend a very great disadvantage by it; although it is not intended to passe, but with Reservation of the Libertye graunted by the King's Edict.

The King hath bin much troubled to retire a Promise he made in writing under his hand unto Madamoyfelle d'Entragues, to marry her if she proved with Child within six Moneths after he enjoyed her. She was very resolute a while not to depart with it, but to keep it for the Justification of her Honor; that it might appear, she yeilded not to him upon any base or dishonest Consideration, but upon such a direct promise of mariadge: And she did likewise for a tyme refuse him her Companie, pretending that she was so enjoined by her Confessor at Easter. But since, both Honor and Conscience have given place to Profit; She hath delivered up the Writing, and the King must give her a Pension of 6000 Crowns a Yeare, and to her Father and Mother to each of them a Pension of 4000 Crowns a Yeare; and besides she must have in ready Money 100000 to marry her. Upon this accord, they have mett againe at Fontainebleau according to their former manner, (ut dicitur;) notwithstanding the Confessors Inhibition. But in this meane time of unkindenes betweene them, the King was not unprovided, but had fondry haunts in this Towne; and among the rest within three Houses of me, whence I think he will not be long absent, for he is expected in Towne upon Fryday or Satterday, and his Counsaile likewise. These pettie Matters I am bold to write your Honor, to give some Satisfaction to the Postscript of your last Letter, which I therefore beseech you to interpret the best of. And soe hoping every hower of some Answer to my two last Letters, because I heare Monsieur de Villeroy's Curryer is returned, I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's most, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.Right Honorable,Paris 27th Aprill 1600. O. S.

I Received yesterday in the Evening by Simons, your Honor's Dispatch of the nyneteenth of this Month, and do attend an Opportunity to negotiate with this King as I am therein directed, which I feare will not be these five Daies at the soonest. For the King comes this Day from Fontainebleau, and will ether intertayne himselfe with some Pastime by the way, or if he come to this Towne, it will be for his secret Pleasure, and so, as he will not be knowen to be here till his Counsaill come likewise, which will not be till Tuesday at the soonest. I will urge my Audience with as much Earnestnes and Expedition as I may, to the end I may bring with me a cleere Answer from the King in the Points I have proposed; which I am exceeding gladd that her Majestie hath so well profecuted with the Ambassador there, and thereby avowed my Proceeding here, which they were doubtfull of. I hope we shall effect some Good by it, allthough not in so great measure as you propounded to the Ambassador. But for the offering to authorise and revive the Treaty only by Letters betweene the Princes: First I hold it very uncertain for the Queene's Subjects, who cannot pleade that in any Court of Justice as they may the Treaty, and thereby must needs stand at the Will and Curtesie of the King's Officers here, and be subject to Innovations, which will be daily offered; as there is one at this instant, by a Decree of the Counsaill (notwithstanding my Opposition) forbidding any Cloth to be brought into this Realme but White or dyed in the Wool, which cutts off the chiefe of our Trade into Brittaine, Gascony, and Rochelle, where our dyed Cloathes of all Colours are best vented. Of which Innovation, (as likewise of all other to our Prejudice,) the renewing of the Treaty will be the only Remedie, and reduce things to a Certitude. And seeing we intend to have some Treaty with France, why should we not as well desire to have that, as any other, being the most beneficiall and the most honorable for England, that ever was made betweene these two Crownes? Secondly, I feare that this Offer being made them, they will lay hold of it, and the King will presently write his Letters declaratory therein to the Queene, and thereby drawe the like from her, and afterwards make no great haste to content her for the Mony: For (as I wrote before) it is the Treaty that must drawe on the Money from hence, though her Majestie have reason to distinguish them, and not to tye her self to any Conditions or Obligation for receaving her owne. But seeing it is their Desire to renew the Treaty, and a thing no way prejudiciall, but rather profitable to her Majestie; it is good in my poore Opinion to make use of it, to pull on the Contentment desired in the other Point; and not to give them any hope of reviving the Treaty, either directly, or by Interpretation, without Satisfaction about the Mony; or any cause to mistrust, that it is the Mony only we seeke, and that we do not greatly desire the Alliance; for in both these Cases, they will be found less forward to give her Majestie the Contentment she expects. The surest way, in my poore Opinion, is to agree of a Summe to be paid upon the Conclusion or Signature of the Treaty; and for the more Expedition, that present Commission and Power to be given to the Ambassador there, to treate and conclude it.

I have sent your Honor a Note of the King's Debts to her Majestie, such as I have heretofore delivered to Monsieur de Villeroy and to Monsieur de Rosny. For the Verification of the most, I brought over Coppies of the Bonds, and Mr. Meredith's Accounts, signed and attested by your Honor: But for the Charge of the Forces in Picardy, (after the first six Moneths, for which there is a Bond of the King's) and for the 30000*l.* lent in the Year 1587, and for the Charge of the Army levied by the Prince of Anhalt, and the 6000*l.* for the Charge of the Forces brought over by my Lord Willoughby; I have nothing but a Note your Honor sent me to Bloys the last Sommer, out of which I have taken that which I have alleaged in my Memoriall touching those Particulars.

An. 1600.

For Satisfaction made here upon Complaints of any Englishman in matter of Piracy absolutely, I must say I knowe none as yet. In Mr. Alderman Watts his Complaint against those of Rochelle, there is a Judgment in the Admiralty, from which the other side hath appealed, and so it depends. In another Cause, (wherein he with others have appealed from a very injurious Sentence given by the Judge of Rochelle, confirmed as injuriously by the Marble Table here) the King's Advocat, when it was pleaded in the Chamber of the Edict, made his Conclusion, that our Men were not to be received and admitted to the Appeale, because they had not begon it within a Yere and a Day after the Sentence was given, from which they appealed; whereupon the Court toke tyme to be advised. What they will judge yet I know not, but if they judge it so, I think they will at once wipe away most of our Complaints. For the Custome hath bin, presently upon any Prize taken, to gett it jugded good Prize by the Judge of the Place, which was an easy matter; and then our Men that had the Wrong, (having little hope during the Troubles of France to obtayne any Justice) intermitted for the most part their Sutes; and so by this meanes (if it be established for Lawe) they shall be utterly excluded from any Remedy. I have interposed my self in it as farre as I may, and so meane to contynue; with what Successe, will appeare when it is judged.

The Points which were stood upon betweene the French and Spaniards for Precedence at their last Treaty, I shall hardly be able to get Knowledge of. For there is none here that was a Commissioner in it but the Chancellor; and how I shal drawe it from him I know not. Directly sure I shall not, but I will do the best I can by oblique meanes.

*The King hath bin much troubled with the Newes he hath received from Rome, that the Demoniaque Woman (whose Imposture was discovered here in Lent was Twelve-moneth) is come to Rome, and there in her Pangs hath delivered much scandalous Matter against him; as if he were a dissembled Huguenot and no Catholique, and that he did but watch his tyme to declare himself, and to do some notable Prejudice to the Catholiques in favour of the Heretiques. Whereof I dare undertake he is nothing guilty, but do rather perswade my self, he will prove the most dangerous Enemy that our Religion hath. He is very carefull to stopp this Scandall, and hath written earnestly to the Pope to cleere himself, and to have the Demoniaque punished. He hath proceeded against the Abbot of St. Martin in Berry, (who carried her to Rome) by Adjournment personall, and by Seazure of his Benefices. And to give a better taste of himself to that side, whom he wholly seeks to content, he hath declared himself very partiall and passionate, in this Conference betweene Monsieur du Plessis and the Bishop of d'Eureux. An Essay whereof your Honor may take by his Letter written with his own Hand to Monsieur d'Espernon, who is now in great shew of Favour with him. On the other side the Count Soissons went from the Court in great Displeasure and Discontentment; in so much as I here, the King hath given order to stay the Payment of his Pensions. In some, Sir, I assure your Honor there are infinite Discontentments here, and especially amongst those of the Religion, who receaving nothing but Distaste and Diffidence in all that concernes them, (ether publickly or privately) beginne to retire and to relie themselves, with purpose to stand upon their Gard and Strength. And the Opinion of all Men is, that this State will not continue long without Troubles. In which Subject I have had some Ouvertures made, which I cannot now relate.

I heare our English Fugitives have bin very well intertayned of late in the Low-Cuntries, and have their Pensions (which were once suspended) revived againe, with promise of the Arrerages, and to be better favoured then ever. What may be concluded of this your Honor can best judge. And so, &c.

Your Honor's very, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

S I R,

THE Letters which I have received by your Servaunt require very finall Replye at this time, saving only for that which concernes your Particular, whereof I take so much care, as I have sent an expresse Messenger about it; wherein I think good to declare freely unto you, that it is not possible that this Cuppe can passe from you, her Majestie being resolved to send no Nobleman to the Treaty; nor to doe her selfe that wrong, where her Ambassador is one, to have him second to any other. For the Charge, I cannot deny but you must needs be sensible of it; and yet I thinke it not amisse to tell you, That there is no Cause why you should use any Excesse therein, for I doubt not but your Port, as the Ambassador there (by that I have heard) with very little Addition, may very well serve the turne, to which I will prepare her Majestie's Mind accordingly. The Commander of Diepe hath now performed the Ceremony, and will I hope acknowledge himself to have bin honorably used. He hath bin feasted at the Court by the Queene, and likewise at Windsor, and hath this Day taken his leave. He had no other Commission to deale in Matters as you toke it, but only in this Ceremony. All things els, both for the Time, Place and Persons appointed for the Treaty, holdeth according to my last Letters.

This Night I have received Newes, that on Munday last the 28th of this Moneth, the Fort of Rossune otherwise called St. Andre, in Bomellswart, is yeilded up by Composition to Count Maurice, who hath lyen long before it. And notwithstanding the Archduke had sent an Armye to relieve it, (which lodged within half a Myle of it) yet thus hath proved the Successe, prayfed be God, to whom I recommend you, and rest

Your very loving Kinsman, &c.

RO. CECYLL.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.Right Honorable,Paris 9th May 1600, O.S.

I Received yesternight your Letters by Captain Primme, whereby I perceave, as it pleaseth you to write, that this Cuppe cannot passe from me, and therefore I resolve to submitt my self to her Majestie's Will, hoping that no more will be exacted of me then my Meanes and Warning could afford. Within two Days after my last Dispatch, understanding that the King's Purpose of comming to this Towne was altered, (by reason of Monsieur d'Alincourt's Return from Rome and Florence.) I sent to Fontainebleau to demand Audience, and received Answer, that the King would be in Towne the Fryday after, and therefore prayed me to have Patience till then. He came indeed the Fryday, but I could not get Audience till Sunday in the Afternoonè, at which time I presented him her Majestie's Letters, declared the Contents of them, and afterwards delivered what I had in Charge. The King answered little, and indeed lesse than at any time he hath bin accustomed, whereby I gesse he was not the best contented. He only said, " that he had no Intent to couple the Queene's Satisfaction for her Money, " and the renewing of the Treaties so together, as if he meant the one should " depend necessarily upon the other; but he had proposed them both together, " as things he thought would have bin both acceptable to her Majestie. I told " him they were both things acceptable to her, and therefore she had given me " Charge to signifie, that she was ready to renew the Treaties whensoever it " should please him, yf he thought they needed any Confirmation. But for the " Reason

An. 1600. “ Reasons alleaged to his Ambassador, (which I likewise repeated unto him) I “ said her Majestie was willing it should be rather managed and negotiated by his “ said Ambassador, then by any other expressly sent about it. And that the “ Point which her Majestie misliked was this, that there was no certain Offer “ made her of any present Satisfaction for this Yeare, whereof she expected
 “ some Assurance long ere this. And therein I did earnestly urge his Resolu“ tion before my Departure, that I might carry with me some Certainty in this “ Matter, which I had negotiated ever since my comming. He told me he “ would advise of it, and that I should have an Answer: Adding little, but on“ ly some Newes which he said he had received, that Count Maurice had sur-“ prized Velascoes Troupes in three of their Quarters, and defeated them; who “ was thereupon retired, and the Fort upon his Retraict entred into Parle, “ (which since we heare is rendred as your Honor writes.) And that the great “ Riches of this late Indian Fleet, is farre short of that it was first bruted to “ be, and instead of 16 Millions, is now certainly knowen not to amount to a“ bove nync, whereof not above two and a half to the King's Use; which he “ said would not suffice to pay the Partie which he made with the Genoues for “ the last, and this present Yeare.

Touching Mr. Thynne, whose Cause I opened unto him at large, “ he answer-“ red nothing, but willed me to give him a Note of it, and his Counsaile should “ consider of it, and give me Answer.” The next Day being Monday, I sent to Monsieur de Villeroy, to desire him to be a meanes to procure me an An-swere to those Things I had dealt with the King in with some convenient Expedition, that I might make some Report of it before my Departure hence, as her Majestie expected, and had given me in Charge to doe. But the Man was very waspish, and would give no other Answer, but that he would doe as the King should command him. That Afternoon the King went to St. Germaines, and so about the Country, with a purpose not to returne till Satterday. But on the Tuesday Morning the Counsaile went to him to St. Germaines, and returned that Night. On the Morrowe I sent againe to Monsieur de Villeroy, signifying that I had Commandement from her Majestie to presse an Answer, and that I stayed only for yt, and offering to come that Afternoon to him to receive it. He prayed me to forbear him a Day or two: So on Thursday in the Afternoon I went unto him, having before bin with the Chancellor about Mr. Thynne's Cause, and obtained Promise that it should be heard this Day. “ I told Monsieur de Villeroy, “ what Letters I had delivered from her Majestie to the King, and what I had “ further dealt with him in according to my Charge, praying againe I might re“ ceave an Answer to carry with me, as the King had promised me. He said, “ the King would write answer to the Queene's Letters, and send them to his “ Ambassador. I replied, that I had delivered most of my Charge in Speech, “ which required an Answer, as well as the Letters; and urged him to lett me “ understand the King's Pleasure therein. Whereupon, (although he would not “ give me any direct Answer till he had spoken againe with the King,) yet he “ was contented to enter into Discourse of the Points I had negotiated. And for “ the Mony, he said the Queene demaunded Impossibilities, requiring her whole “ Debt at once. I told him it was not well understood, nor well reported unto “ him; and that the matter which passed betweene her and Monsieur de Boisfisse
 “ was nothing but this. When Monsieur de Boisfisse had twice or thrice urg“ ed her Majestie to declare what Summe she required presently of the King,
 “ but withall offered nothing, she (taking it to be a kind of Dallyance and im“ pertinent Proceeding with her) told him, that the King's Bonds did declare “ sufficiently her Demaunds; meaning, that if the King found any difficultie to “ satisfie the whole this Yeare, it was rather fitt for him to make offer of that “ he was able to pay her, then for her to apportion her Debt. Wherein I said “ Monsieur de Boisfisse had bin sufficiently cleared by your Honor, and some o“ ther of her Majestie's Counsaile, with whom he had had particular Conference “ after he had spoken with her Majestie. I (said he,) they spake to him of “ 300000 Crowns, which is as impossible to the King to pay as the whole; and An. 1500.

 “ thereupon fell to discourse of the King's great Occasions of Expence for his “ Mariadge, for the Contentment of the Suiffers, and for the Uncertainty of “ the Affairs with the Duke of Savoye. I replyed, that there was none of these,
 “ to which he was by Honor and Justice more tyed then to the Satisfaction of “ the Queene, if he did but remember the State he was in when she lent him
 “ her Mony, and the Occasions she had now to redemaund yt; nether did it “ argue in them that due regard of her that she had deserved, to be so much “ more carefull to give Contentment to the Suiffers then to her, as to pay them
 “ a Million and a half this Year, and to her nothing. I denyed not but that the “ Suiffers Amitie had bin profitable to this State, and so might be hereafter:
 “ But I avowed that they had never deserved better of this State then her Maje“ stie had done, especially of this King: And that therefore she might as well “ looke to be regarded in her so just Demaunds, as the Suiffers, or any other “ Princes or State whatsoever. He said they were able to discern of the Utili“ ty of their Alliances, and to render to every one his due regard as should most “ import them. But for our Demaunds, he said, they were such as they could “ not tell what to answer us, being very loath to refuse us, and yet not able “ to content us. From that matter he proceeded to the other of renewing the “ Treatie; complaining, that whensoever they had offered to bring the matter to “ some Issue, the Queene gave back; so had she done when upon my first Mo“ tion of it, the King had assented to it at Blois: the like when their Ambassa“ dor had revived it some Moneths since; and now againe, when the King had “ offered to send one over purposely to conclude it, the Queene seemed willing “ rather to avoyde it then to desire it, by referring it over to the handling of “ their ordinary Ambassador, which (considering the fresh Example of our pro“ ceeding with him in the Treaty for Marine Causes) gave them little hope of “ any speedy Issue, but rather that we meant to drawe it in length, which “ they saw no purpose of. He complayned also, that her Majestie had refused “ to accompany the Point of her Satisfaction, with the other of renewing the “ Treaty, which he conceaved had bin to have gon together, and would have “ bin a meanes to have effected her Majestie's Contentment the better: But that “ she had refused, even that which I had thought reasonable, to accept of some “ Satisfaction upon the Signature of the Treaty. I answered, that her Majestie “ had sufficiently declared her Intention in this Matter, by commaunding me at “ the first to move and presse it. That the fault that it proceeded not when “ the King assented unto it at Blois, was theirs, not ours; For the Breach or In“ terruption of the Treaty growing from their Default, it was reason the renewing
 “ and reviving of yt, should likewise proceed from them: And it was sufficient that “ her Majestie had summoned them unto it. Of any Offer made afterwards by their “ Ambassador and refused by her Majestie, I never understood; and if there “ had bin any, no doubt I should have been advertised of it. And for this late “ Proceeding, her Majestie's Intention was very cleere; that she thought not to “ recule, but to advance it by that she had signified unto Monsieur de Boisfisse;
 “ namely, that she was ready to enter into Conference, and to treat with him“ self of it, whensoever the King would give him Commission. Her Desire it “ should be managed by him, rather then by any other expressly sent, was for “ such Reasons, as she thought would have bin as gratefull to the King as to “ her; and can no way admitt any such Interpretation of a purpose of Delay
 “ as he inferred, but must rather be holden the readiest course for a quick Dis“ patch of the Busines; the sending of another, requiring some length of time “ both for them to resolve, and for him that should be appointed to prepare.
 “ That her Majestie had great reason not to couple those two matters of the “ Money and the Treaty together, or to binde her self to Conditions and Capi-“ tulations to come by her owne, which she had so frankly lent. That she had “ made it sufficiently appeare how willing she was to renewe the Amitie, but “ that the Justice of her Demaund for her Money depended upon former ex-

An. 1600. “ presse Contracts, and not upon those which were offered to be renewed. Therefore it was fittest for both their Honors, that the King should make her remboursement absolutely without any Condition, and that the Amity should be likewise renewed simply, without Reference to any thing, but to their good Disposition and Inclination one to the other. That the point which he said I my self had thought reasonable, was never refused by her Majestie, for it was never offered by their Ambassador. Finally, that in the Conference betweene him and her Majestie's Counsaile about it, they had assented, (so that the King would give her Majestie the Contentment she expected for this present Yeare,) that the future Payments should be agreed on at the Treaty. Which Course of hers, I save not why they should dislike or refuse, if they intended to proceed as sincerely as she did. His Reply was not much, but that he would conferre with the King, and then give me answer as he should be commaunded.

Touching a Memoriall of some Complaynts I had presented at my Audience to the King, (whereof I send a Coppy) principally against an Arrest of the Privy Counsaile, the Execution whereof I desired to be suspended, and the Matter to be referred to a Conference betweene Deputies of both Sides, as the Treaty appoints, “ I had much Contestation with Monsieur de Villeroy, he upholding the Arrest very impertinently, and pretending that it was no Innovation, but a Reiglement, (as if it might not be both) and that it was not generall but speciall for Roüen, which is manifestly false”; and in respect it is generall, it is most prejudiciall to our Trade, namely in Bretaigne, Gascoigne, and the adjacent Parts. But in the end, I could drawe noe promise of Satisfaction from him, although the King thought my Request reasonable, but was fayne to leave him to his obstinacie, and the Matter to her Majestie's Consideration; whereof I hold it very worthy, as a Matter wherein it seemes they meane to trye her Patience, how she will beare that which peradventure they intend, to her further Prejudice. Monsieur de Villeroyes chiefest subterfuge was Recrimination, “ pretending that the Contraventions were farre greater on our Side. But being urged to declare wherein, he persisted in generalities, which I told him I was not bound to answer.” In the end he fell into his ordinarie common Place of our Refusal of Justice in marine Causes. I told him if those were the things he meant, they were particular Offences, that deserved Punishments; but no Contraventions to the Treaties by publick Authoritie, as those were which I complained of. And for those Offences, I told him there had bin Justice done in very many Causes, as their Ambassador had acknowledged lately to her Majestie's Counsaile, shewing therein very good Satisfaction, and that I merwayled he would seeme soe well satisfied there, and complayne so hottly here. He said he had written, that I had said in that kynde heretofore unto him, but that he denied it was so; and said further, that they began now to be out of any hope of Justice at all there; for they found some of our greatest Men so interested and linked with the chief Offendors, as they knew they should be allwaies protected; and therefore they were resolved to take some course in yt themselves henceforth, and to complaine no more. In particular, he exclaimed of a great Outrage done in December last upon a Shippe of St. Malo, where the Men were murdered with exceeding Crueltie and Barbarousnes, as he reports it”, Since he hath sent the Party that complains unto me, and I have given him Letters unto your Honor and to the Commissioners. This being the the Effect of this Conference betweene us, although it contayne no direct Answer to the chief Points of my Negotiation, yet I thought good to acquaint your Honor with it with Expedition, that it may give you some ground to judge by of their purpose; and because I understand Monsieur de Villeroy hath likewise made a Dispatch to their Ambassador.

This Bearer is the Party that I meane to leave here behinde me to follow the King; wherein because he is like to be long absent and farre off, he was desirous for some speciall occasions of his owne to make a Stepp first into England, and so so to returne presently in Post. The Journey into those remote Parts, is like to be long and chargeable: It may please your Honor therefore to sett downe what Allowance he shall have, and whether he shall receive it from me, or directly out of the Exchequer. An. 1600.

It is conceaved the King will not returne into these Parts till the next Spring, but passe this Winter after the Princeesses coming, (which will not be till September at the soonest) in Languedoc and Guyenne; not without some purpose (as it is feared) to favour and fortifie with his Presence, a Desseign he hath, to dismantle the Townes holden by those of the Religion. Which if he doe or attempt, it is like to prove the first Act of the Tragedie which all Men expect here within short time.

I understand there are two Shippes now finished in Calais, which were begonne there by the Spaniards, while they possessed the Towne. The King hath given them leave to furnish them with Ordnance and other Necessaries, as I heare, and to depart at their Pleasure.

The Ambassador of Wirttemberg told me lately, that he had received Advertisement from a Friend of his in Hambourg, that the King of Denmark makes very great Preparation by Sea, which gives occasion of much Discourse, no Man seeing any apparent Cause for it. I doe not doubt if any such thing be, but your Honor is sufficiently advertised of it; yet I thought it my duty to relate what I heard of it, considering his demeanour the last Sommer toward our Fishermen, and the Northern Jealousies.

I send your Honor here inclosed an offer brought unto me by the Party himself that makes it, with great Protestations of a Desire to doe somewhat that may recover her Majestie's Favour, and his Contry. If you embrace it, he desires it be not communicated to any more then her Majestie and your self. For into your Honor's Hands he saith he will put his Life, but into no Man's els; acknowledging you dealt honorably with him, when some other held a contrary Course.

The King returnes not till to Morrow Night, so that I have but Sunday to receive his Answer, and to kisse his Hands; for upon Munday I must needs set forward, the Day of Meeting being the Fryday after at Boulogne. And so, &c.

Your Honor's most, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable, Between Amyens and Abbeville, 14th May 1600. O.S.

I Could not have access to the King till Sunday in the Evening, and even that was obtained with great Difficultie, and reckoned to me as a great Favour, being upon so Festivall a Day. " The King of himself entred into the Discourse of " this Treaty, and of the Difficulties he conceaved might grow out of the " maunds on their part, which he supposed would be these. That the Cautiona- " ry Townes should be rendered, or at the least that they might be free for them " to have access unto, as the other Parts of the Queen's Dominions were. That " the Traffique of our People should be ether wholly withdrawn from Hol- " land and Zeland, or at least indifferently established in his Provinces, as well " as there; and that her Majestie should joyne with him to free and secure the " Passage from the Hollanders, that would seeke to impeach it. On our part he " supposed also that there would be required Liberty of Traffick into all the " King of Spain's Dominions, and namely to the Indies; and that it should not " be lawfull for that King, upon any Pretence against the Hollanders, to bring " any great Navy into the narrowe Seas, nor above a certain Number, such as " should nether breede Jealousy nor Daunger to our State. About which points " he

An. 1600. " he thought there would be much disputing, and that before any Conclusion
 " were made, there would be occasion to send once or twice in Spaine, which " would drawe the Treaty to some Length. He said also, that there would " growe some Controversie about Precedence and the Point of Honor. Where" upon I took occasion to demaund of him, how that Point was agreed upon at " Veruin. He said the Matter come not much in question, by reason that the " Meetings were ever at the Legat's Lodging, who kept allwaies the End of " the Table; and that his Ambassadors had the right Hand of the Table, and the " other the Left. His Opinion was, that it were best to determine it now by
 " Lott, without consequence or prejudice to either Side. But Monsieur de Vil-
 " leroy, who was present said, that was not ynough, for we had ever had the " Place till Charles the 5^{th's} Time, and since it was never decyded. So that we " were in Possession of the Preseance, and to referre it now to lott, were to " make it questionable, and to put it in doubt by our owne Act and Consent,
 " which he thought we intended not. After these Speeches, I offered to take my " Leave of him, desiring to receive his Commaundements to her Majestie and " his Answer to those things I had dealt with him in by her Appointment. He " told me he would send his Answer to his owne Ambassador; which for any " thing I can gesse, will not be much to her Majesties Contentment. For the " Preface he used, of his great occasions of Expence this Yeare, by reason of " his Mariadge, (which he said would cost him 500000 Crownes,) of the Con" tentment he was forced to give the Suiffers, and of the uncertain Termes he " stood in with the Duke of Savoy, methought tended to no good Conclusion to " usward". Monsieur de Villeroy said the same in effect. If nothing come upon these occasions and respects, as I have heretofore written, I thinke her Majestie may very surcly make account never to receive any thing from him, and shall doe well in my poore Judgement not to build any deliberation upon it, nor upon any other Assistance from hence. For the Freindship is very hollowe, and will growe every day more unsound, as his Combination with Rome growe eth more streight, to which he is wholly carried by those that doe absolutely governe him.

The next day in the Morning after I was come away, a Man of Monsieur de Villeroyes brought this inclosed to her Majestie to my House, which was presently sent after me. What it contains I knowe not, for I had no Coppie sent me: But whatsoever it be, I thought it fitt to send it away by the first Opportunity; and withall to beseech your Honor that we may receive full Direction, how to cary our selves in this point of Precedence at Bulloigne. For I fear it will be a difficile Point; and not being accommodated, will hinder much our proceeding, and take up much time in the Parerga of the Treaty.

At my comming from Paris, I left the Journey to Lyons fully resolved, and the Counsaill almost ready to retire every Man to his House for a little tyme, and so to proceed to Moulins, where the first rendezvous is. It is now determined, that the Princessse of Florence comes not till September at the soonest. There will accompany her the Grand Duchesse, the Duchesse of Mantoua, and the Cardinall Aldobrandino. All Men hold, that without some extraordinary Occasion recall him, the King will not returne into these Parts till the next Sommer. I beseech your Honor therefore, to thinke of me with that favour that you have allwaies vouchsafed me; it will be an infinite Charge for me to followe him, and to very little purpose for any Business of her Majestie's, which they are willing to put off upon any Pretext, much more upon so colourable an Excuse as this will be.

The morrowe after I dispatched my last Messenger unto your Honor, the Chancellor at my Instance heard extraordinarily Mr. Thynnes Cause, and gave judgement that he should be enlarged, paying only fower score Pounds to his adverſe Party; so that I hope he is at Liberty by this tyme. I gave the King thanks for it, and the Chancellor likewise, who best deserved it; and whom I take to be one of the honestest Men in the State, though he be otherwise a great Friend to Rome,

Rome, and one that concurreth with Monsieur de Villeroy to perswade the King An. 1600.
to runne that Course. This is all I will trouble your Honor with at this time.
And so, &c.

Your Honor's most, &c.

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Sir Henry Neville.

S I R,

I Perceave by both your Letters, (as well those by Mr. Winwood, as by Peter Browne) how discreetly you have pursued all her Majestie's Directions, although for ought I can perceave, the Seed that is sown, is cast into a barren Soyle. But Sir, if the worst be of it that we shall have no Returne, yet it is one way good, to know what to trust to, before we have lesse to trust to of our owne. Concerning the King's Mariadge, I know not what to think, because you write, and so doe others confidently from thence. But for my self, I protest to you, it will not yet take deep Impression, that we shall see the French King married before Christmas-Day. For your going with the King, especially if he reside in those remote Parts, it will be both infinite Charge and Trouble, but therein have I not spoken with her Majestie, because I received your last Letters but this Night. And now to come to the Point of Precedence; whatsoever Monsieur de Villeroy saith, you shall fynde by the Time this Letter comes to you, how you are all instructed, which I have no warrant to alter, but now attend what will be the first Prologue to that Comedy; being of opinion, that Monsieur Villeroy would have us fall out at the Meeting, because we should never agree at the end. Concerning the inclosed offer made you, I have enlarged my self to Mr. Winwood; for whose imployment as I knowe there is no reason you should be burdened, so will it be very difficult to procure any new Warrants, and therefore I wish you to allowe him what you think reasonable, and then it shall be included within your Bill of Intelligence; which although it be a Matter meere-ly concerning her Majestie's Service, yet would it be of more difficultie, in respect that lately I have had so much adoe to procure you another Allowance. In which as in all other things els that shall be fit for me, you shall ever fynde me,

Your very loving Friend, &c.

The Commissioners for the Treaty at Bulloigne to Mr. Secretary Cecyll:

Right Honorable,

20th May 1600. O. S.

IT may please your Honor to understand, that on Fryday the 16th at Noon, we three Commissioners that came out of England arrived here, and I her Majestie's Ambassador, in the Evening. The next Day about Noon, there came a Gentleman unto us from the Commissioners on the other syde to salute us; and to excuse themselves unto us, that by reason of the Indisposition of the Audiencer by the way, they could not arrive untill the next Day, which they did according in the Evening. Within one Howr or two after their Arrivall, we sent the Secretarie of me the Ambassador, to render the Complement which we had received the Day before; and withall to signifye, that her Majestie had sent us hither to performe that on her part, whereunto she had been invited by their Princes, which we were ready to accomplishe when the Health of the said Audiencer, and their Commoditie would permit yt; and in the mean tyme while he attended his Health, and the rest refreshed themselves of their Journey, not to be altogether idle, yf they thought good to communicate and send a Copy of their Commission to us, that we would do the like to them. And the Reason which moved us to take this Course was, for that being doubtfull whether the Commissioners for Spaine were authorized directly from that King, or only by Delegation substituted by the Archduke, (as yt was in the last Treaty with France;) we were desyrous to be cleared of that Poynt, to the end to receive thereby the better Light, how to proceed in the matter of the Precedencie: Intending in the one case to have absolutely insisted upon yt, and in the other case to have carried our selves according to our Instructions. Our Message was kindly received, and on Monday (the next Day) about ten of the Clock, the Audiencer sent one to the Lodging of me Thomas Edmonds with this Message; that they had prepared a Copy of their Commission, which they would send unto us, yf we would do the like unto them, which we accepted of; and accordingly at three of the Clock in the Afternoone yt was agreed that the Audiencer should send unto me Thomas Edmonds a Copy of their Commissions signed by him, and that I should send a Copy of our Commission signed by me; which was performed, and theirs fyrst delivered unto me, before ours was unto them.

That Evening and this Morning, we conferred of the Validity of their Commissions, the Copies whereof we send your Honor herewith; and touching that which is from the Archduke, for his own particular, we see no Cause to except against yt; but concerning the other, we fynd in our Judgments these Causes of Doubt.

Fyrst, Because the Commission granted by the King of Spaine to the Archduke, is only under the Privie Seale, and ours under the Great Seale; and that we fynd that the Words of our Commission be, that we shall treat with Commissioners of the other syde, pote statem similem, sufficiens & plenum mandatum habentibus; and that we are likewise directed by our Instructions, to have full regard to see the Validitie of their Commissions, that they may appeare to be as fully authorized both from Spayne yt self, and from the Archduke, as we are from the Queen; and otherwise, in no sort to fall into Communication. We doubt therefore, whether we may hold their Power to be like, and as full as ours.

Secondly, Because in the Kinge of Spaine's Commission to the Archduke, there be no exprefs Words to give him Power to substitute and subdelegate, other then these Words, trattar y hazer trattar; whether thereby his Commission and Subdelegation ought to be esteemed valuable in Law, and his Substitute Auctoritie sufficient, and such as our Commission and Instructions do limit us unto to treat withall. And we found the more reason to offer these Doubts to your Consideration, sideration, for that the like hath bin insisted upon, in a former Treaty with the Duke of Alva. An. 1600.

Thirdly, We fynd this Defect, that whereas in the late Treaty with the King of France at Vervin, the Archduke did in his Commission of Subdelegation, promise and binde himself, not only to approve, confirme, and observe whatsoever should be donne by his Subdelegates, mais aussi si besoign est, le faire par sa dicte Majesté sollemnellement confirmer, ratifier, & approuver, these Words recited in French are now in this Commission clean omitted, and no Words to supply them. Upon these Dowbts, being such as are otherwise like to stop our Proceeding, we desyre that yt will please your Honor to procure her Majestie's clear Direction with as much Expedition as may be: And in the mean tyme to entertaine them, we will deliver them Reasons of our Exception against their Commission, and see what Satisfaction they will be able to give us upon them.

May yt please your Honor also to know, that this Morning Vereykin came to vilitte me Thomas Edmonds, and signified to me, that he having communicated the Copie of our Power to the rest of their Commissioners, they all do well like thereof; saving in this Poynt, that where the Archduke hath assumed unto himself and used the Title of Serenissimus, and her Majestie in her Letters hath likewise heretofore ever given yt him, that now in this Commission the Title of Serenissimus is only given to the Infanta, and but of Illustrissimus to him, which he desyreth may be reformed. Whereunto, yf yt shall please her Majestie to assent, we desire that for their better Satisfaction, another Commission may be sent by him that doth bring us Answer to these Letters.

Furthermore I Thomas Edmonds by Conference with the Audiençer do discover, that their Intent is to make but one joynt Treaty for Spayne and the Archduke; which because yt seemeth to oppugne some part of our Instructions in these Words, (We do fynd that from this Conference, yf you agree, must proceed a League of Amitie and Intercourse with the King of Spaine, and another with the Archduke of Burgundy.) We desyre to understand from your Honor, her Majestie's direct Intention in yt.

Lastly, For as much as yt is probable, that these Commissioners will in the beginning propound some Abstinence or Cessation from Hostillitie, during the tyme of our Colloquy, wherein we hold yt fit to be particularly instructed what Answer to make, to the end that they should not remaine ill satisfied for want of Power in us to give them Answer: We therefore humbly desire to be also directed, how to proceed in that poynt yf it be proposed. And so desyryng to receive your speedy Direction, we humbly take our leaves.

Your Honor's very humblie at Commaundment,

HENRY NEVILLE. JOHN HERBERT.
ROBERT BEALE. THO. EDMONDS.

We may not omit to let your Honor understand, that in the Conference which the Audiençer had with me Thomas Edmonds, in speeche with him of that poynt of the Exception which we take, for that yt is only sealed with the Privie Seale; He assured me, that the King of Spaine doth now use no other Seale, and that the Commission whereby the Commissioners treated at Vervin, was not sealed with any other Seale.

Illustres & Magnifici Domini,

21 Maii 1600. O.S.

*P*ERgratum est nobis intelligere Copiam Mandati nostri, quam de Communi Consensu ad Dominum Verreykium nuper transmitti Curavimus, Dominationibus vestris communicatam esse; ipsoque nil improbasse, sed desiderasse tantum ut loco verbi (Illustrissimus) reponeretur (Serenissimus,) quo titulo Serenissimus Archidux uti solet. Quod cum de Substantia Mandati nil deroget, tam est exiguum ut non dubitemus, quin Serenissima Domina nostra Regina velit in eo Serenissimo Domino Archiduci satisfacere. Sed quia id emendari non potest, nisi per expressum consensum & mandatum Majestatis suæ, nos ea de re jam interpellavimus, & brevi responsum suum expectamus, quo & Serenissimo Archiduci & Illustribus Dominationibus vestris satisfieri possit: Quamvis in antiquis Tractatibus reperiamus, Verbum ipsum (Illustrissimus) usurpatum fuisse, & de Archiduce Philippo Patre Caroli Quinti Imperatoris, & de ipso etiam Cæsare Gloriosa Memoria, absque ulla exceptione.

Nos rursus amanter petimus ab Illustribus & Magnificis Dominationibus vestris, ut nolint agrè ferre, nos illis etiam significare, quid sentiamus de illis copiis Commissionum quas ad nos transmiserunt.

Primum, non videmus adhuc causam improbandi vel emendandi quicquam in Commissione Serenissimi Domini Archiducis & Serenissimæ Infantæ, pro parte sua: Sed in illis Commissionibus, quæ vice & nomine Catholici Regis Hispaniarum exhibentur, existimamus justas & legitimas causas esse, cur nobis adhuc satisfacere non possint.

Nam quantum attinet ad Mandatum Regis Catholici, datum Barceleonæ 29 Junii 1599, concessum Serenissimo Archiduci, utcunque generale videri possit, tamen non reperimus in eo contineri aliquam clausulam Subdelegationis & Substitutionis alicujus vel aliquorum, ita ut tutò nobis liceat cum talibus Subdelegatis agere, utpote neque habentibus sufficiens mandatum, neque potestatem similem nostræ. Et quantum ad aliud Mandatum spectat 10 die Octobris Anno Domini 1599, concessum ab Hispaniarum Rege Domino Balthazari de Cuniga & Fonseca de tractando cum Domina nostra Regina, id videtur sic obscurari & irretiri intermixtione & additione aliorum Commissariorum, non ab ipso Rege sed a Domino Archiduce constitutorum, ut dubitari possit, an Commissio ea censeretur a Serenissimo Archiduce processisse, an a Catholico Hispaniarum Rege.

Præterea constat, ambas has Commissiones privato tantum Sigillo Regis Catholici munitas esse, unde dubitamus non esse eas ejusdem vigoris & Authoritatis, ac nostrum Mandatum sub Magno Sigillo Angliæ.

In ipsa etiam Subdelegatione Serenissimi Domini Archiducis desideramus clausulam quam cupimus adjungi, scilicet, quod Catholicus Rex Hispaniarum confirmabit, & ratum habebit, quicquid a Procuratoribus, & Delegatis dicti Serenissimi Archiducis gestum & conclusum fuerit, sicut in aliis Tractatibus ejusdem naturæ intelligimus, à dicto Serenissimo Domino Archiduce factum esse.

Super quibus omnibus amice petimus ab Illustribus Magnificentissimis vestris, ut nobis satisfiat. 21^o Maii Stylo Veteri 1600.

The Spanish and Archduke's Commissioners Answer to the English Commissioners first Letter.

Illustres & Magnifici Domini,

Dominus Verreckius Secretarius Domini nostri Regis Catholici & Commissarius Deputatus à Serenissimis Principibus nostris Archiducibus ad præsentem pacis Tractatum, nobis exhibuit hesternæ die vesperi circa octavam horam, quoddam Responsum in fine chartæ subscriptum quibusdam characteribus & nominibus illustrium magnificarumque personarum vestrarum: Et ex eo præcipuè adinvicem congratulati sumus, quod illustres & magnificas personas vestras nihil aliud spectare perspicimus quàm commune placitum pacisque optatum finem, quod nos propter commune bonum quod inde procedit, & quia sic nobis mandatum est, ardentè cupimus. Et quia agitur inter Catholicum Hispaniæ Regem, cui Deus tantorum Regnorum molem Hæreditario jure commisit, ac Serenissimam Angliæ Reginam, de cujus benevolo desiderio, & grato Zelo in futuram pacem non dubitamus, consultò in hujus Tractatûs limine aliquas omisimus sollicitas dubitationes quæ urgebant contra copiam mandati nobis exhibiti, concessique per Serenissimam Angliæ Reginam Illustribus Magnificisque vestris personis, quorum prudentiæ & præcautioni legali, majora si oporteret consideremus. Nec adhuc hoc necessarium, perpensâ rei naturâ quæ toto Christiano Orbi innotescit, & quales Commissarii, & quâ necessariâ sunt Authoritate Deputati, & quod in formâ utili & speciali, toto istius Tractatûs tenore inserto, confirmandum erit respectivè à Regibus & Serenissimis Archiducibus quicquid à nobis & vestris Illustribus & Magnificis personis conclusum fuerit, & hoc omne factò Deo Sollemni Juramento.

Obiter tamen consideravimus, & id neque querela neque petitione, quod attempto præsentis rerum Statu, casu & non ex proposito, omissum fuisse Archiducis salutationem, cum sit Regis filius, & à Regibus sacrisque Imperatoribus descendat, & insuper sit Gener, Filius, & Frater Regum Hispaniarum, vir & caput Serenissimæ Isabellæ Infantis Hispaniarum primogenitæ; quod non exiguum sed maximum judicamus, propter honorem Serenissimo Domino nostro Archiduci debitum, maximè in rerum gestarum futuris monumentis: Quod quia notissimum, hoc idem fatentur Illustres magnificæque vestræ personæ. Nec mirum aliquando Archiduci Philippo Illustrissimi titulum fuisse attributum, cum eodem tempore, in eodemque Tractatu, equalis & idem titulus cum Rege Henrico Octavo fuerit observatus.

Nec dubitamus quin idem erit in articulo substitutionis opposito mandato Regis nostri Catholici, quasi defecerit facultas substituendi nostro Serenissimo Archiduci. Adest specialis & luculentissima (si verba Hispanica ex quibus fluit genuinè intelligantur) ibi — Para tratar y hazer tratar; quæ verba Hazer tratar, includunt formalem substituendi facultatem cum per medias & tertias personas id sit expediendum, ad quem effectum apposita fuerunt talia verba, & eadem substituendi facultas quæ in Rege Catholico residebat. Invenitur etiam in dicto Mandato alia verò Clausula, cum libera absolutaque potestate faciendi quicquid Rex Catholicus facere posset, si præsens fuisset, concessum fuerit absolutis & universalibus verbis Serenissimo Archiduci, quam substituendi facultatem ex dictis verbis Jura Civilia & Canonica probant, & ipsa naturalis justitia commendat etiamsi hæc omnia omissa fuissent, quia similes Tractatus Infantes & principes Soberani non per seipsos sed per alios substitutos expediunt. Est enim inter privatam fortunam & Regale culmen medium observandum, ut quod in Privatâ Mandatis solet apponi, in Regalibus, si concedantur Regi, sive principi Soberano, merito jure omittantur.

Mandatum autem Domini Don Balthazaris de Zuniga & Fonseca decimo die Octobris Anno Domini 1599, concessum ex se clarum est, & idem dicimus de Mandato Serenissimi Domini Archiducis, nec unum obumbratur ab alio, maximè per

An. 1600. per dationem substitutorum, quia talis substitutio procedit vigore Facultatis de qua supra in illis verbis y hazer tratar; quæ proviso substitutionis ex rationibus supradiçtis continetur in mandato nostri Serenissimi Archiducis à qua dependet nostra substitutio & authoritas tractandi & concludendi, & sic conuertitur illa illaqueatio. Neque honestè credendum est, Serenissimum Principem nostrum Archiducem aliquid circa presentia præter voluntatem ejus dilectissimi fratris Regis nostri Hispaniarum agere, sed in ipsius speciali voluntate quæ ex publico documento resultat.

Utrumque autem mandatum adhuc non Intelleximus privato Regis Sigillo muniti, nec hoc nomen privati Sigilli adhuc audivimus inter nos, nec in similibus Commissionibus. Sunt enim prædicta mandata propria manu Regis subscripta coram suo Secretario statûs, publico Regis & Regni Sigillo corroborata; & si tale Sigillum in magnitudine vel alia formâ diversum est à magno Sigillo Angliæ, hoc non mirum, quia unaquæque Civitas abundat in suo sensu. Communis autem stylus Regis nostri Catholici sic diu observavit, ita ut aliam diversam Sigilli magnitudinem, non robur & supplementum, sed forsan nullitatem produceret, tanquam ab inconsueto.

Quæ etiam desiderant Illustres & Magnifici Domini in substitutione Serenissimi Domini Archiducis, quod Catholicus Rex ratam habebit quicquid a substitutis gestum & conclusum fuerit, invenient hæc eadem & si placet majora & prægnantiora verba ad finem dicti mandati & substitutionis posita; promiserat enim priùs Catholicus Rex, postea (ubi supra) idem promittit serenissimus Archidux quicquid a nobis Commissariis factum fuerit omni ævo & tempore ex nunc prout ex tunc ratum habiturum, confirmaturum, omniaque firma, rata & valida esse; Idque ultra superiora convincitur in illis verbis Hispanicis estar y passar, y estare y passare: Et hæc ex abundantia, cum verum sit, Deo favente & conclusa pace, hæc omnia in forma speciali confirmanda esse ab omnibus partibus respectivè.

Sed quoniam majora nos expectant, nec convenit in hijs morosè detineri; enixè petimus ut quantum fieri possit properemus in causa, incipiendo à præsentiali & consueta conferentia præsentibus omnibus in eodemque loco: Hæ enim Chartæ sive Codicilli, Interrogationes sive Responsiones ante præsentialem Conferentiam, sunt præter moram præposteramque causam, & sine dubio differunt; & quæ hic respondimus benevolè & amicè sunt dicta, & in hunc tantum finem, ut satisfiat voluntati illustrium magnificarumque Dominationum Vestrarum.

The English Commissioners second Letter to the Spanish and Archduke's Commissioners.

Illustres & Magnifici Domini,

Accepimus hesterno die sub horam decimam, responsum quod illustres & magnificæ personæ vestræ fecerunt ad illa dubia, quæ, inspectis vestris Commissionibus, maturiorique judicio sapius & iterum à nobis consideratis, meritò inde evasari videbantur. Nobis certè gratum est quod persentimus, residere in vobis eandem animi propensionem, quam in nobis ipsis agnoscimus & profitemur, ad promovendum & expediendum hoc tam sanctum & pium negotium quod jam in manibus habemus. Et sanè nihil nobis fuisset optabilius quam ut responsum illud, nobis omni ex parte tam plenè potuisset satisfacere, ut minimè necesse fuisset illustres & magnificas personas ea de re iterum compellare. Sed ut quod res est est fateamur parum nobis adhuc est satisfactum, idque ob has quæ sequuntur An. 1600. rationes.

Primum cum videamini in ea opinione esse constituti, verba (hazar tratar) expressa in illis mandatis quæ Catholicus Rex Hispaniarum serenissimo domino Archiduci nuperrime dedit, contineri plenam & absolutam potestatem substituendi & subdelegandi, nos certè unà vobiscum in eam sententiam non possumus descendere. Nam in antiquioribus Commissionibus factis à Catholico Rege Hispaniarum, in quibus animus fuit & propositum vicariâ operâ & industriâ uti, invenimus disertis verbis & concessam fuisse Commissariis facultatem substituendi, & regem ex parte sua stipulatum esse, se confirmare velle ratumque habere, quicquid ab iisdem subdelegatis factum & conclusum foret: Quod videre est in illa Commissione concessa illustrissimo Duci d'Alva ad agendum cum serenissima domina Regina nostra Anno 1573; similiterque, in illa altera concessa domino Ludovico Requezens Anno 1574: Quorum utrumque ut nobis videtur, in hac præsentî vestra Commissione penitus est omissum. Saltem illud posterius cujus ne minima quidem rationis umbra potest adduci utcumque ad superius illud, nempe ad constituendam subdelegandi facultatem verba ista (hazar tratar) iudicio vestrarum illustrium personarum inferri posse videantur. Illud etiam putavimus adjiciendum, quod quamvis Dux d'Alva ex eadem Commissione expressam habuerit facultatem substituendi, nihilominus domina nostra Regina, nec commodum, nec tutum putavit cum ejus substitutis agere, donec Rex Catholicus vigore alterius Commissionis disertè nominasset suæque auctoritate corroborasset eos ipsos delegatos quos ipse Dux d'Alva ante nominaverat, recepissetque suo nomine se ratum habere velle quodcumque facerent: Indeque consecutus est Tractatus habitus Bristolliæ, Anno 1574.

Quod vero illustres & magnificæ personæ vestræ negant se adhuc intellexisse mandatum privato Regis Sigillo muniri, aut adhuc audisse nomen privati Sigilli inter eas, illud sane nobis aliquo modo mirum videtur, cum ipsissima verba quæ sequuntur relationem Commissionis Catholici Regis Hispaniæ factæ serenissimo Archiduci hæc sunt, (& est le dit pouvoir cacheté du cachet secret de sa Majesté;) quæ verba (cachet secret) nos nescimus alio modo interpretari nisi nomine privati Sigilli: Atque verbum (privatum) arguit, aliud esse ejusdem generis magis publicum; nec quod videmus, ulla extant verba quæ Sigillum istud, Regni esse Sigillum inferunt.

Porro in prioribus Fæderibus inter Regna Angliæ & Hispaniæ, Commissiones datas fuisse sub Magno Sigillo constat, ut ex illis superius recitatis liquidò apparet, & ex eo habito cum Ferdinando & Johanna Castigiæ & Arragoniæ Regibus Anno 1515. Etiam in aliis Regnis, principes utuntur & Magno & Privato Sigillo, quorum illud semper plus Roboris & Auctoritatis habet. Non igitur nostra dubitatio sine causa proposita fuit, cum non sit quod crederemus privatum Sigillum Hispaniæ ejusdem Auctoritatis esse cum Magno Sigillo, nisi sit fortasè (quemadmodum vestræ illustres & magnificæ personæ affirmant,) quod quedam Civitas abundet in sensu suo, eo quod ab institutis & moribus aliarum nationum differat. Longè quidem absimus ab ea ignorantia, ut arbitremur magnitudinem Sigilli aut formam quamlibet, conferre aliquod ad Robur ejus vel augendum vel confirmandum; illud verò certò scimus, discrimen esse inter privatum Sigillum & publicum, quod in omnibus aliis Regionibus nuncupatur Sigillum Magnum, & ita videtur semper fuisse usurpatum in ipsa Hispania, sicut exempla superius allata demonstrant. Arbitramur igitur hac in re, aut id quod volumus non bene fuisse intellectum, aut non satis appositè nobis esse Responsum.

Verba quæ cupimus addenda alia non sunt quam quæ continentur in simili substitutione factâ à serenissimo Archiduce in Tractatu habito cum Regno Galliæ Anno 1597. In quo serenissimus Archidux promittit non solum seipsum velle confirmare quicquid à suis subdelegatis erit Gestum, idque tam amplè plenèque, ac in hac ipsa de qua nunc agitur Commissione: Sed etiam (si beloign est le faire solennement confirmer, ratifier & approuver par sa Majesté.) Stipulatio etiam Catholici Regis Hispaniæ in hac Commissione, seipsam solum extendit ad ratum

An. 1600. habendum quod factum erit à serenissimo Archiduce, non ad illud quod factum erit ab Archiducis subdelegatis. Ideo illam Clausulam, quæ in hac serenissimi Archiducis Commissione omissa est, ut duximus maximè necessariam, sic cupimus inserendam esse.

Quod attinet ad titulum (Serenissimi) Domino Archiduci adscribendum, etsi non opus sit ea de re amplius differere, in qua illustribus & magnificis personis vestris satisfacere suscepimus, unum tamen illud silentio non duximus prætereundum, quod innuere videamini titulum Archiducis æqualem esse & eundem cum titulo Regum Angliæ; quod penitus pernegamus aut unquam fuisse, aut esse oportere. Dignitas enim & Prærogativa Coronæ Angliæ hac semper fuit, ut Reges ejusdem, jure suo, præcederent omnes Archiduces, tum Titulo, tum cæteris quibuscunque Honorum gradibus.

Ultimò cupimus moras omnes amputari non minùs quàm vestræ illustres & magnificæ personæ, & devenire ad ipsum colloquium quamprimum illis videbitur, modò nobis prius satisfiat tum in necessariis hisce fundamentis, quibus mandati robur innititur, tum in aliis circumstantiis non minoris momenti: Nominatim verò in Prioritate loci & Præcedentia; ut is honos deferatur serenissimæ Reginae dominæ nostræ, qui Jure ipso, & possessione ab omni ferie & successione temporum, Coronæ ipsius deberur. Et hoc quod replicamus petimus benignè accipi ab illustribus & magnificis dominationibus vestris, & eo candore quo nos interpretaturi sumus quicquid ab illis proficietetur. Profitemur in super nos arbitrari rationem istam spectare non ad moras faciendas, sed ad evincendas definiendasque potius negotii difficultates, ut omnibus scrupulis priùs è medio sublatis, cum convenerimus rem ipsam & substantiam Tractatus serio aggrediamur.

The Spanish and Archduke's Commissioners Answer to the English Commissioners second Letter.

Illustres & magnifici Domini.

Accepimus hodie vesperi circa horam tertiam quoddam illustrium magnificarumque personarum vestrarum scriptum, & quoad defectum substitutionis mandati serenissimi nostri Archiducis, ingenuè fatemur substitutionem esse legitimum, quam opposita exceptio non excludit, & quia talis substituendi facultas re ipsa ex ipso mandato procedit, si animadvertatur, in mandato ad Lites illam specialem substituendi facultatem ut mandatarius substituatur requiri, in quo casu non sumus; in Mandato vero ad Negotia, (in quo Casu sumus) eo ipso quo conceditur, substituendi facultas, liberè & quodocunque, intelligitur concessa; quibus vocibus liberè & quodocunque utuntur Responsa prudentum, ad quorum instar sacri Canones sic deciderunt, & communis rerum usus necessariò admittit: Sed quia habetis, ut ex assertis cognoscimus, Mandatum Regis Catholici serenissimo Archiduci ad Pacis cum Gallia Rege Tractatum Anno 1597. concessum, animadvertendum est, (& hoc amicè rogamus,) Mandatum illud in nihilo à præsententi differre, & illius virtute factam fuisse substitutionem, & sine difficultate à Gallia Regis Commissariis admissam. Est tamen inter hæc Mandata discrimen, quod illud caret illis verbis y hazer tratar, quæ sunt in nostro Mandato, quod hac in parte est primò uberiùs; & sic non mirum si persistamus in substitutionis veritate, tanquam in re in eisdem terminis admissa & observata: Quæ etiam observatio & Mandatorum æqualitas, ducis Albani exemplum quod fuit in dissimilibus Terminis exterminat, & concludit præter æqualitatem observantia unitatem in terminis, in modo & forma. Et hoc idem Responsum, Magni Sigilli

Sigilli defectum & ea quæ afferuntur concludit, cum in Pacis Gallix Mandato An. 1600. non sit aliud magnum Sigillum nisi præsens, ut ex ipsa inspectione constat: Et Reverera quicquid dictum fuerit de Sigillo secreto, de quo ad privatum infertur, nobis Hispanis hæc nomina ignota sunt, & verissimum est nostro Sigillo Sigillata talis & tantæ Authoritatis & Roboris esse, ut nihil amplius addi possit; Est enim verum, quod Rex noster quando Negotia secundum Belgicarum Provinciarum Stylum expediebantur, illo Sigilli magni nomine utebatur, quod jam cessavit, & hæc juxta Hispaniæ stylum, in Commissionibus Concilii statim sunt expedita.

Fiat tamen ut petitur ut ea omnia verba quæ à serenissimo nostro Archiduce in præsentibus substitutione fuerunt omissa, quæ apposita invenuntur in substitutione facta Anno 1597. circa Gallix Tractatum, hæc omnia ad eundem stylum & sonitum verborum reducantur; & serenissimus Archidux quoad hoc ad partium voluntatem, idem substitutionis Instrumentum ordinavit, quod ad omne beneplacitum infra paucos dies exhibebimus, & si oportuerit incipitur ab originali mandatorum prælectione, & ab hoc etiam quod nunc desideratur, & id ut illustribus magnificisque vestris personis satisfiat.

Sed rem quidem insolitam & novam audivimus; qualis enim honor, locus, & Majestas Serenissimæ Angliæ Reginæ debeatur, nobis & omnibus perspectum est; sed de Prioritate agere quorsum hæc? Si enim æqualitas, nedum Prioritas & præcedentia loci, tanto Regi, multarumque gentium Patri opponatur, inauditum sane videbitur omnibus. Nos autem publicæ salutis & Christianæ Tranquillitatis desiderio accensi, (si licet) instanter petimus ut hæc sileant, quemadmodum hæctenus semper & ubique, ipsa Regnorum natura, & communis totius orbis consensus usus & observatio judicavit. Quæ omnia ea sinceritate & animi candore quam res ipsa postulat, dicta sunt.

The English Commissioners third Letter to the Commissioners of Spain and the Archduke.

Illustres & Magnifici Domini,

PERlegimus scriptum quod illustres & magnificæ Personæ vestræ ad nos heri miserunt. Illa capita quæ substitutionis potestatem & Sigilli vigorem attingunt, statuimus non ulterius proseguere, confidentes de sinceritate serenissimi domini Archiducis, & acquiescentes in integritate illustrium & magnificarum vestrarum personarum, quæ nobis pollicentur bonam fidem in hoc quod agitur negotio, summo cum candore & humanitate conjunctam. Clausulam verò quam in serenissimi Archiducis Commissionibus omissam esse superius demonstravimus, quamprimum commodumque videbitur, quod pollicitæ sunt vestræ illustres & magnificæ Personæ, petimus inserendam.

Quod vero illustres & magnificæ vestræ Personæ afferunt, insolitum & novum videri quod proposuimus de Prærogativa & Præcedentiæ Dignitate serenissimæ Reginæ Dominæ nostræ semper debita, ne æqualitatem quidem ei concedentes, (eo enim verbo uti vobis visum fuit,) dissimulare non possumus valde mirari, illud viris vestræ conditionis Eruditionis & Judicii novum esse & insolitum, quod universo orbi terrarum notum est & celebratissimum. Res enim est exploratissima quod cum Regio Hispaniæ distributa fuerit in diversa Regna, nullum eorum aut prælatum fuit Regno Angliæ, aut se præferri vendicavit. Sed cum illa Regna devoluta fuerunt in manus Regis Ferdinandi & Reginæ Isabellæ, Regnumque Granatæ insuper ei adjunctum unâ cum certis partibus Indiarum Occidentalilium,

An. 1600. lium, orta est ista contentio, speciosè magis quam solidè rectèque fundata, de præcedendi Dignitate cum Regno Angliæ, tempore quo Papatum occupavit Alexander ejus nominis Sextus, natione Hispanus. Qua perducta ad Tempora Julii secundi; Volaterranus Auctor imprimis bonus, Historiographus Italus, nullo privato beneficio Regno Angliæ obstrictus, qui eodem tempore Romæ vixit, eaque de causa quemadmodum res Actæ gestæque fuerunt probè potuit intelligere, de hac re ita refert.

“ Inter Oratores Henrici Septimi Regis Angliæ & Hispaniæ Regis, inter Sacra de Sedendo orta est contentio, quæ etiam sub Alexandro cæperat; Julius locum honoratissimum Anglis pro tempore adjudicavit.” Quod quidem jus & prærogativam Reges Angliæ possidentes tenuerunt, usque ad tempora Caroli V. Imperatoris; qui licet ratione Cæsareæ Majestatis supremam sedem dignitatis inter principes occupavit, illud tamen privilegium ad posteros suos, in præjudicium aliorum principum transmittere non potuit: Ideoque post obitum ejus, Quæstio de Præcedentia ad eosdem terminos unde antea digressa erat, reversa est. Cum igitur Reges Angliæ semper tenuerint priorem & augustiorem sedem præ singulis illis Regibus, priusquam Regna eorum in unum redacta fuerint; redactisque in unum indeque ea de re quæstione mota, jus suum ex sententia Papæ retinuerint, de quo nullo unquam tempore aut occasione cesserunt; extra Controversiam putamus esse, illud de Jure pertinere ad Coronam Angliæ, utcumque propagata sunt & amplificata territoria & Dominiæ Regni Hispaniæ, quod recta rerum æstimatione nihil valet aut valere debet inter Christianos Principes ad hanc præcedentiæ quæstionem; alioquin plurimi & Reges & Principes assumerent sibi præcedentiam in multos alios principes quibus eam & libere & libentè concedunt.

Amplius, in hac præsentis Controversiæ de Præcedentiæ dignitate hoc ipso tempore, aliud est quod se non indignè offert, judiciis vestris examinandum: Nempe quod unus è nobis quem Serenissima Regina Domina nostra ad hunc Tractatum Pacis concludendum elegit, Legatus ejus est, qui quotidie residet apud Christianissimum Regem; quam dignitatem, unà cum omnibus Prærogativis qui eam concomitantur retinet, quoad in Regno Galliæ commoratur. Primus verò è vobis licet sit Legatus Catholici Regis apud Serenissimum Archiducem, cum jam sit extra territorium Archiducis, qualitatem eam dignitatemque exiit. Censemus quoque nostrum in quo multiplicata ista dignitas elucet & dominatur, præferendum unicuique, qui singulari & nudo titulo, Deputati scilicet ad Tractatum Pacis indutus prodit. Vobis igitur si placeat quæstio ista alto silentio præmittatur, hæcque prærogativa de qua agitur maneat habitetque in Serenissima Regina Domina nostra, ad quam jure spectat pertinetque: Ita alacrioribus animis procedamus ad Conventum Colloquiumque, cujus causa huc accessimus. Ista omnia pro prudentia & moderatione vestrarum Illustrium & Magnif. Dominationum petimus amicè & candidè accipi, ut quæ profecta sunt ab observantia & Religione officii nostri, non à studio temporis consumendi, aut contentionis excitandæ.

Illustres & Magnifici Domini,

IX his qua nobis & Illustribus Magnificisque Personis vestris novissimè fuerunt proposita, cognovimus, durum esse contra stimulum, & durius contra notissimam luce clarius Elucentem veritatem, calcitrare. Veritas enim nostra & vester stimulus, non aliundè nisi ex propositis constat. Dicitis enim & hoc primo loco, Regionem Hispaniæ in plura Regna divisam, & nullum Angliæ Regno prælatum. Sed an hæc cautè & consideratè sunt qui videant; Hispania enim non Regio nec Provincia, sed florentissimum individuumque Regnum à Genere Gothorum sumpsit initium legitimâ successionis continuatione. Fuitque diuturna Regum Gothorum Successio, & in Sacris legitimisque Comitibus quasi Luminaria magna, & summâ reverentiâ ab omnibus salutati, quo tempore nec multo postea Britannia Duces nec nati nec creati; cujus veritatis, authores summam majestatem & antiquitatem nostrorum Regum celebrantes, petite ex Antiquissimis Conciliis Toletanis usque ad septendecimum, ab Ecclesia & omnibus summa veneratione habitis, à Divo Isidoro, (vixit enim eo tempore) & à Gloriosa illa cohorte qui Arianorum deliria summo Dei Ecclesie Zelo profligarunt, & constabit etiam eo maxime tempore Ducum titulos (cum territoria & hereditaria jurisdictione dicimus) esse incognitos: Hispaniæ tamen Regnum jam ante latissimè & diutissimè invaluerat. Observate temporum seriem, legite Cosmographos, qui non sine ratione Hispaniam velut caput in Corpore humano constituunt; videte Feudistas, qui de Dignitatum Origine tractarunt. Supervenit & hoc multo postea plurimis jam transactis annis Agarenorum calamitas (justo Dei judicio,) quæ etsi Regnum, non Regionem de Facto dividerit. Regius tamen sanguis nunquam defuit, à quo initio sumpto à Pelagio qui tanquam proximior Agnatus, ad Regni Successionem fuit admissus, Rex noster Catholicus sexagesimo octavo legitimæ descendentiæ gradu distat, transactique sunt à Pelagio usque huc 900 anni: placatâque Dei omnipotentis Irâ, Gothorum Reges Hispaniæ Regnum sic laceratum à Maurorum faucibus Gloriosissimè jure Belli eruerunt, quod multis abhinc annis in nostris Regibus totum integrumque consolidatum fuit, & aliis Regnis, latissimisque ditionibus, favente Deo, ampliatum. Anne quia Invasio, spoliun, vis publica Infidelium aliquando invaluit ex injustissimi belli calamitate, vero Domino & legitimo Successori præjudicium fiet? Vel quisnam erit Christianus qui Infidelium & publicorum hostium facinore probato, ex tam turpi & inhonesto facto prædam querat? Vel an si Mauri Angliam invaderent, (quod Deus avertat) ipsa jam recuperata superstite aliquo de sanguine Regio, dicit quis Coronæ Angliæ Jura caducè deperiisse? Hanc vocamus elucentem veritatem, sed non ex nobis sed ex jure divino, ex Edictis Prætorum, & Prudentum Responsis, ex Sacris Comitibus, universalibusque Conciliis, & venerandis Ecclesie decretis quæ in omni genere rerum & dignitatum sic deciderunt, nunc jure Postliminii, nunc jure Restitutionis cum redintegratione totius Cause in odium spoli & violentiæ publicæ, nunc ex clausula salutifera generali qua restituit Prætor, vel ipsa naturali justitia, ne alioquin ex fraude & dolo quis sentiat commodum cum damno publicæ salutis. Notum est enim, & hoc legali Providentiâ satis manifeste, in omni causa, initium, originem, progressumque, continuati usus considerandum, declinationes verò intermedias fugiendas, quod omisistis, & hoc summa rerum Injuria, à divisione & tristi Infidelium Casu principium sumentes, cum aliter Res se habeat; Intellegebamus enim in nostris Hispaniæ rebus melius instructos, qua de causa summa

An, 1600. ratione tunc diximus & nunc affirmamus, novam & inauditam talem Præcedentiam.

Arguitis tandem ab unius Volaterrani Autoritate, quo genere Argumenti si nobis fas esset differere, unius loco, (qualis enim is sit, vel quod dicat, vel an verum dicat non est præsentis quæstionis,) Exponderemus sacra Comitia Conciliaque universalia à serie & Tempore Gothorum, Legionisque & Castellæ Regum gravissimos & valentes viros, qui in rerum gestarum monumentis Præcedentiam Regis nostri laudarunt, observarunt & referunt, idque communis sensus approbat.

Sed quia prohibitum est ne quis in sua causa judicet vel jus sibi dicat, nec volumus verbis aërem verberare; nec minus licet, petere plus ut minus concedatur si utrumque indebitum est; moti pluribus Pii & gravibus rationibus, ea quæ pacis sunt, tantummodo agere constituimus; præteritisque iis omnibus quæ vel jurgia vel contentiones parere possunt, ut & confidimus, Illustres Magnificasque vestras personas pro sua prudentia his finem imposituras; nec enim congruit deficiente legitimo iudice (nec in ea tam clara opus est,) in hiis ulterius procedere, nec verba effundere, sed de aliis (habita pro constanti Regis Præcedentiâ) pertractare.

FERDINANDO CARILLO.

The Queen to the English Commissioners for the Treaty at Bulloigne.

ELIZABETH R.

TRusty and right well-beloved we greet you well. By your Letters of the 20th of this Moneth, delivered unto us the next Day, we understand what hath passed between you and the Commissioners since your Landing; wherein we do commend that you proceed with Caution, in a matter of so great Moment. We have considered of your Observation of some Scrupules probably moved as well upon their Commission, as your owne; upon which, althoughe we might with good appearance stand, and urge to have them further cleared, if the Assurance hereafter of Conditions to be agreed on now, did essentially depend upon the Formallitie of these Things: Yet because we wold have them know, that we are neither so greedy of Peace as we would pass over Matters of Substance, nor so careless of yt, as to spend tyme in reconciling Scrupules of this Nature; you may let them know, that althoughe we do find Matter to which we might in strict Ceremony take Exception, yet seeing we have been drawn on thus farre, by no other reason so muche, as by Confidence in both the Princes Sincerities, (it being proper to us to judge the Spirit of others, by the Clearness of our owne Intentions,) we are contented without insisting upon these Things in the beginning, to pass on to further Conference; the rather to justifie thereby our clear Meaning in a Cause, to the Success whereof, there is among Christian Princes so great Attention. And therefore, in particular to answer the Doubts proposed by you; we find them to have reference partly to the Validity of the Spanish Commission, and their intended manner of making the Treaty one joynt Action, and partly Dowbts conceived of the sufficient Warrantize of your selves, by the Commission and Instruction which you have from us. The fyrst do consist in some four Points; one, that the Commission is sealed with a lesse Seale and termed a Privie Seale, and not a Great Seale as ours is. Another, that in the Tenor of the King of Spaine's Commission, (bazar tratar) are not sufficient as you think, to give the Archduke Power to subdelegate others. To both which our Answer is, That because we think yt were to small purpose, for for the King of Spaine and the Archduke (who have engaged their Honor so far as they have done already in this Treaty) purposely to use any deficient Forme or Clauses insufficient in the Commission, (which no Man needs to doubt but when Things are agreed on by you, they must be ratified by both of us hereafter) We will accept this publick Act of theirs, as a sufficient Declaration of their Intent and Warrant to treat with us, being under such a Seal as yt is. So that for the matter of the Seal, yf they as Commissioners for the Princes will give their honorable Attestation, that the King (as Verreyken did say to Edmonds) useth no other Seal, and that the Commission to treat with France was sealed with the like, you may then forbear to stand longer upon yt. And upon the same Ground also of their true Meaning, we are contented not to urge the demanding of any more express Words of Power to subdelegate to be inserted in the Spanish Commission, but to accept of Hazar tratar, because we hold the Words to be forcible in that Language, and in bonæ fidei Constructione to import as much as is requyred, howsoever in Interpretation of Law they may be argued. And especially, because the Sense of this and all other Treaties, doth not so much depend upon the Warrant given by Princes to their Ministers to treat, as upon that of Ratification of the Princes themselves, approving what their Servants have done.

A third Doubt moved by you is, That the Archduke's Commission granted to the Spanish and his Commissioners joyntly, doth not containe one particular Clause, that he shall procure the King of Spaine to ratifye what shall be done, as he did in the like Commission granted by him to treat with the French. Whereunto we say, That, fyrst, yt seemeth to our Counsaill here upon the Perusall of both Commissions, That the Words are forcible enough to bynd the King of Spaine in Honor to approve his Ministers Doings, and that the Archduke himself doth promise all he doth, both in the King's Name and his owne. In which, although he doth not use the Words si besoign est, as in the Commission for the Treaty with France, yet that need not be stood upon, because we see that you do treat not only with all whom the Archduke by virtue of the King's Commission doth subdelegate, but with some of them (as the Spanish Ambassador) who have an immediate Commission from the King of Spaine. To which maine Argument, this may happely be a good Cause why the Archduke used not the Words si besoign est, &c. as in France, because we do further call to mynd, that at the tyme of this Treaty with France, the Transport of the Low-Countries was not consummated, nor the Marriage of the Infanta perfected; so as the French had more Reason then to urge yt, and they to insert such Words in their Commission (whereby the King's Ratification was promised,) because the World could take no such Knowledge of that Absoluteness which the Archduke assumed. Whereas now, all outward Solemnities in the Transport are perfected, which gives an appearance of a perfect Cession of the Low-Countries to the Archdukes, who have received their Faith and Hommage. We may not in this case expect (howsoever by some secret Conjecture we may argue that the King hath reserved some Interest to himself) that they will insert any such Words now, as yf there were any Cause for the World to doubt, that for the State of the Low-Countries, there need be any further Resort to any other Authority then what the Archdukes themselves shall do. Further, yt is also incident to this Case, that yf the King of Spaine shall not give such Confirmation to that which shall be accorded as we shall like, we are at our Liberty to graunt nothing unto him. And seeing these Deficiencies appear in his Commissions and yet are passed over by us, yt may give us just Advantage (yf ought shall fortune to be agreed on) to urge him to beginne with us in the Ratification. Wherefore, you shall not stay upon that point, neyther likewise make Difficulty upon the fourth matter moved, touching that which you perceave by Verreykin's Speache to Edmonds, that they mean to make but one joynt Act of Spaine and the Archduke's together, and not severall in this Treaty. For we cannot have of them any other manner of Proceeding then they will yealde; although discovering hereby, as by some other things,

An. 1600. things, that the Transport of the Low Countries to the Archdukes is not so absolute as they would have yt, we shall have reason alwayes to look the more substantially to such assurances as the King of Spaine is to give us for performance of that which shall be agreed, be yt by joynt or severall Act, as the Proceeding further of the Treatie will shew us to be needfull to require. And thus muche for Answere to the Poynts that concern the Imperfections of their Power.

And now touching that which concerns your own Commission. For the Word [Illustrissimus] whereto some Exception is made, we are pleased therein to satisfy them, and therefore have sent unto you a Chancerie Man (who wrote the Commission) to amend yt in the same hand; whom our Pleasure is you shall cause in your Presence to raze the Word Illustrissimus, and to make yt Serenissimus in as many Places as in the Commission yt is found; and for the doing thereof, these our Letters shall be to him and you a sufficient Warrant. And to the Commissioners you may say, that your selves knowing that our Meaning was never to abridge any prerogative of Title which by the Archdukes have been used, and that this Mistake was but the Clerk's Error, sending the Commission to us, you have yt returned to you amended.

Concerning the other two Dowbts, one about the Seale, which you think you are not warranted to take because it is not Equivalent to our Great Seale; the other the Want of Words in the Commission, which you think doth not correspond to the Words of our Commission to you, whereby yt is said you shall treat with Commissioners potestatem Similem, sufficiens & plenum Mandatum habentes; nor of your Instructions, whereby you are directed to have regard to the Power of those you shall treat with both from Spaine and the Archduke, that yt be as ample as that which you have from us. You may perceave by that which above is written, that our Meaning is not to stay at these Matters, to the end to discover what the Issue of this Conference is like to be, the clearing whereof will ask long tyme. And therefore, as we are content rather to adventure upon Trust of good dealing, so we for your Satisfaction expressly signifye unto you, that we do supply hereby what Want soever there is by you conceived to be in the Words of our Commission above repeated, being literally taken, whereby you thinke you have not Power to treat with Commissioners Sub-delegates; and do dispense with the Words of our Instructions, as well for accepting their Commission with such a Seale as it hath, as also for not containing of more expresse Words of Power to Subdelegat; both which notwithstanding, we do will and warrant you to proceed with them according to the rest of your Instructions.

Last of all, for Answere to that which you desyre to know our Pleasure in touching Cessation of Arms; You shall understand, that for good Reasons we would have the Speech thereof avoyded yf yt be possible for you to shift yt; but yf yt be so urged that you cannot put yt off, you may then understand, that we can in no sort lyke that yt shall further extend, then to the narrow Seas and Places of the Archduke's Dominions. For Reason whereof you may alleage, that the stretching of yt further hath impossibility in yt; for that neyther suche Shippes of our Subjects as are already at the Seas in farre Voyages can take knowledge of the Cessation to any purpose for furtherance of the present Action, nor likewise the Notice thereof come in any convenient Tyme into Spaine, to hinder the Proceeding of any thing there already set forward, as happily there may be, for annoying us eyther upon our Coast here, or in Ireland. And further, that they have spoyled since the Assurance of Treaty many of our Subjects, both in the West from Spayne, and in these Parts, also to the North and West, which we did not think they would have done. We being constrained therefore for prevention of the like, to set out divers Ships that kept the narrow Seas to the furthest Part Westward for Safety to our Merchants, from suche as dayly come from the Groyne and other Parts in Biscay.

To all which Arguments we have thought good to furnish you with another Matter, and that is, that in this very last Moneth, two Shippes from the Groyne have carried both Munition and other Support to the Rebels in the North of Ireland.

Next

Next you shall receive a Letter of the King of Spaines under his owne hand, An. 1600. which came to ours, even from the Traytors themselves, (who would fayne have Mercy of us,) Whereby yt appeareth, that notwithstanding all this shew of Peace, encouragement hath been given by the King to our Rebels in Ireland, of which we might take ground to misdeeme of his Meaning in this Treaty; and yet we are pleased to pass it over, as things which some defend to be tollerated till Matters be concluded; expecting that he will proceede playnely and roundly with us in the maine. Hereof we can be contented, that yf in talk between them and you convenient opportunity be ministred, you may both speake of this Letter and shew yt yf the Passage of things do give you Cause; eyther to use yt as an Argument, to affyrme that yf we be overreached, yt is Confidence in the Prince's Sinceritie and not any lack of Providence or Caution; or to let them see, that we are not so carelesse upon trust of Peace, but that our Eyes be open towards all Corners, from whence we may discover what is meant to us.

Given under our Signett at our Mannor of Greenwich the 24th Day of May 1600. in the 42^d Year of our Reigne.

The Commissioners for the Treaty of Bulloigne to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

29th May 1600. O. S.

Y^T may please you to understand, that we received her Majestie's Letter of the 24th of May the 26th of the same. Before which tyme (as we signified unto your Honour in our last Dispatch that we intended,) we were entered into a Conference by Wrying with the Spanish Commissioners touching the Exceptions to their Commission whereof we made mention, and had received some reasonable Satisfaction from them in all Poynts saving in the Matter of Precedencie, which we had likewise propounded in our Reply, marked with the Letter C, whereunto they answered, as may appeare in the Paper marked with D. By which Answer we fynding her Majestie's Honor much touched, we would not forbear but (according to our Instructions) to shew som part of the Reasons whereby we claimed the Place as due unto her, which your Honor shall fynd in the Writing marked E; and therewithall (to avoyd all further Delay which might grow by the prosecuting of that Question to our principall Busyness) we added by Postscript, an Offer to enter into Consideration with them of some middle and equall Course, to accommodate that Poynt without Prejudice to eyther Syde, whereunto as yet we have received no Answer. Notwithstanding we have thought fit to acquaint your Honor with our Proceedings thus farre, and to send you Copies of all, reserving the Originalls under their own Hands in our Custody. We purpose yf they shall offer any reasonable way, which may stand with her Majestie's Honor and our Instructions, to proceed to a Meeting: Otherwise to advertise such Overtures as shall be made by them for the composing of this question, and to expect her Majestie's Resolution.

Whiles this Question hath depended, there have bin private Visitations betweene me the Secretarie and the Audiencer, and likewise betweene me Thomas Edmonds, and the President Richardott and the said Audiencer. In the which, Speche having bin ministred of this matter of Precedencie, they seem to fynd yt straunge that we would ever move yt, and that yt did never fall into the Archdukes or their Consideration, as a Matter which they thought would never have bin called in question. Although I Thomas Edmond still maintained unto them, that I had expressly signified the contrarie to Richardott at my last being at Brussels, and urged his Answer thereupon, which he refused to give till the Meeting; saying only nous ne rompions pas la dessus. All the which he could not deny now, but said that his Meaning was, that he thought we would not breake upon yt. The same Richardott was now very earnest, that we should not have replied to

An. 1600. their Answer touching the Precedencie, alleaging that the Spaniards would think themselves engaged by yt, not to determine any thing without advertiseing into Spayne. But because we conceived, that these Acts which passed in Writing between us, would remaine as Monuments to Posteritie, we were not willing to leave off with such a Blott and Disadvantage to her Majestie, as to have not only Precedencie but Equallity denyed her, unanswered by us; and therefore thought good, fyrst to fortifye her Majestie's Claime by Reasons, and afterwards to add the Postscript, to reconcile these Extremities by some indifferent Course, according to the Order of our Instructions. And amongst other Reasons which they alleaged, why they could not like of an equall Course with us in this Poynt, they stood cheefly upon this, that they contested with Fraunce for the Place; and we yealding yt to France, yf they should now assent to an Equallitie with us, yt were to quitt their Pretension against France; of all which we thought fit to make relation, that your Honor may see, that yt is likely there will be more difficultie in that Point then at first was conceived. When we had written thus far, (the Wynd not then serving to send away) we received Yesternight another Wryting from the Spanish Comissioners marked with F, which we send unto your Honor with the rest; to which, for that yt containeth no Matter of Moment, we mean not to reply, but attend whether they will make any Answer to our Offer containyd in the Postscript; which yf they do not we must hold yt for refused, and desyre in that Case to understand her Majesties Direction how we shall further proceed; for that we take yt, that we have gone as far in this Point, as our Instructions seem to warrant us. In the meane tyme, we are very gladd we have drawn thus muche from them, that yt may appear upon how weake Reasons they found their Pretence of presceancey.

As soon as any other Matter is offered we will advertise yt with all Dilligence. In the mean tyme we most humbly take our leave.

Your Honor's very humblie to be Commanded,

The Commissioners for the Treaty at Bulloigne to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

2^d June 1600. O. S.

IT may please your Honor, we thought good to take the Opportunitie of Mr. Cecyll's Returne, to advertise your Honor that since our last Dispatch there is no great Advancement in our Busyness. Only, the same day, the Audiencer came unto me Thomas Edmonds, and desyred to have a Copy of the Commission as yt was refourmed, and that I would take the Paines to advise with the President Richardott for the reconciling the Difference in Question. Accordingly I went unto him that Evening, and having delivered him the said Copy, I told him that we found yt strange that having answered the rest of our Wryting, they had made no Answer at all to our Offer containyd in the Postscript: That for our Parts, although we had just occasion to mislike their last Answer in Wryting and to reply unto yt, yet to pass by all questions that might hinder the proceeding in the principall Busyness for which we came, we were resolved to spend no further tyme in Replies, but to continue our former Offer, and to expect their Answer to yt; protesting that yf there grew any delay or breache for want of Conformitie in them, the Fault should not be ours but theirs, who would not be satisfied with Reason and Equallitie, but would needs urge a Prejudice and Disadvantage upon us. His Answer was at the fyrst very stiff in the Maintenance of the Poynt of Precedencie, but being put in mynd by me of what I told him before at Brussels touching that Poynt, and assured that we were resolved not to yeald yeald in it, or to give away anie jott of her Majestie's Honor, he desyred in the end, that we would propound some way to accommodat the Difference; which I said I would relate, praying him likewise to think of some fitt Courfe, which he promysed to do. We made no hast to propound, desyring and thinking yt most for her Majestie's Honor, that the particular Offer should fyrst come from them, as the general Offer did from us, and so the Matter rested untill the Satterdaie; at the which tyme he the said President came unto my Lodging, and after many vehement Protestations of his desyre to accommodate the Difference, and to promote the Busyness, he made the Motion that we would be pleased to come to the Spanish Ambassador's Lodging to beginne the Conference, offering that there they would give us the fyrst Place. I tould him that I would relate yt, but to the end that I might not mistake him, I praied him to explaine himself whether their Meaning was, that we should there continue the Conference; or whether they would meet alternatively at ours. He answered me that he did understand, that the Meeting should continue at their Lodging, but that they would not stick somtymes to come to ours. I tould him that I was assured that this would nothing satisfie our Syde, being in Effect the same Poynt of Prioritye which had been all this while debated, and that her Majestie might as well have sent to treat in their Country, which he knew was refused. Notwithstanding he praied me to relate yt to the rest of the Commissioners, which I promised to do, and to send him their Answer soon after. Upon Conference amongst our selves, we returned Answer, That we found the Offer very unequal, and could not by any means accept of yt for the Reasons beforementioned; but thereupon we took occasion to desyre that Rycharcott and the Audiencer, yf not as Commissioners for the King of Spayne, yet as Commissioners for the Archduke, would take the Paynes to come and conferr with us at our Lodgings; to the end that we might at our meeting agree of some equall Courfe to satisfie both Sydes, and to proceede to our Busyness. They tooke tyme to communicate yt to the Spanish Commissioners, and afterwards returned Answer, that they the said Richardott and the Audiencer, would meet us the Secretarie and Thomas Edmonds on the Sands at Five of the Clock, where we did use to take the Air sometyme; but because we had made the Motion to them expressly, as to Commissioners for the Archduke and not for the King of Spayne, and therefore took their Answer to be made as in the same Quallitie, we thought yt not fytt to assent to such an equalitie with them; but rather, that Thomas Edmonds should returne unto the President Richardott with this Message, that seeing they as Commissioners for the Archduke refused to come to our Lodging for so good an End, in that quallitie that we moved, yt seemed they meaned to raise a new Question of Competencie between her Majestie and the Archduke, and therefore we could not assent to meet with them in that Quallitie upon such equal Termes. That we had bin desyrous to conferr with them, as Men whom we conceived to be well affected unto the Peace, thinking by that means to come the sooner to agreement; which seeing they refused, we must returne to our former Desyre, that they would propose some equall Courfe to reconcile our Differences. When I delivered this Message, the President Richardott and the Audiencer were both together; and their Answer was, that yt was not their Intent to compare the Archduke's Quallitie with her Majesties; but that their two Quallities (as Commissioners for the King of Spaine and the Archduke) being so nearly joyned, the other Commissioners did not think fitt that they should come to our Lodging, but for their own particular that they could have been content to have done yt. Hereupon I tould them, that as long as they stood upon these Termes and would not think seriously of some Courfe of Equallitie, that we should never come together to do any Busyness, for we were resolute not to yeald to any disadvantage or dishonor to her Majestie; and therefore praied them, that if they had any such Fancy, to put yt out of their Heads. That for my owne part I saw but two Wayes to accommodate yt, eyther by meeting in a third Place where there might be no Preseance, or else to meet alternatively

An. 1600. tively at one anothers Lodgings, and the fyrst Meeting to be determined by Lott; whereof I praied him to advise, and to let us know their Resolution, for so yt was agreed amongst us that I should saye. This Morning, (having received no Answer from them in the mean tyme) we sent againe the Secretarie of me the Ambassador to the President Richardott with this Message; that we had both by generall and particular Offers made yt appear, how willing we were for so publick a Good to accommodate the Differences between us; and that we did expect to receive some such Answer, as might declare the like Affection and Disposition in them; or howsoever, that we desyred to know their Resolution, that we might advertise the Queene our Mystrifs of yt; who no doubt expected no such Stiffness on their Part, but made account rather that we were entered into Busyness. His Answer was, that he had thought of yt ever since his Conference with me Thomas Edmonds, and had conferred of yt with the rest of the Commissioners, but could not yet grow to any Resolution about yt, but that this Day or to Morrow we should receive an Answer. This is all which hath occurred since our last Dispathe, and therefore we will trouble your Honor no further at this tyme but humbly take our leaves.

Your Honor's humbly to be commanded.

ROBERT BEALE. THO. EDMONDS.

From the Lords of the Privy Councill, to the Commissioners in the Treaty at Bullogne.

2^d June 1600.

AFTER our very hearty Commendations. Her Majestie hath been made acquainted with all that hath passed between you her Majesties Commissioners and the others, as well in the Interim between your Dispathe and your Answer, as since. Whereby her Majestie perceaving upon how exorbitant Conditions they stand for the Matter of Precedencie, she hath commaunded us to reiterate againe her former Direction, that she will never do herself that wronge, as to yeald in that Poynt any manner of superiority; being resolved as soon to keep her Sword drawen for maintenance of her Honor, as for her Possessions. Her Majestie hath seen their last Reply marked with the Letter F, in which there is nothing of any Substance; for when they would derive their Titles of Greatness from the Goths, (who had Titles as they pretend before there were ever Dukes of Britaine born or created,) we do not see but the same may be said for Brittanie; For yt appeareth in many Stoaries, that the Possessors of Brittanie assumed to themselves de facto as greate Titles ever since Julius Cæsar's tyme, who was long before the Gothes. For the Poynt of the Cosmographers to resemble Spaine to the Head of a Body, there must be better Reason shewed then the Pamphletts of an idle Braine. For the third Poynt of the lineall Descent from that Blood Royall of the Gothes, the same may be sayd of her Majestie, who is as lineally descended from the antient Kings of the Brittainys. And for the Generall Counsaill, we can say no more then hath been said, that when England acknowledged the See of Rome, they have far more to shew for themselves then Spaine hath; as may well appeare by the Division of Christendome into Nations, Italicam, Gallicam, Germanicam & Britannicam, where Spaine is not so much as once named. To conclude, her Majestie would have you plainly let them know that for that poynt she is resolute, further then to fall to some indifferent Composition, with Protestation on eyther syde that no syde shall be prejudiced. In this Poynt if you find them tractable, her Majestie would have you shew yourselves conformable, rather then to frustrate all; although you may thus affirme, that what Claime soever they make, or howsoever by the Power that Spaine hath had from the See of Rome, many Attempts have been made for Precedencie; yet they

they shall never shew de facto, that ever they as Kings of Spaine had yt where England was a Party; but contrarywise, that England had always claimed yt, and oftentimes enjoyed yt. For our yealding yt to France, and their contesting with them, howloever any private Disposition to Warre or Peace have sway-ed any other Princes to Contention or to yealding, her Majestie is not in this Case to look to suche collaterall Contingents, but to respect her own present State and Interest. Hereupon you shall make Judgment, at what Price her Majesty may vallow the Purpose of their Offers to make Peace. For yf their Necessities or Zeale be not greater, then that they will quytt that which they pretend so Christianly to desyre, for this Punctilio without just Reason; we may think then, that all this hath been rather to serve some present Turn then otherwise. And in that Case, yf you shall fynd them to pretend to send for a further Answer into Spaine, you may let them plainly know, that the Queene will not suffer you to tarry any longer on that Syde of the Sea for the decyding of such a Question. Whereof, considering how conformable the Queen shews her self, there is no Man that will beleve that there is any friendly Meaning in them, to make dowbt.

We also do send unto you an Abstract of a Letter written from the Commissioners at Vervin to the Cardinal Albert their Maister; by the Style whereof we dowbt not but Richardott will easily acknowledge the Letter, yt being then intercepted with other Letters at Sea, in going from the Cardinal towards Spaine. By which Abstract, out of their own Reasons (as Subdelegates only from the Cardinal, and not intermediate Commissioners of the King of Spaine) you may make some present Use in this Treaty; and withall take Occasion, by their owne Words there alleaged (of their Proceedings with her Majesty in 88,) to let them know, the just Causes of Diffidence which her Majesty may pretend by former Example, of their Sincerity now; especially when her Majesty is contented to assent for the general Good to any indifferent Course. And forasmuche as yt was used once as a Reason why the Precedencie was graunted to England in 88, that yt was in respect her Majesty sent her Commissioners into his Territories; you shall not sticke to let them know, that yf they will send over two or three of their Commissioners into England, they shall be used with the like Curtesie in that Consideration.

Lastly, because we see that they on the other Syde do justifie their Pretensions with farre fetched Reasons historically, I the Secretary have herewith sent you some Extracts out of divers Authors, of good Antiquity and Credit. Wherein although I doubt not, but you that are Men of Experience and Learning can better furnish your selves out of your owne Stoars; yet as an Argument of my good Will I have adventured to send unto you Mr. Secretary especially, these poor things, to be used as you shall think them pertinent or to suppress them. And so for this time we bid you very heartily farewell.

From the Court
at Greenwich.

Your very loving Freinds,

THOMAS EGERTON, C. S.
T. BUCHURST. RO. CECYLL.

I see not in any Sense why they should so insist, being but Subdelegates.

The Commissioners for the Treaty at Bulloigne to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

12th June 1600. O. S.

AFTER the Dispatch which we made by Mr. Cecyll, we hard not from the other Commissioners untill Thursday the Sixth hereof; At the which tyme the President Richardott and the Audiencer came unto the Lodging of me Thomas

G g g

mas

An. 1600. mas Edmonds, where I Robert Beale was likewise present. At the which Meeting, instead of making any Answere to our Offer or proposing any new Overture on their part, they only renewed their former Motion, that we should beginne the Conference at their Ambassador's Lodging; pretending that we had geeven them such a Blow, by the direct Challenge to the Preseance, as that there was reason that we should make them some Reparation, by yealding something unto them; or otherwise that yt would leave too great blott upon them, and all other Princes would enter into the like Contestation with them. We answered, that for the Reasons before alleaged unto them we could not accept thereof, as importing too great an Inequallitie, and that we marvailled that they should againe propose a thing unto us, which we had before so absolutely rejected; adding further, that our Commission extended not to admitt of any the least disadvantage or inequallitie: and therefore seeing that we had opened ourselves to far as we could, we praied them to do the like, for that otherwise, we saw no likelyhood of further Proceeding. They said, they had Thought of yt, but that they found no other way to accommodate yt, without notable Prejudice unto them, considering the great Blow which we had given them by our former Challenge, in which Cases le premier demandeur estoit le vainqueur; and therefore praied us, yf our Commission did not extend to permitt us to accept yt of our selves, that we would communicate yt to her Majestie to trie whether she would be pleased to enlarge our Power in that Point. We answered, that we knew her Majesties Pleasure sufficientlie therein already, and should not need to attend any new Directions. But they pressing earnestly, that notwithstanding we would communicate it, we sayd that we would impart yt to the rest of the Commissioners, and thereupon let them know what we would do. Accordingly the next day Morning, (having in the mean tyme conferred among our selve and received your Honor's last Letters of the second hereof,) we the said Robert Beal and Thomas Edmonds (with the Advice of the rest) repaired unto the President Richardott's Lodging, whither the Audiencer likewise came; and there told them, that we had communicated unto the rest of the Commissioners what their Desyre was, but that we found their Overture so unequall, and understood her Majesties Pleasure so directly in that Point, both by former Instructions, and by a Letter received that Morning, that we held yt both needless and unfit to trouble her Majestie with any Advertisement of yt, unless they would deliver yt as their last Answere, and assure us that they had not further Commission to enlarge themselves; in which Case we would not faile (as our Duty was) to relate yt; that her Majestie might if she pleased resolve to revoke us, as we verely thought she would. They said they would relate unto the rest of their Commissioners what we had delivered, and give us a speedy Answere, and in the mean tyme praied us that we would use no Precipitation, promysing to advise of some convenient Course to accommodate our Difference, and desyring us that we would do the like. And thus the Matter rested untill Tuesday the 10th of this Moneth, at the which tyme perceiving they made no hast to give us any Answere, we thought good to send the Secretarie of me the Ambassador to the President Richardott with this Message; that we had made both generall and particular Overtures for the reconciling the Differences in question, whereunto they had promysed us a speedy Answere, but had yet returned none; that for our part, (as we had before assured them) we had enlarged our selves as far as we could, and desyred that they would do the like, that we might be able to give some account to her Majestie; who no dowbt would make some dowbtfull Interpretation of these Delays on their part, in a Matter wherein she had submitted her self to such reason for so publick a good, and expected according to their former Profession, the like Moderation and Conformitie from them. His Answere was, that we had prevented him, and that he did intend otherwise to have come that Afternoone to conferr with some of us of that Busyness; and accordingly he came to the Lodging of me the Secretarie, accompanied with the Audiencer, where they met with us, the Secretary, Robert Beale, and Thomas Edmonds; and declared unto us, that they had communicated communicated with the rest of the Commissioners that which past betweene us at our An. 1600. last Conference, and that they had advised of some Means to accommodate the Point in question; but that they could think of no other so fit course as that which had beene formerly proposed by them. Wherein, though they did acknowledge that there was some little Inequallitie and Disadvantage to us, yet that they thought we might well yeald thereunto, to recompensè the Blemish we had given them before by our direct Challenge. But being stiflic answered by us, (in such sort as we have heretofore mentioned to the like Motion) and told that we marvelled that they would thus goe about the Bulhe with us, seeing they knew in the end whereunto we must come; and being urged to come to the point of Resolution one way or other, they praied us to have patience for four or five Dayes, promysing to advise throughly of yt, and desyring us to do the like. We communicated these last Speeches with her Majestie's Ambassador, and upon Conference amongst us we resolved, that seeing this Proceeding of theirs carried a shew rather of Dalliance then of reall Dealing, we would urge them to open themselves more directly unto us; and for that purpose, that we Robert Beale and Thomas Edmonds, should retourne unto the President Richardot and the Audiencer the next Day (being the 11th of this Moneth,) and signify unto them, that we had conferred together of that which they had the Day before delivered unto some of us, and found it very strange, that having more then eight Dayes since promysed us an Answer within two Dayes to that Offer we made for the reconcyling of the Poynt that is in difference betweene us, they had neyther given us any direct Answer unto our Offer, nor proposed any thing on their part, but the same which we had before rejected; urging us still to make some new Propositions, althoughe we had protested that we had enlarged our selves so farre forth as we could; which Proceeding of theirs we thought to tend rather to amuze us then otherwise, and therefore we desyred them to proceed more seriously and really with us, and to let us understand their direct Resolution, whether they would assent to a course of Equallitie in generall or nay. And yf they liked not of that particular way which we had propounded, that they would open some other way of the same Nature, and which might be as equal for both Sydes. And because this was but the same thing which we had all along required, and which they have had long tyme to consult, we desyred that they would give us a present Answer, or else a Reason why they could not answer us; to the end that we might give the Queen an Accompt of our Stay here so long, with so little Fruit in the maine Busyness, who otherwise could hardly make any good Interpretation of this kind of Proceeding. Whereunto we received this Answer, That indeed the Offer which they had made was but the same which they had before proposed, and that we had reason to urge a clear Answer which they were sorry that they could not sooner give us, but that they would communicate this Instance which we had now made unto them to the rest of the Commissioners, and assuredly bring us their Resolution the next Day. Which they performed accordingly this Evening about six of the Clock, in the same place and manner as at the last Conference; and told us, that they had communicated our yesterdays Instance unto the rest, who prayed us to have patience for three or four Dayes till they might receive Direction from Brussels, whether they had written about yt and attended an Answer; and excused themselves that they had not signified so much unto us before. And because this their Answer did not refer for any Direction into Spaine, but only to Brussels, and for so small a tyme, we could not well refuse to admitt of yt.

We have forborne to write all this while unto your Honor, hoping we should have been able to have delivered some more Certainty unto you; but finding as yet they are not resolved of any certein Answer, we were not willing to leave your Honor any longer without knowledge of what we do here, and so till further occasion we humbly take our leave.

Your Honors humbly to be commanded,

HENRY NEVILLE. JOH. HERBERT.

The Commissioners at Bulloigne to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

20th June 1600, O.S.

AFTER the writing of our last sent by the Secretarie of me the Ambassador, we stayed untill the four Dayes were expired, expecting an Answer from the other Commissioners according to their Promise; and finding that none came, upon Tuesday the 5th Day we agreed that we Robert Beale and Thomas Edmonds should repair unto the President Richardot and the Audiencer, and pretend that the Night before at the returne of the Pinasse we received Letters, whereby we perceived that the Queen's Majestie was not satisfied with the Lingering and Delay which hath been used; and considering the tyme that had passed since the Offer that we made to accommodate our difference by some course of Equallitie, she found that they might very well have received Direction long since from Brussels about yt, and therefore did not conceive that to be the Cause of their Delay, but expected a more clear Answer. They answered us, that it grieved them as well as us, that we were so long kept assunder. That indeed they had not signified our last Resolution to the Archduke at the first, hoping that we would have enlarged our selves further; but now finding that we had gone as farre as we could, they had advertised yt to the Archduke, and expected an Answer that Day or the Morrow at the furthest, which they prayed us to attend patiently. Accordingly the next Day being Wednesday, the said President Richardot and the Audiencer came to the Lodging of me the Secretarie, where we Robert Beale and Thomas Edmonds met them, and there declared unto us, that according as they had promised us the Day before, they were come to let us know the Answer which they had received from the Archduke, which was this: That forasmuch as the matter did nearly concerne the King of Spaine in his Honor, whereof it behoved him to be very tender according to the Trust reposed in him, that therefore for his better Information in yt, he desired that some one of the Commissioners might repayre unto him, with whom upon Conference he would take a more full Resolution then he could do by Letters. And said, that they had agreed for that purpose to dispatche the Audiencer next Day unto him, who they hoped would be returned within 14 Dayes, and praied us in the mean tyme to have patience, and not to think the tyme long that is employed to so good an end.

We told them, that we conceived that Answer would no way be well interpreted by her Majestie, and that we thought yt was only intended for a Delay to give them tyme to hear out of Spaine; wherein we praied them to satisfye us clearly, that we might give her Majestie some probable Reason of these Delays. The President Richardot protested that there was no such matter, and that yt was only to give the Archduke the better means to resolve. We told him, that we would conferr with her Majestie's Ambassador, and thereupon deliver him our further Answer. And accordingly that Evening having conferred among our selves, yt was agreed, That we Robert Beale and Thomas Edmonds should retourne the next Day being Thursday unto the President Richardot and the Audiencer with this Message; that we had communicated their Answer to her Majestie's Ambassador touching their Resolution for the sending of the Audiencer to Brussels; and that upon Consideration thereof among our selves, we could not but finde it very strange, having so long promised that we should receive a resolute Answer from them; instead of an Answer, they should only propose new Delays, for so we think it must needs be interpreted, considering that they might as well have certified and satisfied the Archduke by their Letters as by Specche, of all Particulars which concerned this Question between us. Which Proceeding of theirs we feared might renew the Memorie of former Dealings with her Majestie in the like kind, and give her just Cause to revive her Diffidences; and that we had reason to doubt by the last Letters which we received, that this so unsuspected suspected and long Delay of theirs, in a matter wherein her Majestie seeketh no Advantage over them, but only to avoyd Prejudice to her self, may happlie give an evill Taste of their Intention, and produce a Determination in her to revoke us presently; which we thought good to signify unto them before hand, to the end that yf any such Inconveniencie should follow of yt, we might be excused having forwarned them. They answered us, that we had reason to be jallowise of their Proceedings so long as we stand in these termes of Difference with them as we do, but protested that they knew no other Cause or Desseign of this Delay but only to satisfie the Archduke's Commandment, which they must obey as we must do in the like case; and therefore praied us, that we would conceive and report the best of yt to her Majestie, to the end that so good a Work might not be interrupted for a few Days respite, which could be no great Prejudice to cyther Party. This being as much as passed since our Dispatch, we thought fit to advertise your Honor of yt with speed, and thereupon to attend her Majestie's further Pleasure.

And forasmuch as they having taken so long a tyme to answer us, we cannot look to enter into any Busyness untill the retourne of the Audiencer; and to the end that we may be fully prepared to proceed in the Busyness at his retourne; we have requyred Mr. Edmonds to go over to informe your Honor of some Dowbts which we think will occurre at the fyrst Entrancé into the Treatie, according to a Memoriall which we have delivered him, wherein we desyre to receive her Majestie's Resolution. And so we humbly take our leaves.

From Bulloigne.

A Memoriall sent over by Mr. Edmonds to her Majestie of certaine Points wherein we desired her Resolution.

TO know whether if the Spanish Commissioners purpose any other way of Equalitie for our Meeting then is prescribed by our Instructions, we shall not accept thereof. Touching the point of Preference.

Whether yt shall be made perpetuall, or but during the Lives of the Princes Contractants, or to be continued by the Signification of the Successor to the Survivours, as in the Treaty of Bloys. Touching the Continuance of the Amitie.

Whether we shall conclude the matter of Intercourse in this Colloquie, or refer yt to a speciall Dyett to be holden in a certaine Tyme, and what Tyme and Place we shall assign for it. Touching the Intercourse and Commerce.

In the mean tyme before that Dyett be concluded, whether the Trade shall be restored and continued in the same Termes, as yt was in use and excercise in the Year 1568.

Whether yt be not good to add such an Article in this Treaty as the 3rd of the Treaty of Bloys is.

Whether their Lordships would like that we should insert an Article that no Embargo of Shippes be made, though with pretext of Service, without the Consent of the Prince of whose Countrie they are.

What Number of Shippes of Warre shall be permitted to have access into our Harbours.

Whether we shall assent that her Majestie's Subjects shall be directly barred by this Treaty from trading into such places of the Indies as are possessed by the Spaniards and Portugalls; or rather implicite in some such sort as this, that they may trade freely into any parts not possessed by the Spaniards; and that in their Passage to and fro, if they be forced by Tempest or Leakeage, or by Necessity or any Want, to put into any Port holden by them, they shall be permitted to do yt and shall be courteously entreated, so as they exceed not a certaine Number, Touching the Trade to the Indies.

An. 1600. ber, and stay not there above certaine Dayes; and yf this cannot be obtained, then whether it were not best to leave this Point clean untouched, (as France did in the Treaty of Vervin and that of Cambreffis) and leave those that will adventure thither to their private Fortune, rather then to give such a President against us for all Ages.

De Rebellibus & Profugis non recipiendis.

Whether yt shall be, as in the Treaties of Burgundy, that they are to be expelled each others Country upon Signification, or else that they shall be rendred as in the ancient Treaties with France, or clean left out as in the Treaty of Bloys and that of Vervin; and whether we shall make any particular Instance for the banishing of the Seminaries and Jesuits that be in Spainne and the Low-Countries.

Cautionary Townes.

To knowe what distance shall be limited about Flushing and the Bryll, and the Forts belonging to them; within the which the Spanish Forces coming, it shall be lawfull for the Garrisons to repell them and to use Hostillitie, without Breache of Amitie.

To know their Lordshipps Pleasure how we shall satisfye the Commissioners touching the establishing of the Trade of our Nation in their Provinces; considering the Impeachment the States are like to give unto the same.

Touching the Revocation of the English Forces in the States Service; that yf they will not be satisfyed with the Answer which we are directed to make by the Instructions, what her Majestie's Pleasure is that we shall finally assent unto.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to the Commissioners for the Treaty at Bulloigne.

BECAUSE the coming over of Mr. Edmonds is so well taken and allowed of, as it will content you to see your Endeavours approved, I do think yt not amills to accompany this Bearer with the Advertisement of the same; there being no one thing better accepted then this, that you have in a manner seemed to send him, least the Queene should have revoked all of you; whereby the Commissioners of Spainne tacitely seem to think you have done their Cause a Favour. Her Majestie will within four or five Dayes dispatch him, and then you shall understand by him what her Majestie resolveth upon your Memorials; before which tyme I will add only this, That he whom you have sent hath done you all suche Right, as her Majestie hath commanded me to let you all know, that in all your Proceedings hitherto, you have very well answered her Majestie's full Expectation.

The rest I leave to the Relation of this Bearer, who can tell you how our Busynesses here are handled. And so I end

Your very affectionate Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to the Commissioners for the Treaty at Bulloigne.

27th June 1600.

AFTER my hearty Commendations. Althoughe the Streame hath wholly bent yt self against us in Ireland, to the infinite Greif and Charge of her Majestie, yet we are now in hope to turn the Tyde another way; whereof because we know that none will be more glad to hear then you, I have thought good to give you notice of that which I have received.

Fyrst, Our Garrison at Loughfoyle doth very much prosper, and dayly spoyl-eth the Rebels Creatures and Followers, and draweth to yt divers Lords of Countries, whereby the Traitors are continually weakened; and now out of Munster;

ster, which is her Majestie's best and greatest Province, yt hath pleased God to give the President good Success, for he hath taken many Castles, and divers principall Men are come into him, amongst the which one of the valiantest Men of that Province is become a good Subject, I mean the White Knight who hath submitted himself and received her Majestie's Pardon. An. 1600.

Secondly, Which is one of the greatest Fortunes that could have happened there to the Queene, the principall Rebell the Earle of Desmonde, by a Plott laid is taken Prisoner, of which the Issue cannot be other then most honorable.

From Dublin we have also hard, that the Earle of Ormond is now delivered and at Kilkenny, and being sick hath written to my Lord Deputy to take the pains to come and speake with him, having matter of great Importance for her Majestie's Service; of which his Overture we cannot but hope for great good, because we know he is wise. These Things being matters to increase her Majestie's Reputation which is shaken in the World, I think you shall do very well to give out to her Majestie's Advantage among the Spaniards, who are apt to report all things in the contrary Sense. And when they shall peradventure understand that the Rebellion in that Kingdom will not long last, they will not be so lofty in their Conditions. And thus for this tyme I committ you to God.

From the Court at Greenwich, &c.

Your assured loving Friend,
RO. CECYLL.

I hope you shall have better Fortune then the Commissioners for Embden; for they are returned without any Conference.

An Answer to the Memoriall presented to the Lords of the Counsaile by Mr. Edmonds from the Commissioners at Bulloigne.

30th June 1600.

IF any other way of Equallitie for your meeting be offered you, which in your Discretions you shall conceive may not prejudice her Majestie's Honor, you may accept thereof, and shall not need to tye your selves to that only Forme which is prescribed to you in your Instructions.

Touching the point of Preseance.

We think it best, that the Peace be rather made perpetuall, then to leave it to a necessity of renewing.

Touching the Continuance of the Amitie.

Because the Matters and Questions of the Intercourse cannot now be so soon determined in this Colloquy, but will require a longer tyme for the debating and clearing of them; you shall therefore refer them to a speciall Dyett to be holden for that purpose with as much speed as you shall think fitt to accord unto: And for the Place, to hold yt here in England.

*Touching the Intercourse
merce.*

In the mean Season you may covenant to restore the Trade to the same Termes as it was in exercise in the Yeare 1568. And it shall be inquired, what Alterations have since fallen out, to give you Information what things may presently be reduced to Assurance, and what Points are meet to be referred to the Dyett.

We do very well like that you do procure such an Article to be inserted, as the 31st in the Treatie of Blois.

We think yt also very convenient, that yf yt may be, it be stipulated that no Embargo of Ships be made for any Services, without the Consent of the Prince of whose Countrey they are.

In respect of the great Breach which hath bin between her Majestie and the States of those Princes, whereby all Jealousies cannot be soone removed upon a Reconciliation; her Majestie cannot in due Providence assent to permitt as yet for a certaine time, any number of their great Shippes of Warre coming out of Spayne to enter into her Harbours. For howsoever they may pretend a purpose to employ the said Shippes against those of Holland and Zeland, yet that the haunting

An. 1600. haunting of her Ports under such Collour, cannot but rather give great Cause of Suspicion unto her Majestie, for that yt is well knowen, that the Archduke is not possessed of any Ports fitt to receive and lodge great Shippes for any such Deseign against these of Holland, but rather she may have cause to doubt, that they may be destined for some Enterprize against some part of her own Dominions.

Touching the Trade to the Indies.

We like, that for the Liberty of the Trade to the Indies you proceed in such manner as is advised by you, or if you cannot possibly drawe them to consent to any Toleration of Trade, that at the least you would yeeld to no Prejudice of the Restriction in that behalf; but to pass that Point over, as France hath done in their late Treaties with them.

De Rebellibus & Profugis non recipiendis.

In the state as things do now stand, we do not think yt fitt to enforce the point of rendring or expelling Rebells or Fugitives of eyther syde, but to leave it unspoken of, as in the late Treaty of Verovyn.

Cautionary Townes.

For that it will be very hard to prescribe any certaine Course for restraining their Forces from approaching within a distance neere to the Cautionary Townes, so as may both warrant the Safety of those Places from threatned Danger, and also bear probable Collours of Acceptance with them, we think it fitt that you do not urge any further Resolution thereupon; but may satisfy them, that the said Garrisons shall not be used in any other Employment against them, then only for the necessary Conservation of those Places, and the Forts belonging to them. You may tell the other Commissioners, that her Majestie hath a direct Intent to have her Subjects to trade into the Ports and Provinces which are possessed by the Archduke; and if those of Holland shall seeke to interrupt them therein, that she will be very sensible thereof. Her Majestie hath no reason to yeeld to the revoking of her Forces serving the States, if it may in any sort be avoyded; and therefore would have this with the other Points to be as much insisted and stood upon as may be, and when you have tryed how far forth you can prevaile with them, you shall receive knowledge of her further Pleasure therein.

The Commissioners for the Treaty at Bulloigne to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

6th July 1600. O. S.

IT may please you to understand that I Thomas Edmonds arrived here on Fryday Morning the 4th hereof; and having imparted unto the rest her Majesties Pleasure in such sort as I was directed, it was agreed that I should go the next Day unto the President Richardott, with this Message; That according to the Resolution of us all (wherewith I acquainted him) for my Repaire into England, I had done the best Office which I had bin able to satisfy her Majestie touching the long Delays which have been used on their part for not answering the Proposition which we made them, for our Meeting in some course of Equallitie; And lastly, touching the further Delay grown by sending the Audiencer to Brussels. Which though it were a kind of Proceeding that could no way content her Majestie, yet notwithstanding being informed by me of the vehement Protestations they had made of sincere Dealing, she was content to yeeld that we should attend the Return of the said Audiencer. But withall she willed us to let them knowe, that she had great Reason to renew her former Distrusts and Jealousies, not only in respect of these Delays, but also upon Advertisements which she hath received, both of Supplies of Munition and Presents sent unto her Rebells in Ireland, of Negotiations begonne with them and Pledges received thereupon, and of Promise of Succours of Men to be sent thither in August next; whereof, though rhoughe she make no great Accompt for any harm that it can do her, yet that she cannot but be sensible of such Proceedings, arguing so little Sinceritie on their Part, and differing so much from that which was promised her by the Archduke, before her entring into the Treaty. And therefore she had expressly commaunded us to desire them to signifye thus much unto the Archduke, and to let him know, that if this Course of Proceeding be continued, she shall have little cause to looke for any good yssue of this Busyness, new Provocations not being the way to reconcile former Unkindnesses, but rather to exasperate and set them further asunder. And therefore that she did desire to know from the Archduke himself how he would satisfy her in this Point; considering the Promise which he had made of sucere Proceeding, whereupon she had so much relyed.

He made Answer touching the Delay, that he could say no more then what he had formerly assured, namely that there was no other Cause of it then the Difficultie of the Presence which was in question between us. And for the other Point; touching the sending into Ireland, cyther past or to come, that neyther he nor any other of the Commissioners understood any thing thereof, and presume that yf it had been true they should have knowen it; but contrary wise he charged us, that her Majestic doth send to the Seas and to the Indies at this Instant, and likewise send Succours to the Rebells, which he said was not the Way to make Peace.

Whereupon I replied, that to my Knowledge there were no late Forces gone out of England into the Low Countries; but howsoever, that that which her Majestic should do in that kind and the other were no Innovation, but a Continuance of Matters in the same State as they were before the Treatie began; whereas this Action of theirs was altogether a new Provocation, and such as was not fitt to be offered during the Dependance of a Treatie. But in the end, being urged by me, he promised that they would acquaint the Archduke with it, and returne his Answer as soon as they could receive it. And as touching Vereykin's coming, he told me that they expected him dayly, and that these Accidents which have happened, have been the Cause that have so long deferred his coming.

Touching the Proceeding of the States Army before Newport, this is all that we do here understand. That the Count Maurice is strongly intrenched round about the Towne, and hath made his Approaches very neere; that he hath landed his Cannon, and intendeth to begin his Batterie as to Morrow; that he is resolved to abide it out, and doth not fear to be removed by the Archduke, although he maketh a Head of 10000 Men at Bruges and expecteth dayly more, with a Determination as is given out, to raise the Siege. La Berlotte is entered the Towne with 2000 Men, and on the other Side it is said that there is a Renforce come to the Count Maurice of 3000 Foot and Horse from the Count Hollock, and that himself is expected with more shortly. This we understood by Souldiers that pretend they came from the States Armie yesterday Morning, and so we humbly take our leave.

Your Honor's humbly to be Commanded,

The Commissioners for the Treaty of Bulloigne to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

12th July 1600. O. S.

IT may please you to understand, that since our last of the sixth hereof, we have not any way proceeded further in our Busyness, by reason that the Audience is not yet returned; but in this meane Tyme the President came to the Lodging of me the Secretary and Thomas Edmonds; and declared, that whereas

An. 1600. I Thomas Edmonds at my late being with him had signified the Occasion they gave her Majesty to complaine of want of sincere proceeding on their Part, for that contrarie to the Assurances given of direct Dealing in this Treaty, they did notwithstanding minister Aid to our Rebells in Ireland, and had further assured them to send Forces to their Succour in August next; whereof he said he had given Knowledge to the Archduke and did attend his Answer thereupon: That by Letters which they had newly received from the Archduke they were likewise willed to make a Complaint unto us upon the same ground, that where her Majesty had shewed to be willing not only to embrace a Peace herself, but also to interpose her self for the reducing of those of Holland and Zeland, that the Archduke finding notwithstanding that her Majesty doth at this tyme relieve the said Rebells with new Troups, and with Supplies both of Munition and Victualls, could not make good Interpretation of such Proceeding, and therefore desires to knowe how he is to attend that her Majesty will deale with him: And he shewed us the Archduke's Letter written to them to that effect. We made him Answer, that for our Parts we knew not that her Majesty had as yet taken any such Resolution, though they had given her just Provocation by their Proceeding in Ireland, which could not bear Justification, being a new Beginning of Hostillity; where that whereof they accuse her Majesty, is but only to maintaine the former Course of her Actions. And besides, that the Difference that is to be made between the State of those of Holland and Zealand and the Rebells in Ireland; did bear no Comparison. He alleaged there was no such Difference in the Example as we pretended; but howsoever, that all Exasperations would be avoyded during the depending of the Treaty. We answered him, that it would be impossible to settle any Confidence and Securitie between us untill the Peace should be assured, and that we would advise among our selves to make him further Answer. And accordingly upon Conference had, resolved that I Thomas Edmonds should the next Day retourne to the President Richardott with this Answer; that we had conferred of that Complaint which he had delivered the Day before out of the Archduke's Letters; and although we conceived that there was sufficient Answer made by such of us with whom he conferred at that tyme; yet for their further Satisfaction, we thought good to renew the Protestation from us all, that we knew not of any such thing done, or purposed to be done by her Majesty as the Archduke complained of: But withall, that we could not but let them know likewise, that if her Majesty, upon those new Provocations begonne by them in Ireland, should resolve to take any such Course, it would be very justifiable in her, seeing they had fyrst begonne with her; and considering also, that it was no Innovation in her but only a Continuance of the Assistance which she hath heretofore openly professed, and had no Reason to intermitt untill there be a Peace concluded: And yet that they could not take any just Pretext thereby to give Assistance to her Majesties Rebells in Ireland; for although there were no Incongruity, to keep all Matters in the Termes they were in before, during a Treaty of Peace; yet it was no way allowable to begin new Quarrells and Provocations, whiles the Treaty depends.

But for the finall cutting off and stopping of all these Jealousies which might otherwise arise, we wished that the Treaty might be accelerated, and for that purpose that her Majesty might certainly know within what time the Audiencer would be returned; whose stay so long beyond his appointed time, joynd with those Delays which we thought to be causeless, must needs breed doubtfull Interpretations: And also that she might receive some Satisfaction from the Archduke in those Points which we had lately signified, to the end that she might resolve what Course was fit for her to hold. In the mean time that we would likewise make known the Complaint which had been delivered to us by him, in the Behalf of the Archduke. He answered me, that he would be glad the Archduke should be deceived in the Information which he had received; and that he saw no reason to make such Distinction in the Case of Rebells, which in effect was but the same. And touching the Return of the Audiencer, that they did dayly expect expect his coming, and had written to hasten him; and prayed me to be satisfied with their reiterated vehement Protestations, that they have no meaning to delay and abuse us upon any practice or designe, but only to attend Direction about the Difference in question between us, which they were sorry they could no sooner procure; being no lesse grieved and troubled then we, to remayne so long tyme unprofitable here. He said he would forthwith signifie our Answer to the Archduke, and promised that we should also shortly receive his to our Complaint. He acquainted me with the News they had received of the retiring of the Count Maurice from Newport, for the which he pretended to be very sorry, for that they did assure themselves, they shall certainly have ruined his Armye if he had longer stayed in those Parts. And so being sorry that we live here so ydly, and are no further advanced in our Busyness, we most humbly take our leaves.

Your Honor's humbly to be commaunded,

HENRY NEVILLE. JOHN HERBERT.
RO. BEALE. THO. EDMONDS.

Mr. Secretary Cécyll to the Commissioners for the Treaty of Bulloigne.

14 July 1600.

AFTER my very hearty Commendations. I have acquainted her Majestic with your Dispatch of the 12th of July, whereby it appeareth that as yet the Archduke hath not returned his Resolution; a matter which plainly discovereth that there is a Dependancy of an Answer from Spaine. And where it appeareth that the Archduke chargeth the Queene with relieving of the Hollanders with Munitiō and Victuall, you may do well to take occasion to make some round Answer in that point. For fyrst I do affirme it to be true, that there hath not a Graine of Corn or Powder or any manner of Victuall been sent from hence, which would be somewhat roundly inverted upon them, seeing we have Truth on our Side: And yet because peradventure they may hear hereafter that some voluntaries do dayly go over, this denyall of ours would be used in such forme as heretofore you have done; which is to maintaine the Argument still, how just it were, though it had been otherwise. I have little more therefore at this time to trouble you withall, only I think good to preoccupate with you another Circumstance if they hear it, which is the going over of my Lord of Northumberland and my Lord of Rutland, and now my Lord Cobham and Sir Walter Raleigh. Of whom if they speake (but not otherwise) you may use this Argument, That they have no Charge, nor carried either Horse or Man, but some half a dozen of their owne; but finding the Queen is so resolved to have Peace (if good Conditions could be had,) they obtained leave with importunitie to see this one Action, before they should become desperate of seeing any more of that kynde in her Majestic's Tyme, which God long continue.

For the Ordinance, I do protest unto you, that the Queen sent none; but if there were, then surely they are sold by the Patentees, in which point my Lord Ambassador can give Satisfaction that it is for her Majesties Commoditie, and thus I end

Your assured loving Friend

RO. CECYLL.

Since the Writing of this Letter the Lord Cobham and Sir Walter Raleigh are come, so as that Matter will be quickly answered.

An. 1600.

The Commissioners for the Treaty of Bulloigne to Mr. Secretary Cecyll:

16th July 1600. O. S.

MAY it please your Honor to understand, that on Monday the 8th of this present, the President Richardott came to the Lodging of me the Secretary, and had there Conference with us the Secretary and Thomas Edmonds, and signified to us, that he came to acquaint us with the Letters which they had newly received from the Archduke; wherein fyrst he answered to the Complaint which we signified in our last that I Thomas Edmonds had made touching the late Reliefs sent, and of further Succours promised to be sent to the Rebels in Ireland by the King of Spaine; that on his Honor he knew not any such thing, nether could beleeve it, for that he was not advertised thereof, as he assureth himself that he should have been, if there had been any such Project in hand. We assured the President that it was a true Information that was delivered, but howsoever that her Majestie in her Opinion of the Archduke's Sinceritie, did in her own Mind ever clear him from being privie to that Proceeding, and perswaded herself that the same grew rather from others Passion. He protested, that the Archduke was most carefull to give her Majestie Satisfaction of direct and sincere Dealing of his Part.

Secondly, he acknowledged that the Archduke received great Contentment in the Answer which we had made touching his Complaint of late Reliefs supposed to be sent to those of Holland and Zealand, whereof we gave Advertisement likewise in our last; albeit he confessed, that if her Majestie had done any such thing, she could not be accused to have done more then in reason she might well justify, but that yt was very good respect to avoyde all new Exasperations at this time. And although the Archduke believed it to be true as we affirmed, that her Majestie had not as yet sent any Reliefs to those of Holland, yet notwithstanding that those of Dunkirk had lately taken towe English Shippes passing into the Lowe Countreyes, the one laden with Iron Ordonance, and the other with small Armes. We assured him that if there were any such thing, that the same passed only by way of Merchandise, and was the Act of particular Men for their private Gain.

Lastly, upon further Occasion ministred of speaking of those of Holland, he prayed us to give him leave to communicate with us a private Conceit of his owne, wherewith he protested the Archduke was not acquainted, nor that he had so much as imparted it to the other Commissioners; desyring only that we would consider thereof, and not to speake further of it then as we should judge it might profit or not. He said, because that in all Appearance there can be no entire Peace between her Majestie and their State untill Holland and Zealand shall be also reduced, by reason of the Liberty which we will reserve to our selves to Trade with those Provinces, and also to favour their Trade otherwise in what we may; That therefore the only way to assure perfectly the Amitie, would be to seek to bring them also to a Peace; for the which there was at present a good Occasion offered, in respect that the States of the united Provinces have now yeelded to treat with the Deputies sent from the other States of their Provinces, and have sent them a Passport bearing date the 17th of this Moneth according to their Computation, and appointed Bergen-op-zome for the Conference; where they do promise to send some of their Number to meet with them. Wherein he wished that her Majestie would also joyne, and interpose her good Mediation either to draw those of Holland and Zealand to come to treat here, or otherwise to remove this Treaty into Holland, to be there joyntly negotiated with theirs. And said, that in that Place they would be contented to yeeld us the Precedency which is now so much in Question between us, pretending also that it would be no less good for the Surety of the States, to treat under the Assurance and Stipulation of her Majesties Countenance and Favour.

We

We told him, that as we had already witnessed her willingness to doe all good Offices to draw that People to hearken to Peace, so they might assure themselves, she would be as ready in all good occasions to renew and prosecute that Perswasion; but that there was no reason to suspend and respitt the present Treaty to any such Expectation of the others treating. And therefore howsoever he pretended to have a good Meaning therein, that we doubted her Majestie would make a very ill Interpretation, that such a Motion should now be made unto her after so long and unnecessary Delays as have already been used. And we praied him rather to fatisfie us when the Audiencer would be returned, whose so long stay beyond his appointed time could not but breede great Cause of Mislike unto her Majestie. And therefore we praied him, that her Majestie might be directly resolved how they meant to proceed with her; and whether they held that they could not treat alone with her Majestie, unless those of Holland and Zeland were also comprized. He protested that they did howerly expect the Return of the Audiencer, and that they had received Letters from him with that Disparch of the Archdukes, by the which he doth assure them to be presently with them: And that that which he proposed only out of his private Conceit, had no end to delay the Treaty or to break the Resolution thereof as we would doubt. And he prayed, that if his Motion were disagreeable to us, that it might not be further spoken of if we thought it so fit. And hereupon we forbare to make other Answer untill we had advised among our selves. Afterwards, having conferred with the rest of our Colleagues about this matter, we the said Secretary and Thomas Edmonds returned this Day by common Advice to the President Richardott with this Answer; That we had advised of that private Motion which he had the Day before made unto us two; wherein although we found in our private Judgment no Cause of Approbation, and might therefore (both by the Liberty himself left us when he proposed it, and also because it came privately from himself without avowe) have forborne to have communicated it any further; yet to shewe what regard we bare unto any thing that came from him, whose Wisdome and Judgment we did very much Reverence, we had resolved to impart it unto the Queen's Ambassador and other fellow Commissioners; and upon due Consideration had amongst us of the Matter proposed, we had thought good to let him knowe, that we did not doubt, but her Majestie as she had laboured heretofore to dispose those of the United Provinces to enter into this Treaty with her for the Quiet and Benefit of Christendome, so she would continue to lay hold of any Motion or Inclination that she should discover in them towards it. But having been (upon their refusall to enter into a joynt Treaty) invited by the Archduke (as himself knoweth) to treat singly, which she had accepted of, and sent us hither for that purpose with Power and Instructions framed accordingly, where we had now remayned above two Moneths ydly and unprofitably. upon pretence of lack of Power in them to resolve a Matter which they must needs foresee, and were told directly before, would come in question at the very first, which in true reason could not bear any Justification; now againe to urge the Queene (before there were any Progress, or so much as an entry made into this present Treaty) to renew her Labour to bring in those of the United Provinces into a joynt Treaty; and upon that uncertainty to intermitt this that we have presently in hand; we tooke it to be very unreasonable and preposterous, and so far from any likelyhood to draw from her Majestie the good Office they desire at her Hands, that we held it rather likely to distaste her Majestie wholly, and to fill her full of Jealousy, that there hath been no Sinceritie intended by them in this Action from the beginning. And therefore that for our parts, (being lothe to be Instruments of any thing that might breede hindrance to so good a Worke, and fearing her Majestie might make a very hard Construction of such a Motion in the Termes wherein matters now stand,) we had nether the Boldness nor the Will to move any such thing unto her at this time. But if it pleased them to enter into the Treaty for which we were come, as Matters should grow to some Ripeness and Forwardness between us, it would be both fitter to be moved and more likely to be hearkened unto,

An. 1600. both by her Majestie and by them to whom she must use her Perswasion: Unto whom there could be no stronger Motive to induce them to treat, then her Example of treating, and likelyhood of concluding. And in this sort and to this effect, we did all willingly offer our best Endeavours when the tyme served. In the mean time, because we were not sure of prevailing though her Majestie pressed them never so earnestly, and it might perhaps require a longer tyme then the dependance of this Treaty, to weede out of their Minds those long and deepe rooted Diffidences which they had conceived, whereunto their reall and sincere Proceeding with us would be a very good Preparative; we prayed him, as we dealt plainely and directly with him, that he would do the like with us, and expaine unto us some Speeches which he had lately used, whereby he seemed to intymate, that unless the United Provinces might be drawen into the Treaty, there could be no Peace concluded between the Queene our Mistres and his Master. Which if it were his Master's Resolution, he had wronged her Majestie to invite her to a single Treaty, having no meaning to proceede in it; and it would be more Honor for him to deale plainely and breake off the Treaty betimes, then to continue the Wrong any longer.

The President Richardott made us answere, that he thanked us for dealing so plainely and freely with him, and he prayed us sith we judged that his Motion (which he protested proceeded only from his private Conceit) would be so ill interpreted by her Majestie, that we would not further speake thereof, for that he would be very lothe that any doubtfull Collection should be made of any thing that should proceede from him, which he vowed imported no ill Desseign, ether to delay the Treaty, or abuse us in the Sincerity thereof. And touching our Desire to be clearly satisfied upon the occasion of former Speeches, whether yt was meant by them to proceede seriously in the Treaty with her Majestie's self, howsoever those of Holland and Zeland should be conformable or not; he protested most vehemently, That albeit it was true, that they greatly desired by the Power of her Majestie's Mediation and good Example, to drawe those of Holland and Zealand to a Peace alsoe; yet that nevertheless, if the same could not be effected, that they did directly intend to treat and conclude a Peace severally with her Majestie, if possibly they might. And as in particular Affection, he protested to desire most earnestly the succeeding thereof, so he knew he should returne very unwellcome into his Country if it should not be brought to a Conclusion. And that where peradventure we might suspect that they sought to amuse us, in expectation of the Issue of the Hollanders treating, he protested that he had not that or any other indirect Desseign; conceaving for his part that no good Fruit would growe of this Treaty with them of Holland, for that he judged them as yet to be too stiff mynded, and that it was only her Majestie's Authority which must sway most with them.

We answered him, that as her Majestie would be ever ready to do him all good Offices therein, so that they ought to engage her thereunto by good dealing to breede a good Assurance in her, and consequently by her Example, in those of Holland and Zealand. Whereas their late manner of proceeding with us, instede of shapeing to a Reconciliation (for the which we were there mett) did rather more and more minister Cause of augmenting greater Jealousies to sett us further assunder. He prayed us most earnestly that we would remove all unnecessary Jealousies, and to beseeche her Majestie to be satisfied with their direct Protections, and also to excuse the long Absence of the Audiencer, for the which they were sorry and ashamed, and confessed that we had just Cause to complaine thereof, but he assured us that they did howerly expect him. We answered him, that we were all willing to make the best Report of Things that we might for Advancement of so good a Worke as we had in hand; but that he must excuse us, that we dealt so plainely and resolutely with him, to avoyd that her Majestie should not hold her self abused by any Remissness and Negligence of ours. He protested again, that if there were any Fraud, that himself was the first deceived, for that he knew not that any was meant.

This

This is all which we can advertise your Honor as yet of our Busyness here. But we thought good further to signify unto your Lordship, that yesterday Morning while the Pinnace attended here our Dispatch, the Captaine having Knowledge that certaine Shallops of Dunkerke had taken certaine Coast-men laden with Coals and other Merchandise going for Rochelle, he made after them, and by his Diligence that he used recovered the said Barks, and in one of them six Dunkers which they had put in her; but the Sshallops escaped from him in a Calme by the Swiftnes of their Ores. And upon the Arrivall of those Men here, we took occasion (fynding they were Fellows of no Worthe) to make a Present of them to theis Commissioners, and to value a Curtesie to them, the better to draw the like from them on the Behalf of such as it pleased your Honor and the rest of the Counsaile to recommend unto us by your Letters of the 9th of July; and we were very glad to have such an Occasion, for that otherwise we should have had little Pretext to speak for those whom they knew were going to beare Arms against them; and yet upon this Curtesie which they take kindly they have promised to write for their Enlargement. We cannot also omitt hereby to give Testimony of the Diligence which the said Captaine hath used, as well in his Attendance here, as also in the said Action; for that we conceive it to be an Honour unto her Majestie, in respect that it was performed in the view of this Place.

We can give your Honor no Advertisement of the Proceeding of the Count Maurice since his Remove from Newport, but only that he is still beseiging the Fort Elizabeth near to Ostend, but with no great likelyhood of Success as it is conceived, by reason that it is very strong of it self, and that the Archduke (who is now approached unto it with his Army) hath a way open to put as many Men into it as he will. We learn also, that the Commissioners that go from the Archduke's side to treat with the States are Monsieur de Bassigny, Monsieur Bentin of Guelderland, and one Cod a Penssonarye of Ipre. And so till further Occasion we humbly take our leaves.

Your Honor's very humblie to be Commauded,

HENRY NEVILLE. JOHN HERBERT.
ROBERT BEALE. THO. EDMONDS.

The Queen to the Commissioners for the Treaty at Bulloigne.

ELIZABETH R.

TRusty and well-beloved we greet you well. Having seen your Letters bearing Date the 16th of July, we find it very strange that the Audiencer is not yet returned, and therefore mean no longer to abide the Hazard of any Dishonour; seeing by your long stay through their Delays, we may be suspected in the World, to be greedy of that which we have been only induced to, with an Opinion that their Sinceritie in those Proceedings, would not have come short of their Protestations. As for the Propositions of Richardot, we know his Fashion is always to take Libertie by speaking as a private Man, to make Advantages of Offers and Discourses, to which he will be bound no further then to serve his owne turne, and therefore we like well of your Answeres in that kind; for we are not disposed upon any new Propositions to post our Commissioners from France to Holland upon so slender Grounds, and therefore we have thought good in this sort to direct you. First, whatsoever the Audiencer brings, to stand firme to give them no Priority; though in any other kind (as heretofore ye are instructed) we can be content you fall into a course of Moderation, so it be not to our Prejudice.

Next for a final Answer, Ye must now deliver to the Commissioners, that having informed us of their Proceedings you have received Order, that if the Audiencer do not return by the end of this next Weeke with such Direction as may

An. 1600. may reconcile that point of Precedency, so as you may proceed to Treaty without any Note of Dishonour to us; We have directed you to return over hither immediately, and so it is our Pleasure that ye should do whom we sent over for that purpose. For as it is strange that they would be so senseless as to think that we would yeelde any Superioritye; so it is strange that all this tyme there should not be an Answer returned, seeing that which is offered by us standeth with so much reason.

Given under our Signett at our Mannor of Greenwich the 19th Day of July 1600, in the 42^d Year of our Reigne.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to the Commissioners for the Treaty of Bulloigne.

20th July 1600.

AFTER my very hartly Commendations. I know not what to judge of this matter, that these Commissioners should trifle thus long about that point, whereof they could not ymagine but her Majestie would make absolute Refusal; and yet I see no sense, why they should urge Treaty and not resolve to conclude. Concerning the Speeches which Richardot used, they seem not strange to me, but do confirm that which ever I supposed; which is, that howsoever they may resolve to conclude with England rather then with nether, yet the mayne Point which they most affect, is to draw the Low-Countries to a tripartite Covenant. Wherein, as for my owne part, I will never be brought to beleieve, that they that have raised themselves to such an height, will ever become Servants; so do I smyle to see, how cunningly Richardot would raise a Jealousy, that the States (who have ever heretofore been deaf to Treatys) can now be content to joyn without us. Of which Resolution he could well have made you this Distinction if he had pleased, that the United Provinces never refused to treat with the States in that Qualitie; but ever protested against any Overture as from the King of Spaine or the Archduke, whom they never meant to recognize. And this is the Forme that they have used at this tyme; for although they lately refused the Emperors Ambassadors, and did the like to those that were sent from the Duke, yet now for those that pretend to come from the States only, they have been content to hear them at Bergben; wherein, though I cannot think that those Deputies do any thing without the Archdukes Tolleration, and that they may have a Deseign to entrappe the States of the United Provinces; yet were the Difference great between such a kind of Accord, and any other Agreement wherein the Archduke should be acknowledged. Whose Fortune I do beleieve assuredly it will be (especially if the King of Spayne breake into a Warre with France, and have another Warre with us) to be gladd in the end to retaine the Superiority only over those which he now possesseth, and to suffer the other States to keep in a Body as they are. Not that he will either surrender or covenant, but be content with a temporary Quietness, which is the best he can look for. Thus have you familiarly my Concepts rather for Discourse then that they are worth your Trouble. And so for this tyme I committ you to Gods Protection.

Your assured loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

*An. 1600.The Commissioners for the Treaty at Bulloigne to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.*20th July 1600, O.S.

IT may please your Honor to understand, that on Thursday the 17th hereof the Audiencer made his return hither; and the next Day the President Richardot and he sent to me the Secretary, to signifye that they would come to my Lodging to conferre with us the Secretary; and Robert Beale, and Thomas Edmonds. And at the said Meeting they declared unto us, that they were sent from their other Colleagues to impart that which they had Charge to signifye unto us upon the return of the Audiencer; which was to protest by the Faith of Christians, that they were sent with a direct Charge and Intent to make a Peace with her Majestie on the behalfe both of the Kinge of Spayne and the Archduke; and that themselves also in their particular Affections would be glad to be Instruments to advance so good a Worke, and therefore that they were forrie that it had been so long delayed by the Difference which had growen: But withall, that they were willed to signify to us, that the King of Spaine could not proceed therein, without receiving Right in the Honor of Precedency which belongeth unto him: For the which purpose, that they were directed to agree to no other course of Meeting then only in some third Lodging, and there to have the first place; which if we would yeeld unto them, that then they would presently enter into Treaty with us, or otherwise they desired to understand her Majestie's Resolution, that if she would not like thereof, they might withdraw themselves; praying us that they might remaine in our good Opinion. And said moreover that they had so long attended, to receive the full Direction of their Princes, for that themselves were not willing to break off the Negotiation, but rather that it should proceede from their Commaundment.

We answered them, that her Majestie would finde this their Proceeding very strange, who had offered them all Reason, but that nothing would satisfye them but Inequality. That for our parts we had enlarged our selves so farre forth as we were authorifed, and that we would communicate their Answer with her Majestie's Ambassador, and let them know our further Concepts thereof. Accordingly we had Conference together of the matter, and the same Day we the Secretary, Robert Beale, and Thomas Edmonds returned to the President Richardot and the Audiencer with this Message; That we had conferred about the Answer which they delivered us upon the returne of the Audiencer, importing the King of Spaine's Resolution not to proceede on the Treaty, unless her Majestie would yeeld him the Preseance. That we were forrie to find so little Correspondency in effect, to the Professions which had been made on their part, and for answer unto it, this was all we could say; That we had no Authoritie to assent unto any such thing, and prayed them to let us know whether this were their last Resolution, to the end we might advertise her Majestie thereof; but because we did assure our selves that it would produce our present Revocation, and would be lothe that a Matter of this Importance to the good of Christendome, and begonne with so great Expectation of the World, should fall to the Ground upon such a Difference; We praied them to thinke, whether there might not be some Proceeding in the Treaty, leaving the point of Precedency in the same Termes as it was; as namely, to treat by Writing, with such Meetings and Conferences as had heretofore passed between us; and if they should like thereof, though we had no Commission to accept of yt, that we would be bold to propose it unto her Majestie out of our private Affections to the Advancement of so good a Worke, as we would willingly do any thing else which they should propound, wherein we sawe that there should be no Disadvantage or Dishonour to her Majestie.

They made us Answer, that for themselves, they were extreemly forrie that Things did so ill shape, but that they had received a peremptory Commaundment

An. 1600. to admit of no other Course of treating here then that which they had propounded; and therefore they praied us to let them knowe her Majestie's speedy Resolution therein, sith now it was out of their Power to vary from the same; and assured us, that they had received a Check, that they had not delivered this resolute Answer, upon our first Challenge of Preseance. We told them, that albeit we doubted not that her Majestie upon Knowledge hereof would presently revoke us, yet that we would do as they had done, to attend her Majestie's direct Commandment before we would breake off the Treaty. This is all that we can advertise your Honor, or expect of this Busyness. And therefore we humbly desire to receive her Majestie's speedy Resolution how she will further dispose of us; and so we humbly take our leave.

Your Honor's humbly to be commanded.

HENRY NEVILLE. JOHN HERBERT.
ROBERT BEALE. THO. EDMONDS.

While we attended the Pinnacle for the conveying of this Letter, we received her Majestie's Letter of the 19th, and your Honor's Dispatch with the same. Whereby, although we conceived that we had Direction enough to come away and to dissolve the Treatie, yet considering we had before signified that we would advertise, we thought good to attend an Answer; and the rather for that we had no Shipping here present to transport us. Wherein we beseech your Honor to move the Lord Admirall to take some order, that we may have no cause of stay when the Commandment shall come; and so again we humbly take our leave this 21st of July 1600.

From the Lords of the Privy Councill, to the Commissioners in the Treaty at Bulloigne.

25th July 1600.

AFTER our very hearty Commendations. Although this arrogant Answer of the Spaniards (whereof your Letters of the 20th do advertise) is so strange, as her Majestie might almost suspect it but a Figure of Ostentation, to trye the uttermost what her Majestie will yeeld unto in the point of Preseance, seeing you have had so ample Power from her Majestie to offer them any Course of equall Degree for Conference, (in which she doubts not but you have clearly opened your selves;) Yet so tender a matter is the point of Honor between Princes, as she considereth that there cannot be too much Care taken to conserve it. And therefore if you have not already signified unto them, her Majestie's constant Resolution never to yeeld them Preseance, as well as they have told you the King of Spayne's peremptorie Answer to yeeld none unto her: Her Majestie then commands you, to let them know, that they had but the start of you thus farre, that they had no sooner told you what the Audiencer brought, but that you had her Majestie's direct Commaundment by her own Hand to return, if the Audiencer did not bring back a Resolution to reconcile that Point by some way of Indifferency, without Prioritie to either. Of this Point we require you in her Majestie's Name to be very carefull that it shall be roundly told them, and with Discretion; because howsoever the Action doth stand or fall, they may not go away with any Note or Opinion, of having been more resolute in that point then the Queen. But now, because her Majestie could be contended as things stand, to have you kept together for some time, (yea, though she did foresee that no good Conclusion should follow,) she is of Opinion, if you observe Circumstances well, that by your own good handling, some way may be found (without Loss or Touch of Honor) to keep the Treaty on foot for some convenient time: Wherein, because this Alteration of theirs must be upon some ground, her her Majestie hath examined what those Grounds may be, and hath resolved accordingly to direct you, that in your Proceeding you may obviate the same. An. 1600.

First, it may be thought that this may be but a Bravery; which if it be, then will it turn again of it self, so as you are to observe their Carriages, and nether be hasty to make any new Propositions, nor to drive it too long, that they give you the slip: In which matter none can direct you so well as you that are upon the place. The second Ground may be conjectured, That they have some particular Desseign, wherein we are (to tell you true) perswaded that there is no great doubt; for by the Intelligence her Majestie hath, their Preparations are of no Importance, only it may be that some final Numbers may be sent into Ireland.

A third Ground there may be, and that consisteth of two Points. First, that from the beginning their cheefe Scope was directed by the Treaty to draw in the Low Countries; and now happily being desperate of any such Purpose in us, they think it as good to breake off at first, as at the last. The other (and that is it which for our Parts is not least probable) is this, that althoughe to this last Meeting between the States of both Sides, the Archdukes nor the King of Spaine be no Parties, yet that they are in hope by this good enterance to lay a good Foundation for that which is to follow, with which if they be fed, it is not unlike that they grow less desirous of her Majestie's Amitie. Not that they will not be glad of it, but rather if it may be in their Choice, whether to have the Low Countries without the Queene, or her Majestie's Amitie without them, they will then leave her and take them. You shall therefore upon these Observations proceede in this sort; after you have in the Point of Preseance said as much of the Queen's Mynde as they have said of the King of Spaine's; namely, that you were commanded, as well as they, to return without doing any thing, rather then to grant any other then equall Conditions; you may then, as well as Richardott and others have done, take a Libertie to make Propositions of your selves, whereby to reconcile Difficulties rather then to break off the whole Work which is begonne. Take occasion likewise to professe your owne Zeale for the Cause to be such, as you would be gladd to know, whether if her Majestie will leave the Point of Preseance undisputed, they will not be contented by particular Messages to and fro, to bring the Points of the Treaty to some good Issue, without any other publick Forms of Meeting then such as have already past; whereby each Partye may understand (when Conditions on both Sides are knowen) what likelihood there is of any good Conclusion. Herein if you finde them bona fide inclinable, then do we think indeede that there could be no way better to keep the Treatie from breaking, then to say that you have bethought your selves what was offered by Richardott concerning the Treaty to be holden at Bergben, at which Place the Queene should have the Preseance. Wherein, because you do know her Majestie's Minde to be sincerely bent to Peace, so it may be grounded upon Points of Honor; you may say, if you might have any Warrant to ground such an Advertisement to her Majestie, you would adventure to send over that Proposition, and to tarry till you have received Answer. Whereunto you may add, that rather then for lack of Understanding of any Circumstances, this good Work which hath relation to the quiet of Christendome should be overthrowen, you will not stick one of you to come over to deliver the Matter and receive an Answer; which we wish, if so it be, may be you Mr. Edmonds, because you are best able to travaile. Further, you may also add that such is your Opinion of her Majestie's Disposition to preferre the Consummation of the Work, before any Humours to insist upon extreame Punctilios, as you make no Question, but if they will come over to any Coast Towne in England, her Majestie will not stick to give them the Preseance.

Thus have you the best means we can think of, that are likely to continue the Treaty, if either the Spanish Pride be so great, that they preferre their hantty Desires before matters of greater Importance, or are growen Carelesse of that now, which heretofore they have sought. But because you may trie the Bottom

An. 1600. of their meaning, and bring all these things to passe according to the Observations you find since the Writing of your last Letter, her Majestie can like that you offer to send over to her Majestie to knowe, whether she will agree to a Truce betweene the King of Spaine, the Archdukes, and her, seeing it was proposed by Coomans in the beginning, or any other Way that may not be dishonorable to continue the Session. Or if that cannot be without such Courses as may be prejudiciall to the Queen, then to make such a parting as may have relation to some further tyme, whereby it may appeare to the World that this is rather a Discontinuance, then an absolute Dissolution; Which if it should, you may well believe that each Prince will be hereafter more precise then ever, how to beginne any new Overtures. And then shall it be fit for you to conclude, that her Majestie will make her Protestations to the World, that she hath done as much as belongs to her in Christianitie or Honor in this matter.

For First, notwithstanding many important Reasons that might have made her still suspicious that their Proceeding was not sincerely intended, she preferring the saving of Christian Blood, hath been contented to send to this Meeting. Next, although she knew no Reason, why she might not as well demand Priority as the King of Spaine hath done, yet to make a Tryall whether a Christian Peace might be confirmed, her Majestie hath been contented to yeeld to an equallitie. And further, in Case that should not take place, to handle it by Writing, or particular Messages: So as you may say, that if it be considered what Evidence she hath of the King's Proceedings in Ireland, not only by having his own Letters written to the Traytors, but by discovery of his sending Support unto them, even since the time that these fair Protestations have been made, you think it imports them much to justify their Sincerity by yeelding to things more reasonable; for if they do not, it will be hard for them (all former Circumstances considered in the latter Treaties,) to avoyde the Scandall which will lye upon them of an unsound Meaning from the beginning. And though her Majestie will taxe no Man in particular at this tyme, yet must she needs say, that nothing could have deceived her, but the Assurance which she reposed in the Judgment and Sincerity of the Archduke; whom as she holdeth too wise to look for more then she hath performed in the Point of Preseance, so she presumeth too much of his Sincerity towards her (whom she hath never particularly injured,) to have done her that Wrong to have invited her with such Perswasion of honorable Proceeding, if he had forethought that the King of Spaine would ever have fought that which is so preposterous and repugnant to Reason; considering that the Archduke was plainly told beforehand, that she would never yeeld the Preseance. And though peradventure all this hath been grounded upon a purpose to divert her Majestie from such Courses which in reason of State she might have taken (if she had resolved to dwell in Hostillitie,) and that by this amusing of her, some Matter of Offence intended, hath been the better contrived; yet you may deliver unto them, that as the Honor will be small that may grow from any such Action, which shall be discovered to be the Child of so ill a Parent as Fraud and Deceit; so her Majestie little doubteth, but that by the Justice of her Cause, and by her Sword, she shall be able to defend her self against all such Deseigns or Attempt whatsoever. And so we committ you to God his Protection.

Your loving Friends,

T. BUCHURST. NOTTINGHAM.

Mr. Secre-

*Mr. Secretary Cecyll to the Commissioners at Bulloigne.*25th July 1600.

AFTER my hearty Commendations. By a joynt Letter from my Lord Treafurer, my Lord Admirall, and my felf, fent unto you this Morning, you have been directed among other Overtures to be made as of your felves to the other Commissioners, for continuing of the Treaty, to make an Offer unto them, that if they will come and treat in any Coaste Towne in England, that her Majestie will be contented there to give them Prefeance. Since which tyme, her Majestie upon a second Consideration, finding it not convenient to offer any such matter; hath commanded me to signifye unto you, that she will have you forbear to make any such Proposition at this Tyme, but to proceed in the rest according to your Directions in our joynt Letter. Whereof I pray you take notice by these Presents, and so I leave you to God his Protection.

Your very loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

*The Commissioners for the Treaty at Bulloigne to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.Right Honorable,*28th July 1600. O. S.

IT may please you to understand, that we received your Honor's Letter of the 25th on Satterday in the Evening, and have endeavoured by all meanes to fullfill the Contents thereof. And for that purpose, we Robert Beale and Thomas Edmonds had Conference with the President Richardott and the Audiencer yesterday in the Afternoone. Who thereupon returned this Morning with this Answer; that they thought not good to deferre any longer their Departure upon any Answer from the Archduke, for that we might as well and better promote the Buifyness being neer to our Masters then here; and to remayne longer in this Place, having no Power to proceede in any thing, were to make us more ridiculous. But if we would propose any thing of Substance likely to give any way to the Treaty, that they would not think a Moneth or two or three more ill spent.

We answered them, that we had already proposed the particular Way of Treating without bringing the Point of Precedency in question; which seeing they refused, we desired they would propose some other; and that otherwise they dealt very unequally with her Majestie, and nothing answerable to the Profession they had often made of their desire to advance this Business, to cast the Burthen of proposing allwaies upon her Majestie and her Ministers, and to conferre nothing on their Side that might promote it. Whereupon after they were gone backe to conferre with the rest of the Commissioners, they returned presently with this Answer; that they had imparted what had passed between us unto the rest of their Colleagues, and that upon advise among themselves seeing they had a precise Order not to proceede in this Place in any other Sort then they had declared, they found no other way to give continuance unto the Treaty (although they greatly desired it;) but that either the Queen would be pleased to renewe her Motion to the Hollanders to draw them into a joynt Treaty, and so to meet in some Place of Holland, or else to appoint a Meeting in some Place of their Country, as Bourborough, Winoxbergh or any other which her Majestie should choose, in the which Case they would make no Difficultie of the Prefeance.

We answered, that we would communicate it with her Majestie's Ambassador; and upon Conference returned presently this Answer; that we could not of our-

An. 1600. selves give them Answer, but that we would presume to advertize her Majesty of it and procure her Direction within five or six Days if they would stay for it, as in all reason and due respect they ought, considering how long we had attended for the returne of the Audiencer. But finding them resolute not to deferre their Journey, we proposed, as of our selves, that while this matter should be deliberated upon, there might be some recess or adjournment of the Treaty, and some Act past thereof between us.

But they answered that it should not need, and that we might be as confident of them, as they were of us; and that they would hold the Colloquie continued till the end of 60 Dayes, that her Majesty might in the mean tyme signifye her pleasure to the Archduke touching the Points that had been proposed. Hereupon we not remaying satisfi'd with this Answer, because it would have laid a Necessity upon her Majesty to have sent first unto the Archduke, although it were only to make Answer to that which they had proposed; we proceeded to the last Step, which was agreed on amongst us; namely to require them, that seeing they desired her Majesty should do them that good Office to invite the Hollanders to enter into the Treaty; they would give her Majesty some ground for it, by some Letter from the Archduke unto her, requiring so much of her, and withall testifying, that he held the Treaty still in force and not dissolved. To this the President Richardott made some difficulty at the first, praying us to be contented with that Declaration which they had made that they held the Treaty to be still in Continuance; but yet upon further debating of it, he promised to represent it to the Archduke, and to move him to write to that effect, or else that himself would write to some of us; after the which, within the Compass of 60 Dayes from this tyme, they would looke for her Majesties Answer. Which was as much as we could possibly draw them unto after all the Tryall that we had made, having gone as far as our Directions, and her Majesties Honor would permitt.

This Afternoon they are departed, and we only attend the coming of convenient Shipping for our Transportation, which we have sent for and do expect out of hand, and so we humbly take our leaves.

Your Honors humbly to be commanded,

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. WINWOOD'S Negotiation in France.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

*Paris July 17th
1600, O. S.*

Right Honorable my very good Lord,

MR. Packer will return so well furnished with all Advertisements from this Place, that it will be needless for me to write any thing; yet I hold it my Duty to yeild an account of the Time I have spent here, where I arrived not before Sunday, for the Post failing me at Monstreuil, I was forced to content my self with such Horses, as with difficulty I could find by the way. Upon Sunday I visited (143 Pretence) Charles Paget, whom I was desirous to sound concerning that Advertisement which lately came from him, that (19 Pluto) the King of Spain should have at this some desseign against (105 Health) England. This is all that he avoweth therein, that the (124 Wisdom) Spanish Ambassador, familiarly discoursing with one of his Confidants of the present State of Things; and of this Treaty now at Bulloigne; willed him to assure himself, that notwithstanding (230) the Treaty, or whatsoever else might ensue thereof, the King of Spain did not purpose to cast off his Pretences for (105 Health) England, unto whom (105 Extorsion) the Infanta had resigned all her Titles and Rights; but rather did resolve to follow them when time should serve, with as much Eagerness, as if the Heat of the War should continue. I remember that your Lordship the last Year, not long after your Arrival to this Place, * did by your Letters move Mr. Secretary, that if the Treaty did go forward, there should be an Article inserted, wherein they should disclaim all Titles and colourable Pretences to the present State, or Succession hereafter, which either they themselves did falsely assume, or other their Favourers, in their seditious Libells alledged for them; whereby if no other Good more important did ensue, yet this is not to be contemned, that their present Affections would thereby be felt, and their

An. 1600. their future Desseigns discovered: But he understands not of any Preparations in Spain by Sea; the Levies of Land Souldiers are great, which he thinks shall be sent partly to the Archduke, partly to Savoy. He further assureth me, that 144. the French King hath 124. the Spanish Ambassador in great Jealousy, as one ill affected to his Person and to the Repose of his State; who after the generall Invitation that the Ambassadors received to follow the King, not making any great haste, but staying still in Paris, De Gondy had express Commandment precisely to summon him, and to require his Attendance: But he plays the Gallant, saying that now he dares declare himself Servant to such a Master, seeing there is so good a Respondant for him in Spain as Monsieur de Rochepot is; who by Letters from Madrid of the 11th of this Month, is said to be still at Burgos, attending in what quality he shall be received, not contenting himself to be received as an Ambassador ordinary. But this which followeth passeth my Understanding. Upon Tuesday the said Party came to me to your Lordship's House; after some ordinary Discourse between us, he said, that he had a Question to ask me, Whither I did not know that your Lordship should offer 40000 Crowns, with Respondence in this Town for Payment thereof, to seize upon the Person of 124 the Spanish Ambassador, and to massacre his People about him. This Question seemed to me most ridiculous and most absurd; and so I told him that he could not have asked a Question whereunto I might more easily answer, the Absurdity thereof satisfying it self; for I urged Cassianum illud, cui bono, requesting him to tell me what Use publick or private might ensue thereof, then at whose Charge that Sum should be disbursed: The Queen of England was not so ill a Mesnagiere as not to know the Worth of the Merchandize which she did trade, non Priamus tanti. I assured him she valued not his Master's Carkasse at so high a rate: I shewed further the Impossibility of the Fact, by the Circumstances of Time, Place, and Means: This I said might in reason give Satisfaction to a Man of Judgement, who would consider all Circumstances in the Ballance of Discretion, and not suffer himself to be transported with the Fury of his own Passion. Yet I told him there was a more potent Reason then any before I had alledged, that apparently would prove that the concept of so foul a Fact did never fall into your Lordship's Cogitations; That was, the due respect, that in your former and private Life, your Lordship ever hath had to the Honor of your House, and the Uprightness of your Reputation; which in all your Proceedings you had so tenderly conserved, that the Malice of the World had no power to blemish the Lustre thereof with the least Note of Disgrace. I said your Lordship could well distinguish what was due to Cesar and what not, and God be thanked you served under a Sovereign, whose Government was not acquainted with such Practises. I prayed him to assure himself that your Lordship in Discretion would not attempt that, which in probability of Reason could not be effected; nor in Honor desire to have that effected, which you had not first approved by the Touchstone of your own Conscience; the Peace and Satisfaction whereof you did more preciously esteem, then the vain Pomp and titulary Glory of the World. He protesteth that he hath justified your Honor unto him, but withall swears that such an Information hath been delivered. I urged him instantly to name either the Person that hath informed it, or him who should attempt the Fact, or some other Circumstance whereby some Light might be discovered, for this generalitie would but amaze your Lordship, and delivered thus confusedly, was an Intelligence without Understanding. He praied me to content my self with what he had spoken, for more he could not, without breach of his Oath, which he hoped I would not desire. Your Lordship will excuse me if I deliver in few Words what I think of this matter: First, I am of opinion that all this is but a fained Device; but if there be any Truth in it, then there are some that could be content to have had this Fact practised, so some likely Person might be found out upon whom the Disgrace might be derived.

I have saluted (Superstition) the Ambassador of Scotland from your Lordship; he was inquisitive of your Proceedings at Bulloigne; whom I informed, how instantly

instantly her Majestie's Commissioners had urged the Presence; shewing, that An. 1600. her Majestie was as jealous of the Right of her Honour, as of the Title of her Crown; and that she held therein her due so dear, that the succeeding Age should have cause to acknowledge her princely Care of her Posterity, by contesting in this point of Honour with him, who calls himself the greatest Monarch in Christendom. I delivered unto him what your Lordship had commanded; that as before you had assured him by your Judgment and Reason, so now by your Knowledge you could confirm, that nothing was intended directly or obliquely to the Prejudice of 165 the King of Scotland. He took this Message very kindly, and I might perceive the old Mans Spirits much revived withall, who of his own accord did promise to advertise it as from your Lordship, by the next. * The Master of Gray will have been with you before these Letters: He goes into Flanders, where if he find any Condition he will stay, if not he will transport himself with Bag and Baggage into England. He doth declare himself a Practiser against his King, and I fear least he doth wrong your Lordship and Mr. Edmonds, professing to have Intelligence with you both. (Poverty) Colvell doth go to Masse, and tells me he must temporize, otherwise he shall do no Service; I referred his Conscience to himself. I told him the Service rested only in this, to procure into your Lordship's Hands the Warrant for these Proceedings, attested as you know, which he promiseth now to do. He desires to have his Wife out of England; I wished him to consider what Means he had to fetch her, what Means to maintain her; and if he went this Journey, what Discretion it was to leave her in a Countrey void of Maintenance and of Acquaintance. He hath written (as he saith) to your Lordship, that yf she may be conveyed to Diepe, he will be no more chargeable either for her or himself, untill this Service be fully performed; I wish you were honestly delivered of him.

Passing by Abbeville, I understood that the Merchants of Scotland which trade in those parts, buy no other Commodities but Arms, as Callivers, Muskets, Pistols, and Arms for Horsemen, which for these Twelve Months they have used. I have likewise heard since my coming to this Town, that the Lord Burley, accompanied with two Captains of that Countrey, is now in Holland, sent to provide Arms for 10000 Men.

They write from Brussels, that Spinola doth expect daily from Spain six Gallies more, and that since the last Defeat which the Archduke received, the States there assembled have granted a present Contribution of 20 s. the Chimney, which the Duke of Arscot proposed, and without Contradiction was assented unto.

At my being in England, I told Mr. Cuff of that Speech which Prentice, Mr. Anthony Bacon's Man, had with the Lord Weems. Mr. Cuff informed Mr. Bacon of it; he made small account thereof, justifying his Man's Honesty and Discretion, only he was desirous to know whither your Lordship had advertised it into England; which Mr. Cuff could not resolve him, neither when he related this unto me, did I resolve him therein.

I beseech your Lordship, that what Directions I shall receive I may receive them immediately from your self; otherwise I shall be bound in all Congruity to make answer to them to whom I ought not, without wrong to your Lordship's Service, and that Duty wherein I will not be found faulty.

Your Lordship shall not do amiss to write sometimes to Mr. Willis, which of late you have intermitted; you may make good use of him when you shall come into England to good purpose; he is open and plain, well affected to your Lordship, and not the best satisfied in his Condition. I should have conferred of these Points before my Departure, but this wicked Journey will plead for my Excuse, wherewith I was then full and yet am surcharged, neither shall be delivered, untill I have the Happiness to return to your Lordship's Presence. And so, &c.

Your Lordship's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

* This is the same Person who is mentioned before in Sir Henry Nevill's Letters.

An. 1600.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

Bulloigne 18 July 1600, O.S.

HAVING so good a Commodity I would not omit it, though perhaps too late to find you at Paris. Out of England I have heard nothing since your Departure, neither publickly to us all, nor privately to my self. I have written that I have dispatched you, and what Allowance I have made you, alledging his Promise for it. Of my Suit I hear nothing at all; I received this Morning a Letter from my Father, but with no mention of it. The Audiencer is returned this Day, but as yet they have not sent to us. Since I sent the Ambassador Venison, he hath sent my Wife and my Sister some Spanish Gloves and Perfumes. Richardot had lately Conference with Mr. Secretary privately, and afterwards with him and Mr. Edmonds, to this effect; That whereas the Queen had often promised to do her best to bring them of Holland and Zealand into the Treaty, for which there was now a very good Opportunity offered, seeing they began of themselves to hearken to it, and had for that purpose given a Passport to the Deputies of the States of Flanders to come to conferr with them at Bergen op Zoome; it would please her to add her Authority unto this Inclination of theirs, and either persuade them to send their Deputies hither to joyn with us, or to remove this Treaty into some place of Holland; in which latter case he said, they would give us the Precedence, which had been so much in Question. This Motion he made as privately from himself, referring it unto them either to suppress it, or to communicate it further as they thought fit. By this you may gather some reason of this long lingring without apparent Cause; and withall, that the States begin Bransler à la manche. We understand by Reports, but not otherwise, that my Lord Cobham and Sir Walter Rawleigh are gon over, upon Pretext to see the Camp and Seige of the Fort Isabella near Ostend, where Count Maurice is yet unprofitably, as he was before at Newport; but I cannot think but they have some other end, and that in England there is some Allarm taken of these Matters, although we be not worthy to know it. The Archduke is within half a League of the States Army, and puts in as many Men as he will into the Fort; so as yet it is holden that Count Maurice must be fain to dislodge, and embark again for Holland, having made small use of his Victory and great Expence he hath been at, only la Berlotte is slain as he came to view the Enemies Trenches. And so till further occasion I commit you to God.

Your very loving Freind,

HENRY NEVILLE.

P.S. Even now we have received Answer from the Audiencer, whereby I conceive the Treaty is broken, viz. That the King of Spain will not assent to any Meeting, without the Preseance be yeilded unto him. I thought good you should know it, but use it as you see cause; you may communicate it if you will to the Duke de Bouillon if he be there, and see if he will not take occasion before it be throughly known, to set a foot again the Motion I made for renewing the Treaties between the Queen and the French King. I send to morrow into England, to sollicite my Leave to step over thither when we have ended here; this last Accident I fear will much disappoint my Hopes that way.

Sir

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood.Mr. Winwood,Bulloigne 23 July 1600, O.S.

OUR Buifness is here at an end, upon the Reason I wrote to you in my last of the 18th of this Month. I am not certain what shall become of me, for in the Letters from her Majestie whereby we are authorized to return, the Permission seems to be restrained to those that were sent over purposely for this Buifness, which seems to be exclusive to me; But I have sent over Michael purposely to bring me some certain Resolution, and I make full account to go over. I have received Answer from Mr. Secretary, of that I wrote to him concerning you; wherein he promises Allowance of 20*s.* a Day, but for the other 10*s.* he saith it is not worth the moving the Queen; so it seems he means to lay it upon me, which I am very well content with, and will see it shall be duly answered you. Directions he hath sent me none for you, although I earnestly prest it, not so much as touching any Compliment to be done by you to the Princess upon her Arrival, although I mentioned it particularly: Therefore I must refer you to those Generalities that we conferred of before your Departure, till my coming into England; and then I will not fail to urge and send you a more perfect Direction. For the present I would only add this, that you would inform your self by all means of the Spanish Designs, which no doubt upon the Rupture, will be carried on mainly against our State, especially in Ireland: And for that purpose I would be glad that you should settle me some good Intelligence, not only where we spake of at your Departure, but any where else, where you think it may be to good purpose; the Charge of it I refer unto you, I will perform what you promise, for I know it will be acceptable. We have a Bruit by some English set at liberty and come out of Spain, that there are 80 Ships preparing at the Groine, and 30 Galleys to come from Lisbon to joyn with them; I pray you be diligent to sift the truth of it; If you chance to speak with the King himself, he will deal plainliest with you. In Ireland our Affairs continue upon the mending hand; the Queen is determined to proscribe Tirone and to conferr his Earldom upon Sir Arthur Oneale, who is come in, and hath declared himself openly against him: Divers others are ready to do the like. Her Majestie is likewise resolved to deliver the young Earl of Desmond out of the Tower, and to restore him to his Father's Title and Estate, whereby it is conceived that Munster will be speedily reduced. Be carefull I pray you to advertise the Proceedings between the King and the Duke of Savoy, for it imports, and the Queen expecteth it cheifly from you. My Lord Cobham and Sir Walter Rawleigh are returned, but I hear their Journey was not altogether idle, nor upon Curiosity only, but that they carried some Message which did no harm: the Particulars you shall know when I am better informed of them. I have received and sent the Passport which you required for John Norton. I pray you write often, though you hazard some Letters, for now they will be exceeding desirous in England to hear of your Proceeding in those Parts. I have used the Direction you advised me of in your Letter by Mr. Packer for Conveyance of mine, and mean to continue it till you advise me otherwise. Touching the absurd and slanderous Surmise that the Spanish Ambassador hath against me, I will not take any knowledge of it till I may avow some Author. I distrust Colwel every Day more and more, I will quit my self of him. And so till some other Opportunity I commend me unto you, &c.

Your loving Freind,

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir

An. 1600.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

Bulloigne, 29 July 1600. O. S.

OUR Buifness here is an End, as I have twice already written unto you. The Spanish Commissioners went away yesterday, and we account to Ship upon Tuesday or Friday. The Truth is for my part I account this action for dissolved, altho' there be a verball Agreement among us, that it shall continue in Dependance 60 Days, in which time the Queen is to resolve whither (if the States will be induced to enter into the Treaty) she will treat in some Town of Holland; or in case they refuse, in some of the Archduke's Towns, as Borboroug, Winoxbergen, or any other which her Majesty will chuse: In both which cases, her Majesty sending into their Countrey, is of courtesy to have the Presence, and so that point not to come in question at all. If she like of neither of these, she is to propose any other way that she shall think fit for the Continuance of the Treaty. Now I suppose the Queen will accept of neither of these two, being in effect to yeild the same Point of Honor, which hath been all this while debated; and besides, having been the cheif Subject of Mr. Edmonds's first Negotiation at Brussels, and then directly rejected by her: And for my own part, I see no other way how we can meet, but with the same Difficulty, which hath now separated us, unless they will send into England, which they absolutely refuse, therefore I conclude as before. Notwithstanding, we are willing for some Causes to have it conceived otherwise, that partly by reason of some difficulty grown about the Precedency, but cheifly to give both time and conveniency to the Hollanders to resolve whither they would enter into the Treaty, having of late discovered some Inclination unto it, it was proposed by the other Side, and could not well be refused by ours, to adjourn the Treaty for 60 Days, and in the mean time a Place for the next Meeting to be agreed upon, which should be convenient for all Sides. But withall, if you find that the Opinion of our Breach may the sooner imbarck the King into the War with Savoy, you may confidently tell him as of your self, that the Proceeding hitherto hath so distasted her Majesty, as you are of Opinion she will not be drawn into any new Conference: But if he be already entred into War, you shall do well to turn your Language clean the other way, and accermare, that the small Assurance and Contentment she finds here, will enforce her in all reason to provide for her Repose and Safety some other way; at least to disburthen her self of certain Enemies, seeing she finds so uncertain Freinds. And thereupon you may take occasion, to touch the Discontentment the Queen hath conceived of the late Arrest of the Privy Council, which is like to cut off the cheif Trade of our Nation in this Realm; and you may very seriously urge either the Revocation of it, or at least the suspending of the Execution for three or four Months, till there may be some Conference had of it, and his Council may be throughly informed of the wrong therein done to the Amity and Treaties between the two Crowns. And if it be refused, you may directly let fall some Speeches, that the Queen will be very sensible of it, and will be enforced, both in Honor and Policy, to make the like Restraints upon the Subjects and Commodities of France, as this Arrest hath made upon those of England. And that you may be the better avowed in the Sollicitation hereof, I send you a Copy of the Council's Letter lately written unto me about it, and likewise a Memorial sent me by the Merchants how they desire to have it qualified; which being compared with the Arrest, and the Difference noted, will best declare what they do particularly complain of. And in the mean time whilst you sollicit some Order there for the suspending of it, I have adventured to write to the First President of Roïen, to make some stay of it in that ressort, till the King's Pleasure may be further known; therefore I pray you be instant in it, and at least let us know what the King answers. The Ambassador hath been dealt with in England about it, and hath made fair Promises, as his manner is. The Merchant's Merchant's Memorial seems to be in the Manner of a Petition to the King, which you may present either to the King or to the Council. The Advocat who hath dealt in all these Causes for our Nation, doth now follow the Court: You shall do well to advise with him about your Proceeding in this matter, and you may ease your self much by him, in the setting down of any Remonstrance that you shall think good to present. I will cause Orme to write unto him to assist you, as you shall need him, and to promise him to satisfy him for his Pains: His Name is Cleruaux a little halting Fellow, that you have been sometimes come with Orme to me. You shall do well to deal particularly with the Chancelour about it, and to make him capable of the Reason of our Complaint; for it belongs chiefly unto him, and I think he carrieth the best Mind. As I with you should prosecute this Matter with some Vehemency, so would I not, that you should give them any cause to despair of the Queen; but that you should entertain them in that Concept, that out of her own constant Nature she will always be found ready to embrace the King's Amity with all Sincerity, so as she may find any real Correspondency on his Part; otherwise reason of State will enforce her (tho' against her Will) to betink her self of some means, whereupon she may build more assurance. And if at any time you chance to fall into that Argument with the King, you may touch the incompatibilitie between the two Amities of Rome and England, and how hard a thing it will be to hold fast and strict Alliance with both, and what cause of jealousy it giveth to the Queen, to see him combine himself so much more strictly with the Pope, then any of his Predecessors have done, considering how implacable an Enemy he is unto her. Hereupon it will be good to observe very precisely what he will answer. For the present this is all that occurs; when I come into England (whither I have leave to return for a Month) after I have had some Speech with her Majesty and Mr. Secretary, you shall hear more from me.

For News we have is utterly nothing, that of Ireland I wrote you in my last. Count Maurice is risen from before the Fort Isabella, and hath taken down his edge for any more Action this Year, as it is supposed. The King of Scotland is upon the Borders with some Strength, pretending to do Punishment upon some Families there, who lately slew Carmichill one of the Wardens of the Marches: Hereupon my Lords Willoughby and Scroop are sent down to their Charges, but nothing else done that I hear of. Sir Anthony Pawlet is dead, and Mr. Secretary engaged for Sir Walter Rawleigh, reserving his Favour to me in somewhat else. Write I pray you as often as you may, and let me know what Letters of mine you receive. And so, &c.

Your very loving Friend,
HENRY NEVILLE.

The Lords of the Privy Council to Sir Henry Neville.

AFTER our hearty Commendations to your Lordship. We have seen a Decree and Edict set forth by order of the French King, for the restraining and confiscation of Cloth that shall be stretch'd upon the Tenters, in which Decree there are contained such strict Observations and Points, as are not possible to be performed by the Merchants, and the same seemeth to be conceived in such sort rather to barr and banish altogether our English Cloths out of France, then to reform the Abuses that are sometimes committed in stretching too far, or in false making of Cloths; whereupon our Merchants that trade thither, have presented unto us certain Articles, both for the avoiding of the Frauds and Abuses committed, and qualifying the extremity and rigour of the Edict, which are agreeable to former Orders taken there, (as they inform us) and are publicly set up in the Hall at Rouen, where the Cloths are sold. Forasmuch as this Matter doth greatly concern both the Merchants that trade thither, and the venting

An. 1600. of that Commodity, by which divers poor People are fet on Work, her Majesty hath given us Direction earnestly to recommend this Cause unto you, as Matter of good Moment, and to require you in her Highness's Name to deal effectually with the French King and his Council, for the repealing and revocation of this late Ediēt, and to admit and allow the Articles offered by the Merchants, being agreeable to the former Orders ratified and set down by the French King and his Council, and such as (being duly observed) will meet with all the supposed Abuses in the stretching or false making of Cloths. This Cause is to be followed with good Care, Instance, and Effect, that the last Ediēt may be revoked, otherwise the Trade of our Merchants into that Kingdom with our Cloths will be quite overthrown, which is the only Commodity vented thither out of this Realm, and as you know, those things which are brought from thence are of superfluous Use, and that might well be spared for the most part. Therefore praying you to effect this Matter with earnest Care, and to certify unto us what Resolution the King doth take therein, we bid your Lordship heartily farewell.

From the Court at Greenwich the 10th of July 1600.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

Right Honorable my very good Lord,

Lyons 31 July 1600. O. S.

PARTING from your Lordship's House at Paris upon Friday the 18th of this Month, I arrived at this Town the Sunday se'nnight after. I found not commodity to speak with Monfieur de Villeroy before Tuesday Morning, who when he had read your Lordship's Letter, which I delivered with such Complements as I thought most convenient, he said I was welcome, and so should be to him whensoever I should have occasion to use him, and then asked me if I had any thing then to say. I said that your Lordship not having the Happiness to be here your self, to do that Service to the King which your affectionate Devotion did desire, and the Quality of your Place required, had sent me to attend at the Court to receive his Majestie's Commands, and his in like Sort: I prayed him to advertise the King of my coming, and of my continual Attendance, which by Commandment was enjoyned me from your Lordship; which he promised to do, and then ask'd me again if I had any thing more to say: That question reiterated, implied, as much as I conceived, as tho' he willingly would be rid of me; I thought it not fit to enforce any thing on him whereof he made no shew to be willing to hear, and therefore not finding him either to enquire of your Lordship's Health, or how you were accommodated in that place, or when it was likely you would return to this Court, for fear to be troublesome to him, taking my leave I departed.

Now it may please your Lordship to understand how the Affairs of Savoy have passed since your Departure from Paris. About the end of June, President Barlietta (who is elected Bishop of Tarantaise) in his Audience of the King, * proposed that the Duke was willing to perform the Exchange contained in the Treaty, so he would be content to remit Pignerol. The King answered, that he would not alter one Letter of the Treaty; whereupon he sent Direction to his Agent in Savoy, Monsieur de Berny (Brother to Monsieur de Sillery) to An. 1600. press the Duke to the Performance of the Treaty. Monsieur de Berny received this Answer from the Duke, that he was determined to send the Marquis de Lully to the King, by whom he should receive all good Satisfaction. The Marquis de Lully came, accompanied with Roucas the Secretary: He delivered to the King, that whereas by virtue of the Treaty it was in the Duke's Option either to render the Marquisat or to make the Exchange, the Duke was resolved to render the Marquisat; which he would do, but with this Condition, that the Propriety only should remain to the King, the Usufruct to his Son, who should acknowledge the Sovereignty thereof to the Crown of France. The King took this Proposition in much scorn, and so asked the Marquis if this were all he had to say, who answered, it was; then said the King, you may depart when you will: Upon this the King gave commandment for levying of Men, and for provision accordingly for the War. The Ambassadors of Savoy perceiving the King to be in earnest, intreated Patience for a few days, promising that they would send Roucas to the Duke, by whom they would employ the best of their Endeavours that the King might receive Contentment. Roucas goes, and within eight Days returns, brings Letters to the King that the Duke would absolutely render the Marquisat, but first it was to be accorded of the manner and form of rendering of it, to which purpose he had sent full Power and Authority to his Ambassadors to treat with any who should be warranted with like Power from the King, promising solemnly to ratify what his said Ambassadors should conclude. It was long disputed who should first render, at last it was agreed the Duke should first, and the King should give four Hostages to perform the like on his part. The Hostages were these, Count de Tournon, Count de Suze, Monsieur de Morgues, and Monsieur de Monglat, Brother to Monsieur de Zancie. When all was concluded, the Ambassadors of Savoy refused to sign the Treaty, saying that altho' they had full Power and Authority to conclude and determine, yet they would not in respect of Duty, but first advertize their Prince of their Proceeding, and therefore intreated the King with favour to suffer them to send Roucas to the Duke, with advertisement of what was passed, who should return within five Days. Roucas departed the 21st of this Month: Upon this the King advertised all his Governours of Peace with Savoy, whereupon he did so firmly build, that he sent presently forwards three Companies of Swiss and two of Arquebusiers, with Monsieur de Passage Governour of Valenza, (whom he hath destinated long since to be Governour of the Marquisat,) to the Frontiers, to be ready to take Possession thereof when it should be rendered. On Saturday, which was the 25th Roucas returned not, he was expected all Sunday. On Monday Morning arrived a Courier from Savoy with Letters to the King, requesting three Days respit longer for the Return of Roucas, and three Weekes for the Restitution of the Marquisat. All that Morning the King was in Council, where it was concluded without longer delay to enter into the War. Marschal de Biron before Dinner set forward to his Government in Borgogne, Monsieur Lesdiguieres in the Afternoon into Dauphine, and upon Tuesday the Duke of Guise went into Provence. Upon Monday in the Afternoon the Ambassadors of Savoy pressed for Audience, and intreated forbearance for 15 Days longer. The King answered he would go to the Comedy, (for here are certain Italian Comedians where he passeth the Afternoons with much Contentment, attended on by the four Secretaries of State, and the rest of the Nobility.) It is thought the King will divide this Army, which will consist of 20000 Men, into two Parts, so that Marschal de Biron shall besiege Bourg, and Monsieur Lesdiguieres shall go into Piedmont, by the Valley of Barcellona. Before these Letters can come to your Lordship the War will assuredly be begun, unless Roucas return, ratifying the last accord, which some hope, and some fear, as their particular Affections do carry them. I cannot particularly inform your Lordship of the Forces of Savoy, he hath reinforced all his Frontiers, and strongly guarded the Passages; he continues his desperate Resolution, protesting openly to be cut

And his Reflection upon this Transaction is extremely just. Si cet avis est vrai, (says he to M. Villeroy,) ne croyez pas pourtant qu'il ait aucune volonté de le restituer; & ne vous attendez pas de l'avoir que par Force. Mais ne pouvant plus entretenir le Roi sur la generalité de ses remises & défaites, & lui étant forcé de faire quelque declaration sur l'un de ces deux partis, desquels il ne veut accomplir ni l'un ni l'autre; il s'est pris à celui ci, comme à celui qui est pour lui fournir plus ample matiere de nouvelles cautelles & tergiversations, &c.

An. 1600. cut in an hundred Peices before he will voluntarily render the Marquisat; and now Monsieur de Villeroy doth acknowledge, that he hath protested as much to him at his being at Paris. There is yet no Proof of any apparent Assistance from Spain. In the Dutchy of Milan and Kingdom of Naples there is both a Levy of Men and Contribution of Money, both to be employed by the Commandment of Count Fuentes, of whose certain Arrival I cannot write, (though in this Court it is said, he is arrived,) for by Letters from Genoa of the 29th of this Month, S.N. it is averred, that he is at Barcellona, taking care how and where to land his Men, which are not 4000, amongst whom the Plague is suspected, and therefore the Genouese refuse to suffer them to land there; and wheresoever they land within their Territories, they will impose a Quarantine upon them, not to stir out of the Lazaretto before forty Days be expired. It is not beleived he brings more Treasure with him then 5 or 600000 Crowns.

The King hath lately sent Monsieur de Vic Brother to the Governour of Calais to reside Ambassador with the Suisses, upon the Death of Monsieur Morfontaine there. He doth carry with him 150000 Livres, to give Satisfaction to some Particulars there, the rest which was ordained for them, (whereof 600000 Livres is in this Town) must now be employed in this War. I have saluted (126 respect) the Venetian Ambassador, in such form as your Lordship commanded me, he arrived here but the Night before me: Upon Sunday he visited (distrust) Monsieur Villeroy, who assured him, that since the Defeat which (desperation) the Infanta had received, (120 hope) the States are about (≈ 230) a Treaty with (∞ 122) the Spanish Provinces at Bergen op Zome. Upon Sunday Sen-night (128 Spiall) the States Agent took Post from hence to Paris, the Fourriers have assigned me his Lodging, but I will not accept of it. The King goes on Thursday to Grenoble, whither I think to follow, for he will stay some time there, though the Body of the Council stir not from hence. If the War go forward, the King will neither go to Marseilles nor to Avignon, but attend his Queen here in this place, who is not looked for before Mid-October. I left the Constable at Pognes, who is not yet arrived to this Town. The Duke of Bouillon is in Turenne, for whom the King hath sent three severall times. The Duke of Savoy hath disgraced Chevalier Breton, and sent him at length to his House. I will not at this time be more troublesome to your Lordship, so humbly kissing your Hands I rest

Your Lordship's, &c.

Lyons 3^d Aug. 1600. O. S.

IN my Letters of the last of July, (since which time I received your Lordship's of the 18th of the same, for the which I give you many and humble Thanks,) I related summarily all that hath passed concerning this matter of the Marquisat

An. 1600. ſat ſince your Departure from Paris, with the Reſolution which the Kinge hath taken to make Warr upon the Duke, therbie to enforce him to render him his Right. The Kinge yet holdeth that Determination, though with that Coldneſs of proceeding in a matter wherein his Honor is ſo deeply engaged, that every Man doth take notice, that Peace ſhall be welcome unto him, whenſoever and howſoever it ſhall come: For he little thought that the Duke of Savoy would ſo willfully have ſtood out, but ever hoped, when all ſhould faile, that th' only Countenance of raſſembling his Men of Warre, would have reduced him to better Reaſon. But now well perceiving how far his Judgment hath ben abuſed, and that either he muſt quit his Right with Diſhonour and Diſadvantage, or enter into a freſh and a tedious Warre; they which lately have had Audience and Conference with him, do acknowledge, that they find him much confuſed and perplexed in Mind, and that Sharpneſs and Vigour of Spirit, which in his Countenance was wont to appeare, much abated. Be it that he ſees thoſe Deſignes, which he hath plotted to ſolace the reſt of his Days with Pleaſure and Delight, now in termes to be altered to Travailes and Diſages, or that he and the Queen being upon Treaty of Peace with Spaine, and the States enclining likewiſe to an Accord, he muſt enter as it were into a duello with the King of Spaine, only relying upon the Forces of his own People, whoſe Affections his Conſcience doth tell him (eſpecially of his trueſt and moſt faithfull Subjects) have juſt cauſe to be eſtranged from him: Or that he ſees * by thoſe late Attempts lately diſcovered againſt his Perſon, and every Day in danger to be renewed, his Life leaſt aſſured, when in reaſon he presumed he ſhould be moſt ſecure: For ſince his coming to this Town, he hath had Intelligence that two ſhould purpoſely arrive hither to take away his Life: Whereupon the Gates of this Town have been extraordinarily guarded, neither can any enter, without Enquiry firſt made of his Quality, and Place from whence he comes, neither can be lodged without a Bolletim from the Keepers of the Gate where firſt he entred. And ſince again he hath received Letters, that the 14th and 15th of this Month he ſhould have about him his trueſt and beſt approved Servants. Thoſe Prefages are likewiſe revived that he ſhould not paſs this or the next Month. If that Speech which Monſieur de la Faye had with your Lordſhip be true, it is no marvaile that theſe Fancies poſſeſſing his Mind do much trouble and diſcontent him. But that which makes moſt Men believe that if any convenient Conditions be offered from Savoy they will be here accepted, is, becauſe the Ambaſſadors of both ſides remain as before, neither is order given for the revoking of the one, or ſending away of the other. Beſides, the Patriarch hath been looked for here theſe three Days; and on Friday, as the King was at the Comedy, there arrived in Poſt a Cordelier from him with Letters, intreating that he would have Patience, without advancing the Warre any further, until his coming, excuſing the Indiſpoſition of his Body, unable to make greater haſte. The King hath aſſigned the Patriarch to find him at Grenoble, towards whence he went yeſterday. He promiſed this Town to touch the Sick as this Day, but two Days ſince it was proclaimed by Sound of Trumpet, that thoſe that would be touched ſhould be at Grenoble upon Tuesday, which is the Aſſumption of our Lady. Monſieur de Villeroy is gon with the King, and the reſt of the Council follow after upon Wednesday. It is not improbable that this Negotiation of the Patriarch's may breed ſome Alteration, and move the King to ſtay his hand, for both Mareſchal de Biron being in the Feild with his Troops in Breſſe, and Monſieur Leſdiguieres in Savoy, (who hath made already certain Scorcerie;) either he preſumes much of his own Eloquence, or els he will bring the King Satisfaction in that point which he ſo much deſires.

Monſieur le Grand upon Tuesday next doth ſet forward towards Florence, by whom the Kinge doth ſend a Procuration addreſſed to the Great Duke, authorizing him thereby to eſpouſe the Princeſs his Neice, in the King's Name: For it is not held honorable, nor perhaps safe for her to stir from her home to seek her Husband, before she be assured that she is a Wife. So the Duke of Alva espoused Elizabeth Daughter to Henry II. at Paris, in the Name of the King of Spaine: And the now Queen of Spaine was likewise married † at Ferrara by Proxie, before she arrived into Spaine. But of her coming there is little or nothing spoken, which will not be before October. Monsieur de Roquetaure is sent to Paris to hasten the Carquan, whereof there hath been so much speech; and to give order to the Ladies, to be ready to come hither by the end of this Month. I do not understand of above three of any great Quality that are appointed to come; they are the Duchesse of Nemours, the Marquise of Pisani, and the Wife of Monsieur de Leon-Court le premier President.

* Lettres d'Oſſat, Vol. 4 p 36, 37. Te Serres in his Inventaire f. 934. gives a particular Account of this Attempt upon the King's Perſon.

For the Marquise de Vernueil, though the King cannot visit her in Person as he desires; by reason of these unexpected Troubles for Preparation for the Warre, yet there passeth not one Day, wherein he doth not send in post to her.

Whiles I was writing, I received your Lordship's Letters of the 23^d of July, for the which I humbly kisse your Hands. To all that have question'd with me whether the Treaty of Bulloigne would take place or noe, I have ever made this Answer, That if that point of Preseancie were accorded, yt was likely all other Difficulties would be well accommodated, but therein her Majestie was resolved to do her Honor no greater wrong then to submit her self to an Equality, which for the general Good of Christendome, and the Repose of her Subjects, she would be contented to accept; but if nothing would satisfie the King of Spaine but the Preseancie, the Treatie there would end, without further Dispute.

Monsieur de Bellingham, the Day before the King departed, shewed me a Letter from Monsieur de Failly of the 1st of August, S.N. wherein he saith, that the Treaty is broken, and that there happened some Picque between your Lordship and Don Balthazar de Zunega.

“ Upon the Receipt of your last Letter, I did communicate to Monsieur de Rosny (who did tarry in this Towne after the King) howe the Treaty was broken, and upon what Point. He tooke it kindly from your Lordship, that it would pleas you to impart it unto him, and said, that now the King of Spayne, which way soever he wold turn himself, should find more Worke then he should be well able to performe.” I purpose likewise at my coming to Grenoble (whether God willing I go to morrow in post) to communicate as much to Monsieur de Villeroy. I can now assure your Lordship, that Count Fuentes is not arrived, nether is it knowen when he will arrive, though fifteen Dayes since the King was advertised that he was at Geneva. By Letters from Milan the last of July, S.N. we understand that there is an Ambassador arrived there who goes to reside with the Duke of Savoy, and with him there arrived Don Giovan Mendoza, who in these last Warres in Savoy had a cheefe Command there.

I have lately spoken with the Secretary of Florence, who did then communicate to me his Advertisements out of Spayne. They give notice of some Preparations of Gallies for some Enterprize against the Turke, in revenge of those Spoiles which Cigala hath freshlie made upon the Coast of Sicily and the Kingdom of Naples; but they speak nothing of any great Vessells. Yt is assured, that the Plague is greatly in Lisbonne, Seville, and many other Port Townes, whereby Count Fuente's Men did gett their Infection. Further they say, that the Queen of Spayne goes in Pilgrimage to those Saints, which Woemen who desire de far figliuoli, do most adore.

I will not be wanting in any diligence, to sift out the Truth of these Preparations; both by him, and those Marchants who trade in those Parts. In the other point also, I will do what possibly I may; though I find nothing more hard then to effect it to purpose, nor nothing wherein one may more easily be abused.

† Memoires de Bentivoglio, Vol. 1.

An. 1600. As I was ready to shut up this Letter, there arriv'd a Courier to Monsieur de la Guiche Governour of this Towne, with Newes, that the Mareschal Biron hath taken yesterday in the Afternoone the Towne of Bourg, which is assuredly true, as Monsieur de Rhosny doth avow. This is the first Blow, which doth light heavie upon the Inhabitants, for the Towne was well peopled and full of many rich Marchants, and Men of other Trades. But the Citadelle will hold play long, being strong by Nature, and strong by Art, as taken to be the third of Europe, and strongly furnished with Men and Munition.

If my Letters be so happy as safely to arrive to your Lordship, my Dilligence in often writing shall justify it self. I find no surer means, nether for Letters nor for Exchange, then at the first. I rely entirelye upon Mr. Secretarie's Honour, that he will justify what I delivered to your Lordship for my Provision, for to my remembrance, I delivered it in ipsis terminis as I received it. So recommending my Service to the Continuance of your Lordship's Favour, I rest

Your Lordship's in Duety to be commanded,

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

Right Honorable,

Grenoble, 9th Aug. 1600. O. S.

IN my last from Lyons of the 3^d of this Moneth, I advertised of the King's Departure from thence to this Towne, where the Patriarche was assigned to meet him; of Monsieur le Grand's going to Florence, and of the * taking of Bourg by Mareschal Biron; which Towne was entred at the Gate by Force of the Petard, and within, much Butin and Spoile made by the Soldiars; for the Inhabitants of the Towne had not leasure to retire their Goods into the Citadelle, infomuch that the Count Major, who was Governour thereof, and of all Bresse, was forced to quit his Foot-Clothe, which was afterwards taken and presented to M. Biron. Since which time he hath taken certaine Forts and Passages thereabouts, and now intendeth to blok the Citadelle, rather then to batter it, which wold eat up time at least for three Moneths. Yt is said that the King hath promised him Bresse in feudo, acknowledging the Souveraingtie from the Crowne of France, wherof if the King prove his Words, he doth purpose to bear the Name. He sent hither upon Tuesday four Ensigns, and two Cornets, which were taken there, to be presented to the King, who arriv'd here upon Sunday Night. Upon Tuesday Morning he touched the Sick: In the Afternoone the Patriarche had Audience, who as it seemed, had not much more to saie, then that he perswaded the King to Peace, and to accept such Capitulations as the † Duke of Savoy with safetie might make him. The King's Answer was short, " That his proceeding with the Duke of Savoy in this matter of the Marquisat, would be a sufficient Testimonie howe much he affected the Conservation of Peace, and howe loath he was to enter into a newe Warre; wherin he was not so far advanced, but that he would accept reasonable Conditions; but the Duke of Savoy was not to think that he was bound now to perforce either the Treaty at Paris, or the latter at Lyons; for since, he had desbourfed a great Summe of Mony, to the valew of 150000*l.* which he did expect should be rembourfed by him, who had enforced him to that Charge." He then referred him to his Counsaill, of whom he said he should receive Reason. That Evening the King set forward towards his Army, and hath carried Monsieur de Villeroy with him; at his Departure he gave in charge to the Patriarche, that during his Aboad here, he should see that Monsieur de Vendosme did hear Masse every Morning. Upon Thursday the Patriarche departed hence towards Lyons, as I think, rather

rather to speak with the Ambassadors of Savoy, who yet remaine there, then to confer with the Counsaill, who the Day before did purpose to set forwards towards this Towne. An. 1600.

The Day after the King went from Lyons, the Marquis Lullin sent to the Chancellour for a Passport to departe. The Chancellour answered, that he had no Authoritie to give him a Passport, but he wold advertize the King of his Request. The Marquis replied, that he wold willingly depart because he doubted his Saftie, wherof the Chancellour willed him to rest assured for his owne Person and for his Followers.

* Monsieur de Lefdignieres hath taken the Towne of Montmelian; there was not above one Man slayne, nor one Houfe pilld. The Count de Brandis Governour of the Towne, betook himselfe to the Cittadelle, which they purpose likewise to blok, by being otherwise almost impregnable.

The Army, which nowe they call Royall because of the King's Prefence, (though it hardly consists of 6000 Foote, and 300 Horse,) hath been before Chambery these five Daies: The King lodged in the Fauxbourghes upon Thursday Night. The Towne is not able to hold out; but for their present Honour, and their Saftie hereafter, (for fear they should come to an after reckoning with the Duke,) they will not yeald before they see the Cannon; yet Monsieur de Villeroy told Monsieur de Giacob, (who is in the Towne, and in Disgrace with the Duke,) that if they enforce the King to bring the Canon, he wold not after receive them to Mercie; † so upon Thursday they of the Towne sent to the King, that if they received not Succour within three Daies, they wold render the Towne, and pay him 50000 Crowns to redeem themselves from Pillage. Monsieur de Provenza is gon to advertize the Duke, and to know his Pleasure.

Here is little spoken of any Preparations that the Duke doth make to encounter the King. Yet som hold that he is able to bring into the Feild 500 Hors, which are altogether unproper for these montaigneux Countreis. The Day the King departed from Lyons, the Duke sent him a great Basket of Mellons, which the King doth interpret ill, and saies, the Duke doth think to pleas him like a Child with an Apple. He doth purpose during his aboad in these Parts to make Chambery his rendezvous; for upon Thursday there was sent a Courier to Lyons to settle the Posts between those two Places. He hath caused a Manifesto to be published, to justifie his Proceeding in this Warr, wherof your Lordship herewith shall receive a Coppie. Yt doth not yet appear that the King of Spayne doth send any Assistance to the Duke. But the Duke hath lately wrote a Letter into France, (and perhaps of purpose that it shold be divulgated) wherein he showes that the King of Spayne (whom he had no cause to offend) wold never consent that he should render up the Marquisat, for therby the King of France would be able to ballance, and perhaps to waigh down his Reputation with the Princes of Italy, amongst whom he is now the only Arbiter; and besids it might prove dangerous to his own State, yf the King of France should revive his Pretensions upon the Duchie of Milan, considering this newe Alliance with Mantua and Florence, from whom he should receive Encouragement to undertake any Attempt, and Assistance, yf need were, to perform what he should attempt.

Roncas (who now came to Jenne a little Village upon the Frontiers of Savoy, but durst not without a safe Conduct present himselfe to the King's Prefence,) at his last return out of France related unto the Ambassador of Spayne who resides with the Duke, howe far the Marquis and the President had engaged the Duke to the Restitution of the Marquisat. The Ambassador assured him, that if the Duke did render the Marquisat without his Master's Privitie and Consent, his Master wold presentlie make War upon him. But how closely soever the King of Spayne doth carry himself therein, it is liklie he will be more sensible, when the King of France shall have taken from the Duke all those Passages by which

* Memoires de Bassompierre, Vol. I. p. 61, &c.

† Memoires de Bassompierre, Tom. I. p. 63.

An. 1600. his Men from Spain and Italy do ordinarily passe into Flanders (which it is to be presumed he will do,) for therby he shall hold both Spain and the Archduke in much Devotion; he shall assure his Frontiers of Picardie, and by no means more inable the States to subsist, whose Conservation, he hath no reason to neglect.

We now heare, that the Duke of Savoy is come downi to Moriana with 6000 Foot and 7 or 800 Horse; there he doth purpose to make head against the King. For the Valleis of Moriana and Tarentese are th'ordinary Passage into Piedmont, which if the King could possesse, he wold fortifie there, therbie to cut off all Succors from Savoy.

Untill I shall return to Lyons, I shall not be able to attend that Service, which your Lordship in your last Letters and before my Departure from Bulloigne, did require. Upon the Receipt of your last Letter, I imparted unto (125 Advise) the Ambassador of Florence what was the Issue of (230) the Treaty, and what Preparations were supposed and might be suspected in Spain. He hath promised to write expressly to the Great Duke, to know what he understands thereof, and offered me, if so I wold, to move him, if he were not fullie informed, to dispatch a Courrier presently into Spain to his Ambassador, from whom I should receive perfect Intellegence. "I told him I had not such Commission, yet this I could assure him, that what good Office soever yt should pleas the Great Duke to do to the Queen, should keindlie be accepted, and returned as occasion should present yt self". He said he knew so well his Master's Minde, that he was assured that he could not do a Service more pleasing, then to make him capable of some means, wherby he might manifest his Devotion to the Queen of England; and so requested me to leave it to his Discretion. I answered that the Queen should be encotiraged to continue those Courses intended, in withstanding the Desseignes of the common Enemie of the Repose of these Parts of Christendom, yf other Princes whose Interests are imbarqued in the self-same Bottome wold joine their Hands, if not in real Assistance, at least in good Affection and Devotion. I did not further declare my selfe; in my opinion some good may be done there, wherof your Lordship hath often spoken; and withall a sure Intelligence settled for Spain; Yt is far off, but nowe the Inter-course from thence into France will be ordinary, by reason of this Mariage. What Directions your Lordship shall give herein I will punctually observe, but of my self, your Lordship knowes, I am no Undertaker. And so, &c.

Your Lordship's, &c.

Right Honorable,

Chambery 15th August 1600. O. S.

FROM Grenoble of the 9th of this Moneth, I advertized of the King's Proceedings in these Warrs of Savoy, and how he was advanced to Chambery, wherein, by the tenour of that Parley which was had with the Masters of that Towne, he should have entred that Day. But because the Canon was not then there ready, the Inhabitants of the Towne being willing to have shew of reason for what they should doe, to answer to all Objections that may be layed to their Charge, whensoever the Duke shall make his Peace; the King was intreated, nor ill contented to have Patience untill Tuesday, against * which Day he caused a Cavilier to be raised to mount the Canon upon, which then arrived; and so that Afternoone Monsieur de Giacop Governor both of the Towne and Coun-trie, came forth into the Suburbs of Montmelian where the King was lodged, and delivered up the Keys of the Towne. An. 1600.

The Capitulations are in Substance, conformable to those that were concluded between this Citie and Francis the First, when he in like manner did gaine it, viz. That the Towne should enjoy all antient Customs, Priviledges, and Immunities; that the Court of Parliament should not be removed, but continue in the same exercise of Authoritie and Sovereinty; that the King should receive into his Protection the Inhabitants with the Territory and Dependancies, and deliver them from the Ravages and Insolencies of the Soldiers; and lastly, that the Inhabitants should have two Months space to advise, either to acknowledge the King of France for their Sovereine Prince, or to quit the Towne and Countrie, and then to depart with safe Conduct, without Impachment or Disturbance.

The King hath used good military Discipline both in defending all licentious Ravage and Spoile, and in executing those who have been found guilty; whereof the Souldiers of the Towne (where the Bodies do yet hang) can give good Testimony; whereof the Towne being afraid, carried out the most of their Wealth and the best of their Moveables, and all the Women of quality retired themselves to a Towne called Nissa, six Leagues from hence towards Geneve, which belongeth to the Duke of Nemours, to whose Protection they thought it most safe to recommend their Honors.

The Duke of Nemours, upon the bruit of these Warrs came in Post to find the King: The King presently dispatched him from hence, and some think, not without reason, to the Duke of Savoy; which employment could not be but pleasing to the Duke of Nemours, for thereby he shall see how willing the King is to embrace Peace, and shall not see the Duke, to whom he is near allied, dispossessed of his Patrimonic, which might perhaps destroy his Patience.

* Upon Wensday the King sent Monsieur Lefdiguieres to besiege Conflans, a Towne five or six Leagues from hence, which is the Key of the Valley of Jaruntiers, and one of the principall Passages of Piedmont; whereof if the King shall be possessed, that of Maurienna will easily follow, so that all Means will be cut off from the Duke to send any Forces eyther for the present Succour, or for the Recovery hereafter of Savoy,

Upon the Patriarche's going to Lions, the Counsaill, who were assigned to come to Grenoble, received a countermand from the King, not to remove from Lions, untill they should have other Directions. To what purpose the Patriarche can treat, when Monsieur de Villeroy is absent from thence, your Lordship can best judge.

The Chancellour is here expected shortly, to receive the Oathe of the Parliament for their true Alleageance, and to establishe the Forme of Justice. Of the Counsaill, here is only Monsieur de Villeroy, Monsieur de Callignon (who is here but pour la bienséance being one of the Presidents of Grenoble.) and Monsieur de Luccy, whom the King sent for, because of his experience in these Parts; he may perhaps send him to the Suisse, with whom he hath been often employed.

Upon Wensday last I was with Monsieur de Villeroy, and told him, that your Lordship commanded me in your last Letters, to certifie him, that the Treaty was broken. He said, that it was broke in shew and appearance, but all Matters of Substance were accorded, and a Daie secretly apoynted for the soleme Conclusion of all. I answered that I had received from your Lordship, that it was absolutely broken, and that her Majestie had recalled her Commissioners, whereof you were desirous that he should be informed, if the Knowledge thereof myght any way serve for the King's Affayres. He asked me agayne whether yt was not soe, that the Peace in truth was concluded, though the contrary was geven forth; I answered, that I could not say more then I had sayd, only I added, that no Man knew better then himselfe, howe sincerely her Majestie had proceeded with the King from the fyrst Overture of the Peace, to the Poynt of the Treaty, by delyvering to him by you her Ambassadour, all the particularities from

An. 1600. tyme to tyme of the Proceeding therein; so I prayed him lykewise to think, that which he should fynd, that this was not any disguised Matter, but so as I had dellyvered. He asked me then uppon what poynt the breache was; I told him, upon the Poynt of Honor, nothing would content the King of Spayne but the Preseancie, and her Majestie was ever resolved to yeeld him but Equalitie; wherin she did beare more respect to the Repose of her own Subjects, and her own gracious Disposition to Peace, then to any Right that she did acknowledge to be due to the King of Spayne. He said he marvayled of it, and thought the King of Spayne not to be well advised, *to break off a Matter of so great Consequence to his State upon a Trifle of so small Importance. And so, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

Right Honorable,

Chambery, 19th Aug. 1600, O.S.

BY my last of the 15th of this Moneth your Lordship doth understand of the King's happie Proceedings in these Warrs, being then entred into this Towne, the Metropolitaine of Savoye, wherof he was within six Daies after the Seige possessed, and within feaw Daies after of the Castell; and had bene of both sine sanguine & sudore, yf the Season had bene as temperate, as the People were good natured; but the Heat once enclosed within these Montaines, doth make the Climat Zonam Torridam. I then advertized how Monsieur Lefdiguieres was sent to beseige Conflans, being the Emboucheure of the Valley of Tarentese: A place of that Importance, that being once taken, yt doth not only assure those Places which already are subdewed; but all the rest of Savoye, except the Citadelle of Montmelian, must necessarily follow; and without that, all that is subdewed will with as much facilitie be lost, as it hath been gained. The King upon Saturday went to the Seige, he carried with him 1500 Foote and 150 Hors. He went out of this Towne about five of the Clock in the Evening, for he was to passe within Musket-shott of the Fort of Montmelian, and therefore did mean to use the Benefit of the Night. They of the Castle did shoote à la volée all the Night long, yet the King with his Troope passed in Saffety, with the losse only of five Suiffes.

The King departed hence, accompanied with the Dukes Montpensier and Nevers, the Count St. Paul, and Count Soyssons, who doth dominari solus pui che mai, not only within his own Element, but in the King's private Affections; be it that it is so indeed, or because he knowes these Warres do not only crosse for the present his Desseigns, but if they continue, cut off all hope of them, he is content to make him beleave it is, and shall be so.

The King hath made Governour of this Town Monsieur de la Beaussie, sometime Lieutenant to Mr. Lefdiguiers and one that hath much contested with the Duke d'Espernon, and is said to be the Man that chassed him out of his Gouvernement of Provence. Monsieur Lefdiguieres is nominated for the Gouvernement of Savoy, and his Son Monsieur de Crequi to be his Lieutenant. The Newes is nowe freshlie arrived, that Conflans is yealded up, but the Particularities are not yet here knowen; whereby we conclud, that the Duke of Savoy hath not Power sufficient to make Head against the King's Forces. There is another Fort called la Charbonniere, which is upon the Passage of Morienne, that the King will next set upon, but it is thought it will not endure the Sight of the Cannon. The King at his Departure from hence, did purpose to return as soon as Conflans was taken in. The Chancellor likewise is expected to establish here the Seat of Justice, who hath lived to see the Revolution of Times usque in mag- num annum Platonicum, for in Henry the II^d's time he was premier President of this Parliament. An. 1600.

* This Letter is imperfect, but I thought it too curious to be omitted.

I will not omit to note by the way, an Accident which is averred by Men of the best Qualitie. Upon the Bruit of the approach of the King's Army to this Towne, Monsieur de Giacop, with the Presidents and Senators, assembled, to consult what best was to be don in that Extremitie. In the midst of their Consultations there entred in a young Pullet, and immediately made towards the Armories of the Duke of Savoy, which there were painted, and began to peck at them; and being driven away returned the 2^d and 3^d time, and did the same; which they took to be a Presage of that which did ensue, the Gallus should become their Masters.

The Seignours of Geneva did lately send to the King two extraordinary (who were called) Ambassadors, the one called Lexius a Doctor in Lawe, who in the last Seige was employed in England; the other is Grandson to Gulielmus Budeus. Their Message was, that if the King should accord with the Duke of Savoy, he would notwithstanding continue the League which he hath with them, (for the Word Protection they disadvowe,) and that the Balliage of Jes, with what els they hold in the same kind, might remaine unto them in the same State as nowe they have it. If he should make Warr, which they hold most for their Saffetic, if he wold send his Forces into those Parts, they wold lend what Help they are able for Men and Munition, especiallie to the Seige of St. Catherine, which they desire to have razed.

Here likewise hath been one called Colonel Diaspech from Messieurs de Berne. Yf the Peace had proceeded, he onlie had Commission for to treat for the Confirmation of a certain League which was made with them by Monsieur de Zaucy in the last King's Daies; but now the War is so farr advanced, he likewise from his Masters hath made an Offer to assaile the Duke's Countries which border upon them; and as it is said, will take that in Paiment which they shall conquer, for the Mony which the King doth owe them. Upon Friday in the Afternoone the King in great Haste and Secrecie returned this Monsieur Diaspech, and Monsieur Dauphin the Agent for Geneva, each with Letters to their Masters, whereby he doth accept those Offers which they have tendred, and so soon as these Parts here shall be assured, he will send his Forces into those Quarters. There is onlie the Fort of St. Catherine two Leagues from Geneva, which is of Strength, yet that is so finale, that it will not be able to hold out above eight Daies. The King shall not need to carry Cannon; for Geneva and Bern will supplie that want. Thus your Lordship sees, that to a Tree that is falling, every one cries, cut it downe. This is the next way to make true the Propbesie which long since was given forth of this Duke of Savoy, that he should be forced for Releife to flie to Venice, and there should dye in an Hospitall.

When the Agent of Geneva took his leave of the King, he told him that he had a speciall matter to recommend unto him; so he told him that some one had lately stollen away the Head of Silver of St. John, wherof Complaint had ben made unto him. He said it was most likelie that it should be carried to be-fold at Geneva; you know, saith he, how much it doth importe me to be carefull for the redresse of these Abuses, and therefore I pray you, as you wishe my Good, yf you can find it, let it be sent unto me. I know Sir John hath 200 Heads in the World, wherby the like might be made, but it wold much approve my Zeale to recover the same againe. By these Premises it is here probably concluded, that yet before Michaelmas Daie the Duke of Savoy will hold nothing on this side the Hills but Montmelian in Savoy, and the Citadelle of Bourg in Bresse; wherof we heare no more, then that Mareschall Biron hath blocked it up with 1500 Men.

Monsieur le Grand is gon long since towards Florence, and since the King hath sent Monsieur d'Abbenie after him. The King hath written to Monsieur Bouillon to meet him at Marseilles the 4th of October, about which time the Queen is expected there. Upon Sunday here arrived an Ambassador from the Seignorie of Genoa,

An. 1600. Genua, his Name is Nommelino, what his Buifness is, is not yet knowen, but by the care which is taken of it, it should not be great; for by the waie he hath lost all his Letters and Papers, and hath made Hue and Cry over the Countrey to recover them againe. My care is that my Letters should both fafflie and speedilie arrive to your Lordship's Hands; for since my coming from Lyons, all that I have written I have sent thither by exprefs Messengers; so likewise I send this, hoping that this Messenger shall there find some from your Lordship to me, for since that of the 23^d of July I have received none. And so, &c.

Your Lordship's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

London, 28th Aug. 1600.

YOUR two Letters of the last of July and third of August I have received, and communicated them unto Mr. Secretary, who remaynes very well edified of them, and gives you a very good Testimony of his Approbation, which I note unto you for your Comfort and Incouragement in your paines there. I understand by the latter of those Letters, that you had received two of myne which I wrote from Bulloigne: But * the last which I sent from thence, contayning a Relation of the State we left the Treaty in, and a Direction to you how to proceede thereupon, I am not sure whether it be come to your Hands; and therefore in all Events, I have thought good to send you a duplicat of yt, praying you to prosecute those Things which you have in charge, with such Vehegency and Celerity, as conveniently you may.

I have dealt with the Ambassador since my return about the Marchant's Buifness; who hath promised to write unto the King that the Arrest may be suspended till there may be a Conference had and a Reiglement established for those Causes, according to the Treaty of Bloys, which he professeth to hold in Force. You shall doe well to sollicite the same effect.

Her Majestie is very carefull to knowe how this Warre proceedeth between the King and the Duke of Savoy: So that you shall satisfie her very much by writing often of it. We are perswaded here, notwithstanding the Progresse you write of, and the Advertisement the Ambassador hath since received that the King was entered Chambery, and that Monsieur Lesdiguieres had surprized Montmelian by Intelligence, that it works all but for a Peace, especially since you write so much of the King's Aversness from the Warre, and of so small Appearance of any open Assistance from Spainne. I pray you penetrate that Point as much as you may, and advertise it by this Bearer, whom I have procured to be sent over purposely, to bring us some speedy Newes from you.

I have acquainted Mr. Secretary with the Speech that passed between the (χλγqiydxiehn 180 Riches) Secretary of Florence and you, before my coming from Paris; wherein he seemed to give some Assurance, that if the Treaty did not proceed with (Δ200) Spainne, (Riches) the great Duke would be contented to (θrmdbcxpgbw) contribute towards the Maintenance of the (χkxiθcw) Warre. I find (100 States) the Queen very willing to embrace the Offer, and that you should stringere la pratica with him, wherein I would wish you to proceede in this sorte. First to acquaint him truely in what Termes (=) the Treaty stands; whereby he may perceave, that it both may, and undoubtedly will be (cw6ecaus) revived, if it be not diverted by some new Occasion. But withall you may let him knowe, that (State) the Queen hath been so disgusted with the Proceeding hitherto, as it will be no hard matter, in your

* He means that of the 29th of July.

Opinion, to settle a contrary Resolution (obwing) in her, if there may be found any Disposition in other (zgirfgyll) Princes, who have like Interest in the (huwbwawadobix Pluto) Depression of the King of Spayne, to concur in any Proportion. And thereupon you shall urge him to open himself, whether he have any Commission from (Riches) the Duke to treat of such a matter; and if yea, you shall receive and advertise what he shall propose. If not, you shall require him to communicate your Motion to (Riches) the Duke of Florence; and signifie, that if he shall make knowne his Disposition to intertaine it, (100 State) the Queen will resolve, as you thinke, to send your self unto him to negotiate it, if he like of it. In the meane time, if by Discourse and Conference you can gather any thing of his Intention, you shall doe well to advertise me of it. Mr. Secretary likes well also that you should sound (126 Respect) the Venetian Ambassador to the same Effect, and urge him to propose it to (192 Power) the Seignorie of Venice, either to (zghfdirzmdyhlwewyl) contribute yearly some good (6 de qqu) Summe for 3, 4 or 5 (auugud) Yeeres; or at least to (zsyft) lend (State) the Queen 300 (hbtmgas durcmedwa) thousand Crownes to be restored in (xnrmy6 auugud) five Yeeres. Letting him knowe likewise, that upon any Signification of their liking of that Motion, or any other good Offer on their part, (State) the Queen will be contented to send ether you; or some other, purposely to (Power) the Seignorie of Venice about it; which may also give occasion of reviving a good Intelligence betwene them for ever hereafter. This matter will be very acceptable if you can bring it to any good Issue, therefore I pray you use your best Industrie in yt, and advertise with speede what Inclination or Aversenes unto it you discover in those you deale with; for thereupon we shall be able to make some Judgment very availeable to the Busines we have in hand. I thinke it not amisse; that upon apt occasion you should likewise let fall some Speech unto (191 Resolution) the Duke de Bouillon, and unto (27 Religion) Monsieur de Rhosny, that you are of opinion that if (100 State) the Queen might have any assurance to be (6gukyoswugθnwph) repaid her Debt; were it but by 300000 Crownes Yeerely, she would undoubtedly resolve to continue the (6hygguholw Δ200) Warre with Spayne: and hereupon to urge them to deal with (144) the French King in it, in this seasonable tyme whiles matters are enbrausle. But before you move it to the second, conferre of it first with (Resolution) the Duke de Bouillon, and seeke if you can to enter into some Confidence with him.

Advertise us if you can of the certain Time and Place of the King's Mariadge, for I thinke her Majestie will be perswaded to send some Nobleman thither to assist at it. I cannot yet be discharged of my Employment, although I labour it much, but I hope in the end to prevaile. There are in Name to succeed me Mr. Cecyll, Sir Thomas Parry, Mr. Bodley, and Mr. Richard Spencer. At her Majestie's Hands I finde all gracious Acceptation of my Service I can desire, therefore I thinke it a very fytt tyme to leave off, least the latter end should not answer to the beginning, but of that you shall knowe more certainly in my next. If the Motions take place which are before mentioned, undoubtedly you will be used in them: But we shall determyne nothing therein till we heare answer of this Letter. When any thing is resolved I will take order for your Provision accordingly.

Now to the Occurrences of these Parts, you shall understand, that the Erle Gowry and a Brother of his, have been lately slayne in Scotland, in the Erle's own House, and in the King's Presence. * They are charged to have conspired the Kings Death at that tyme, but God would not suffer them, they had prepared for it, to execute their Deseign, although they attempted it; and so they

* The Reader may find some account of this Affair in Mr. Cambden's Life of Queen Elizabeth publish'd in the general History of England, Vol. 2. p. 627. But he will possibly find a truer Account in another Letter of Henry Nevil's, dated 15 Nov. 1600; and may also consult Wilson's Life of King James in the same History, Vol. 2. p. 667. and the Note subjoynd.

An. 1600. fell into the Pitt themselves had digged. This is the Relation sent hither of it, which notwithstanding is diversely censured according to Men's divers Affections. But howsoever, her Majestic hath sent Sir Henry Broukard thither to congratulate the King's Escape, and to doe some other offices to him. There is also one Hambleton come from thence, to reside here at least for some tyme.

Out of Ireland we heare that Matters go very well, yet open Action of any Importance there hath not past on either Side: But some of the Rebels daily come in, and some have bin intercepted. The Garrison of Loughfoyle is found to be of very good use there, and the proscribing of Tyrone, and conferring of his Earledome upon Sir Arthur Oneale, it is hoped will breede a great Division among them.

In the Lowe Countries, the Forces of both Sides are kept together in Expectation of one another's Attempts. Here is an Ambassage lately arrived from the King of Barbarie; what he brings I knowe not yet, but will advertise by my next. My Lord of Essex was yesterday by order from her Majestic, set at full Liberty, only his repaire to the Court forbidden, till further Pleasure be knowen, which it is thought will be the next Gradation.

I received yesterday Letters from (Poverty) Colvel, by his owne Boy that came by Bulloigne; he writes that he was setting forwards towards Lyons, and would see you there, and deliver you a Note of the Heads that the Negotiators that now go to Rome from Scotland are to treat there. If that, or the Letter so long expected, may be had, it will be somewhat worth; but otherwise I would have him knowe that I am weary of Promises without effect, and will be drawn into no further Charge till I see some particulars that may deserve it; for I have been hitherto intertayned with generalities, of no great Importance: But if he perform any reall Service it shal be really acknowledged; in the mean time I suspend both my Judgment and my Purse. I knowe not how de Monte proceeds in his Buisness, I have not heard from him a long tyme, it may be it is for want of means of good Adresse.

I pray you advertise me in what termes the Counsaile of Trent stands for the Reception, and likewise the Restitution of the Jesuites. And so for this time I take my leave and committe you to God.

Your very loving Freend,

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

Right Honorable, &c.

Chambery 30th of August 1600. O. S.

I Received your Lordship's Letter of the 29th of July, the 23^d of August at Chambery. The King was then at Chammoüe (a Place belonging to a Marquis of that Name, and of the House of Tavanés) within a League of the Fort Charboniere, which then he did besige, and with him Monsieur de Villeroy. The Chancellier was upon the Waie between Grenoble and this Towne, and before he arrived heather, the King did send to call him to him. Upon your Lordship's Letters I went presentlie to Chammoüe; where speaking with Monsieur de Villeroy, " I told him the Cause of my coming, and began to unfold the Injustice of the Arrest, showing howe prejudiciall it wold prove to our Marchaunts, and how injurious yt was to the Alliance which her Majestic did hold with this Crowne; but I cold not intreat him to have Patience to hear me, who said it did not appertaine to him, but to the Chancellier, to remedie those Grevances, yf any were conceived. I replied, that I was commaunded to address my self to the King and his Counsaile, where what rang he held I knew very well, the Matter I was to speak of was of no smale Consequence, nor unworthie of his Understanding; he wished me not to trouble my self, for in these Cases he did not deale; so for that, I did leave him". The next Morning ing I did meet him at the King's Lodging, and there again " I did enter into the " Matter, and proved the Impossibilities of those Conditions, which the Arrest An. 1600.

 " did require at our Marchaunt's Hands; wherby I argued that there could be " no other purpose in establishing that Arrest, but an Intention to weary and " tire out our Marchaunts trading in those Parts; wherbie they should be subject " to the continuall Oppressions and Violences of their Officers, and by conse" quence, to banish our Manufactures of Woole out of their Realme; a thing " which long had been intended, and this was thought the cleanliest Waie to ef" fect it. He answered, he sawe no such unreasonable Purpose in the Arrest as " I presumed; yt was by course of Justice, with long and advised Deliberation,
 " resolved, and by his Consent should stand in the same Termes unaltered". I then moved, because the Counsaile was not then sedentary, but passant up and downe, and could not attend so speedilie to determine Causes which did require present Dispatch, " that it wold pleas him to suspend the Execution of the Ar- " rest for six Months, in which time I did not doubt to make appear unto him, " how unjust this judgment was, and how prejudiciall to our Nation. He an" swered peremptorily, for his particular it should not be suspended for one " Daie. I replied, that I hoped to receive a more favourable Answer from the " King. Yf you purpose said he to speak with the King about this, you shall do " better to save your Labour; for I can tell you the King's Answer beforehand;
 " that is, he will return you to his Counsaile. I said, what Answer he wold
 " give me I was to take, and to relate; but for discharge of my Durye I did de" sire to informe him of this Matter, and for that purpose I wold attend his Lea" sure.

From Monsieur de Villeroy (understanding that the Chancellor was lodged at a little Village called la Rochette, two Leagues from thence, and wold be there in the Afternoone, because he should not have the Answer he wold give me put in his Mouth;) I went thither unto him; " to whom I did at large shew, the ma" ny Inconvenients that must ensue upon this Arrest; the impossibilities of " those Circumstances that were imposed on our Marchaunts, which neither Art
 " nor Industrie could effect; that therbye must needs follow the Banishment of " our Clothes out of this Realme, which by the Reiglement of this Arrest they " have covertlie and ex consequenti inforced, when they thought it not conve" nient, at the Instance of their Marchants, directly and expressely to forbid
 " them. I praied him to consider, that if the Friendship of England had ben " profitable unto them, not to give us Cause to repent what we had done, and " if they did desire to conserve our Amitie, not to discourage us, by their un-
 " kind Usage, to do the like againe yf their Occasions did require. I added, " that the Alliance between Princes, did not in this point differ from the Ami-
 " tie between private Men, amongst whom, that was ever accompted the most
 " affectionat and best assured, which was conserved by reciprocal Offices of " Love and Keindness; This was the onlie Marchandize which we brought into " their Realme, whereas we did disburden them of many of their Commodities,
 " which wold be dead on their hands, being such as no Nation els wold, or could " make use of; erving rather as Nurses to Pleasure and Riot, then as conve- " nient Instruments for the use of our Commonwealth. I concluded, that your " Lordship address'd me principallie unto him, as one that best could forsee, and
 " prevent the Inconvenients that might arise therof.

" His Answer was, that the Proceſs of this Cause was some Yeares in De" bate before the Counsaill, where nothing was concluded rashlie and unadvised-
 " lie; that all Parties were called that had Interest in the Cause, or might receive " prejudice by that which should be decreed. Our Marchants were there as

 " Counsaile, could not be reversed by him alone, neither without calling of those " Parties that were interested in the Cause. He protested that nothing was in" tended, but only a Reiglement for the Redresse of the Abuses of our Cloathes,
 " which were fallie made, and not marchandable; and assured himself, that at
 " the penning of the Arrest Care was taken that nothing therein might be insert" ed, contrary to the Alliance between the two Crowns. And concluded by " saying, he wished I had taken him in a Place of Repose, for I might well
 " think, his Leaseure wold ill serve to advise of these things.

" I replied, That Jus redditur in invitum; our Marchants might well be cal" led to make good the Sentence, which otherwise in absentia partis wold be " nulla; and might be allowed their Advocat and Proctor, who must have Pa" tience to endure what Sentence should be pronounced against their Clients. I " knew well your Lordship did intervenire, hoping her Majestie should have " found more respect, and her Subjects more favor: But that you consented to
 " the Arrest, I praied him to excuse me. And that nothing was concluded
 " therein, contrary to the Treaties, I said he knew well, that the Lawe made " finale Difference between that which was done contra Legem, and in Fraudem
 " Legis. I praied him not to blame me for solliciting him in that Place, for the " Matter I treated was of that Consequence, that suffered noe Delay; and ther" fore enforced me to take him where I found him. And because I knew well,
 " the Arrest could not be revoked, but in full assemblie of Counsaile; I praied
 " him to grant a Surceance for Execution of the Arrest but for six Months, in " which time I did not doubt, but upon such Proofes as should be alleaged, he " himself wold acknowledge that what I had informed, was most true.

" He answered, that he did not use to give any Surceance for the Execution " of the King's Lawes. I urged that Point againe and againe, but receiving no " other Answer, I told him I was sorry to make Report of this Answer, for I " was sure that upon relation therof by your Lordship, her Majestie would, (as " she had reason) conceive a just Displeasure, which might in time bring forth
 " fruits of ill pleasing tast, and of heavie Digestion". That Afternoone the " Chancellor and Monfieur de Villeroy conferred together of the matter.

The next Morning I spake with the King in this forme, " That by Directions
 " from her Majestie, your Lordship had given me in charge to inform him of an " Arrest which was made by his Privie Counsaile in Aprill last at Paris, against " our Marchants, which traded in the Marchandize of Cloathes in his Town of " Rouen, which Arrest was not only prejudiciall to their former Priveledges,
 " but in effect, a plaine Banishment of our Cloathes out of his Realm. Her
 " Majestie assured her self, that it was his Pleasure to treat her Subjects trading
 " in his Countrey, with the same keindness his Predecessours had don; there" fore I was commanded to make instance, that it wold pleas him to revoke this " Arrest, and to suffer the ancient Ordonances to remaine in their former Ver-
 " tue. He answered, that he understood not the Particularities of the Matter,
 " but wold enquire of them, that he was willing to give the Queen of England
 " in all things all the Contentment in the World; But her People, (saies he) " pill my Subjects upon the Sea most extreamlie. I told him I wold that her
 " Majestie might be informed of it. He answered, that he informed her dailie
 " by his Ambassador, but there was no remedie. I urged him to know his Plea" sure for this particular Matter; he willed me to go to Monfieur de Villeroy.
 " Monfieur Villeroy was then present, whom I found more tractable then be" fore, for he answered me in good tearmes when I demanded his Resolution,
 " that he wold advise of it, and at Chambery I should receive his Answer.
 " Now what they will do I cannot promise, but I will not fayle to urge instantly that " her Majestie might receive som Satisfaction. I thought it my Duty to advertize
 " how farre I have proceeded, wherby yf I have not effected what hath been de" sired, your Lordship may be pleased to impute it to the Condition of this tyme, unseasonable to negotiate, and to the ill affected Humours of those that govern here, who are unwilling to grant what we demand, because we demand it. An. 1600.
 " unfea-

The King did begin yesterday to beat the Fort Charbonniere, and will assuredly carry yt, though there be within two old Captaynes, the one called Ambroyse a Piemontoyse, th'other Hernan a Savoyard, who strive which of them should shew greatest Fidelity to his Master. This Fort being taken, the King will provide for his Voyage for Marfeilles; but before that, he will make som aboard at Lyons, wher Madam la Marquise doth attend him in great Devotion.

Of the Duke of Savoy much is not spoken, yt is certayne that he hath gathered some Forces to the number of 6000 Foot, amongst whom are 1200 Milanois and Spaniards, besides some Companies of Horse, wherof Monsieur d'Aubigny a French Gentleman is Leader: But yet he hath not attempted to impeache the King's Passage, nor to succour any Place that hath bene beleiged: His Ambassadors are now at Grenoble. There hath been a Dispatch intercepted from the Marquis de Lullin, wherein he concluded, that the Duke had but two wayes to save himselfe and his State from Ruine, either to make some Enterprize upon the King's Person, or to assayle som Part of Provence.

The opinion is here, the King of Spainne will not declare himself in this Warre. His Ambassador hath protested, that he will not intermeddle in the Warres of Savoy; and since the Arrivall of Monsieur de Rochepot to Madrid, he hath sworn the Treaty of Vervins. But no Man doubts, but that he will pay the King of France with his own Mony, assisting the Duke what possibly he can, but covertly, as he knows they here assist the States: For yt is not to be thought that he will betray at once both his brethren; Savoy, whom he hath engaged in this Warr, and leave the Archduke in these streights, that he shall have noe supply, nether of Men nor Mony, but what shall com by Sea.

Count Fuentes is now at Millain; he brought with him between 4 and 5000 Men, who are sent to the Lazaretto to stay there 10 Days, and after, accordingly as they shall prove sick or sound: He brought 80000 Crowns, most of which must be employed for the Discharge of Arrearages. Of the Continuance of this War nothing can be assured; for most Men think, that yf the Duke wil performe the Treaty of Paris, the Peace is made. The King for contenance, may demand the Charge of this Warre, but eyther at the Intercession of the Pope, or at the Instance of the Duke, he will remitt yt. They ground the Reason of this their Opinion, upon the Disposition of the King, who doth desyre to pass the rest of his Days in rest and repose; and the Humour of those who governe this Estate, whose Desseigus are overthrowen by this unexpected Warre.

The Duke of Nemours is returned to the King: Yt is not confirmed that himself went to the Duke. He doth profess that he doth travayll to accord them, and I have observed much private Conference between him and Monsieur Villeroy. And so, &c.

Your Lordship's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

London 9th of September 1600.

BY the last Letter I wrote you from Bulloigne, and by the Duplicat of it which I sent you by Simons, you have understood the Complaint of our Marchants against the Arrest made by the King's Counsaile touching our Cloathes, and how they desire it should be qualified. They have since delivered me a more ample Memoriall concerning the same, which I send you herewith. Praying you to use your best Care and Dilligence to procure some good Order in it: At the least that it may be suspended till the King's return to Paris, that there may be some Conference had, and some good Course established for the Commerce,

T t t

An. 1600. merce, according to the Treaties. I send you also an Ordonnance lately made by them of Rouen, which is greatly prejudiciall to our Trade, and which the Marchants desire that the King and his Counsaill should be made acquainted with; presuming that he will not tolerate any such direct Contravention to the Treaties of entercourse between the two Kingdomes, especially by private Authoritie. I pray you take Knowledge likewise of it, and urge some Order from the King or his Counsaill for the Reformation of it. This one Advertisement you may not forgett, that whatsoever Order you procure, unlesse it be under the Great Seale; it will not suffice, nor be obeyed.

We are in great Expectation what will become of the Warre in Savoy, and thinke the Time long that we hear not again from you, your last which I received being written the 3^d of August. I answer that they cannot looke to heare with any speede, nor scarce with any Safety from you; considering you are inforced to use the Way of Marchants for Conveyance of your Letters, and have no direct Messenger to send by. The matter is, they would fayne have diligent Advertisements, but they will be at no Charge for it. Touching my particular, it will come shortly to a Crisis, whither I shall returne into France or not. If the Treaty with Spainne be revived, I thinke I shall easily avoyde my French Employment by that occasion; otherwise I feare I shall fynde some difficulty in it. But howsoever, I do not fynde that ether my self or any other shall be sent, till the King's Returne towards Paris; and then I make accompt her Majestie will send a Nobleman to congratulate the Mariage, and to assist at the Queen's Entry; and with him ether my self, or my Successor. In the meane tyme, I doe what I can to procure some better Justice to be done here, then hath bin, in French Causes; to the end to drawe some Contentment from them in other Matters, or at least to free us from those Outcries and Infamie which we now sustayne, not altogether without Cause. I have procured Dr. Cæsar, Mr. Beale, Mr. Edmonds, and my self to be sent to the Embassador to heare his Complaints; we have met once, and agreed of a Course for his Contentment in divers Causes; but some are of that Nature, and have such References, as I feare we shall effect little to his Satisfaction, but we shall stopp his Mouth I hope for the greatest Part.

We heare nothing of any Progresse of ether Side in the Low-Countries. Out of Ireland we understand, my Lord Deputy is going in Person against Tyrone, and that there comes in daily some of the Rebels to him. The Garrison of Loughfoyle advaunces it self daily more and more into the Countrey, and builds Forts along as it goeth. There is especiall Care taken here for the relieving and maintayning it in good Estate, our cheif Hope resting upon it for the reducing of the North of Ireland, and consequently of the whole Realme.

(ψ28.) The Earle of Essex is gon to (xykysny) Erwelme, not without hope of some further (buesrw) Grace shortly; there are many Arguments that (State) the Queen begins to (6gutubl) relent towards (woq) him, and to wish (xorufyiyoyi) him near her. By my next I shall be able to write you more certainty both touching myne owne particular, and many other things. In the meane tyme I commend me hartily unto you, and comitt you to God.

Your very loving Freind,

HENRY NEVILLE.

Since the Writing hereof I have received yours of the 19th of August as I take it, wherein you mention another of the 15th, which is not yet come to my Hands.

Mr. Win-

An. 1600.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.Right Honorable,Grenoble 13th Sept. 1600. O. S.

I Advertised in my Letters from Chambery of the 30th of August, and since by those I sent from Grenoble of the 5th of September, first what answer I received from the Chancellor and Monsieur de Villeroy concerning the revoking of the Arrest; and then, how being returned from the King back againe to Monsieur Villeroy, after long Attendance, this was all I could receive, that they would send their resolution to the Queen by Monsieur de Boiffie. Since which tyme the King, who did take Post to meet his * Mistress, hath brought her hither, whom he doth embrace with more kyndness then Kings commonly do their Wives, and doth honor with as much respect as yf she were his Queen. She doth dine ordinarily and publickly with him when he is attended on by Princes of the Blood, Cardinals, &c. in Presence of whom she governs the Table. The Queen is not looked for at Marseilles before the 10th or 12th of October. The King hath sent Monsieur de Messe and Monsieur de le premier Maistre d'Hostel into those Parts, to prepare for her intertainment; to which purpose the Cardinal Joyeuse (who hath been here with the King) is gon downe. They begin here to make doubt, yf the Warre continew, that the King will not receive her in Person, before her coming to Lyons: But he will have more regard to his owne Honor then to shew to her so little respect. Not long since, talking of his Marriage, he said, he would keepe good cheer with his Wyfe for two or three Daies, afterwards she should goe a son Mesnage, chascun chez soy: Ridentem dicere verum quid vetat? Notwithstanding he is so pleasent, Intus est Aquila; within these two Daies the Gardes had commandment to watche and apprehend suche a one as was described unto them, who as he was informed should intend some Mischeife against his Person.

The Marquis de Lullin departed from hence upon Monday last. When he tooke his leave of the King, "he prayed him to be pleased (notwithstanding these late Discurtisies from the Duke of Savoy) to accept the Marquisat, that the Duke would assuredly render it into his Hands; and for the Charge of the Warre, to be contented to refer the taxing thereof to the Judgment of the Pope". The King answered, he was resolved never to treat with the Duke, who was not a Prince of Honor: But yf eyther the Pope or the King of Spainne would become respondents for him, that there might be any hope that what should be accorded, should really be performed; they should yet fynd him not unwilling to hearken unto Reason. Hereupon many do gather, that yf the King might be assured to have Possession of the Marquisat, he would be well contented to make his Peace, and withdraw his Forces out of Savoy; especially yf this offer be made, and Performance accordingly, before he shall beginne to beat Montmelian, for which he will not be readie these 15 or 20 Dayes. But after he shall be engaged in the Battery, and fynd possibilitie, in any reasonable tyme to be able to carry yt; yt is to be supposed, that he will stand upon higher termes, and eyther hold that which he hath gotten, or not part with yt without much dishonor to the poor Duke, who as yet, as it seemeth, hath small towche of those Afflictions wherof his Subjects are dayly sensible; nor apprehension of greater Calamities that may and must ensue, yf he continew these his wilfull and obstinate Courses: For Monsieur de Berny the King's Agent with him who returned from thence yesterday, hath declared to the King, that though he did instantly seeke yt, yet he would not vouchsafe him his Presence, noe not so muche as to kisse his Hands, alleadging that the King refused to give his Ambassador's Audience; wherein, as here they say, the Duke hath bin misinformed.

We have here plenam curiam, most of the Princes, and most of the Nobillitie; but all are come in Post without Horse of their owne, and with very small

An. 1600. Trayne; whereat the King is much offended; but they all make one Apologie, the want of meanes. So that the King in omnem eventum to provyde for the worst, hath bene forced to make this Proclamation, which herewith your Lordship shall receive.

I have lately received this Letter from the Secretary of Florence; which the Duke doth send to her Majestie only as a Compliment, to informe her of this Mariadge; between his Neice and this King. He hath written to his Ambassador here, that upon that Poynt wherof I advertised in my Letters of the 9th of August, he hath dispatched a Courier into Spain, from whence he will be advertized of all Proceedings from tyme to tyme against the Queen; and will not omitt as occasion shall present, to advise therof his Ambassador here, from whome I shall be informed. For the present, I understand from thence, that the 26 Gallies which came with Count Fuentes remaine still in Italie. In Spayne there are 18; but so ill appoynted, that before they can be able to put to Sea they will not be above 10: That from Lisbonne there lately were sent 12 Galeons to meet with the Ships of Portugall, and to assure them from Pyrates. That neither at Lisbonne, nor Sevill, nor any other Port of Spayne, there is one Shippe armed for Warre. That of those Souldiars which are come into Italy with Count Fuentes, 3000 did serve the Adelantado in the Armada. For his want of Money they wryte, that whereas the Archduke should have monthly 250000 Crowns, he never received in good Payment 200000; and at this tyme he is unpaid for three Months entier. And for the Discharge of 70000 Crowns which have bene due to one Guidice a Gentleman of Genoua, the King of Spayne, for want of better meanes, is enforced to retrenche so muche from the ordinary Allowance of his owne Table.

The Great Duke will not, as I perceave, be seene herein, and doth not expect any Acknowledgment from the Queen; yet yf occasion be taken from this Letter, to wryte unto him, and in generall termes some Compliment be rendred, he shall be encouraged to continew all good Offices; and I think he may doe many. He hath likewise written to the Kings of Scotland and Denmark, to the same purpose.

Yesterday here arrived the Newes of the Attempt of the Erle of Gowry against the King. Colvel hath found me out here at Grenoble, who goes with his Complices to Rome; by these enclosed your Lordship shall understand what their Purpose is. The Presumption is strong that _____ is employed in this Buifness. The Erle of Argyle, who doth shortly returne into Scotland, hath received Advise from Sir Thomas Erskin, whose Brother George Erskin dothe gouverne the Erle; that in his returne he should not take the way of England, and yf he doe, that he should not see (with these termes) the Crookback'd Secretary. He is commended to be a Nobleman of many worthie Parts, well affected to our State, and to the Cause of Religion, and one that may more impeache the ordinarie Commerce that is betwene the Scots and the Irish Rebels, then all Scotland besyde. And so, &c.

Your Lordship's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

Right Honorable,

Grenoble, 23^d Sept. 1600. O. S.

I Received your Lordship's Letters of the 28th of August the 13th of September at Grenoble. I repayred at my fyrst Commodity to the Ambassador of Florence who then was in this Towne, with whom I proceeded in this manner: " That the King of Spayne at the last Treaty at Bulloigne, not being well informed of the Queen's Disposition, taking her to be more greedy of Peace, " then carefull to uphold the State of her Honor, caused his Ambassador to stand “ stand tropo in sul grande, and peremptorie to demand and carry the Pre- “ seancie, or upon that poynt to breake off the Treatye; now fynding his Er- An. 1600.

 “ ror, as his Commissioners did intreate at their Departure a Continuance of “ the Treatye for certayne Dayes, so he doth now pursue the Effect therof,
 “ and desyre that a new Place of Meeting may be appoynted. Her Majestie “ doth advise, that yf she shall refuse to treat, she must resolve to continue the “ Warre: A Warre of great Charge, of Danger not to be neglected, and of per“ petuall Travaille, and Trowble to her Subjects: She considers how many Years
 “ she hath maintained this Warre at her Charge, and her Travail, that her Purse
 “ hath payed for the Repose of all Christendome, and her Force had beaten “ downe the proud Attempt of his conceyted Monarchie: She knowes that this “ Warre must have an end, which cannot be taken in a better tyme then when “ yt is offred. Yet partly upon Disgust which she hath conceived by their Ca“ riage in the last Treatie, but especially upon Judgement, foreseeing what Daun“ ger may ensue by her making of Peace, not only to her State, but to all other “ Prynces, (for yf his Indies may arrive safely and cleerly to his Coffers, confi“ dering his vast and huge Desires, his Ambition may become fearfull to all his “ Neighbours,) she hath thought good ingenuously to communicat with other “ Prynces, whose Interests are engaged in the common Cause, and to let them “ understand, that thoughe her Conscience doth assure her, and the World will “ witness with her, that she hath discharged her Dutie both to God and her “ Neighbours; yet yf they ratably to their Interests, will be content yerely to “ contribute to the Charge of the Warre, she will not only continew yt, but “ pursue yt to such purpose, that all other Prynces shall sett at home, and en“ joy in Rest and Peace the Fruits of her Labours, without Feare or Suspect. I “ then put him in mynd of that Discourse which I had with him at Paris, and “ of his Answer to yt a little before your going to Bulloigne: I prayed him, as “ I did freely treat with him, so freely to deale with me, and to let me know “ yf he had from his Master any expresse Commission to deliver that which then “ he uttered, or thoughe he had no speciall Commission to deliver yt, yet whe“ ther he spake yt out of the Privitie and inward Knowledge he had of his “ Master's Mynd.

He remembered the Speache we had, and acknowledged his Answer; and sayd, “ That then he was of opinion, and so still doth remayne, that his Ma“ ster would not be wanting to contribute to so good a purpose, whereby the “ Quiet of Christendome might be established. But (sayth he) what then I “ sayd, and what nowe I confyrme, comes of my selfe, without Warrant and “ Commission, and from a general Knowledge, not from any particular Privi- “ ty of my Master's Disposition. But he offred of himself, and sayd, he would “ communicat to his Master the Effect of my Speache, and procure by the fyrst “ Commodity his Resolution.

“ He then came to som particular Questions, and asked me whether I had “ Commission in this sort to deale with the French King; I answered, that the “ King of France was endebted to her Majestie, who did not hold it for her “ Honor, to demand Repayment by way of Capitulation or conditional Com- “ pact. Yet I thought she did purpose shortly to send a Nobleman of her “ Realme to congratulate the Marriage, who should have Commission to demand “ Remboursement for some part of those Sommes that are due to her; and to “ put more Lyfe unto yt, should signifie the Cause, wherefore at this tyme she “ did so earnestlie presse yt. Then he asked me what Somme her Majestie would “ yeerly demaund; I sayd, she would leave that to the Great Duke's Discre“ tion, who best could tell, at what Price he did rate the Repose and the Af- “ surance of his State. Lastly he asked me, whether the Queene did not pur“ pose ever to repay yt. I answered, that yf the Warre had that Successe which “ the Justice of the Cause did promise; yf she could once take the Indyan Fleet “ returning well fraught and charged, I did assure him she would returne yt with “ double Interest; otherwise I could assure him of noe other Repayment then

An. 1600. “ his Quiet and Repose, the free Trade of his Subjects, and the assured Vent of “ his Marchandizes: And in right Estimation, I told him, his Master should “ have at the Yeare's end nothing the lesse in his Coffers; for that which he “ should disbourse for the Mayntenance of the Warre, yf Spayne were in Peace “ must be employed in assuring his Frontiers, in sending of Presents to the King “ of Spayne, and in bribing his Mignons, to keepe himselfe upright with him,
 “ and yet perhaps all would not serve.

I had muche Discourse with him to this Purpose: “ He doth acknowledge the “ Intelligence betwene his Master and the King of Spayne never to have been “ good, and this Mariadge with France doth nothing mend yt; yet I fynd he is “ fearfull to offend him, and the rather because he holdeth Sienna in fendo of “ him. So that he seemeth to confesse that his Master will make no lesse Diffi“ cultye of the Meanes how this Negotiation may closely be contrived, then of “ the Disboursment of the Mony. I told him, that yf his Master did approve “ her Majestie's Motion, yt might be she would send me to follow yt and to ef“ fect yt, but therein she would be advised by the Great Duke. He hath alrea“ dy written to him, and I shall not be long without answer.

The Venetian Ambassador was at Lyons when I receaved your Lordship's Letters; and understanding that his Successor was pryvily passed by this Towne to goe thither unto him, I hastned to Lyons, to speake with him before his Successor should arrive, for feare least he should cutt me off with this Answer, that his Ambassage was determined. But when I arrived to Lyons I found that he was gon towards this Towne, (yet my hap was not so good as to meet with him) whereupon I returned presentlye hither, where I arrived before him; and so upon Munday the 21st of this Moneth I spake with him, and told him, “ That “ the King of Spayne desyring to revive the Treatie, which was continued at “ Bulloigne, the Queen having advised with her selfe, is resolved eyther to “ make Warre or Peace; for via di mezzo was very unsafe, and besydes a “ course of continuall Charge, and continuall Feare; and to stande onlie upon
 “ the deffensive, was to live at the Discretion of her Enemyes. She was assu“ red she might have Peace, and that with honorable and safe Conditions; yet it “ might be dowbted, that the Kinge of Spayne did onlie stake Peace, to th' end
 “ to arme himselfe at more leysure to the Warre: She thought therefore this to “ be the safest Course, for the general Good to continew the Warre both by Land “ and Sea: But this was a Course of Charge, of Trowble, and of Daunger; for “ the Trowble and Daunger the Queen would undertake yt her selfe; being as- “ seured, that God who ever had geaven her Victory against her Ennemies, “ would not abandon her now in so just a Cause; and for the Charge, sith she “ these many Yeares hathe mayntayned this Warre, wherbye her Treasure is “ muche exhausted, and in whych tyme other Prynces have had means to en“ riche their Coffers; she thought yt very reasonable, that a comon Cause should “ re quyre a comon Purse; and therefore she hathe thought good to make this “ Motion to other Prynces, (to whose States the Greatnels of Spayne might “ prove as dangerous as to hers,) to be content to contribute to this Warre
 “ for som three or four Yeares, in which tyme she did hope so to gayne upon “ him, that he should defray the Charge of the Warre. She did make choise to “ move their State in this Matter; fyrst, because their Particular was more “ deeply engaged; then, for the nature of their Commonwealthe, whych ought “ most of all to detest the ambitious Deseignes of a usurping Tyrant; Lastly,
 “ for the good Intelligence whych ever had been betweene the Crowne of Eng- “ land and their Commonwealth; to the whych the Queen wishing so muche “ good as she did, she did hope, they never should have need of her Ayd or As“ sistance; but in case they had, they should perceave, that as she is not lesse “ able, so she would not be lesse willing, then in tymes past her Father was, of “ happie and worthie Memorie. I praied hym to advertize the Seigniuirie of “ this her Majestie's Motion, and as convenientlye as he might to procure their “ Resolution; not dowbting but that they would in their Wisdome and Judge“ ments

ments embrace yt wyth all Kyndnes and Love, and hold yt as a very happie An. 1600.
 Catastrophe of his Employment.

His Answer was, that he would forthwith advertise the Seigneurie of this Motion, and recommend yt unto them wyth instance by his Letters; and at his returne, would as earnestly sollicit yt by word of Mouth. He did not doubt but that they would have that regard therof, as her Majestie should well perceave in what Price they did hold her Amytie, and what Desyre they had to continue a good Intelligence with her Crowne. Yet afterwards he sayd, that the Charge of their Commonwealthe was very excessif, and at this tyme greater than ever by reason of Waterworkes, which they were forced to undertake for the Preservation of their City. Then, that they had a Warre whych long had put them to Charge agaynst the Scocchi; and lastly he sayd, that yt was not for their Safty to put themselves to any extraordinary Charge, considering that the Peace betwene the Emperour and the Turk was now in Treaty, which yf yt should take place, would give them cause to stand upon their Guardes.

I then came to the second poynt of your Lordship's Direction, and sayd, "that yf this whych I had propos'd should not seeme pleasing unto them, yet because they might perceave how unwilling her Majestie was to abandon the Cause whych so long she had mayntayned, she would desyre onlie the Loane of 300000 Crownes for five or six Yeares, at whych tyme she would repaye yt with Interest, and Assurance of lyke Curtesy when their Occasions should requyre yt." He hath promysed likewise to sollicite this, and to procure a speedy Answer. "I prayed hym to communicat what I had sayd to his Successor, from whom I thought to receive their Resolution; to whom I sayd I did purpose to go, to present my Service, and would then delyver unto him th' effect of that I had then moved." Accordingly I have been at his Lodging to speake with hym, but I understand that after his Journey he fyndes himselfe not well disposed in his Body, and doth therby excuse himself from all Company. I will watche the fyrst Opportunity to visitt him.

I beseech your Lordship by the next to direct me, in case that the Great Duke shall be content rather to lend, then to contribute, whether I shall accept of yt, and of what Somme; then for what Tyme, what Assurance I shall offer, and for the meanes of Convayance in th' one Case and th' other. And so likewise for the Seigneurie of Venice, yf they shall make offer of a lesse Somme and for a shorter tyme, what Assurance shall be tendred, and the meanes of Convayance, at least in general, for they likewise will precisely stand upon the of this Negotiation.

The Duke de Bouillon is not here, nether, as I understand, meanes to come, and therefore following your Lordship's Directions I have not conferred with Monsieur de Rhosny, who I thinke would not muche apprehend what I should saye, for your Lordship may consider what little good those many Remonstrances have done which you have made unto hym, when you handled the same Subject. He is truly Frenche, only for the present, nether myndfull of that which is past, nor carefull of that which is to come; in a worde, properly and without Metaphore, well may he be called Villicus Republicæ, and one that loves Alexander better then the King. It may be yt were not unfitt that the King should be moved, but that must not be done in a sollemne Audience, for then he is the least part of himselfe: Yet yt must be by some Man of Quallitie, otherwyse he will not so freely open his Mynd. Some fytt Opportunty may be taken, by him whom her Majestie shall send to congratulat this Marriage.

These petty Warres have somewhat stayed and suspended (but nether altered nor mollified) the Discontents in these Parts, which are greate in both Factions, and yf these Warres shall sodainely end, yt may be they wyll as sodainely and violently breake forth.

But all Men doe marvaill, that a Poynt only of Ceremony, should frustrate the Work betwene us and Spayne, wherby both Realmes might enjoye soe muche Happiness.

An. 1600. Happines. And I have hard Men of diverse Affections discourse, that the most compendious way for her Majestie to assure her Estate, and to mayntayne her Greatness, were to make her Peace with Spayne; for these tow great Monarchies, ever jealous th' one of th' other's Greatnes, cannot stand long in Peace together, yf her Majestie were in Peace with them both; And then would they both stryve who should hold strongest Intelligence with her, and would as yt were with Curtesies and good Offices woe her Favour to have the most assured Confidence in her Amitye: Whereas nowe, as she stands with Spayne, she is rather out of Warre, then in Peace with France: For they seeing that the Necessity of her Affayres doth requyre the Continuance of their Alliance, they will never hold but a loose and careles kind of Amitye with her, and ever treate her Subjects with Contempt, and her Ministers without Respect.

I have agayne moved Monsieur de Villeroy about the Marchant's Arrest, in that Forme as your Lordship hath prescribed, but cannot have other answer then this, that they have already sent their Resolution to Monsieur de Boissie, who shall relate yt to the Queen.

The Count of Arembergh hath beene here, and is nowe at Lyons upon his returne. He hath brought with hym an Agent called Aiayla to refyde here with the King: I have beene carefull to learne his Negotiation. In his fyrst Audience he assured the King of the Archduke's Purpose to continue th' Amitye, protesting against the Duke of Savoy's Courtes, in whose Affayres they would not meddle: He then made a wyld and moderat Expostulation for th' Assistance which dayly came from hence to the States; vowing that they did attribute the Cause of the Defait which lately they received, to the Vallor and Force of the Frenche, that served there agaynst them. He moved likewise that such Supplies as should be sent from Spayne and Milan, might freely passe, as heretofore they had done, throughe Savoy. Yt is sayd that he damaunded leave to make a Levee of 3 or 4000 Men to serve the Archduke; and likewise yt is geeven forthe, that he moved the King, in case that the Archduke should com to accord with the States, that he would become Caution for the Archduke for the Performance of such Capitulations as should be agreed on between them, for whose Securitie the Emperour would be content to caution himselfe.

The King went last Week to Chambery, and with him his Mystress. From thence he will goe to Nissy to meet with Marechal Byron, who lately hath taken the Sluce upon the Passage betwene Lyons and Geneva. Monsieur de Zancy is now at Geneva, who doth follow the Affayres in those Partes betwene them and Berne. The Cantons hold now an Assembly at Baden. Yt is held here, that yf we have not Peace, the fault is not in the King. The Duke of Nemours hath lately beene in Piemont with the Duke of Savoy, or els all the World is deceived; whether he would not goe without the King's privytye and good liking.

The Chancellor and Counsaile were at Chambery, whether purposely they went to establish the Justice there, but they are returned hither, and have done nothing, only they have prolonged the Terme for two Moneths longer, to advise whether they will sweare Allegiance to the King; which argues that they have some Opinion of Peace, and therefore would not displace those Presidents and Senators, to put new in their rooms, who presently should be removed agayne.

The Patriarche is yet here, and doth not cease to add extremam manum to the Work he hath begunne. The Marquis de Lullin is likewise returned from the Duke to the King, sence his Departure from hence. These are the Arguments for the Peace: Yet the King prepares to besiege Montmelian, which is the Crisis of all. For yf he take yt, he will not then accept of any tolerable Conditions for Peace. But he will not be ready for the Battery these 20 Dayes: And now those Speeches of taking yt within 15 or 20 Dayes were Words of Heat, and spoken at such tyme when they were more then Men, now they beginn to shrink the Shoulder, and dowbt whether yt be prenable.

The Duke is come downe into the Valley of Tarantese, and hath made some light Skirmishes with Monsieur Lefdiguieres who is in those parts, about the Fort of St. Jacques and Briançon. The Ambassador of Spain who is here, in his last Audience, did playnly renounce the Duke of Savoy, and assured the King of all Fayth from his Master. Notwithstanding, the Duke hath in his Army 1200 Spainards and Milanois; and Don Juan di Mendoza a Captayne of marke, who did commaund in Savoy in the last Warres, is now there, and hath Commaund. So that yt is to be presumed, that the Duke hath great assurance of some good Assistance from Spain, or els he would not thus wilfully not hazard, but playnly ruine his State; for yt is playne he cannot stand long alone agaynst the Forces of France. By my next I hope to resolve your Lordship, whether shall be expected, eyther present Peace, or continuance of Warre.

The Queen will not arrive before the end of October: Monsieur le Grand is gon to Rome, which will somewhat prolong her coming. Yt is now resolved, that the King will receive her at Marseilles, which long hath rested doubtfull, and had yt not been shewed that all those that shall attend her out of Italy were not to leave her, untill they brought her to his Presence, and once landed, so long as they should have beene within his Realme, must have beene defrayed by him; assuredly he would not have gon: Now he will go in Post, with some few of the better sort, and after some very few Dayes stay there, returne back agayne.

And now to conclude with that Poynt, which your Lordship doth towche in the beginning of your Letter; In this Service I can assume nothing to my selfe but the Imperfections, which I beseeche your Lordship with favour to excuse; yf there be any thing that can endure the Towche I humbly refer yt to your Lordship, from whom I acknowledge to have received yt. And so being sorry that I have so long detayned this Messenger, which I could not help, unless I should have sent him away with half his Errand, I humbly take my leave.

Your Lordship's, &c.

Grenoble, 30th Sept.
1600, O.S.

Right Honorable my very good Lord,

SINCE my last by Simons, I have spoken with the new Venetian Ambassador; to whom, after I had assured him how willing he should fynd your Honor at your returne, to hold a confident Intelligence with him, and untill then prayed him to accept of my Service, which ever should attend his Commaundements; I delivered the Somme of what I had spoken to his Predecessor; shewing, "th' assured Commodities they should receive by the Continuance of the Warre, and in case that (Health) the Queen should make Peace, (which I held for made, yf this Demand were refused) the eminent Dangers which necessarily would follow, whereof they were sure to have their part, both for neer-ness of Neighbourhood, and for the Goodness and Worth of their State. I prayed him to confer with his Predecessor, and joyntly with him to recommend the Motion to (Power) the Seigniory, hoping yt would be kindly entertained, and received as a happy Augury of his Ambassage. I found him at the first somewhat daintie, and unwilling to apprehend yt; but before I departed from him, he promysed to confer with his Predecessor, and to joyne with him effectually to what purpose he should advise." Whereupon I tooke occasion to visitt him againe, and after much other Discourse falling into the matter, "I prayed him to think, that the Queen's particular Good was no more interested in this Cause then the affectionat Care which she did carry to the generall Benefit and Quiet of Christendome; for Peace she may have yf it shall please her to accept of yt. And if any, I said, should ask, why her Care should

An. 1600. " extend yt self farther to the Care of other Prynces; I answer'd, because her " Power can more abase the Greatness of Spaine then the Power of all other
 " Prynces: For his Indies are the Soul and Sinews of his State, whych yf safe" ly they may arrive home into his Coffers, and without Charge; they which " now for many years have slept in a peaceable Security, not well waighing
 " Quis Deus illis hac otia dedit, shall have cause, and they know not how soon;
 " to awake themselves, and call their Wits about them. And that they should " not yerely securely arrive, I said, all Princes Christian without her, though " they should joyntly endeavour yt, have not Power to impeach it. All which " he freely acknowledged, and so promysed, that they both would joyntly write,
 " and effectually recommend the Consideration thereof to (Power) the Seig" niory. He then lightly touched some Wrongs, that had been committed by " our Men of War upon some of their People, and now lately in the Levant
 " Seas, unto the which I could say nothing, then, that, as in Philofophy, so in " Matters of State, particularium non est Scientia; so the ill Demeaneours of " some private Men, were not to be imputed to the Government of the State;
 " that those Spoyles might be done by Robbers and Pirates, such as are not al" lowed by our States, but should, if they were apprehended, receive Justice,
 " worthy of their Demerits. I added, that if this Motion might take place, yt
 " would be a means to revive the Intelligence, wherby the Subjects on eyther
 " Syde should be entreated with better Respect.

In the Postscript of my last, I wrote unto your Honor, that there was a Cour-rier arrived here from Rome, with Letters to the Patriarch, whereupon he presently took his Journey to Chambery to the King. There did meet him, the Secretary of Cardinal Aldobrandino, Arminio Valenti, who hath brought Letters from the Pope to the King, instantly solliciting him to accept of the Marqui- sat, which he did presume the Duke would not refuse to render; he doth pray him to have regard to the weakness of his old Age, protesting that rather then the Warre should goe forward, he himself will come in Person to settle Peace between them.

The Secretary, as he saith, did confer as he passed both with the Count Fuentes and with the Duke, who both do offer all Satisfaction to the King. The Substance of his Commission, is first to endeavour to make a present Peace: Yf not, then to move the King to a Suspension of Arms for some few Days, and in Case he cannot obtaine that, then he must intreat the King to declare himself, and to make an Overture what yt is that will content him, and upon what Conditions he will accept of Peace; and thereupon the Pope will send a Legate, that shall, if there be any means, bring them to an accord. So that now it is believed, that shortly we shall have Peace; and the rather, because all the Coun-saill do much affect it, unless Messieurs de Biron and Lefdigueries, whose Mes- tier War is. Monsieur de Rosny, who as he is of the Religion, doth acknowledge it is the Warre that doth conserve them, and advance them, but as he doth carry the Purse, he crys Quorsum est ista perditio?

This late Ambassage of the Count of Arenbergh, and the Residence here of an Ambassadour or Agent, (for it is yet doubted what Title he carrieth,) doth make many believe that the King of Spayne will certainly imbarke in this Warre himself if it continew, and therefore the Archduke (for whose Affaire it is not convenient to break with the King) would have a Minister of his own as a State by himself; and would not be assisted by a Minister of Spayn whom the King might hold justly suspected.

Monsieur de Gondy hath summon'd the Ambassadors to be at Marseilles at the King's Marriadge, and hath assigned them to depart from hence the 20th of this Month, to arrive there in due tyme.

The Councill of Trent stands in the same Terms your Honor left it, and Pa- dre Maggio is at Lions and receives still dilatory Answers from the King; such as neither gives great Cause of Hope nor yet to Dispaire. And so, &c.

*Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.*Grenoble, 5th Octob.
1600. O. S.Right Honorable my very good Lord,

BY my Letters of the last of September, I certifiyd your Lordship of the Arrivall of Cardinal Aldobrandini's Secretary to Chambery. The King then was at Nissy, whether he went unto him with the Patriarch. There they both had present Audience; since which time they have dispatched a Courier to Rome. Notwithstanding, the King refused to give his Resolution upon their Demands, untill he had advised with his Counsaill; for which purpose he hath sent for the Chancellor and the rest of the Counsaill who remained here, to come to Chambery, whether yesterday they are gone. What will be the Issue of this, is yet doubtfull; for though Arminio Valenti the Cardinal's Secretary doth report, and so hath assured the King, that he shall find the Duke of Savoy, most tractable and willing to give him Satisfaction in all that he with reason can require; yet the King is otherwise advertized, that he doth still remaine as obstinat as ever, and resolved, rather to hazard the loss of all his States then that he will render the Marquisat into his Hands; and so he hath by his Letters, since the beginning of these Warres, certifiyd the Pope, with these Reasons; that to deliver up the Marquisat unto the King, were to make himself and his Posterity perpetuall Vassalls to the Crown of France, for that being once French, he cannot stir out of his Doors safely into any part of his State without a strong Gard about his Person; or else he must ever stand in awe, and submit himself to the Discretion of the Garrisons of Carmignole, who at their Pleasure may seize upon him. Then he shall not be Master of his own Subjects, who upon any either Offence conceived, or Insolency committed by them, for which they fear the Justice of the Law, will presently, and may without Controulment, retire themselves into the Marquisat, where they shall not only, not be inhibited, but be advowed and encouraged to wrong and oppress his Subjects.

Lastly, the Marquisat doth challenge by Prescription, many Priveleges upon the State of Piedmont; and namely, from thence to be furnished yearly with such a Quantity of Grayn as their Necessity shall require; which Priveleges saith he, if he shall maintaine, either his own People must starve, or els he must provide, as hertofore he hath been forced, for Supplies out of Sicillie and ellswhere. Yf he do not maintaine it, then he says, the King of France will take this, as a very just and lawfull Cause to quarrell with him at his Pleasure. So he concludeth, that it is more safe for him to continue the Warre, retaining the Marquisat, then when he shall render it, neither to be secure in his own Person, nor assured of his Subjects; and yet ever to be in awe of the French, when they shall have best Opportunity to offend him, and he least means to defend himself.

These are the Reasons whereupon his Apologie to the Pope is founded. Now the King, the more he shall gaine upon him, the more heavy his Conditions will grow.

Monsieur Lesdiguieres hath taken in the Fort of Brianzon and St. Jacques, which are scituate in the Valley of Tarantese. So that all Savoy is now clearly in the King's Possession, except the Fort of St. Katherine and that of Montmeli-an; where they labour hard, and as they say, within few Days will begin the Battery; so they have promised long, but the Days assign'd are still prorogued. This is the Substance of all, which if he take, it will make him haut à la main, yf he be repulsed, as it will turn much to his Dishonor, and much dispiight him, and thereby the rather animate and incense him to prosecute the Warre, so will it harden the Duke in his obstinacie and embolden him to hold out; which assuredly he would do, yf he might receive from Spayne such Assistance, as in Reason of State he should expect; for the Duke wants no Mettall, but the Mettall of his Indies. Notwithstanding these Discourses, the generall Opinion here is, that if the Duke will render the Marquisat, the Peace is made. But that he will render it, no Man can presume, untill the King be possessed of it; so often hath

An. 1600. hath he made shew to do it, without having purpose to perform it. Wee look for a Legat from Rome to treat and conclude this Peace; and it is thought that Cardinall Aldobrandini, yf he come with the Queen to Marseilles, shall be the Man; and so una fidelia, according to the Proverb, shall perform the Ceremonies of the Marriage, and determine this Difference of the Warre; though in a few Dayes, and so far from Savoie, it will not be easy to accommodate so many Difficulties, and hardly he will be induced to come up to Lions, and to spare himself any long time from the Court of Rome, where he doth reign in all Sovereignty without check or controul. The two Venetian Ambassadors have joyntly written to the Seigniorie. To that purpose they have been moved.

The Venetian Ambassador is gone this Day to Chambery, to present his Successor to the King, and so with what speed he can, he will return, as he saith, by the way of Switzerland into Italy. The Queen was married at Florence the 8th of this Moneth, and will be at Marseilles about the 20th. To morrow (God willing) I will set forward towards Avignon, from whence as occasion shall serve your Lordship shall hear from me; and so humbly kissing your Lordship's Hands I rest

Your Lordship's in all Duty to be commanded,

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

Right Honorable my very good Lord, Valenza, 7th Oct. 1600. O. S.

I Wrote unto your Lordship from Grenoble the 5th of this Moneth; since which time I have received from a very good Hand, that during the time of the King's aboad at Nissy, there grew a secret Intelligence between the Marquis de Brandis Governor of the Fort of Montmelian and Monsieur de Rosny; who perhaps, as he is Grand Maistre de l' Artillerie, beginning to doubt of the Force of his Cannons; thought it the surer Way, as he is Superintendent of the Finances to put in practice the Virtue of his Crowns, Quid non auri sacra fames? In Summe he hath satisfied the Saying of Phillip of Macedon. For upon an Assurance from the King of an yearly Estate in Lands and Possessions, and a certaine Summe of Money in present Payment, the Marquis is content to betray his Master, and to render up the Fort into the King's Hands. The certaine Capitulations are not yet known, but some speak of ten Thousand Franks the Year, and forty Thousand Crowns in ready Mony; but that the Capitulations are accorded, yt is assuredly affirmed; which yf they take Place, will assuredly breed a great Alteration in the Course of these Affairs; For the Duke of Savoie was never undone untill now, nor the King never resolutely engaged in the Warr untill now. Before, the Duke might have had Peace by surrendring the Marquisat; now the King will make dainty to harken to any Conditions; and what Conditions so ever he shall accept, he will never depart from Montmelian, but retaine it pour la bien Seance. The Marquis, to make his Conditions the best, doth make shew to be able to bring in the Cittadell of Bourg. Yt is true that his Brother le Count Maiou, who is the Governour of the Town, is there within, whether he retired to save himself when Marshall Biron surprized the Town; but one Monsieur de Bouvant doth command. By my next I shall be able to advertise your Lordship, both of the Certainty of this Practice, and of the Particularities. The King doth dayly reinforce his Army, by virtue of the Edict of the Court of Parliament at Grenoble, whereof I have sent your Lordship a Copy; he hath 2000 Gentlemen about him of this Country, and all in good Equipage, without one Penny Charge to his Purse.

The Ladies who are to attend the Queen at Marseilles, past this Way upon Saterday last, viz. Madames de Nemours de Guise, and her Daughter, de Pisani and Guertbeville. The Queen doth prevent the time of her Arrivall some 10 Dayes, whereupon the King doth purpose to depart from Chambery to morrow row to Lions, and from thence will haft down with all fpeed. So humbly kissing your Lordship's Hauds, I reft

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

Right Honorable my very good Lord, Marfeilles, 22^d Oct. 1600. O. S.

I Wrote unto your Lordship from Valenza in my Journey from Grenoble to this Town, of a Practice then commenced between the Governor of Montmelian, Monsieur de Brandis, and Monsieur de Rofny, to deliver up that Fort into the King's Hand, upon fuch Capitulations as fhould be accorded between them. Monsieur de Brandis not holding yt for his Honor to yeald up a Place upon th' instant, especially of fuch Importance; and of that Strength, as not many Places in Chriftendom can compare with it; and therefore willing to caft fome colour upon that which he fhould do, hath thus concluded, and for Performance thereof hath delivered unto the King three fufficient Hoftages, whereof one is his Nephew, and another his Lieutenant; that yf the Duke of Savoy doth not come down within one Moneth, with a fufficient and powerfull Army, and therewith remove the Siege and fuccour the Place; then he will, without longer delay, deliver yt up unto the King, with all the Artillery and Munition that now is within, whereof there is no Want. Yt feemeth that the Marquis doth limit himfelf within the Compafs of one Moneth, upon certaine Letters which lately the Duke did fend unto him; wherein he wifhed him to remember, how amongst many other noble and valiant Perfonages of great Honor, he had made especiall Choice of him, to whose Fidelity he thought fit to committ the Stay and Strength of his States. He prayed him not to deceive the Opinion he had conceaved of him, nor to betray the Truft which was reposed in his Faith and Loyalty; affuring him, that if he would have Patience but for 15 Days, either the King fhould quit the Siege, or he wold bid him Barrail in that Place. The 16th of November, according to this Style, the time doth expire; and although it is prefumed and expected, that the Duke will fraine himfelf to the utmost of his Power to fave this Place, whereupon the maine of his Fortunes do cheefely depend; yet in fo fhort a time as 16 Days which now do remaine, there is no poffibility to force the Passages which on every Side are poffeffed by the King, and muft be recovered, before he can bring his Army to Montmelian. This doth breed a great Alteration in the Courfe of thefe Affairs, as heretofore in many of my Letters to your Lordship I have touched. For whereas before, the King defiring nothing more then Peace, did only demand the Reftitution of the Marquisat; now, the Duke muft become a lowly fuppliant, and humbly intreat him to accept of it, and withall imploy the means of his beft Friends; whereunto yf with Difficulty he fhall be induced, yet we hold it for affured, that he will never be brought to deliver Montmelian.

The Queen was Espoufed at Florence according to our Stile the 28th of September: The Duke her Unckle did give the Ring in the King's Name, and Cardinal Aldobrandino did celebrate the Marriadge. She embarked at Livorno the 6th of October, but by reason of the Seafon which hath been in thefe Parts Stormy and Rainye, she arrived not to Toulon before Monday laft, where yet she remains, pretending not to travaill thofe folemne Feasts of All-Saints, and All-Souls; but as it is thought, she will not ftur from thence, before she knows the King's Pleafure, to whom she hath fent Monsieur de Albene in Poft. He is yet with his Army, from whence he pretendeth that he cannot come, but all his Nobility will follow after, and fo his Army fhall be diffolved; but they which are malicious fay, omnes qui amant, graviter fibi dari uxorem ferunt: Before

he

An. 1600. he must needs come, he will not come; and now he understands she is so near at hand, it is supposed he will come in Post; for only here is Order taken for her Entertainment, which is small and simple, as by my next in particular your Lordship shall receive, but for any other Place none at all.

Cardinal Aldobrandino, after th'Espoufalls at Florence, went presently to Bologna, from thence he proposed to go to Millan to confer with Count Fuentes, and so into Piedmont unto the Duke: From whence it is expected he should come to the King; with whom he will employ all the Credit the Church of Rome hath to effect this Peace; wherein, sith Montmelian doth stand in terms to be rendred, he will find more Difficulty then he imagined whenfirst he undertook the Negotiation; whereof in my next I shall have Occasion more amply to write to your Lordship; so humbly kissing your Lordship's Hands, I rest

Your Lordship's in all Duty to be commanded,

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

Right Honorable my very good Lord,

Marfeilles 29th Oct. 1600. O.S.

IN my last to your Lordship by one Aldersey, I advertized of the Queen's Departure from Livorno and her Arrivall at Toulon; where she went to Land, pretending to solemnize the Feasts of All-Saints and All-Souls; but her purpose was to make stay there, untill the King might receive her Advertizement by Monsieur de Albene (whom she sent in Post unto him) of her Approach; hoping that thereupon, he would hasten down in Diligence to receive her at Marfeilles. Whereupon the Constable and Chancelliere did write unto her, not to neglect the time, whilst the Season did searve fair for her Passage, shewing how by Commandement from the King, with the Advice of his Counsaill, they, as most principal Personages within this Realm, were appointed to attend her there, and receive her in his Absence. Upon Friday last in the Morning she departed from Toulon, and about Noon she arrived at certaine little Islands, which are a League from the Town. There the Gallies did cast Anchor, and rested untill towards the Evening, so that they came not into the Haven before five of the Clock. The House wherein the Queen doth lodge, doth stand upon the Side of the Haven, from whence are made a pair of Stairs of Wood down into the Sea, which do rest upon the bottom of two great Boats; which joyned together, and floored over with Boards, are fastned close to the Key; whither the Galley wherein the Queen did pass was brought so near, as it touched the Basis of the Stairs. Upon each Side of the Stairs Monsieur de Luslan had placed some of the Scottish Guards to the Number of 16, upon whom the King hath bestowed new Liveries, which is no annuall, or ordinary Custom in this Court. Upon the Basis of these Stairs, did stand to receive her four Cardinals, de Gondy, Joyeux, Sourdys, and Give-ry; the Constable and Chancellor, Duke de Guise, Monsieur de Metz, Fresnes, Callignon: Of Ladies, the Dutcheß of Nemours, Guise, Marquise de Pisani, Guerchville, Madam de Rosny, Madamoiselle de Guise, and de Vantadour Neice to the Constable. Monsieur le Grand did conduct her out of the Galley.

The three Consulls of the Town, with their Assessor in their Robes of Scarlet, were there present to receive her, under a Canopie of Cloth of Silver. After a small Stay, whilst the Lords and Ladies did present their Reverence unto her, she passed up the Staires into her Lodging, supported on each Side by the Cardinals Gondy and Joyeux. The Gallies that did attend her hither are Seventeen in Number, five of Rome, five of Malta, and seven of Florence: For that one of France, which carried Monsieur le Grand, returned home some Days before; I know not upon what occasion, but as they say, for want of Vittail. The Seigniori of Venice made profer of 12 Gallies, but the Great Duke thought not

not good to put them to that trouble, because they are so far distant by Sea. An. 1600. He sent to Genoa once in his own Name, and then in this King's Name, requesting a Company of their Gallies, but was refused in both; the Seigniorie alledged, that their Gallies were in the King of Spain's Pay, without whose Permission they could not grant them. The Duke of Florence did forbid those Gallies to touch at Genoa; yet as they passed they were saluted with 25 Pieces of Ordinance, and two Gallies were sent forth with Presents to the Queen, which she refused to accept. The Galley wherein the Queen passed, was made expressly for this Voyage. It is very sumptuous both within and without, as well for the curious Workmanship, as for the Richness of the Matter whereof it is made. The Men of greatest Honor that did accompany the Queen, are Don Verginio Duke of Bracciano, her Cossen Germaine, Don Giovanni de Medice natural Brother to the Duke, and Antonio natural Brother to her, besides the most principall Gentlemen of Florence and Sienna, and the Choice of the Knights of the Order of St. Stephen and of Malta. Of Ladies, only the Great Dutchesse, and of Mantua her Sister. The Italians have bestowed great Cost in setting themselves forth to do Honor to the Queen, which doth appear by the Number of their Servants, and their rich Liveries; being all fully suited, either in Cloth of Gold or Silver, or Velvet all over embroidered with Gold and Silver.

The French Lacquies did hope to make great Booty on this Bravery, and have plaid notably their Parts without Difference or Respect of Persons; for Don Giovanni the next Day after his Arrivall lost his Hat, which was snatched from his Head; and a great Part of Don Antonio's Cloke was cut from his Back. Their Servants could not at the first pass the Streets, no not at Noon-day, without receaving shamefull Disgraces, whereof they being by Nature impatient, have been their own Judges and Executioners; and amongst many that have been wounded, they have killed out right a Lacquey of the Kings, who was sent hither to attend the Queen, whereof Monsieur de Guise hath made Complaint to her, but she is nothing apprehensive of it. Since her coming, she hath accommodated her self wholly to the Humour of France, for she dinerh and suppeth in an open Hale as the King ordinarily accustometh to do, accompanied with the Dutchesse of Florence and Mantua, all severally served in State. She yet holdeth the Italian Fashion in her Apparrell; her Ruff is of the largest Size, which she weareth somewhat carelessly; she useth no Attire at all on her Head, but her Hair plainly and simply bound up, without any Disguizement. She weareth no Jewels, saving the Pendants at her Eares, which are of Pearl, and a File of Pearl about her Neck. She is of a comely Stature, and for her Beauty, the Commendation which she seemeth most to affect, (for she doth use no Artifice,) is to be forma Uxoriam. The Preparations which are made here for Entertainment, either in publick at the Charge of the Town; or in private by the King, are very smal, but what they are your Lordship by this inclosed shall understand. Here are neither Excercises of Honor to entertaine the Princes and Gentlemen, nor any Comedies or Tragedies, or publick Feasts to give Contentment to the Ladies; whereof at Florence there was Variety, full of many witty and worthy Conceits, whereof this Dialogue will give your Honor some kind of tast. They were all much discontented, that the King was not here present to receive the Queen as he ever promised, nor that he is not yet arrived fence her coming; and the more discontented they are, because they cannot be resolved whether he will come or no.

The Grand Dutchesse is desireouse to deliver the Queen to the King de manu in manum; but being ever assured to find him here, she did not come provided to make a Land Voiage, besides the Winter now growing on, will not suffer any long aboard. The Queen hath brought with her in Contant some part of her Dower, her whole Dower is said to be 600000 Duckats, but the Duke doth defalcate the Moyety for Debt due unto him; but what Sume so ever she hath brought, Don Giovanni doth refuse to make Paiment to any, before he shall have spoken with the King.

The

An. 1600.

The Cause that the King doth not come, is first the Composition of Montmelian, whereof in my last I fully advertized: Then the coming of the Cardinal; who was expected at Chambery the 22^d of this Moneth: Thirdly, the Advice which he hath received, that the Duke of Savoy should come with Forces to succour Montmelian. A fourth Reason that is geeven, is the Affection to his Mistress, whom he did not purpose to Licence before the 21st of this Moneth.

We receive no Certainty, that the Cardinal is yet arrived at Chambery. The King will entertaine him with Delays, untill he shall be possessed of Montmelian; and for the better Colour thereof, he hath sent hither the Chancellor; without whose Assistance, the rest of the Counsaill will not undertake a Matter of so great Importance. The Warre was never so probable in reason to continue as now; for it is not easily to be beleevd, that the King, if once he be seized of Montmelian, will ever render it upon any Composition; for it is the Key of all the Passages out of Piedmont into France and Burgogne, and will ever be a Bridle unto Savoy. And the Duke of Savoy is much humbled, more then is to be hoped in a Spirit of his Ambition; yf he that cold put in hazard all his State, rather then render the Marquisat, will now be brought to render it, with the Loss of such an important Place, which is the Strength of his best State. Now if the War go forward, it may draw many heavy Enemies upon the King; for doubtless the King of Spain will not suffer him to approach too near to his Dutchy of Milan. The Cardinall Aldobrandino will take it in a fowl Scorn, to be returned back without effecting this Peace, sith he hath now undertook to negotiate yt. The Pope will likewise be incensed, both for the former reason, that amores & deliciae suae should receive such a Disgrace; and also, because that he himself, who would be counted Pacificus, is not herein obeyed. The Princes of Italy, though they do desire that the King of France should have a Passage by the Marquisat into Italy, yet they would always have, that the Entredeux of the Hills and Piedmont, should be between them and France; and can rather be contented that the Dutchy of Milan should remaine as it doth unto Spain, then upon any Change or Alteration, yt should be translated unto France. For though the King of Spain be a mighty Prince, yet because his Dominions are so dismembred the one from the other, and all far distant from thence, he is in that State but tanquam unus ex illis; whereas, if the French should once border upon them, they may say a dio to the Repose of their States; so unquiet are their Humours, and unsettled; ever undertaking, though seldom effecting to purpose, what they attempt. This is that which is here suspected, that if the King shall once attempt to pass the Mountains, there will be a generall League in those Parts combined against him. The Duke of Guise hath lately had an Enterprize upon Nissa, but it was governed with such Discretion, that his purpose was discovered before he went out of this Town. Yet he came to the Gates of Nissa, which he found so well manned, that he was forced to retire with loss of some of his People.

Here are in this Port at this time six English Shippes of London, and the West Country. Yf the King come, they are all in danger to be arrested, for as I am informed there are 50 Inhabitants in this Town, which will joyn in one Supplication to the King, to give them Authority to seaze upon them, for recompense of great Losses to the Value of 30000 l, which they have sustained by our Men of Warre within this twelve Moneth. Yf occasion shall require, I will not be wanting in my Duty, both to sollicit the King and the Chancellor, that both our Merchants may receive Justice as the Subjects of their Ally, and that the Treaties between the two Crowns may be observed in this Point. Here are now in this Town two Irish Men, accompanied with one Archer an Irish Jesuite, who are sent unto Rome from Tironne and Odonnell, with Letters to the Pope and Cardinall Mathieo the Protector of the Nation. This Arrand is to get some Money from the Pope, and Letters of Excommunication against all such Irish Catholicks, that shall refuse to joyn with the Rebels. Cardinall Sourdy hath received these Men into his Protection, and will give them Passage in his Gallie to Rome.

I under-

I understand that there was a Frenchman called de Coffe lately in England, An. 1600. from whence he came in August last. He frequented, as he saith, the House of my Lord of Canterbury. He himself giveth forth, that he was employed thither by the Pope, of whom he hath an yearly Pension, and to whom he is now going. I have thought good to advertize it, that if he comes againe, he may be entertained as he deserveth.

Amongst other Men of Quallity that are come with the Queen, here is Cavaliero Vinti, Secretary of State to the Great Duke. I held it convenient to present my Service unto him, which I have done. I have been twice with him, the first time there passed nothing between us but Compliment in generall Termes: “ Only I prayed him at his Good Convenience, to assure the Queen of her Majestie’s kind and loving Affection, from whom she should ever receive all good Offices of Amity, and Alliance, which were to be expected from a Neighbour Princess. I said moreover, that tho’ the Journey were long, and the Season of the Year not fit for travaill; yet so soon as the King shall resolve of the Place and Time to solemnize the Marriadge, the Queen would send a Nobleman of her Realme to congratulate her Arrivall in France; who should give sufficient Testimony, what Comfort she doth receive in the Advancement of her Honor.” He did generally touch the matter, which lately I did negotiate with their Secretary here, but did not fully declare himself, praying me to find a time to speak with him againe, which I did this Day. “ He began very solemnly to protest, what great Observance and dutifull Respect his Master did bear to her Majestie; how he hath ever revered and admired her Vertues, and wished her in all her Affairs, above any other Prince, the happiest Contentment she might desire. That he knew so much his Master’s Mind, with whom he had the Honor to have dayly Conversation, that she could demand nothing which might be granted, without Prejudice to his Honor, or Detriment to his State, wherein he would refuse her. But these (said he) are things not to be desired: To assist the Queen in her Warrs against the King of Spainne, whose Vassall he is for the State of Sienna: To enter into Alliance or Confederation with her, to draw a Warr upon his own Back: To engage himself into a Dispence which his Means cannot sustaine. I prayed him not to mistake the Point, for this was the Motion which her Majestie did make; That though she might have Peace with safe and honorable Conditions; yet because she held yt more safe for the Repose of Christendome in time to come (the Care whereof is no less dear to her, then the time whereof she hath present feeling) to continue the Warr, if other Princes, who have as great cause to be sensible of Posterity, wold be content to contribute somewhat to the Charge of the Warre, the maine Burden whereof she wold support, and alone endure the Travaille, and adventure what Danger soever might ensue: She thought good, I said, to make this Motion to the Duke, as to one that hath the best Power to bear part of the Charges, and most cause to suspect the Greatness of Spainne. I concluded, that herein her Majestie would not further importune the Duke then he in his Judgment should approve, that to continue the Warr, was to continue the publick Repose and Quiet of Christendom; and that therein did consist the Safety and Wellfare of his particular State.

“ He answered, that to contribute to that purpose was to break the Amity his Master held with Spainne. That what he should contribute could not be any great matter of Moment, either to invite her to the War if she were resolved to make Peace, or to perswade her to Peace, if she were disposed to make Warr. Other Princes were as much interested in the Cause, and as able to bear part of the Charge; more obliged to her Majestie, and might intermeddle in this Affair with less fear to be suspected, and less Danger to their State, if it should be revealed. But yf there were present Doubt that the King of Spainne should over-run his Neighbour Princes, unless some certaine Summe were disboursed, his Master in such a case wold straine himself. From thence he wold

An. 1600. " have returned to the generall Form of Speech which first he used: But I prayed him to resolve me if he had Commission from the Duke to give me Answer, and if this were it; he answered, he had no Commandment from the Duke to give me Answer, but to confer with me about it. The Duke had but received his Secretary's Letters from hence at his Departure from him; so that he had not advised so fully of this matter, as he wold do at his Return. I prayed him at his return to procure Answer with what convenient speed he might, for thereupon did depend her Majestie's Resolution for the Treaty with Spayne." Then he came to speak of Cardinall Aldobrandino, of whom there is no News since his being at Turin with the Duke. Then of the Peace which he seemed to fear wold take place; and of the King, from whom they have heard nothing since their Arrivall. He told me, that the Grand Dutcheſs was desirous to consign the Queen into the King's Hands, but if he came not the sooner, she should resolve to leave her here, and return home to Florence. Monsieur le Grand went yesterday to the King in post, to see what he can prevail with him, to perswade him to come heather. In the mean time the Gallies lye here at the King's Charge, which doth amount to 4000 Ducats the Day. I am informed by some of our English Merchants, that at such time as those Edicts were published at Rochell, whereby the Freedom of our Merchants was much restrained, (the which Edicts at your Lordship's Instance the King was pleased to revoke) there was a Collection made by the cheif of our Merchants which trade there, to the Sume of 300 l. Starling, which they pretended was to be employed for the redeeming of their antient Priviledges, and abollishing the said Edicts. I understand that there is now a Contribution in hand about the same Pretext, to the Sume of 3000 Duckats, for the abollishing of the Arrest lately made at Paris, concerning the Reglement of our English Cloaths which are brought to Rouen. Ottwell Smith is one of the Collectors, and one Comes, who likewise did gather that Contribution for Rochell. I have thought good to advertize your Lordship of these Practises; whereby in my Understanding the poorer sort of Merchants are abused, and perhaps the Reputation of her Majestie's Ministers wrongfully slandered.

I have sent your Lordship a Pasquin made by some one, who to gaine a little Reputation of Wit hath cast off all Honesty and sober Discretion. And so, &c.

Your Lordship's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

London, 2^d Nov. 1600.

I Received your Letters by Simons more then a Fortnight since, and I received also another from you since that of the 30th of September. I have been enforced to defer my Answers thus long, because that in the chief and mayne Points of them, namely the Negotiations you have had with (Advice and Respect) the Venetian and Florentine Ambassadors; (State) the Queen hath been very irresolute how to proceed. Partly from a Diffidence, that (Riches and Powers) the Great Duke's and the Segniory of Venice's good Affection, will extend no further then to Words and Wishes, and an Unwillingness thereupon, to discover any Indigence with no hope of Fruit; and partly upon an innate and inveterate Humor, to desire things till they be offered, and then to neglect them. I do not doubt but in the end, any good Offers that shall come from that side will be willingly embraced; but till we see some liklyhood, we are loath to discover our selves to need any body. And therefore I am willed for the present thus to direct you; to entertaine the Matter as you have begun in Generallities, and to advertize any particular Overtures that they shall make; and if you be pressed pressed to open your self upon any Particulars, to answere that I will be very shortly there, and that I shall come furnished with Power and Instructions to treat of it. Withall I am to let you knowe, that your Proceeding, both in this and other Things, is very pleasing and acceptable here; and so much delivered openly by Mr. Secretary in the Presence of the Lord Grey, Sir John Stanhop, and my self; whereupon my Lord Grey toke occasion to do you Right in a very kind manner.

I am now at length inforced to return into my Charge after long Contestation, even to the Extremitie almost of a Commitment. All I have wonne, is a Confirmation of the Queen's Promise, that I shall but serve out my two Years; which how it will be kept I know not, but I have now some more ground then I had to press it, and I leave my Wife behinde to sollicite it: I thinke to set forward on my Journey a Fortenight hence. I put it off all I can, because I wold avoyde any further Journey then to Paris, hoping that the King will now be thinking of his return thither to inthronize his new Queen; whereof I wold have been very glad to have understood some certainty from you, and do yet desire to know as soon as may be, what is the King's Purpose in it; that at my coming to Paris, I may be able to resolve what to do.

We have News here come from Paris, that Montmelian should be rendred, and the Fort St. Catherine is likely to run the same Fortune. Notwithstanding, we perswade our selves, both upon your Letters and otherwise, that all will end in an Accord by the Pope's Mediation, which I pray you to penetrate by all means possible. Of the Solemnitie, and all Circumstances of the Queen's Reception and Marriage, you shall do well to certify very particularly, for such Things please here very much. Touching the Treaty with Spayne, you know in what terms it was left, and how far it hath been since proceeded in, you shall perceave by these inclosed Copies. We are in very little Conceit of it at this time, for (State) the Queen seems resolved not to abandon (120 Hope) the States of Holland, without which the matter will prove full of inextricable Difficulties. Notwithstanding, it is good for our Affairs that it should be conceaved otherwise abroad, and you shall do well to entertaine all Men in an Opinion of some speedy (xydrfp) meeting about it; and so it is likely ynough there may be, though as idle as the former, to carry on our other Purposes.

Out of Scotland we hear, there is a Purpose in this next Parliament to reunite to the Church all Abbey Lands, which accords well with that Advertizement which you sent from (Poverty) Colvel. Bruce, and some other Ministers are put from their Charges, and banished Edinbourg Town and the Court, with an expresse Prohibition not to come into England. Their Crime is, that they refused to declare the Conspiracy and Attempt of Gowry and his Brother against the King, in such sort as they were required. The Erle of Argyle and the Lord Weames passed this way lately into Scotland; They spake both with the Queen publikely in the Prefence Chamber, and were graciously used, but had no private Access to her. I do not find that the Advertisement he received from Sir Thomas Erskin prevailed with him, for I know that he visited (26) Mr. Secretary Cecyll particularly: He was desirous also to have vissited (ψ28) the Erle of Essex, but it was not thought fit, otherwise, then in the Tennis Court, where the one came in whilst the other was playing.

The Erle of Essex continueth yet without Access to the Court. At Michaelmas last his Lease of the Sweet Wines expired; and after a Moneths Suspence, whether it should be graunted him or nay, it is at length put into Sir Henry Billingley's Hands, and others, to husband it for the Queen, which is no Argument of any such relenting Disposition towards him as was supposed. Yet notwithstanding there is an Expectation of his running at the Coronation-Day, and that it shall be the first step of his Grace and Access to the Court: But I am not very prone to beleve it. New Officers or Counsaillors there are yet none made since you went; there hath been some Contestation and yet is, for the Chancellorship of the Dutchy, between Sir John Stanhop, and Sir Edward Stafford,

An. 1600. ford, and the Queen devided between them upon Promises claimed by both. My Lord of Rutland, my Lord of Southampton, and my Lord Grey, are returned out of the Low-Countries; and an Opinion there is, that the two latter are made Friends by the Queen's Commaundement.

Out of Ireland we have good News, That my Lord Deputy hath forced the Passage of the Moiry upon Tiron himself in Person, who had entrenched himself in the place, and hath killed five or six hundred of his Men, and so made himself way to Armagh, where he intends to leave a Garrison, and so to returne to Dublin. The Province of Munster is almost reduced from actuall Rebellion, and the pretended Desmond fled into Connaght, who hath very few Followers: And the restored Desmond is by this time arrived there, whole Presence it is hoped will serve very much to settle Matters there. The Sales are shut up, and a Parliament appointed in February. The Lands of the Bishoprick of Ely which were exchanged, are appointed to be sold, to pay the City, and the Dutchesse of Lennox's Lands to stop another Gap. There is a Company erecting of such as shall trade to the East-Indies, and a Fleet already desseined for it, whereof the Charge will arise to 50000 l. Your Advertizements from (Riches) the Duke of Florence will be very kindly taken. The Queene hath written an Answere to his Letter, and conveyed it, I take it by some Merchants means.

I have received your Bill for the 200 Crowns you had of Mr. Willaston's Respondent at Lyons, and paid the Money. And so hoping to see you shortly at Paris, or further off if there be no Remedy, I commend me very heartily unto you, and committ you to God.

Your very assured Freind,

HENRY NEVILLE.

P.S. We have News heere lately arrived, that the King will not return to Paris all this Winter: If that be so, you know I must not stay at Paris. And therefore in that Case, you shall do well to speake, that I have a convenient Lodging appointed in the Place where the King means to reside. I have received all the Letters you mention, saving that of the 15th of August, which perished with Richard the Post, between Deepe and Dover. I had purposed to have sent by an express Messenger, but that is staid till we heere once againe from you; therefore I thought good to send this by the way of Roien.

* Mr. Beale's and Mr. Edmonds's Answer to Richardot's Letter.

Monfieur,

A Richemond ce d'Octobre 1600.

NOUS avons reçu la vostre du 15^{me} de ce mois, laquelle nous avons esté contrainctz de communiquer a sa Majesté, tant pour l'esclaircir suivant ce que nous luy avons fait entendre de l'Estat auquel nous avions laissé le traité, comme aussy pour sçavoir son bon plaisir sur les instances contenues en vostre lettre. Et sur ce, nous avons charge de vous dire, que l'on trouve fort estrange le subject de vostre dite lettre, escripte en termes si generaux, sans nous esclaircir de ce que nous aurons à attendre plus particulièrement de vos intentions; ce qui joint & se rapportant aux autres circonstances de vos procedures, attendu que sa Majesté s'estoit soumise à tant de raison, que de s'accommoder à une egalité, à ce que l'une ny l'autre des parties ne receust prejudice, nous fait penser avoir juste occasion de croire que l'on ait change d'avis & d'affection, & que ce ne soit à bon esceint, que l'on propose la poursuite de ce traité. Toutesfois, sa Majesté desirant tousjours se justifier de n'avoir rien obmis en cela, de ce qui deust dependre d'elle, & ne voulant ourdir les premieres noeudes de son amitié sur une fausse trame; desire que vous soyez esclairez que ceux des Provinces Unies sont fermement resolués, (non obstant toutes instances) de n'entendre à la Paix; ayans mesmes (come sa Majesté vous assure en soy & honneur de Prince) protesté de nouveau à l'encontre par leur propre Agent, tout fraichement retourné de leur part vers elle. Tellement, que si le Roy d'Espagne & leurs Alteſſes ayans changé d'avis, delibèrent, de ne traicter avec sa Majesté sans que ces Messieurs y Entendent quant & quant, nous pouvons bien conclure, que nous sommes au bout de nôtre Traicté: Surquoy, sa Majesté desire recevoir promptement leur resolution. Mais si ainsy est, qu'ilz perseverent en ceste volonté de traicter avec elle separement; pour les esclairez semblablement de quelle rondeur elle veut proceder en cest endroit, afin d'empescher qu'il ne se face plus d'assemblées inutiles de leurs deputes, au deshonneur des uns & des autres; aussy bien sur la difficulté des poincts qui se doibvent vuider, comme du differend passé; sa Majesté pense mieux convenir, pour plus clairement & plus tost s'entr'entendre, que l'on couche & presente premierement chacun ses demandes, & que l'on face sur icelles prompte & directe responce. Et si pour mieux faire entendre & debattre les raisons surquoy se fonderont lesdites demandes, on trouve bon d'envoyer par deçà à cest effect quelque personnage entendu, l'on en envoie à d'icy au mesme temps un semblable par delà: par le desmeslement desquelles, avant que de s'en retourner, les affaires pourront estre entierement esclairez & vuides à l'issue que Dieu les aura ordonnés, à ce qu'il ne se face point par apres d'Assemblée mal à propos. A quoy si l'on se veult resoudre, nous desirons que l'on s'y acheminé promptement. Sa Majesté pense par ceste claire & directe procedure, vous tesmoigner assez sa sincerité; à quoy, si vos Princes ne se veulent disposer à correspondre, sa Majesté sera contraincte de s'excuser, & justifier envers le monde de ce qui en pourra naistre à l'advenir. Quant à nôtre partes Monsieur, nous nous evertuerons tousjours fidelement à faire tout bon office en un œuvre si chrestien, selon l'occasion que nous en donnerez; desirant que sur ce nous puissions recevoir prompte responce, & ainsy vous baisant bien humblement les mains, nous demeurerons. Monsieur

Vos bien humbles & affectionnes Serviteurs,

ROB. BEALE.

THO. EDMONDS.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

London, 15th Nov. 1600.

I Wrote unto you the second of this Moneth by the way of Roïen, and some few Days after I sent you by Parnel (one of the King's Courriers) a Letter of Advice, and a Bill of Exchange from Mr. Bash to Constantin for 50*l.* Sterl. and have here inclosed sent you the second Bill for the same. Mr. Bash hath likewise written unto him to deliver you what you shall require besides. About four Days since I received your Letters of the 5th and 7th of October: Whereupon, misdoubting I should receive no more in any short time from you, I obtained Warrant of Mr. Secretary to dispatch this express Messenger, that he might be returned against my Arrival at Paris, and bring me some certaine Advertizement from you, what the King means to do, that I may thereupon determine either to stay for him at Paris, or go on further. By my last I signified, that for some respects, I was willed to direct you to entertaine in Generallities, the Overtures you had begonne with (Advice and Respect) the Venetian and Florentine Ambassadors, referring the Particulars till my comming; for it is purposed, that I shall bring full Power and Instruction, to agree of all those Particularities that you wrote of. In the mean time, if they have proposed any thing that shall be needfull to be thought of, I pray you advertise it by this Bearer, that I may procure a speedy Resolution in it, before I conferr with them.

Touching

An. 1600.

Touching the Arrest of the Privy Council there, whereof both you and I have complayned; although Monsieur de Villeroy hath told you, that he had sent the King's Answer to his Ambassador here; yet we can receive none from him but this, that he will undertake that the Merchants Goods shall not be confiscated, but of any direct Answer touching the matter, he will take no Knowledge. Which kind of juggling between them, methinks is very strange, and deserves to be more seriously apprehended then I see it is; but at my coming I will put it to an Issue one way or other.

We have divers Bruits here of the Count Fuentes joyning his Forces with the Duke of Savoy, and of an Encounter between them and the King's Forces, wherein the French should have had the worst; also of the yielding of Montmelian to the King before the Term expired, upon private Conditions made by the Governour; and of a Discontent grown between the King and the Duke of Guise about the Discovery of an Enterprize upon Nissa, all which I give no Credit to, because you write nothing of them.

Of the Marechall Biron's proceeding in Bresse, we have heard nothing along time, neither know we whether the Cittadell of Bourg be rendered or not, or what Resistance is made in those Parts. I pray you advertise, what Conceit you learn that the Princes of Italy have of this Warr; and penetrate as much as you may, what the King's Intentions are if the War should continue. It is likely, that at the Cardinal Aldobrandino's coming, there will be some secret Practice against them of the Religion. I do not doubt but they be jealous ynough of it, and therefore open-eyed to observe what is done: And I know not to whom they should more gladly communicate it, then to her Majestie's Ministers. Discover I pray you, what you may of it, and let me understand it. I would be glad to have the Contract of the King's Marriage, I pray you procure it if you can. Hearken after Aldobrandino's Negotiation by all means. We are full of a Report, and almost of an Opinion, that he which hath been so long a Prisoner at Venice, is now discovered to be the true Sebastian, by many secret Tokens upon his Body; confirmed out of Portugal by those which knew him both Child and Man. I pray you inform your self well of it, and clear us of that Point if you may. If (Resolution) the Duke of Bonillon be come to the Court, I could wish you did sound him and (Religion) Monsieur de Rhosny, to that Effect that I have written heretofore; for we are now in great Hope of the Reduction of (□ 151) Ireland, upon the Success we have lately had, and therefore the more prone to embrace hopefull and generous Counsaills. So that any Encouragement from thence would come very seasonably to embark us frankly into some gallant Action. (↓ 28) The Earl of Essex is no Actor in our Triumphs, as I wrote was conceived, but yet is not out of hope of some Melioration of Fortune. Out of (205) Scotland we hear, there is no good Agreement, but rather an open Diffidence between (165 Counsaill) the King of Scots and his Wife; and many are of Opinion, that the Discovery of some Affection between her and the Earle Gowry's Brother, (who was killed with him) was the truest Cause and Motife of all that Tragedy. Yf you meet with Colvel at Avignon, I hope he hath delivered you some more Light of their Intentions. His last Advertizements which you sent by Simons, were not to be contemned; we are much distasted with that which we hear dayly to that purpose. But I do not see that we go about to provide any Remedy, especially any Lenitive, but rather such as is likely to exasperate, and consequently hasten the Mischief. We have yet no Answer to the Letter written to Richardot, whereof I sent you a Copy in mine of the 2^d of this Moneth, therefor I can make no Judgment of the Progress of that Matter. But my Opinion is, we may be seconded in any competent measure from those Parts; otherwise there is no doubt but we shall be forced to strike Sayle in the end.

The Indian Voyage goeth on a mayne, the Charge will be about 54000 l. I pray you lay hold of the Offer made you by (Advice) the Ambassador of Florence, for the settling of Intelligence from (Δ 200) Spaine: And if you light on any any other good means whiles you are in these Parts, neglect it not. I suppose you make some use of (Dissimulation) the Duke de Elpernon's Secretary; which if I might know, I would provide a Nagg to bestow upon him. I think to be at Paris about the middle of December; where, if you find the King resolved to come thither before Christmas, I would you would meet me; but if otherwise, write me so much by this Bearer, and stay till you hear againe: For if the King be likely to return to Paris within a Moneth after I come, I will make no haste to him, otherwise I will resolve to go on. And so for this time I commend me hartily unto you, and committ you to God.

An. 1600.

Your very loving Friend,

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

Right Honorable my very good Lord,

Lions, 20 Nov.

1600. O.S.

BY those Letters which I sent by Mr. Heale, I advertized your Lordship of such Occurrences, as that present time did yeald. The Grand Dutcheſs not finding the King at Marseilles, (as at her Departure from Florence, according to Promise and Appointment from hence, she assuredly expected,) dispatched presently a Messenger to the Great Duke, to know his Pleasure whether she should accompany the Queen any further; the Duke returned Answer, that with the first Opportunity she should returne back.

The King before her Departure, caused to be presented unto her from him a Table Diamond, and another to the Dutcheſs of Mantua, valued severally at 15000 Crowns. He presented to the three Princes, Virginio, Giovanni, and Antonio, to each of them a Jewell to wear in their Hatts: To the Generalls of Malta and Florence Chaines of Gold, with his Medaglia, of 500 Ducats a piece, and to the under Captaines of 200 Ducats. The Dutcheſs departed from Marseilles the 5th of this Moneth. Don Giovanni returned with them; Don Antonio doth remaine in France, where he hath hope by his Sister's Greatness to advance his Fortunes. Don Virginio made shew to depart with the Gallies, but afterwards came disguised to Avignon. He hath a purpose to pass through France, and I understand into England and the Low-Countries, in which Places he doth desire to pass his time, during the time of this Pope; against whom, as he hath (as he pretendeth) just Cause of Discontents, so for a Disgrace which he lately at Florence did offer to Cardinall Aldobrandino, he is willing to retire himself; knowing how unequall a Match he is to contest, either with the Malice of the one, or the Power of the other. A thing as it seems fatall to his House, ever to stand in yll Termes with the Popes. For so his Father Paulo, fearing the Displeasure of Sistus Quintus, first retired himself to Padua, and there finding himself not safe, intending to fly into Germany, died at Como by Milan. After whose Decease, this Man, by Mediation of this Grand Duke, to make his Peace, was contented to marry the Sister of Cardinall Montalto; upon whom, (after the Death of the Duke of Parma who was Gonfalonier della Chiesa) Sistus Quintus bestowed that Estate: Which he retained untill the late Marriage of Ranuccio Duke of Parma with the Niece of this Pope, who hath invested him in this Office, as arbitrary to be conferred at the Discretion of the Popes.

* Now when Cardinall Aldobrandino made his Entry of late into Florence, the Duke attending at the Gate to receive him, under a Baldochino with a solemn Procession; Don Virginio, to perform his Service to the Legato Apostolico, took his place next before the Baldochino, in Form and Order as Gonfalonier della

* Vide Memoires de Bentivoglio, Vol. 1.

An. 1600. Chiefa. The Great Duke knowing how yll pleasing this wold be to the Cardinal, praied him to forbear, which at his Instance he was content; but refused his Attendance otherwise then in his due place, and so went away, and with him Don Antonio and Giovanni, for these three draw all in one line. Whereupon Don Virginio presuming that this will be offensively taken, holds it most assured for his Safety, to absent himself, both from their Presence and their power. The Quarrell between the Gallies of Florence and Malta for the Place, whereof in my Letter to your Lordship I advertized, was so forward, that the Generall of Florence imparted the Matter unto me with this Speech: That whereas the Great Duke his Master hath ever held Amity and good Intelligence with her Majesty, and hath shewed himself always ready to defend her Subjects, as well trading within his own Dominions, as the Dominions of his neighbour Princes, from all Wrongs and Disgraces that might be attempted upon them; so he prayed me, that I wold be a means, in Case this Controversy between them and Malta could not peaceably be determined, that our Merchants Ships which were in that Road, which he said were six in Number, well appointed with Men and Munition, wold lend them their Assistance to recover their Right.

I answered, that her Majestie was ever willing to preserve the Amity which she held with her Allies, and particularly her Intelligence which she held with the Great Duke; to whom yf she were indebted for any Courtesies which either she or her Subjects had received, it was not for want of Abillitie, or good Affection; but of convenient Opportunity and Means to requite them; when Occasion should present itself, she wold embrace it so far forth as the Duke in his own Discretion wold advise, or her Honor with Safety wold permit. For this present Motion, I praied him to consider the Circumstances; that those Ships which were there, were Ships of Merchants, armed to keep themselves in Peace, not to make Warr upon others; that they were now in a Port, as in a Prison, at the Devotion and Mercy of them who were not the best affected to the King of France, over whom he did command but by Precario; and so ill affected to our Nation, that they did but desire any colourable Pretext, to make a Prey and Spoile of them. That their adverse Party was of a Religion, which being contrary to that which our Church doth profess, the Malice of the World wold judge, that our Men were rather principal Agents in the Quarrell, then Favourers or Abettors in the Cause. Upon those Reasons, I said that I did hope he wold not hold it convenient that our Merchants should joyn with them to assail them of Malta; but in Case they would not understand reason, but should offer violence to assail them, our Merchants with their best means wold make it appear, that they were Subjects of the Queen of England; with whose good Pleasure it cannot stand, that the Duke of Toscanye should suffer Wrong, whilst her Subjects have Power to uphold his Right. He departed well satisfied with this Answer, but I heard no more of him, for the Matter was taken up in this manner: The Generall of Malta did acknowledge by Writing under his hand, that the Place which his Galley held, which was next to the King's Keale, was at the first aboard taken by Chance, and for the better Conveniency for the Queen's Landing, not of malice or purpose; neither should it hereafter be urged in prejudice of any right that might appertaine to the Great Duke; and to avoid all further Debate which might arise for the Preceancy at their issuing out of the Port, the Gallies of Malta were licenced to depart at their Pleasure, as they did four Days before the Grand Dutchesse. The Pope's Gallies, had no particular Admirall but were under the Admirall of Florence, and so attended the return of the Dutcheſs. The Queen did set forward to Aix, the same Day the Dutchesse return'd for Florence. There she was solemnly received by the Court of Parliament. In the middle of the High-Street, there was erected an Arch Triumphant, wherein were painted the Conquests of Savoy, and under was written Subaudia redacta; there was the Picture of the King on Horseback triumphing over a Centaur reversed presenting up a Crown, with this Word Opportune. In the Compass of the Arch which was at the Gate, were written these Words, Heros, Natura Genius, Luxus rara rara Celtarum. From thence she passed to Avignon, where they spared neither An. 1600. Cost nor Care to receive her, whereby they might shew their Devotion to her, and that Estate, which they desire the King should believe the Church doth make of him; and which likewise they know, he doth affect that they of the Church should hold of him. The cheif Gentlemen of the Town, with the Choice of their Youths, did go forth to meet her. At her Entrance into the Gate, as she did sit in an open Litter, (for so she passed through the Town,) they did present unto her three Keys of Silver Gilt, which are the Armories of the Town; the Houses were all hanged with Tapestry, and the Streets over head covered with Canvas; at every turning that she passed, there were Speeches made unto her, with variety of Musick in all kinds. There were erected seven Arches Triumphant, (under the which she did pass,) in Honor of the King and her, whereof by this inclosed your Lordship shall understand the Particulars: She staid there only one day. At her Departure, the Vice-Legat, in whose Palace she was lodged, presented her from the Town 200 Pieces of two Crowns the Piece, which of purpose were stamp't with the King's and her Image. Upon Saturday she is looked for at a House in the Fauxbourghs called La Motte; where she is to stay, untill the Preparations for her Entry into this Town be finished, which were lately begon and go slowly forward. The King yet hath not seen her.

Montmelian, according to the Capitulation with Monfieur de Brandis, was render'd the 6th of this Month. Yt doth now appear, whatsoever was pretended, that there was no default within the Fort, but want of Courage in his Person, and of Loyalty to his Prince; he is now retired into Switzerland, and Monfieur de Crequy is Governour in his Place. The Duke of Savoy, by the Valley of Aouft, came down with 24000 Foot and 2000 Horfe, but did not attempt to force the Passages, which long since were possessed by Monfieur Lefdegueries, and so retired back with his Forces. Yt is reported, that he had in his Troops 5000 Spaniards, which were supplied him by Count Fuentes. Cardinal Aldobrandino hath been at Chambery these 20 Days. He doth assure the King all Satisfaction, both for the Restitution of the Marquisat, and for the reimbursement of the Charges which he hath bestowed in these Warres; for it is said, the Pope hath yet another Niece, to whom Monfieur de Savoye doth pretend Marriage, of whose Dowry he will retaine so much in his Hands, as shall give Contentment to the King: As yet they are not entered into a Treaty. The Deputies for the Duke arrived at Chambery on Fryday last; but the King, entreating the Cardinal to justify in his Presence at Lions, what in his Absence he had done at Florence, went the next Day to the Fort of St. Catherine, which he doth presume presently to carry, and at the Instance of Messieurs of Geneva, who are content to retrench 100000 Ducats of the Debt which is dew unto them, he hath made them a part of Promise, to raze it to the Ground. So we look for him here at the beginning of the next Week with the Cardinal, and the Deputies from the Duke for the Treaty. What will be the Issue thereof, is very uncertaine, for there are many Arguments Pro and Con. The Pope will use all his Power and Credit for the Peace, the Princes of Italy do much affect it; the King himself doth desire to return to his Ease and Repose. Those of his Counsaill who most do govern the Affairs of this State, do labour for it, holding it in their Conscience not lawful, to make Warre against a Catholick Prince. The Nobillity in generall do the same, who otherwise must follow the Warre at their own Charge. But the happy Successe of this Warre doth give them Courage, and the late rendering of Montmelian hath much altered their Humors, which they will be loath to forgoe, and yet they must not look both to keep it, and to make Peace. I shall be able in a few Days to advertize your Lordship, what Resolution herein shall be taken; for the Cardinal will not stay long about it, who doth desire to be at Rome before the end of this Year.

An. 1600. At my coming from Marseilles, there arrived seven Gallies of Spainne from Genoa at the Islands, which are within a League of the Town; wherein did return the Constable of Castile, and with him there was Cardinall Colonna: Who is sent from the Pope to the King of Spainne, only to let him know, the Care and Paines he taketh to accommodate those Differences between the King and the Duke. (128) The States Agent is returned to this Court; but Monsieur Villeroy hath given him such a wellcom, as might have made him fall into a Relapse; for after a few Dayes that he had been here, *he wished him to forbear, and to retire himself; told him that his Presence would be displeasing to the Cardinall, and so might breed Disgrace to the King; for just Exception might be taken, that (144) the French King should have about him (6.ybyrublxig 120) an Agent of the States, but thus far mildly. But when he told him, that (Hope) the States did purpose to send an (x x u z x l l x t) Ambassador to (θ r m d u c s h g y s h) congratulate the (x o s c x s g m) Marriage; then he began to Storme, asking whether he thought that the King wold receive one of that quality from (θ h t w c w p w s a) the Rebels of (19) the King of Spainne; and assured him, that yf they send any such, (Felicity) the King shall be enforced so to declare them, and to forbid (6 w o d d e n o u z l d) his Subjects all (x q h u u y i g e) Commerce with them. Yt was replied, that there had passed many (θ h c w s h x w s) Treaties, wherein (120) the States were termed (6 y t t o u d) Allies. But he was willing to distinguish times; Necessity did enforce the latter, and reason of State, unless they did govern themselves more soberly, would enduce the other. So they hold lupum auribus. Not to (x l y f t) send, were to shew little respect; and yf they do, they doubt whether he shall be received. I understand that whilst I was at Marseilles, there came to this Town an Englishman with Letters unto me. He was informed here whether I was gone, and when I wold return: he departed from hence 20 Days since. I neither can learn his Name nor his Business, neither whether he is gone, nor whether he hath purpose to return this way. In hope to hear of him, I have deferred the closing these three Days. And so, &c.*

Your Lordship's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

Lions, 4 Dec.

1600. O. S.

Right Honorable my very good Lord,

I Received your Lordship's Letters of the 9th of September, the 24th of November; and those of the 2^d of November, the 25th of the same. I was doubtfull what to do in that matter which the former Letters do handle, because the latter makes no mention of that Resolution, which Monsieur de Villeroy did promise to send to her Majesty by Monsieur de Boisfisse, in the same Cause whereof I advertised by my Letters of the 5th of September; fearing least by not understanding what since hath passed, I should committ some Error by Indiscretion, and thereby rather recule, then advance the Affair. But because the Party who doth follow the Business, did bring with him Letters in favour thereof from Monsieur de Boisfisse to the Chancellor and to Monsieur de Villeroy, I have thought good to deliver the Letters, and then to proceed as the present occasion should direct. When the Chancellor, had read the Letters which I delivered unto him, " he told me that it contained two Points, the first concerning the Arrest, which " our Merchants desired might be explained; the other concern'd a Sentence " published by the Bayliff of Rouen, which we pretend doth impeach the Li- " berty of our Trade. He remembered that I had heretofore solicited him in " the former; wherein as before, so now againe, he said, that the Master of Re- " quests who made the Report of the Cause, did affirm that all Parties that were " interested

" interested therein, were agreed, and consented that it should pass in the same An. 1600.
 " Form that now it is conceived. Yet if it may appear that the Arrest be pre" judiciall to the Liberty of Commerce, which by the Treaties between the two " Crowns hath been established, he would not be unwilling to have the Matter a" gaine revived: But said he, you shall do better to have Patience untill our Re" turn to Paris, whether we are now going. I answered, for the mayn Point " which we desired, it was, that the Rigour of this Arrest might be mitigated:
 " we would submit our selves to be advised and ordered by him, when, and where
 " to follow it. But untill that Comodity did serve, we did desire to have a Sur-
 " seance graunted for the Execution thereof, that our Merchants might, as here" tofore, securely trade, without Danger to incur the Penalty of the Arrest. He " said, a Surseance could not be graunted but upon som ground. I replied, that " those Oppositions which we did make, were Reasons sufficient to graunt a
 " Surseance for so short a time, which he should not do without a Precedent;
 " for that the premier President of Roüen, only upon a Letter from Monsieur
 " de Boisfisse, had suspended the Execution for three Months, which time was
 " now expired. Thereupon he was contented I should deliver to Monsieur de Messe
 " a Remonstrance, (which the Advocate did draw, with other Pieces) to make Re" port of them to the Counsaill. Monsieur de Villeroy was not then come to the " Town. The Day after his Arrivall, I delivered unto him Monsieur de Boisfisse's
 " Letter, and then solliciting him in the Matter, " he asked me whether your Lord" ship were not at Paris. I answered I understood not so much, but your last " did advertize, that ere long you would be there. Then he wished, the Matter " might rest untill your coming. I told him, in the mean time our Merchants
 " at Roüen were in paine, who lived there and spent upon the Stock, not daring
 " to Trade, least their Merchandize, by the Rigour of that Arrest, should be " confiscated. He answered me, that Order was taken to the contrary by the " premier President. I answer'd him, that that Order was to continue but for " three Months, which time was already expired. But if it would please him " to write unto him for the Surseance for a longer time, our Merchants there" upon might adventure to revive their Trade, which of force otherwise would " be extinguished. He promised to write to the purpose I had spoken; so at my " Departure from him I did remember him of it, but then he said he would advise
 " of it". Since I have sollicited him, but am delayed, which makes me doubt
 " no great good will be done, untill your Lordship's coming. As for the Sentence
 " of the Bayliffe of Roüen, I have joyned it in the Remonstrance to the Chancel- " lor; though he said, that our most expedient Course had been, to have made the " Greivance known to the premier President of Roüen, who would not have re" fused to do, what Justice in that Point doth require.

The Queen made her Entry into this Town, upon Sunday was Se'nnight. She did lye the Night before, in the Subburbs beyond the Rhone in an Inn, because the House called la Motte, which was appointed for her Lodging, was not sufficient to lodge the Ladies which did attend her. She returned to la Motte to Dinner, where the Souldiers of the Town did muster before her, and afterwards did march before her into the Town. This inclosed, will deliver unto your Lordship, the Preparations which within the Town were made for her Entertainment.

The Fort of St. Catherine is to be rendred to the King upon Capitulation, the 7th of this Moneth. Messieurs of Geneva are in great Hope, that the King will deliver it into their Hands, to be razed. Whilst the King was there before it, Monsieur de Beza came forth to present his Duty unto him, whom the King received with great respect, and at the departing from him bestowed on him 500 Crowns. There is yet another Fort called Alinges, which yet is not rendered; the King hath sent Monsieur Allen to summon it.

The King came to this Town upon Saturday Night, whilst the Queen was at Supper; whom he did long behold unknown, among many other that were there.

An. 1600. At the taking up of the Table, he retired into his own Chamber, where he stayed, till he understood that she was gone to the Lodging, whether he went to her.
She met him at the Door, and offered to kneel down, but he took her in his Arms, where he held her embraced a long time. He staid with her till he was called to Supper; after he had supped he returned, where when he had entertained himself some time, he retired to his own Lodging, wishing her to go to Bed, whether he wold come and find her, which he did accordingly; though she praied him, after his wearysome Journey, rather to repose and refresh himself. He doth profess to the World the great Contentment he finds in her; how that for her Beauty, her sweet and pleasing Carriage, her gracious Behaviour, she doth surpass the Relation which hath been made of her, and the Expectation which he thereby conceived.

The Ceremonies for the Marriage shall be on Sunday, which attend the Arri-vall of the Legat. Who ever since the King left him hath been at Chambery, treating with the Deputies, viz. for the King, Monsieur de Syllery, (who came with the Gallies from Rome, in whose Place no Man is yet design'd) and the President Jeannin; and those for the Duke, Monsieur de Alymez and d'Alconat.

No Judgment can yet be given what will be the Issue of this Treaty. It is said that the Duke of Savoy is nothing humbled, whose Deputies speake in as high a Stile as he did at Paris last Year; braving, that their Master will recover in four Days, what the King hath gained in four Months. They will use all means here to put off the Treaty, or to draw it into length; upon hope to bring in the Castle of Bourg, which cannot long hold out, being disfurnished of Wood, Wine, and sufficiency of Vittail. The King will presently go thither, and the Queen with the Counsaill (as we hear) shall go to Machan, which is not far from thence. Notwithstanding, we hold that in some few Days some Resolution will be taken, for the Legat will not stay long, and to send him away without some Contentment were very strange. Some hold rather Truce then Peace: Others think, that to content him, the Counsaill of Trent shall be received, and the Jesuits established. Which hath a very heavy Opposition, for the former will breed a generall Discontentment to all Parties, and the latter as distastfull to the Religion, and not well-pleasing to the best affected Catholicks. I wold not have omitted in my former, to have advertized your Lordship of the King's Resolution to bestow this Winter, if either any had been taken, or upon probable ground it might be conceived what he will do. I can assure your Lordship nothing. The Chancellor said, as before I have written, that they were to go to Paris. I understand, that upon Sunday, the King told Madam de Guise, that when Monsieur de Villeroy did arrive, order should be taken to send them all to Paris. The generall Desire doth draw all thither, especially of the great ones, who have spent the Money they brought beather, and have no Credit to take up more.

I was desirous to sound Monsieur de Villeroy, but I could get no other Answer, then that the Affairs of France, are not resolved so far before hand.

doth speak confidently from Monsieur de Rosny, who doth purpose shortly to be at Paris, that the War shall continue, and that the King will not stir from hence. But though the War continue, to what purpose should he stay here four Moneths doing nothing? For untill May he cannot further advance his Forces. I will be vigilant to learn what may be known in this matter, and dayly will advertize. I should be sorry your Lordship should have so long and tedious a Jor-ney, in this Season of the Year.

I do hear nothing from (Power) the Seigniory of Venice, it may be they attend the Return of (126) their Ambassador; neither in haste will any thing come from (Riches) the Great Duke; for (χmrfdr) Vinti is yet in Town. I have been intreated by a Gentleman who doth accompany Don Virginio into England, (whereof in my Letter of the 20th of November I advertized) to address them by some Letter to some one, who wold vouchsafe to make them have the sight

fight of the Court, and access to her Majesty. I have given them a Letter to your Lordship. And so, &c. An. 1600.

Your Lordship's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

Right Honorable my very good Lord,

*Lions, 8th Dec.

MY last, which I sent by Parnell the King's Post, will advertize your Lordship of the present State wherein all matters here do stand. I now will answer unto those Demands, which your Lordship in your last hath proposed. I have heard nothing from (Power) the Seigniorie of Venice, and no more from (Riches) the Duke of Florence, then I advertized in those which were sent by Mr. Heale from Marseilles. And if these Wars do still continue against the Duke of Savoy, that once the King doth advance his Forces up towards the Mountains, I fear they will desire to be excused; pretending that they are like to have their hands full at home, and may have Cause enough to imploy their Treasure to defend their own Estate. And yf they had purposed to contribut any thing, perhaps they had rather, that what they should contribut should be employed this way, to divert these Forces from their Coasts, then against him, who only must make Head to suppress those Attempts, which at least will distemper that settled Repose, which now for many Years they have enjoyed.

We understand that they arme in all places of Italy, and yt is long since that the Venetians have reinforced their Frontiers of Milan. And now in the State of Genoa, there is a Levy made of Souldiers, though yet not known whether to serve their own State, or for the Service of Piedmont. It is discourfed here, that the Princes of Italy will assuredly league themselves together, to impeach this Passage over the Mountains. For although Italy be Gravida Imperiis, and every Prince hath his severall Estate; yet they are all but one Body, and the Nearness of Neighbourhood, and the Intercourse of Commerce, the Freeness and Liberty of forreign Traffick, whereon their Greatness generally doth depend, will make them sensible one of another's Grievance. Milan is the Place for which France doth only pretend. But the Seigniorie of Venice well understand, that tunc sua res agitur. They know by themselves, that Desire hath no End, nor Ambition any Measure, wherin it is confined. When the Pope was lately in Arms for Ferrara, he was once in purpose to have craved Assistance from France: The Venetians then decreed to send unto him, and to wish him to make his Peace, for that they were resolved to oppose themselves, against the Entrance of Armi foustieri into Italy.

There is lately made in Italy a Table, whereon is painted this King, armed in all Pieces, conferring with the Pope sitting in his Pontificalibus. The Doge of Venice stands by with his Senate, looking through their Spectacles, and listening what they say. They have this Motto written under, Noi havere il Re di Francia per amico, ma non per vicino. Then there is the Duke of Genoa and his Senate, and they are all wrapt in Gowns lin'd with Furr, and yet they quake either with Fear or Cold. The King of Spain is painted walking in a Garden, and playing with Boyes and little Children. The Duke of Savoy and his Children are there, all ragged and torn, ready to thrust their Heads into an Hospital.

Here is a Speech, and it is said the Marquis of Brandis did deliver so much to the King, that if he did continue the Warre against the Duke of Savoy, he knowing how insufficient he is to withstand his Force, was resolved to quit his State to the King of Spain, from whom he should have some Government for himself, as to be his Lieutenant over Italy and Sicily, and Provision for his Children in Spain, whether he would send them. Count Fuentes hath sent no

C c c c

Forces

An. 1600. Forces for Savoy, that he will justify. It hath been confessed by Prissoners that have been taken; that there are in the Duke's Army 2500 Spaniards, such as were cashier'd since his coming to Milan, and for no other purpose; then that they should go the rather, without his Advow, to the Assistance of the Duke.

I hath told me, that they served under the Collours of Spayne; but I think he spake what he did desire, not what he knows.

There hath been no Battle, nor any Skirmish worthy the writing; for the Duke hath no Passage open to come out of the Mountaines, where he is walled in, and Monsieur Lesdiguières doth there attend with his Troops, to provide that he shall not force a coming forth. Yt is not doubted, but that the King of Spayne will declare himself, yf the War continue. He doth levy 6000 Men amongst the five Petty Cantons, and a great number among the Grisons, who are his Confederates by a League defensive, for the State of Milan.

Monsieur Ansell did lately send hither a Copy of a Request, presented by the Ambassador of Spayne there to the Emperour, for 5000 Lansquenets and a 1000 Reisters, for the Defence of the Marquisat; and withall the Emperor's Answer, granting the said Demand. Monsieur de Rochpot's Secretary is lately returned out of Spayne; who doth assure, that there they speak nothing but of Warr with France; for which purpose, they make great Levies both of Men and Money.

At Lisbone they have made an Embargo of 30 French Vessells of one for another, but how to be employed is not yet discovered. It is expected that the Legat will advance his Religion what he may; both in Favour of it, and in Hatred of the other; and that he will sollicite the Restitution of the Jesuites, who swarm about him, and who were promised to receive Contentment at his coming by the King; but that was at such a time as he little thought to have seen a Legat here. And so in like manner the Reception of the Councill of Trent, which the King and Counsaill will not refuse; be it that they desire it should be received, (as undoubtedly some of them do) or that thereby they would approve their particular Devotion to the Pope, when they know it is not in their Power to effect it. For the Parliaments all, even the most Catholick, will resist it.

Within these three Days there was a Report delivered to the King of some Remouement in Guienne by the Religion; who by Violence should take from the Receiver, certaine Somes of Money for the Paiment of their Garrisons. Yt is taken to be but a cunning Device (as a thing which easily wold be beleevd, as often threatned, and ever feared; and which at length, and that before it be long, will fall out) feign'd at this time, both to call the Religion into Hatred, whilst the Legat is present, who upon that Ground may work their Disgrace; and also the more easily to induce the King to a Peace, for whose Safety it will not be to make Warr Abroad, when he shall not be assured of his Subjects at Home.

Of Nissa there is no more then heretofore I have advertised, nor any such matter of Disgrace, or Discontentment to the Duke of Guise; between whom and the Duke of Espernon there lately should have been a Combat. The Ground of the Quarrell is de pere en filz, but the fresh Occasion is diversely reported: that which is generally spoken is this. At Chambery, Monsieur de Espernon being talking with the King, there entered into the Chamber where they were Monsieur de Guise. Monsieur de Espernon said softly to the King, That Monsieur de Guise had none of those good Fashions and Graces, that the Duke his Father had. This is come to the Knowledge of the Duke of Guise. Upon Wednesday last at Night, when they, with many others, had brought the King to his Lodgings from a Ball, Monsieur de Guise comes to Monsieur de Espernon, and embracing of him, shaking him somewhat roughly, Monsieur de Espernon asked him, if he wold wrestle; he said no, not with such a werish lean Fellow. The other replied, that he had Pith in his Arms, and was too well underlaid to be overthrown by him. Monsieur de Guise said, that he had overthrown him as often as he had undertaken to do it; the other answered, that these were but Words, and

and so they departed. The next Morning the Duke of Guise sent one of the Captains of his Guards, called Momplaisir, to Monsieur de Espernon, to tell him that he did attend him at a certaine Island in the Roine, with his Sword and Dagger. Monsieur de Espernon, taking his Word that he was there all alone, presently went with him; but before he could come to the Gates, the King had commanded that they should be shut, and charged his Guards that no Man should go forth: Yet that Evening he went forth of the Town by Water. The King sent the next Day after them both, and upon Saturday they returned in this Town, not having one met with the other.

I cannot write to your Lordship of Sebastian at Venice, more then already you understand. I have seen four Letters written from Venice, the Copies whereof Texera had delivered to Mr. Stallyn for you, which in my Judgment prove not much. Here is one called Ciciliano de Figaredo, who sometimes hath been Governour of the Tercera's, who doth sollicite the King to write to the Seigniory for the Enlargement of their King. But the King doth absolutely refuse to write in publick to the State; pretending that the King of Spaine, (with whom now he is in Amity) should have just Cause to take Exception against such proceeding, whereby an Impostor should be suborn'd to disturb the Quiet of his Dominions, whereof he hath been in Peace possessed these twenty Years. Yet he doth promise to write in private to some of the Chief of the Seigniory, with whom his Letters, in Favour of this Cause, may prevail.

The Cantons hold now an Assembly at Baden, and are upon the point to quit the Alliance they held with this Crown; seeing how long in vaine they have been fed with Promisses, and deluded with a continuall Expectation, without having yet touched one Penny more then the 150000 Crowns, which was at the beginning of this Summer sent them by Monsieur de Vic, who remains there, Agent for the King. It is thought the King will send expressly to them, to hold them still in good Devotion; and Monsieur de Messe is named for this Employment.

The Legat arrived at this Town upon Thursday Night, where he kept his Lodging secretly all Fryday. Upon Saturday Morning he went forth out of the Town, and in the Afternoon made a very solemn Entry. The Princes and Nobles of the Court went to bring him in, with the Chief of the Town. He was received at the Gate under a Canopy, with a solemn Procession of all the Orders of Religion. The Houses were hanged with Tapestry, and the Souldiers on each side of the Street, with their Captains and Lieutenants did attend him. On Sunday the Ceremonies of this Marriage were solemnized. There was a great Assembly of People; There were three Cardinals besides the Legat, viz. Joyeux, Gondy, and Gienry; all the King's Counsaill, I except not Monsieur de Rosny, and some twenty Bishops. The King came not into the Church till after two of the Clock in the Afternoon; he came only attended by his ordinary Servants, for the Counsaill were there in the Church long before. The Queen came with him, supported by Monsieur de Conty and Monsieur Mompensier. She was attired with her Robe Royall, made of purple Velvet all embroidered over with Flours-de-lis of Gold faced with Ermins, and lined with white Taffaty. The Train was of an exceeding length, held up by Mesdames de Nemours, de Guise, the Countess of Avergne, and Madamoiselle de Guise, assisted by two Gentlemen, for their more Ease. She did wear about her Neck the Carquan which the King did cause to be made for her, valued at 25000 Ducats. Upon her Head she had a Crown of Gold, all beset with precious Stones, esteemed between 40 and 50000 Ducats. Before the Altar there was a Seat erected, where the King knelt on the Right-hand, and the Queen on the Left. The Legat did say the Mass; which being done, the King and Queen descended towards the Altar from their Seat, and there the Legat, with certaine short Prayers and Benedictions, did publish the Marriage. There was then by the Heralds, a Large cast of Coyn made of purpose, (whereof I send some Pieces to your Lordship) to the Somme of 500 Ducats. About four of the Clock the King did sit down to Dinner. There

An. 1600. There was in a lower Halle a Cloth of Estate set up, and under that a long Table, and at the upper end another Table joyned à la potance. The King first being sate, there sate by him the Legat and the other Cardinals; after them the Patriarch, then the Ambassadors of Spain and Venice. At the upper end of the Table that made the Potance, the Queen did sit on the Right-hand of the King, and at the same Board, but afar off, the Princesses and Ladies of better Quallity. On the other side of the Halle, there was another Table for Ladies of an inferiour Rank. The King was served by his Princes and Nobles. The Prince of Conty was the premier Maistre d'Hostel, the Duke Mompensier was Cup-bearer, the Duke of Guise was Carver. The Count St. Paul Grand Maistre, in the Absence of Count Soyffons, who is yet at St. Catherine. The Duke of Nevers premier Servant. But the Ceremonies in the Church, and the State of this Feast, the Confusion and Disorder of the Multitude did utterly disgrace; which was so great, as greater cannot be imagined. About seven of the Clock there was a Ball, where the King did dance with the Queen; but the Room was little, and the Press so great, that they were forced presently to give over.

I cannot assure your Lordship of any Resolution that the King doth yet take, either to stay here, or to return to Paris. Yet every Man is in hope, that at the end of this Moneth he will return. And Monsieur de Bernighen did advise me to write to your Lordship, not to remove from Paris, for that he did think the King would not long be from thence. He will shortly go to Bourg, which, as it is said, doth attend his coming before it will render; because the Captaine and Souldiers do desire the same Honor, which Montmelian and St. Catherine have had before them. The Legat hath all this Day been with the King's Counsaill. By my next I shall be able to advertize your Lordship, either of Peace or Warre.

The Merchant is returned with a Letter from the King to the premier President of Rouen, willing him to continue the Surseance of the Arrest yet for some certaine time; but for more Assurance, I hope to procure a Surseance under the Great Seal. I will not forget to procure a Copy of the Contract for the King's Marriage, which I hope to bring with me in my return to Paris. And so, &c.

Your Lordship's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

Lions, 21 Dec.
1600, O.S.

Right Honorable my very good Lord,

I Have forborne to write since my last by Simons, attending the Issue of this Treaty with Savoy, whereon the Resolution for all other Affairs doth chiefly depend. The which, though hitherto it hath been carried very closely, and with much more Secresy then ordinarily is practiced in this Court; yet I think I may presume to advertize your Lordship, that notwithstanding so many Reasons of State, which to the Judgment of the World should have enforced the Continuance of this Warre, the Peace is now at length concluded. So sacred is the Legat's Authority here, and so devoted to his Service are those powerfull Instruments, which have wrought this Work.

I am not sufficiently informed of all the Particularities of this Accord, but in generall thus much I understand, that the Marquisat doth still remaine to the Duke; and in Exchange, La Bress entirely on this side the Rhosne, with the Balliages thereto appertaining, shall come to the King, according to that part of the alternative Treaty, made between them the last Year in Paris. But herein is reserved a free Passage, for such Supplies of Soldiers, as shall be sent to the Assistance of the Archduke, out of Spain, Italy, or Provence. For the Expence which the King hath made in this Warr, he long insisted upon 800000 Duckats, but but 600000 are accorded; and for the Assurance, the King (untill the Reim-^{An. 1600.}bursement) shall retaine such Places, as now he holds in Savoy. The Fort of St. Catherine is to be razed, and I think, that is the greatest Favour Messieurs of Geneva do find. The King doth renounce all other his Pretensions, only the County of Nice shall remaine as now it stands, without Prejudice to the Right of either Party. The only Agents in this Treaty, are the Chancelier, Messieurs de Rohouy, de Villeroy, de Sillery, and the President Jeannin. The other of the Counsaill, not only not used, but not acquainted with the Proceedings.

The Reasons pretended for this Peace, are the want of Treasure to pursue the Warre; the Importunity of the Switzers for their Debt, for which at present 1200000 Duckats are promised within six Months; the imagined Preparations of Spain to succour Savoy; the wrongfull Informations against the Religion, maliciously suggested, but sincerely believed.

Yesterday the King spake with the States Agent, and told him, that he received Intelligence lately from Monsieur de Rochepot, that there were 2000 Spaniards ready to embark for the Low-Countries; he wished him to advertize yt, that Order might be taken to meet with them. He made this Answer, that tho' their Purpose was to come by Sea yf the Warre did continue; yet when they shall understand that the Passages shall be open, by reason of the Peace, they will alter their former Determination, and take their ordinary course through Piedmont and Savoy; whereupon he prayed him, so much to tender and respect their Good, as now that it was in his Power to cut off all those Succours from their Enemies, by impeaching their Passage, not to bereave himself of so great a Royalty, whereby he shall engage them to acknowledge from him the Conservation of their State. The King answered, that he had made his Peace, and his Word was passed, to grant the Spaniards Passage into the Archduke's Country. And your Masters, said he, are the Cause, that I must make my Peace; who did not govern with better Discretion, the Victory which they gained by the late Battle.

Monsieur de Comartin, President of the Grand Counsaile, doth shortly go to Vervin, there to meet with the Deputies from the Archduke, to establish a free Intercourse of Traffick and Commerce between France and those Dominions. There hath lately been a little Brouillery in Anjou; whereby the Fermiers of Salt wold have enforced the Nobles to take their Salt, in that manner as the meaner sort of People are bound to do. The Nobles have sent a Gentleman to inform the King of the Truth of the Cause, who takes it yll, and imputed it to one Monsieur de Clairmont of the Religion, and to Monsieur de Plessis; whose Pensions he hath suspended, upon pretence of that Treatize which he hath written in his own Defence, touching * the Conference at Fontainbleau. And since likewise in Anjou, there is a Captaine of the Religion, named La Febbiere, an antient Servitor of the Kings, who being possessed of a Chasteau called Vesins, assigned for the Exercise of the Religion by Virtue of the Edict, by Treachery of his Sergeant an Alleman, (corrupted for 300 Duckats by the Seignior of the Place) is not only dispossessed of his Government, and by Violence kept out; but his Goods and Household-stuff, which were therein, are detained from him. The Gentleman is here, and hath made his Complaint. The King's Answer is, that he should have kept better Guard. Monsieur Calladoun, who is Deputy for the Churches, hath likewise complained of this Insolency. The King doth ask, whether they mean to make it a publick Cause. He answered, that the Cause of the Religion was interested therein, and likewise his Honor, by whose Commandement, that Place was assigned for that Use. But the King replied, that they forced him to do that, and many other things more, contrary to his Honor and Conscience. Notwithstanding, at the Instance of the Deputy for the Reli-

* This Conference was between Monsieur de Plessis and Cardinal Perron.

An. 1600. gion, he hath commaunded the Governor of this Town, Monsieur de la Guiche, to suffer the Religion to be exercis'd at a place called Dulin, within a League of this Place, according to the Form of the Edict, which hitherto he hath violently refused.

The Jesuites as yet are not received, but must attend the King at Paris. As for the Council of Trent, it is committed to the Parlament of Paris, to examine the particular Articles of every severall Session; and to relate to the King, what they find doth impugne the Prerogative of the Crown, or the Liberty of the Church of France.

We only here attend the Departure of the Legat; who is defrayed by the King at the Charge of 200 Duckats the Day. He takes his way to Avignon, and so to Antibes. He will not linger by the way; upon Advertizement that he hath received, that the Cardinal St. George his Cossen, doth endeavour in his Absence to supplant his Credit and Reputation with the Pope. So soon as his back is turned, I do mean, God willing, to set forward towards Paris; but before, I hold it not convenient to depart, least upon any Alteration of these Affairs, the King should change his Purpose, who as yet is resolv'd to be at Paris by the end of the Moneth that comes. In the mean time, I have thought it not amiss to send these Letters expressly, being unwilling to adventure them by the ordinary Post.

Other Ceremonies or Solemnities there have been none for this Marriage, then before I have advertis'd. The Quarrell between Monsieur de Guise and de Espernon, is accorded by the King, they both professing before him to forget all Discourtesies, because he wold have it so.

Don Virginio is some Days since gone for England. Don Antonio is returned to Florence; wherein he is not ill advis'd, for his Company here was nothing gratefull, nor his Behaviour much pleasing to this Court. Cavalier Vinti is yet here, and it is thought he stays here, for a generall Acquittance from the King upon the Payment of the Queen's Dowry, which doth not amount to more then 350000 Crowns. Hereof in time may arise a great Quarrel. For the Duke Francesco left only this Daughter, but so much Treasure, besides Jewells and Moveables, that this Duke, when he came to survey all, said to those that then were with him, that if his Brother had had that Care which he ought of his Soul, he wold never have had Care to have heaped up so much Wealth. But when he was Cardinall he spake like a Cardinall. The State of the Queen's House is now in hand, for her ordinary Charge the King doth allow 100000 Crowns a Year, and for her extraordinary 12000 Crowns. The King will not permitt, that she should be served by any other then the French. Yet some few Italians, by her Importunity, are about her, and they are such who long have lived about this Court. And so, &c.

Your Lordship's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

London, 28th Dec. 1600.

YOUR two Letters of the fourth and eighth of this Month came both at once to my Hands upon Christmas-day, the one by Simons, and the other by Parnell; which I sent presently to Mr. Secretary, my self being then in a shrewd Fit of the Stone, which hath likewise forced me to keep in ever since. But I understand, the Queen received very great Contentment and Satisfaction of your Letters, and hath been inquisitive of you, both of my Uncle Killigrew and others; to whom I have given Direction, to answer upon the like Occasion, that which I hope may produce some good Effect towards you. I shall not need to write you much now, because I intend my Dispatch presently after the Holy-days, days; having indeed stayed for nothing else any time these three Weeks, but for Av. 1600.

the two Letters which the Queen intends to write with her own Hand to the King and the Queen, which she forbore to write because of a little Rhume she had, which is now past, thanks be to God. Although my Dispatch be like to be so speedy, yet I hope to hear once more from you before my going, and receive some more certainty of the King's Resolution for the passing of this Winter, which is the thing that most imports me in my own Particular. If the Queen, and the Counsaill come back to Paris, though the King should stay in those Parrs some time after, I think you may very well return, for it is like he will not be long behinde. I wish that before my coming, you made some little Summons to Monsieur de Villeroy, and Monsieur de Rhosny, to think of giving the Queen some Contentment this Year, and not to forget her in the making of the Estimate. For by their Answer, I shall discover somewhat of their Intention, and be the better prepared to deal with them at my coming.

The Things which I do especially recommend unto your Care to penetrate in the mean time, are the Cardinalls Negotiations, and the Intention, both of the French and Spaniards, about this Warr of Savoy. For our parts, I think we shall some time in February or March, resume the Treaty; but the naming the Commissioners is deferred, till the Answer comes to the last Letters we sent to Brusfells, which we expect within eight or ten Days. Here hath been an Expectation any time this Month, of 5000 Men to come out of Spayne by Sea into the Low-Countries, and Provision made both by the Queen and the States to encounter them; but the Wind hath been so constant in the North, till within these three Days, that we have heard nothing of them. If they come, I hope they will not find that Fortune that the Gallies did. You write of the Return of Monsieur de la Rochpot's Secretary out of Spaine: We have a News here, that himself is coming back likewise; and it is written from Bayonne, that the King there, hath not yet confirmed and sworn to the Peace. I pray you lay hold of the Offer which was made you by (Advice) the Ambassador of Florence, to procure some good Intelligence out of ($\Delta 200$) Spaine, for ours here is very weak I fear.

My Lord Deputy of Ireland hath in his return from Armagh, fought againe with Tiron in the same place, and beaten him, and forced his Passage, which we account a piece of very good Service. The Earle of Clanrickard hath had a Draught also at the Rebels of Connaught. Douell Sparmigh a great Rebell is come in, and hath given his Sons in Hostage. Torkough (Mr. Henry) a principall Rebell is dead lately. My Lord is now againe in the Field, to scowre and clear the Province of Lemster, and the County of Lease, from the straggling Rebels there; and Munster, as I have written before, is holden very peaceable. So as in Conclusion, we are in hope that the Heart of that Rebellion is broken, and that in one Year more there will be a great Work wrought there, Ainsi soit il. And so, with hearty Commendations from all your Friends, and namely from my Sister, who is a Wife of some fifteen Days standing; and who with my Wife thanks you for your Tokens, I commit you to God.

Your very loving Friend,
HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

Lyons, 2^d Jan.
1600. O. S.

Right Honorable my very good Lord,
SINCE my last of the 21st of December, I have written to your Lorsthip two Letters, both which I have retained, upon the changable Resolutions of this Treaty, which for many Days hath been ending, and now at length hath found an End. The Cause of this so long and doubtfull Delay, hath been the Difference

An. 1600. rence about the Fort of St. Catherine. The which the King (engaged thereunto by his Word and Honor) was resolved to have razed; and the Cardinall, obstinately peremptory, never to condescend that Geneva should reap so singular a Benefit by that Treaty, wherein he is the principall Agent. Upon this, when long they had demurred, the King purposing to take away the Cause of the Difference, gave Order to Monsieur de Nerastein, whom he had before made Governor of this Place, to raze it to the Ground, which without delay was accordingly performed. The Legat did take this in evill part, as done in Disgrace of him; and so the Issue of this Treaty did grow very doubtfull, which many did hold for broken. Whereupon the King, discontented with this Dalliance, gave order for his Departure hence to Bourg, and dispatched the Marechalls to provide his Lodgings. Many of the Great ones, disposed of themselves as their severall Occasions did invite. Monsieur de Rhosny intended to take his way to Paris. Who yesterday in the Forenoon taking his leave of the King, the King commaunded him not to depart, without first taking leave of the Legat, charging him not to speak one Word, of any Point concerning the Treaty. He presently repaired to the Legat, and told him, that by Commaundment from the King, he came to salute him before his Departure, and to receive his Commaundments towards Paris, whether the King's Service did necessarily require his speedy Presence. The Legat then began to enter into the Busynets, saying, that he should be sorry so good a Work should be frustrate of that End, which all Parties that were interestèd therein, had reason to desire. For which Cause, said he, as I have digested many other Things which did long lye heavy upon me, (meaning perhaps the taking of the Forts of Montmelian and St. Catherine, for he presumed that upon his Presence, the King of his own accord would have made a Surseance of Arms and Acts of Hostillity, and the establishing the Exercise of the Religion at Culin, within a League of this Town, which he said is done to brave him,) so he would likewise swallow this Affront of the demolishing this Fort, and accord to the Conditions of Peace which had been debated between them; and prayed him to inform the King, and to assure him thereof.

The Conditions are in Substance the same which before I advertized. The King doth quit the Marquisat, with all his Pretensions in Savoy and Piedmont, only the County of Nice must remaine in the Terms now it doth stand. The Duke must reimburse to the King only 100000 Crowns, for now no more is spoken of; and the La Bresse, with the Bailliages of Gex, Beauge and Veromais, must remaine to the King: So that the River of Rhosne, is now on that part the Limitts of France. Only there is reserved a Passage for the Spaniards some four Leagues from Geneva; where the Duke must neither impose any Tax, or pay, nor build any Fortress, as likewise he is forbidden to build any on the other side of the Rhosne. The Artillery and Munition in Montmelian doth belong to the King, as the Duke doth retaine all in the Marquisat. More Particularities are to be reserved, till I can find the Favour to have a Copy of the Treaty.

There hath lately been at Montpellier a little Broullerie, where the Monsieur de Ventadour, the Constable's Son-in-law, would have re-established the Massè. But the Inhabitants being all of the Religion, by ringing of the Bell, assembled themselves, and so enforced him to retire to his Lodging with his Assistants; whereof some are wounded, and one or two left dead in the Place. Upon Saturday last in the Evening, the King caused a Gentleman, called Comblat, belonging to the Count of Auvergne, to be committed close Prisoner. He hath been employed by the Count to the Duke of Bouillon, with whose Daughter the Count would make a Match for his Son. But it is worse interpreted, the Duke's Absence being much suspected, and many Insnuations are deliver'd against him; as the King within these few Days hath acknowledged to his Secretary, who doth follow his Cause.

Marechall Biron is retired from Bourg to Dijon, discontented that he is not called to this Treaty, and that the King hath nominated to the Government of the Chasteau, Monsieur de Poissi, without advising with him. The King is offend-
ed

ed with him, that in that petty Quirell between the Dukes de Espernon and Guise, Monsieur de Biron did send to Espernon, offering, that if the Matter were to be tryed between Man and Man, himself for his Second; if by Troopes, Assistance of 300 Gentlemen, and all of Worth. In summe, the King doth suspect too great a League, between him, Auvergne, and de Espernon. The King hath receaved Advertisement, that now yt is discovered, that the Archduke is not Seignior of the Low-Countries, but only a Lieutenant to the King of Spain, to whom the Towns have lately renewed their Allegiance. The Defence for forreign Merchandizes of Silk is accepted, in Consideration of 10000 Crowns, which this Town hath bestowed upon the King.

Don Sebastian is delivered out of Prison, upon Charge to depart the Town of Venice within one Day, and the Territories within forty, upon Payne to be confined to the Galleys for ten Years, or to perpetuall Imprisonment. This King hearing that he will have recourse hither, and lye heavy upon him, (which was the truest Reason why he refused to write for his Delivery) doth purpose to turn him over into England, upon pretence, that he cannot supply his Wants, without Breach of the League between Spain and himself. Some of the Portugalls who are here Sollicitors for him, have to that purpose talked with me. I have wished them not to marr their Fortune in the making; and to consider, that they have to deal against a King, who is very potent in the Court of Rome; where he will inform, yf he shall come into England, That by Lutherans, Enemies to the Church, there is suborn'd an Impostor, to trouble the Repose of his State, whereof he hath been long possessed. He will cause the Pope to send forth his Bull, excommunicating all such as shall give him any Aid, Assistance, Countenance or Favour. They know, how obsequious their Countrey is to the Devotion of the Pope. The Pope's Bulls have heretofore dispossessed Princes of their Kingdoms, and with much less difficulty will they be able to hold him out, who hath no such great means to enter in. He cannot better bestow himself, then where he shall live free from those Impositions, as with this King, who is Catholique; who hath best means to give him greatest Aid, and cannot want Will. And so, &c.

Your Lordship's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

Paris, 13 Jan.
1600. O.S.

Right Honorable my very good Lord,

UPON Conclusion of the Peace, and purpose of present Return of the King and his Court into these Parts, not out of Hope to have been so happy here to have found your Lordship, I departed from Lions the third of this Month, and arrived here yesterday in the Evening. Where finding this Letter (that I had sent from Lions in post) here yet in the Posts Hands, I have intreated this Gentleman, Mr. Fludde, who I understood was purposed within some few Days to return home, for the more speedy and assured Conveyance of these Letters, to deliver them, whereby he should perform a kind Office, very acceptable to your Lordship.

The King resolved to depart from Lions upon Saturday last in post, and to come to Fontainebleau, whether before he sent in post Monsieur de la Frontenac, who is Maistre d'Hotel de la Reyne, to prepare the Lodgings; and before him, Monsieur de Montauban, Controuler de l'Argenterie, in post to Verneuil, where la Marquise is, with Letters from him, that she should presently meet him there, where he will have her stay till the Queen's coming, who shall come after him fair and softly with the Counsaill, and then he will send her, to Malherbes. So this Night, or to Morrow at the furthest, the King will be at Fontainebleau, from whence he will not stirr before the Queen's coming; where she will

An. 1600. will make no long abode, but will hasten to Paris, for whose Entry the King hath written to the Provost de Marchands, to make no Preparations at all, not willing to put them to any idle and unnecessary Charges; which he will thinke better bestowed, yf yt be added to that Present; which customarily these great Cities do make to their Princes, at their first Abode.

I cannot assure any thing of the Legat's Departure, who since the Peace hath been Partner with the Queen at the christning of a Child of a Senator's at Lions. Yet for all this Honor, and many greater ones that he hath received here, he doth give forth, that he hath not been so well treated, as he expected.

The Queen Dowager hath long been sick at Moulins, and as I passed through that Town she was in great Extremity; and since that, I am assured, that she is dead, though her Death be concealed. There was then with her the Dutches of Mercœur her Sister, (whose Husband in his return from Hungary, for Devotion is gone to Madonna de Lorretto;) and her other Sister, the Dutches of Luxemburgh, was then expected; between whom her Jewells, (wherein she is held rich) and other Goods shall be divided. Her Joynture returns to the King, which was 100000 Crowns the Year, though the King doth assure this Queen but of 60000.

The Seigniory of Venice have designed two of the most ancient and honorable Persons in their State, Leonardo Donati, and Giovanni Delfini, for the Ambassage, to congratulate the Marriage; though it is not expected, that they will yet arrive for many Months. The King hath been advertised by Letters expressly from that State, of the Enlargement of Sebastian, where they likewise have delivered their Judgment of him, how they hold him for an Imposture, a Calabrese borne, of lowest Condition, who cannot fear any thing worse, than Nature or Fortune hath allotted for him. The Day after his Departure from Venice, the Sea did swell with that Rage and Violence, contrary to the Course of former Times, that it did overflow the Streets, and drown the Magazines, to the great Loss of many Merchants, to the Sume of 3000000 Crowns. And so, &c.

Your Lordship's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

London, 23^d Jan. 1600.

YOUR Letters of the 2^d and 13th of this Moneth arrived heere the 21st, and yesterday the Queen finished her two Letters to the King and Queen; so as I look now to be dispatched forthwith, and to set forward, about the Morrow after Candlemas-day. I mean to come by Rouen wheresoever I land, because I would make a beginning with the Commissioners there, in some course of Justice, for the Wrongs we have received by the French, as well as they have pursued their Complaints, and received Satisfaction here. I would be glad to meet you there, for that and other Causes; but I would not wish you to stir, till you hear more; for upon my Arrivall I will presently dispatch one to you, so as you may meet me time enough at Rouen.

Since my last by Romain, my Lord of Pembrooke is dead, having left his Son but two Months within Age. We are in Expectation of a Vice Chamberlaine, and a Chancellor of the Dutchy, viz. Sir Walter Rawleigh, and Sir John Stanhop; and that Serjeant Heale shall be Master of the Rolls, upon sundry good Considerations: Many other Matters I refer till our Meeting. In the mean time being glad of your safe return to Paris, I end with hearty Commendations from my self and all your Friends. And so I committ you to God.

Your very loving Friend,

HENRY NEVILLE.

Sir

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood.Mr. Winwood,London, 28th January 1600.

I Wrote unto you very lately by Captaine Prinne, who is gone over to meet with the pretended Sebastian. I have little to add now, yet this Bearer Mr. Oliphant being ready to depart, and offering himself unto me, I would not let him go without some few Lines unto you. I may perhaps put off my Journey, some three or four Days longer then I wrote in my last; and if I could, I would be glad to deferr it till the end of the Term, which is the 12th of February; for I have much busyness to dispatch about my own private Estate, but I fear I shall be hastned away. There are no Commissioners yet appointed for the Treaty in the Low Countries; other News there is none, and therefore I will entertaine you no longer with nothing, but will here end, and committ you to God.

Your very assured Freind,

HENRY NEVILLE.

I pray you tell Stallin, it will be time enough to give Answer about my House, when I come my self.

Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood.Mr. Winwood,London, 29th Jan. 1600.

I Have received by your Man both your Letters, that of the 21st of December, and that of the 24th, which overtook him at Diepe; the latter whereof held us in Suspence, what to believe touching the Peace with Savoy, till the French Ambassadoir at his last Audience, acknowledged that it was concluded; having some few days before, absolutely denied it to all the World. That Audience of his was very sowre and full of heat, he charging the Queen peremptorily with denyall of Justice; and she maintaining her Honor, and blaming his passionate-ness, so without reason to tax her; and imputing it to a turbulent Spirit, that delighted to do evill Offices. I marvail the rather at his violent Proceeding at this time, because I had offered him but two days before to communicate to him the Answers that the Judge of the Admiralty, and the other Commissioners had made and presented in Writing, to all his Complaints, and to receive his Reply unto them; and upon Report thereof made unto my Lords, to be a means for his further Satisfaction wherein there should appear Cause, which he seemed to accept very well of; but the very Day that I purposed to have gone to him about it, he prevented me, and went to the Court in this Heat. It is conceived here, that he hath received some Direction to begin to quarrell with us, and so to stop our Mouths from demanding any Money, and I think the Queen told him plainly as much; but howsoever he hath made himself very distastfull here, and I fear I shall have some Charge against him at my coming. All this tends little to the sweetning of my Entertainment there, or to the enabling me to effect any gratefull Service; but I must have Patience.

The Merchants of Rouen, have lately received Intelligence from the Farmers of the Customs, Deputies to Gondy and Zamet, that all Manufactures of Wool shall be forbidden shortly. I pray you hearken carefully after it, and oppose your self, if you discover any such thing, that they may not pretend that we gave way to it. In my last Letters which I wrote unto you, upon the Receipt of yours by Simons, I wish't you to make some little Summons to Monseigneur de Rhosny and Villeroy, to think of some Reimbursement for the Queen this Year. Yf this Peace be concluded, they have little Pretext to refuse it, considering the

An. 1600. King is to be repayed his Charges for the Warr, and thereby left in as good State as when he began it; and is besides assured of Peace with all the World, which before he stood in doubt of, and alleadged it as a principal Excuse, why he could not satisfy her. Besides we understand, that the Pope, to bring this Peace to pass, hath assented to the Alienation of Church Lands to the Value of 1200000 Crowns; out of all this, if he afford the Queen nothing, he shall deal far otherwise with her, then she deserves. I pray you not only to motion it unto them, but if any other Occasion be offered, of your Speech with the King, to touch it to him too, because now is the time, that they make the Estimate of their Receipts and Payments for the whole Year. Touching my coming, it is yet as uncertaine as when I wrote last. There is no Letter written, or Warrant signed yet, only they speake every Day of dispatching me, and I my self make no hast. I think it will rest, till we hear once more from you; and till we be resolved of our Commissioners, that shall go into the Low Countries to that Treaty; which having let slip the best Opportunity, we shall, I think resume very shortly, tho' alieniore tempore.

Don Virginio Orsino hath been here, and very graciously and honourably entertained by her Majesty; he is gone hence to the Archduke. Our home Matters are as I have heretofore written, without any late Alteration; only my Lord Grey, upon some new conceived Discontent, assaulted my Lord of Southampton on Horseback in the Street. For which Contempt against her Majesty's Commandement given before to them both, he was committed to the Fleet.

Your Friend Doctor James, the Physitian, is dead about three Days since, and the old Countess of Bedford a little before. The Resolution for a Parliament is altered, and no Summons sent out yet. I have taken Order with Monsieur Bashe that you shall receive any Money you will call for, either at Lions, or Rouen. And so with my very hearty Commendations, I committ you to God, &c.

Your very loving Friend,

HENRY NEVILLE.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 10th February 1600. O. S.

I presume this Letter shall meet your Lordship on the way. As yet, there is no certaine Assurance, that the Duke of Savoy hath signed the Peace. This last Week here came to the King from the Cardinall, a Camieriere del Papa, called Contenole, with Letters, assuring that though the Duke (desirous even in all Formallities to give the King of Spain full Satisfaction) doth for a Season deferr to ratify the Treaty, yet so soon as he had advertised him of what was concluded, and received Answer thereto, he would and should really perform, what he in his Name had undertaken, and his Commissioners for the Treaty had accorded. The Duke is said to be now at Nissa, and the Legat is gone from Avignon thither to him. The King is much troubled with this kind of proceeding, which he findeth very strange; and now beginneth to misdoubt, that the Duke never intended sincerely to proceed, but hath used this cunning Mediation of the Pope, the more securely to draw him and his Councill on to the Conclusion of this Treaty; thereby to gaine time for the Advancement of his own Affairs, and to cause him to licence and discharge his Souldiers, to disband his Gentry and Nobility, and to let fall his Preparations intended for this Spring: And which is most materiall, to withdraw his Spirit from all Cogitations of Warre, to the which he will be unwilling to return, when once he hath resumed his former Course of Ease and Repose. This Discourse is the rather maintained, because the Duke hath not dissolved his Men of Warre; and that the Levies of Men, both with the Switzers and in Italy, do still continue; and the Preparations

ons of Spayne from all Parts confirmed to be so great, as that they are both by Sea and Land, made equall to those of 88. Though the Time be expired when the Duke should have ratified the Peace; yet because he doth not refuse, but demand a longer Delay, the Constable, and Monfieur de Villeroy and de Sillery, do yet attend at Lions, to receive his last Resolutions. An. 1600.

Here is a Report that the Pope should be dead; which if it be true, the Duke will make less Scruple, (if it be for his Advantage) to disavow the Legat in this Treaty. There is come fresh News out of Spaine, that the Generall of the Gallies hath arrested all such French Ships as were about St. Lucar, seizing on their Goods, and imprisoning all.

On Sunday, the King in Violet, and the Queen in Black, did mourn for the Queen Dowager. She in the Afternoon went to the Celestines; but the King prayed for her Soul at the Hostel of Bourgogne. The King hath presented his Mistress to the Queen, and withall, recommended her to her best Graces. The Queen did kindly entertaine her, and since all three have dined on Sunday together in Publick. He hath provided a House for her hard by the Louvre, and will follow the track of Henry the Second, who did keep Madam Valentinois in Court, in presence of the Queen Mother.

Here hath been a Speech, that Prince Joyntville would go to Flanders to the Archduke, accompanied with 4000 Horse; which in my Opinion, are numbred according to the Greatness of his Mind, rather than to his Means, or Ability. There are many in like Sort, that purpose to go to the Assistance of the States; who have removed Monfieur de la Noüe from his Government, and appointed in his Place Monfieur de Chastillon, whereat the King is much offended.

The Parlament at Rouen have refused the King's Patents for the Surseance of the Arrest, and withall have enjoyned all Parties to appear within this Moneth before the King and his Counsaill. They have ordained, that our Merchants may sell such Cloths as are allowed to be Loyall, and those vicious to be sequestred, untill the King's further Pleasure be known. I understand a Gentleman of Normandy hath begg'd the Confiscation of the King. I have advertized the Chancellor of it, who is willing there should be an Injunction given forth against the Parlament, which must be made by a Secretary of State. But the Letters Patents, whereupon this Injunction must be founded, by the Negligence of some one of our Merchants, to whom they were committed, are lost. I think the Course now must be, to proceed by a Request, either thereby to procure the Arrest wholly to be repeal'd, or the Rigour thereof mittigated.

I did likewise recommend Mr. Etour's Case unto him, for the reimbursing of the Rochellers Debt; who hath promised him what Favour the Equity of the Cause will afford.

The greatest Man with the King is the Count de Soissons, the Man whom most he feares, and most he hates; which makes me remember the Duke of Bouillon, who doth now give hope of his speedy return, because there is a House taken for him by his Commandment. And so, &c.

Your Lordship's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

Paris, 17 Feb.

1600. O. S.

Right Honorable my very good Lord,

Y^T may please your Lordship to understand, that by Letters which yesterday the King receiv'd from Monfieur de Villeroy, he now holds the late Treaty with Savoy for signed and ratified, and so hath privately advertized to many. Though for ought I can learn, the Letters do not directly assure so much, but only import, that the Duke hath lately sent unto the King's Commissioners, who remaine at Lions, to receive the Ratification and Execution of this Treaty; praying

F f f f

An. 1600. ing to be excused for his long Delay therein, which doth not proceed from any purpose he hath to disavow the Treaty, but only of desire first to advertize the King of Spain; whose Answer when he shall have received, he will presently perform all Points, what the Conditions of the Treaty do require on his Part.

It is confirm'd out of Italy, that the Duke and Count Fuentes have mett together, and continued since the Conclusion of this Peace, at a Place called Sommo, upon the Po, five Miles from Pavia. And the last Letters from those Parts, do yet averr great Preparations for Warrs, both in the Kingdom of Naples, Dutchy of Millan, and State of Genoa.

Most of those Ships, which in my last I advertized to be stayed at St. Lucar by Sevill, are of St. Mallo in Britany. The Goods of four of them are said to be confiscated, the Merchants imprison'd, and Marriners put into the Gallies; upon Pretext, that contrary to the Ordinance of the Country, there was found some Store of Coine in them, which they did purpose to carry away with them. Here is nothing more freshly spoken, nor more assuredly believed, then the great Preparation for Warr both by Sea and Land, which are intended by Spain. Yf this Peace with France take place, yet it is not to be thought that so great a Charge in levying such an Army, (for they speak of 22000 Landmen) will be dissolved, without attempting some important Exploit.

Sebastian, that would be of Portugall, is fallen, de fieure, en chaud mal. For unadvisedly, without purpose or pretext, taking the Way of Florence to Livorne, after he had stayed there four or five Days, by the Duke's Commandment he was arrested Prisoner, and there yet remains. The King takes it unkindly at the Duke's hand, that he should refuse any Man the Liberty to pass through his Territories, that was coming to him. But it is not to be supposed, that the Duke did imprison him with a purpose so easily to set him at Liberty: First he will see at what Estimate the King of Spaine doth prize him, and so accordingly will proceed to make his best Merchandize of him.

Yesterday being at the Louvre, the King took me aside, and asked me what News I had from England. I told him I had not lately received any. He then told me of a strange Commotion which should lately be in London, which he compared to the Barricades at Paris; intended, as he said by the Earls of Essex and Southampton, followed by divers Knights and other Quallity, to the Number of 2000. I asked him if he had received this Information from his Ambassador. He said no, but by Monfieur de Rohan, who freshly came out of England, and arrived that Morning in Post. He told me many other Particulars, which I take no Pleasure to recite. Your Lordship may judge of the Affliction I feel of that I know, and the Fear I conceive, of that which I know not. I attend howrly from your Lordship so farr to be informed, as in your Discretion, you shall think the Knowledge of the Truth, to be avallable to her Majesties Service. These Men here sollace the Remembrance of their late Miseries, with the Hopes of their Neighbour's Calamities, and speak that, which my Heart doth break to think of, and my Hand trembles to put down.

Here is expected from the Archduke and Infanta, upon Wednesday next, Roderigo de Lasco, Captaine of their Guards of Horse, to congratulate this Marriage. It is reported, the King of Spain doth change his Residence from Madrid, and remove his Court to Valladolid, at the Pleasure of the Duke of Lerma; whereat the rest of the Nobillity for their particular Interests, (every Man of Quallity being well settled and accomodated at Madrid) are much discontented. And so, &c.

Your Lordship's, &c,

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

Right Honorable my very good Lord,

I Have not written since my last by Mr. Fludd, upon assured hope of your Lordship's present Return, which your Letters of the 23^d and 28th of January did seem to promise; nether since have I had much matter to write, nor any means to send. Now this Messenger departing, I would not omit to advertise what here we have. The King hath been within these fifteen Days, twice or thrice in this Town, in his Passage to Verneuil; for la Marquise, who is held to be with Child, excused her self upon that Indisposition, from meeting him at Fontainebleau. The Queen, for whose comming the Opening of St. Germain's Fair was adjourn'd, arrived here upon Fryday Night. She came in by the Fauxbourghs of St. Marcell, and so into those of St. Germain, where she is lodged at Gondy's House. For her Entry there was no Solemnity at all, only at the Arsenal, Monfieur de Rbosny caused some few Pieces to be shott off. It is here received that the Queen is with Child, and so before her coming to this Town the King was advertised by Madam de Nemours, and those Physicians which did attend her.

The Constable, Monfieur de Villeroy, and de Sillery, remaine at Lyons to see the Execution of this Peace. Here hath been a Bruite, and so yet remains, That the Duke of Savoy should refuse to sign the Treaty, and that he hath been lately in Pavia to conferr with the Count Fuentes. Which Bruites, in my Opinion, are either grounded upon his former Proceedings, (for all his Actions have been carried with little Discretion) or else because he deffereth to ratify the Peace untill the last Day prefixed, which is to morrow, rather than that he hath any purpose to gainsay what the Legat and his Commissioners authorized from him by speciall Commission have concluded; and if he had purposed, yet hath he no means, so that Extremity will force him to maintaine his Honor.

The King is to receive but 100000 Crowns from the Duke of Savoy, which is to be paid at Lions within six Months. But over and above all other Conditions which in my former I have set down, he must deliver Chasteau Dauphiné and Tour de port, which are in the Confines of Dauphiné, and of the ancient Patrimony of that Country. Monfieur Villeroy doth attribute the Honor of this Peace to Monfieur de Rbosny, in truth to shuffle off the Envy from himself; and Monfieur de Rbosny doth not spare to assume it; delivering openly how advantageous it is to the King, who in Bresse shall have at his Commandment 900 Lords and Gentlemen, and 250000 Crowns a Year of Revenew; whereas the Marquisat would be a Charge to the King of 50000 Crowns. But almost all they which are of the Religion, as well as the Nobility, who more regard the Honor of France, then the Profit of the King's Purse, do hold it for a shamefull and dishonourable Treaty. Either because the Peace is made, (presuming that the War abroad is their Quiet and Repose at home,) or for the manner, that the King should quit the Marquisat, the ancient Dominion of this Crown, whereby he held in Bridle Piedmont and Savoy, and in Devotion all the Princes in Italy, either by the means he had in their Necessity to relieve them, or the Power he had, yf he thought fit to annoy them. In generall, yt is rather accounted a good Bargain, better befitting a Merchant or private Man, then an honourable Treaty, besecming the Greatness of so mighty a King.

I have sollicitted Monfieur de Rbosny for a Reimbursement of some good Summe of Money for her Majesty, "urging the Necessity of her Majesty's Affairs, and " their Promises the last Year, together with her Majesty's long Forbearance;
" that as she had not been eager in pressing Repayment, so she would not be ri" gorous in exacting Millions at a Payment, but would conform her self to the " King's Conveniency, so that amongst many to whom they gave Contentment,
" she might not finde her self only forgotten, who in reason should first be re-
" membred; both because her Occasions do most require it, and her Courtesies
" deserve

An. 1600. "deserve a greater Recompence, then so slenderly to be respected. But I could get no other Answer of him then this, That I must speake to the King, for he was to do but what he was appointed. To which purpose I will watch all Opportunity, sith by your Lordship's Letters of the 2^d and 19th of January I am so commanded.

For the Arrest against our Cloath, mistrusting that the Letter which Monsieur Villeroy did send from the King, was written but for fashion sake, (as it so proved, for the premier President did flatly refuse to fullfill the Contents;) I did obtaine of the Counsaill a Surseance for three Months without the Privity of Monsieur de Villeroy, and have some Days since sent it to our Merchants. Before this time of three Months be expired, some course must be taken for the re-establishing of our Trade, (whereof our Merchants will not think before the last Day,) for there is no hope longer to prorogue the time.

I hear nothing of Mr. Cobvell. The Pilgrims of Scotland are returned from Rome, and one Chancellour to the Bishop of Weefmes, who is the intellectus Agens of this Negotiation and hath followed it at Rome, is sent to Spaine, whose Return is shortly expected.

My Lord Semple is lately come hither out of Spaine. He speaks as I understand, of great Preparations that are made there, and are yet in hand. But withall he says, he hath discovered great Weakness, for want of Money, want of Leaders and Men of Conduct, and of Marriners and experienced Pilots. He gives forth, that there is a generall Alliance between Spaine and their King, to whome there shall be sent from those Parts, an Ambassador to reside amongst them.

(191) The Duke of Bouillon did lately send a Gentleman to (144) the King. The kind Entertainment which he did receive, doth make us believe, that at the end of this Month he will be here. Cavalier Vinti doth come to this Town, who is no more near the Dispatch of his Busyness, then the first Day he came into France. And so, &c.

Your Lordship's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Monfieur,

De Londres 4 Mars 1600. O. S.

*J*E croy que le malheur qui est arrivé au Conte d'Effex quand vous esties en Angleterre, vous a fait juger soudainement quelle seroit l'issue de ceste tragedie. Laquelle ayant esté accompagnée à son commencement de beaucoup d'infortuns & de disgrâce, il s'en est ensuivi la fin, telle qu'un chacun la redoubtoit, pleine de cruaute & de tristesse; qui a esté un Jugement de mort, contre le Conte d'Effex, & le Conte de Southampton. Auquel ayant assisté, par un desir de veoir une chose si nouvelle, & aussi de remarquer la contenance de ses Ennemis, qui l'avoient petit à petit poulsé à ceste ruine; j'ay pense que ce seroit trop oublier mon devoir, si je ne vous escrivois particulièrement, tout ce qui c'est passé en ce Jugement.

Le 17^{me} de Fevrier, le Conte d'Effex s'estant rendu entre les mains del Admiraut sur le onze heures de la nuit, avec promesses d'infines curtoisies, fut

* The following Letter is printed from a Copy in Sir Ralph Winwood's own Hand. It is there mentioned to be written by Monsieur de Boisfisse to Monsieur de Rohan; though when Complaint was made of it, he openly disavow'd it. I could not prevail with my self to omit it, (though it seems to be wrote with a good deal of Spleen and Bitterness) because there are some Facts mentioned in it, which are no where else to be found; but what Credit is to be given to them, I must entirely submit to the Reader's Judgment.

mené le lendemain à la Tour; & peu apres les Contes de Southampton & de Rutland, le Chevalier Cristophe Blond beaupere dudit Conte, Ferdinando Gorge * Gouverneur de Charles Davers, & quelques autres Gentilshommes, qui furent imprisonnés autre part. Ou ayant esté quelque temps, il arriva qu'un Capitain nommé Lee, estimé un de plus braves d'Angleterre, fort serviteur dudit Conte, se bazarda de dire † à un sien amy, n'y a il point moyens, que sept ou huit bons compagnons comme nous sommes, puissent se jeter aux pieds de sa Majesté, en despit de ces Milords & de ce petit Bossu, pour luy remonstrer l'injure qu'on fait à tant de brave noblesse, qui est du tout innocente de ce qu'on luy impose, & qui pourroit quelque jour luy rendre quelque bon service? L'autre luy respondit froidement, qu'il ne trouvoit point de moyen. Or bien dit il, je luy en parlera quant je devrois mourir: aussi bien, j'ay une requeste à luy presenter pour mes affaires, & par mesme moyen, je pourray aisément executer mon desseign. Ce que l'autre ayant entendu, il ne fallit (comme c'est la coustume des Anglois de ce trahir l'un l'autre,) d'en advertir le Secretaire Cecille. Lequel prenant l'occasion par les cheveux, se servoit de ce que ce Capitaine avoit dit, & le changeant tout au rebours, fait accroire à la Royne avec ceux de son party, ‡ qu'un tel avoit esté trouvé par le Chancelier en sa Chambre, ou elle a accoustumé de manger, avec un pistolet pour c'est effect. La Royne toute epouvantée, & craignant fort la mort, commandé qu'il soit cruellement puny: Ce qui ne fut pas differé, car il fut plus tost executé qu'il ne sceut l'occasion pourquoi on le faisoit mourir. La peine fut telle, on luy arracha la nature, puis on la jettà au feu; apres, on luy ouvroit le ventre, luy arrachant le cœur & les entrailles, ce qu'estant consumé par le feu, on fait plusieurs quartiers de son corps, lesquelles ils meirent en parade sur les Tours de la Ville. (Ilz ont accoustumé de punir ainsi, ceux qu'ilz appellent Traistres.)

Or l'execution de ce Gentilhomme estant fait, les ennemis du Conte d'Essex ayant beau jeu, ne manquent point de belles raisons pour retenir ceste princessè en sa premiere crainte, & luy persuader, que cela venoit de la part du Conte d'Essex, qu'il y en avoit bien d'autres qui tramoient un mesme desseign. Surquoy, elle commandé à ceux de son Conseil d'examiner le Conte d'Essex & le Conte de Southampton, & d'en faire brieve Justice. Lesquelz ne voulantz respondre, demandent d'estre juger devant leurs payrs. Ce qu'estant accordé, (plustost pour forme de Justice, & pour faire mieux accroire au peuple qu'ilz estoient Traistres, que par desir qu'ilz y eussent,) ilz sont conduictz en la grande Salle de Westminster la premier jour de Mars, pour respondre aux accusations qu'on leur mettoit dessus.

Leur juges, estoient neuf Contes & Seize Barons. Le Grand Seneschal, qu'ilz appellent Stuard, estoit le Grand Tresorier, fort mal propre pour ceste charge. Il y avoit aussy huit Conselliers de leur Parlement, lesquelz estoient assis un peu bas que les Pairs.  This List of the Barons differs a good deal from Cambden's, as the Reader will easily perceive, if he gives himself the Trouble to compare them.

An. 1600. la Warre, Morlay ; il y avoit aussy un Viconte que s'appelle Byndon. Les Accusateurs estoient un sergent en Loy, & Advocat de la Royne qu'ilz appellent le Atturnay Bacon.

Les Accusations estoient en General, qu'il n'estoit Sorty de sa Maison que pour esmouvoir le peuple à le suivre ; qu'il avoit empesche l'Heraut de faire sa Proclamation ; qu'il avoit fait resistance en une rue, ou son escuyer fut tué, * son beaupere fort blesté, & luy mis en grand danger de sa vie, ayant eu le chapeau percé de deux barquebuzades ; † qu'il avoit retenu le Chancellier, le Chef de Justice, le Conte de Oustre, & Knolles son oncle, prisonniers en sa Maison ; qu'il estoit papiste ; qu'il retenoit les Jesuits en sa Maison ; qu'il vouloit usurper la Couronne ; qu'il avoit de grandes Intelligences en Escosse, & en Irlande avec le Conte de Tyrone. Bref, qu'il avoit vendu la Ville de Londres al Infante, & qu'il en avoit reçu quelque Argent. Voila ce que generallement ilz luy objecterent. Les Accusations principales, & dont ilz faisoient plus de bruit, sont celles cy : D'avoir retenu le Chancellier, le Chef de Justice, le Conte de Oustre, & Knolles, prisonniers ; d'estre sorty de sa Maison ; & d'avoir escrit une lettre, par laquelle ilz se forcoient de le rendre coupable. Les autres n'estoient que pour le charger d'avantage, & pour le rendre plus odieux. Ayant fait que bien peu d'instance devant que respondre à toutes ses Accusations, il pria ses Juges de luy permettre une chose, que n'est point refusée aux personnes les plus Viles ; c'estoit, de n'estre point jugé par ses ennemis propres, & de reprocher ceux qu'il voudroit. Il luy fut respondu ‡ par les huit Conscilliers fort malicieusement, qu'il n'estoit pas possible, que ses ennemis, Gens de grand qualité, quand ils avoyent fait le serment On mi honour, comme ilz disent, (qui vaut autant que sur mon honneur,) qu'ilz voulussent rompre un serment, que leur doit estre plus cher cent fois que la vie.

Cette demande luy estant deniée avec beaucoup d'iniquité, il respondit à tout mot à mot avec une telle assurance & contenance, qu'il rendoit ses ennemis si estonnés, que voulant parler contre luy ilz demeuroyent muets ; ou s'ilz parloyent, c'estoit avec un begayement qui tesmoignoît assez leur crainte, accompagnée d'une mauvaise volonté. Il disoit souventesfois, qu'il n'estoit pas venu là pour sauver sa vie, mais pour deffendre son honneur ; qu'il y avoit long temps que ses ennemis le desiroyent là pour avec leur chiquanries & leur tortues inventions luy faire perdre la teste, ce que certainement n'estoit point si caché qu'il ne le fut connu à un chacun. En outre, cecy doit bien tenir le premier lieu de la plus grand mechanteté qu'il se puisse commettre ; c'est, que les loix d'Angleterre veulent, que les tesmoigns soient examinés devant les juges, & devant le criminel ; au contraire, bouleversant les loix, & ses servant à leur poste, meirent en avant quelques fausses examinations du Conte de Rutland, & du Chevalier Christophle Blond & Charles Davers, lesquelz devoient estre ouïes, & non pas le papier, qui estoit rempli de tout ce qui pouvoit nuire audit Conte d'Essex. Et pour mieux joïer leur roole, ilz feirent venir Ferdinand Gorge, le plus grand Amy qui eust le Conte d'Essex, & le premier qui sortit avec luy ; lequel, corrompu par ses ennemis avec promesses de ne mourir point, accusa le Conte d'Essex ; mais depuis, vaincu par sa Conscience, & des demandes du Conte qui le pressoyent fort, il confessa, que le dit Conte ne luy avoit jamais parle qu'il eust desseing de sayser la Royne, comme ses ennemis luy reprochoyent.

Or ne se contentant pas de ceste fausseté, & d'autres petites Galanteries de leur bon esprit, ilz font venir le Secretaire, comme personne interposé en leur tragedie. Lequel ayant plus de deux ans passé, bien songé à ce qu'il avoit à dire, tonnà une quantité de paroles contre le Conte d'Essex. Lequel n'eut faute de responce de moyens pour maintenir au Secretaire, qu'il avoit eu Intelligence avec le feu Roy d'Espagne l'année de la Grande Flotte. Ce que picqua si fort le Secretaire, (pour en estre paraventure quelque chose) qu'il se prit à crier tout haut, qu'il ne feroit jamais service à sa Majesté, si on ne luy ostoit la teste comme à un Traistre. Et continuant son discours, il se mit à genoux, protestant devant Dieu de sa Fidellité, (il n'avoit pas oublié ce jour la petite boiste, car en me vie je ne le veis plus beau.) Aussitost les Pairs se leveront de leur places, & le chapeau au poing, le prierent se relever; disant, qu'ilz croyoyent fermement, que sa Majesté n'avoit point de meilleur Serviteur que luy, & que sa Fidellité leur estoit assez connue, (à leur contenance ilz redoubtoyent plus ce petit homme, que leur conscience & que leur Royne.) Le Secretaire ayant donc relasché à ses injures, un peu apres les Advocat^z meirent fin à leur Accusation; & Messieurs les Pairs à leur confitures, & à la bierre; car ce pendant que le Conte & les Advocat^z playdoyent, Messieurs baussroyent comme s'ilz n'eussent mangé de 15 jours, prenant aussy force Tabac, entre autres le Conte Cumberland; puis, s'en allerent en une Salle pour donner leur voix; ou, bien saouls & bien yvres de Tabac, condemnarent les deux Contes au mesme supplice que le Capitaine Lee, les appellans Traistres & Rebelles.

Le Conte d'Essex oyant prononcer son Arrest, fut aussy content & assuré comme si on l'eust mené dancer avec la Royne. Le Jugement durà depuis huit heures de matin jusques à sept du soir, auquel une quantite de Gentilzhomes & de Dames se trouverent; lesquelz ayant lasché la boucle de leur yeux, verserent tant de larmes, que si les Juges n'eussent eu un courage de Tygre, (que ne cherche que le sang) ilz eussent sans doute revoque leur Sentence. Depuis peu il a couru un bruit, que le Conte Southampton avoit sa grace, & que le Conte Rutland, qui n'est pas encore jugé, seroit quitte pour d'Argent. Il m'a esté dit aussi de bonne parte, que le Conte d'Essex & le petit Cecile avoyent celebre la Cene ensemble, & qu'ilz estoient reconciliés.

Voyla tout ce que j'ay peu veoir & recognoistre de ce malheur; lequel pour estre arrivé à la personne d'Angleterre qui a plus de vertus, & qui cherit plus la France, ne peut qu'il n'apporte un extreme regret à un chacun, principalement à vous, qui pour estre extrêmement vertueux & scavant en la valeur de ses galands, la recognoissies mieu que personne cette perte inestimable. C'est pourquoy je mectray fin à ce triste discours, me contentant seulement du jugement que vous en fera, & de l'honneur que j'auray, si j'ay tant de faveur en vostre endroit, d'estre tenu Monsieur pour

Vostre tres humble & tres obeissant Serviteur,

De Londres 4 Mars

DE THUMERT.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

7th March 1600.

BECAUSE a late unhappy Accident hath draw'n a Cloud over my Cousin Sir Henry Nevill's Fortune, whereby there is an Alteration of his Employment; I have thought it very necessary, to acquaint you with her Majestie's Pleasure for your Proceeding. First, you must continue your abode there, and deal for all her Majestie's Services as you have done, untill her Pleasure be further known. Next, you must set on foot the Sollicitation of her Majesties Debt, because it is very fit to take from them this excuse, that they are not sollicitated, altho' I thinke fair Words will be our best Payment; yet somewhat hath some Savour. You may notwithstanding urge it with such Reasons as heretofore have been used, taking hold as much as you may, of former Promisses to your Master; and so find in what humour they are, that we may thereby the better ground a new Instruction for a new Ambassador; till which time, the Allowance of 30s. a Day shall be continued to you. And to the Intent that you may be informed of all things that have past, and so truly remove all the prejudiciall Imaginations of those

An. 1600. those, who have been seduced to attribute the Fall of this Earle, to some Injustice of the State, or violent Prosecution of his Enemies, I pray you dilate to such Persons as are worthy of Satisfaction, all materiall and demonstrative Confutations, of those things which do either throw Scandal upon the Publick, or Slander upon private Persons; because all things objected to him, have now not only been confessed by the Earle himself before he dyed, but ratified publickly in the Face of the World, by the Confession of five more of his principall Confederates, who have since been tryed and condemned, and others privately examined; who have witnessed, that he was guilty of these and other premeditated Treasons; and that all his bruits of his Enemies Practices, were but ad faciendum populum.

This 19th of February he was publickly arraigned, together with the Earle of Southampton, in Westminster-hall, before 25 Peers of the Realm, the * Lord Treasurer sitting as Lord Steward. At the Bar, the Earle laboured to extenuate his Fault, by denying that he ever meant any harm to her Majesties Person; and by pretending that he took Arms, only to save himself from the Lord Cobham and Sir Walter Rawleigh; who he gave out, should have murdered him in his House, on Saturday Night. He pretended likewise an Intention he had, to have removed me, with some others, from the Queen; as one that would have sold the Kingdom of England to the Infanta of Spaine, with such other Hyperbolicall Inventions. But before he went out of the Hall, when he saw himself condemned, and found that Sir John Davis, Sir Ferdinando Gorges, Sir Christopher Blunt, and † Sir Charles Davers, had confessed all the Conferences that were held at Drury-house by his Direction, for surprizing the Queen and the Tower of London; he then broke out to divers Gentlemen that attended on him in the Hall, that his Confederates who had now accused him, had been principall Inciters of him and not he of them, ever since August last, to work his Access to the Queen with force. And when he was brought to the Tower againe, he sent to the Lord Thomas Howard, then Constable of the Tower, to intreate him to move her Majesty, to send unto him the Lord Keeper, Lord Treasurer, Lord Admirall, and me the Secretary by Name, that he might now discharge his Conscience, and confess his great Obstinacy, in denying those things at his Arraignment wherewith he hath been charged; and also to reconcile himself to his Enemies, and especially to me, whom he desired to forgive him for wronging me at the Bar; where he had pretended, that the Cause of his taking Arms, was the rather to save the Kingdom of England from the Spaniard, to whom it was bought and sold, particularly urging it upon me who had been a Dealer in the Peace. Adding also, that he had heard, that I had delivered to a Councillor, that the Infanta had the best Title. To the which when I replied, and pressed that the Party might be brought forth, ‡ Mr. Comptroller was named; who being sent for into the Seat of Judgment, very like a Gentleman and a Christian cleared me, that I never spake of that in other Sort, then as reporting what a strange Book was come forth of one Doleman, dedicated to the Earl of Essex, which did maintaine that Title to be the best. The next day after, being Saturday, when it pleased her Majesty to send us four unto him, he did with very great penitency confess, how sorry he was for his obstinate Denyalls at the Barr; desiring he might have Liberty to set down in Writing his whole Project of coming to the Court in that Sort; which he hath done in four Sheets of Paper, all under his own Hand; and even indeed concurring with Sir Charles Davers, Sir John Davys, Sir Ferdinando Gorges, and Mr. Littleton's Confessions. And acknowledged, that he sent divers Articles to Drury-house to be considered of: As

* Thomas Sackville, Lord Buckhurst.

† Mr. Camden in his Account of this Tryal, calls him Sir Charles Danvers; but in this Letter, in the French Ambassadors, and in Sir Henry Nevill's Case, he is wrote Davers: Tho' I think in my Lord Essex's Tryall (published in the State Tryalls, Vol. 1.) he is called Danvers.

namely,

namely, whether it were not good, at the same time of coming to the Court, to possess the Tower, for to give Reputation to the Action, if the City should mislike it. Moreover, that Sir Christopher Blunt with a Company of armed Men, should take the Court Gate; Sir John Davys should master the Hall, and go up into the Great Chamber, where there should be some Persons, who unsuspected one after another, should aforehand be gotten into that Room, and have seized upon the Halberts of the Guard, which commonly stand piled up against the Wall: And Sir Charles Davers should have been in the Presence, where some other Gentlemen should likewise have made good that Place. Whereby my Lord of Effex, with the Earls of Southampton, Rutland, and other Noblemen, should have gone in to the Queen; and then having her in their Possession, to have used the Shadow of her Authority for the changing of the Government; and then to have called a Parliament, and have condemned all those, whom they scandalized to have misgoverned the State. This is the Substance of his Confession, which he both verbally delivered to us, and afterwards set down in Writing. He further asked forgiveness of the Lord Keeper, and those whom he had imprisoned in his House; sorrowing in his Heart, that they were put in fear of their Lives by his Followers. Then he did most passionately desire in Christian Charity, Forgiveness at the Hands of those Persons which he had particularly called his Enemies; protesting, that when he had resolved of this rebellious Act to come to the Court with Force, he saw not what better Pretext he could have, then a particular Quarrell to those, whom he had at the Barr named his greatest Adversaries. And being urged still to say what he knew or could reveall, especially of that injurious Imputation to me; he vowed and protested, that in his own Conscience he did freely acquit me from any such matter; and was ashamed to have spoken it, having no better Ground. He professed also to bear no Malice to the Lord Cobham and Sir Walter Rawleigh, whom he had named his Enemies; and by whom he knew no other, then that they were true Servants to the Queen and the State. After that, he made an humble Suit to the Queen, that he might have the favour to dye privately in the Tower; which her Majesty granted, and for which he gave most humble Thanks; as appeareth by this Note inclosed, which is a Copy of that which is subscribed by the three Divines that were with him at his Death.

The 25th of February he suffered in the Tower, with very great Patience and Humillity. Only (notwithstanding his Resolution that he must dye,) the Conflict between the Flesh and the Soul did appear thus far, that in his Prayers he was feign to be helped; otherwise no Man living could pray more christianly then he did.

This Death of his was the more hastened, by that bloody practice of Thomas Lee; who not four days after his Apprehension, dealt with Sir Henry Nevill (Son in Law to the Lord Treasurer) and with Sir Robert Cross, assuring them that he would deal with some other Gentlemen of Resolution to the Number of four, who should at Supper time (the Queen sitting in her privy Chamber) have taken her, locked her Doors, and (as he sillily pretended) only have pinned her up, till he had forced her to sign a Warrant for the Earle's delivery out of the Tower. Which vile purpose being discovered by those two Gentlemen, and avowed to his Face, (he being at that very Night watching at the privy Chamber door, to discover how he might have access the next Day,) he was seized, and being examined, confessed thus much; only vowing, that he would not have hurt her Person (whom God blefs) except others would have forced in upon her, to hinder that Course which he pretended, for their Delivery.

The 5th of this Month, Sir Charles Davers, Sir Christopher Blunt, Sir John Davys, Sir Gelly Merrick, and Henry Cuff, were tryed and condemned in Westminster-Hall for Treason; they having been the principal Actors and Consulters of this Enterprife. For their Execution, it is not yet determined of, neither what shall become of the Earle of Southampton; of whom as I cannot write in Despair, so I dare not flatter my self with hope. Yesterday here arrived at London the

An. 1600. Earle of Marr, Ambassador from the King of Scotland. His Errands are generally supposed to be, to congratulate the Queen of her safe Delivery from this dangerous Conspiracy, and to deal for Border Causes; and other particular Accidents between both Kingdoms: As of Sir William Evers and other Prisoners here, who have had secret Dealings in Scotland. For the matter of our Peace, all things as yet do stand in Terms as before; for this sudden Accident being of that Weight and Consequence at home, it hath diverted not only her Majesty, but all her Councill and publick Ministers, from all other Busyness abroad. And so for this Time I committ you to God his Protection.

Your loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

You must understand, that he was an exceeding earnest Suiter, to be executed privately in the Tower.

* Sir Henry Nevill's CASE.

Although I mean not to justify my self altogether from Blame, but do freely and willingly acknowledge an Offence, and submit my self to her Majesty's Mercie; yet my own Soul witnessing to her self, that it was ever loyall and faithfull to her Majesty, and consequently abhorring more then Death, the Imputation of that Fault, and loathsome Crime of Falshood and Treason; I do only desire, that my fault may not be barely or nakedly censured, but examin'd together with all the Circumstances that did accompany it; which are the best means to try, not only the Actions, but the Intentions of all Men, as far as it is possible to penetrate.

I have already acknowledged to the Lords of her Majesties Privy Councill, that I was intreated by Mr. Cuff, in the late Earl of Essex his Name, to meet with the Earle of Southampton and Sir Charles Davers; by them to understand some Project which he had in Consultation, touching his own good, and the good of the State, and to give my Advice in it; with assurance, that nothing should be proposed, which I might not hear with due respect to my Alleigance; for so the Words of the Messenger did import. After some ten Days delay on my part, and often Sollicitation, I went to Drury-House on Candlemas-day, and met with them; where their Project being opened unto me, I objected both against the Nature and Difficulties of it, gave no Approbation, or promise of partaking; but only said I would advise of it. After which, I never spake with them, nor heard from them; and when Mr. Cuffe came soon after unto me, I utterly refused to have any part or hand in the matter; and being requested to come, and speak with the Earle of Essex himself about the third day after, I refused it, because indeed I would have nothing to doe with him, finding that he had such Conceits working in his Mind. The bare and simple Truth of my Case is this. Whereby it appeareth, First, that it was not a matter that originally entred into my Thoughts, but that I was enticed, and in a manner enforced to hear it. For

* If the Reader has perused Sir Henry Nevill's Negotiation in France, he will I am perswaded want no Apology, to convince him of the Integrity and unspotted Loyalty of this Minister, whose Zeal for the Honour and true Interest of his Sovereign, is obvious in every Page. And it is very remarkable, that every Step he took in that whole Affair, was entirely approved, both by the Queen and the Secretary. As to the Fact before us, I think the following Case (which is all of his own hand, and was I think sent to Mr. Winwood into France, for I found it amongst his Papers,) is a compleat Vindication of his Loyalty, how justly soever he might deserve some Censure, for concealing that, which (at the time it was first communicated) would hardly have been believ'd, and probably not countenanced, if he had revealed it. However, I can't but think my self happy that I met with this Paper, which will do Justice to the Memory of a Gentleman, who (notwithstanding this one failing) appears to have been a wise and faithful Minister, and every way worthy to serve so great and virtuous a Mistress.

with

with these Protestations and Assurances, how could I well have refused, and who might not have been abused as well as I? And if these Assurances had been performed, what Offence had it been to have heard what had been proposed? Secondly it appeareth, that at the first Proposition I gave not Approbation, but rather made opposition to it, and afterwards refused absolutely to have any hand or fellowship in it; which will I hope sufficiently argue, that neither originally, nor by perswasion, any disloyal thought against her Majesty did ever settle in my minde. For the better Evidence whereof, I desire that these Circumstances may be considered. First that I never had any Inwardness with the Earle of Essex, nor any Dependency on him, nor any Obligation to him, when he was in his highest Fortunes; but had rather Cause of unkindness and discourtesy offered me by him sundry times, as I have shewed my Lords of the Council of. And if it be objected, that I went to see him in October last, and might then begin a Friendship and Inwardness with him; besides, that I avow there passed nothing of that kinde, but generall Complements between us; let all Men consider, what kind of Inwardness that was like to be, seeing that in four Months after, he lying in London, and my self likewise, I never so much as once saw him, or had any Communication with him. Secondly, I desire that it may be remembred, that this Meeting at Drewry-House was not till Candlemas; whereas her Majesty had signed my Privy-Seal and all my Dispatches, at the least four days before; and in Truth if I could have got my Money (which I laboured with all earnestness both my Lord Treasurer and Mr. Skinner, and was at length forced to signify to Mr. Secretary that I could not get it, albeit my Journey staid upon nothing else,) I fully purposed to have set forward upon the Thursday after Candlemas-day at the farthest; and if that had been so, undoubtedly I had never met with them. Now then my Dispatches being ready signed, and my self making all the hast I could to set forward within so few days, what likelyhood is there that the Earle should build upon any thing from me, in that I was not likely to see the Issue of? Especially, which I desire may be noted as the Third Circumstance, being the Matter was delivered to me as an undigested Conception, and not as a Resolution; and besides that, they never imparted to me their Articles whereof they did deliberate. Fourthly it may be considered, that after that Conference, I never saw them that had broken the Matter to me, nor ever heard from them. Which argueth, that they found little Comfort at my hands, and made smal Account of me in the matter; as it appears likewise in this, that when they made their desperate Attempt upon the Sunday, and sought to gather unto them all those of whom they had any Hope whatsoever, though it were but by Presumption, they never sent to me nor made me acquainted with it, as the Lord knoweth, and as I hope they all testified; which is a plaine Argument that they had not any Confidence in me. Nay rather, considering that Cuffe never came to me, after that I refused to come to my Lord; and how unequally (that I may not say uncharitably) my Lord dealt with me in his Confession; wherein he delivered matters to charge me, but nothing to discharge me, although both alike known unto him, and how he hath added some things nothing pertinent to this matter, and only of purpose to aggravate as it seems; I have Cause to think that he took offence against me for my refusall, and perhaps afterwards conceived that I was the Revealer of it. But howsoever, I do freely and from my Heart, acknowledge my Offence in concealing of it, and do humbly implore her Majesties Pardon and Mercy for it; but protest it was not from any Malice or Discontent against the State, for who had more Interest therein then I? Nor any desire that the Attempt should succeed, for who could have more disliked it than I? Nor any personall Affection to my Lord, for I never had any particular Obligation to him: But partly upon Contempt of the Matter, being so weak and unlikely a Project (neither formed nor resolved of) as I hoped would have proved abortive, and vanished of it self, whensoever they should have laid aside the Passion of Discontentment and examined it with reason; and partly upon an Imbecillitie and Weakness of my own Nature, (if so it be to be termed,) which could not resolve

An. 1600. solve to become an Accuser; which how odious a thing it is, all the World knoweth; especially in respect of the Person, whom I must have accused; who I desire may be considered, not as he hath been found since, but as he was reputed. Although I confess, that my Duty to the Publick, should have prevailed above all respect of my own private Disgrace which I apprehended in it. And that I did not consent to it upon any evil Ground, let my frank, simple, and plaine Declaration, which I made upon my first calling to some, be Witness for me; wherein I have set down my whole Knowledge freely and directly, and presumed so much of my own Innocency, as touching any Consent or Participation in the Action, as I have omitted diverse Circumstances therein, which might most have justified my Intention. But the more really and plainly I have dealt therein, the more graciously I trust her Majesty will interpret of my former Errour, which (the Lord is my Judge) was without Conceit of any traiterous or disloyall Thought against her Majestie. And desire God to deal in Mercy with my Soul, that I was going now into France with a full Purpose, Desire, and Resolution to serve her Majestie with all, that Faith, Zeal, and Councell can witness I had done, in my former Employment; and will always do, whensoever it shall please her Majestie to call me to the like againe.

*Paris, 16th March

Right Honorable my very good Lord,

AFTER so long and so assured an Expectation of your Lordship's Return, having received no Advertisements nor Direction from you, I have presumed to send this Bearer, though I have not much more to advertise then in my last I have informed; for now these Storms of Savoy are blown over, it is likely yet for some Season we shall enjoy a still and dead Calm. The King is now entirely possessed of the Country of Bresse, and Monsieur de Poissi, as Governor, is entred into Bourg. Monsieur de Sillery is already returned, and this Week Monsieur de Villeroy is expected. The Constable doth yet stay behind, to give order for the Rendition of Montmelian to the Duke of Savoy; wherein some do hold, that Monsieur Lesdiguieres will a while temporize, untill he shall perceive which way those Forces, which the Duke doth yet hold on foot, shall be employed. For although he pretends his Quarrell to Montferat, yet levying and maintaining so great Forces, at so great a Charge, for so petty an Enterprize, doth breed a Jealousy here, that he aims at another Mark. The Marquess of Ounfbaright hath lately sent a Gentleman to this King, advertising him of great Levies of Men that the King of Spaine doth make in all Parts of Germany, to the number of 18000 Foot and 3000 Horse; his Purpose therein is not here discovered, neither do I find that this King doth much apprehend it. Some Speech here is of a Diect shortly to be held in Germany, for the Choice of a King of the Romans. This King doth hold himself in part assured of it, by those fair Promisses, wherewith the Pope (to serve his own purpose) doth dayly feed his ambitious Humour. But the King of Spaine will oppose himself Vis & Modis, not for himself, but for his Wife's Brother Ferdinando of Gratz; and for that reason, it is not improbably discoursed, that those Levies of Men are raised in Germany.

I have been lately advertized of a secret Intelligence, and more then of ordinary Visits and Greetings that should be between the Ambassador of Scotland and Ayala; and I my self find, and have it confirmed by others, that the Humours of the Nation are much altered, even of those whom I have found best affection'd to her Majestie's Service, and the Prosperity of our State; which makes me much suspect, that some indirect Courses are intended from those Parts against the settled Government of her Majestie's State; which some of them in An. 1600. this Town, are not ashamed openly to deliver. I would not in Duty omitt to send this * Letter, written from Monsieur de Boisfisse to Monsieur de Rohan; considering how maliciously and unworthily he doth endeavour to disgrace (for it doth not become me to use harder Terms against a Personage of his Quallity) the whole Proceeding of our Justice, and her Majestie's Ministers, whom she hath deputed to the Government of her Affairs.

* This Letter, though 'tis directed to Sir Henry Neville, was sent to the Secretary.

When the King did last talk with me of the late inexcusable Disorders, as he seemed to be very sorry that the late Earle should so disloyally forgett his Duty towards so gracious a Sovereign, to attempt any thing against her Person or her State; so he shewed a very tender Care, joynd with a loving Affection, for the Continuance of her Majestie's Preservation, in Health and prosperous Government. Since I understand by Monsieur de Rhosny, that he finds it strange, that he hath not heard any thing particularly as from her, the matter being so notorious and so important; whereby he seems to doubt, that he should be suspected to have foreknowledge thereof; and says, that he hath received Advertisement, that from hence it should be written into England, that he made his Peace with Savoy to return into these Parts, to be near at hand upon these Emotions and Tumults in England. The other Letter came to me by Colvel, what Subject it hath I know not. I am not skilled in that Language, and in this Town I would not adventure to have it interpreted, least by that means his Intelligence with your Lordship should be discovered; of whose Credit (for the Endeavours he doth shew to her Majestie's Service) I hold my self bound in common Honesty to have a particular Care. But it is written here, that some Men of sufficient Malice against our State, at my being at Marseilles, passed from thence to Rome, with Letters to the Pope from Tirone and Odonnell. After all the Pain and Travell that I have taken with the Counsaile here in our Merchants Cause, though I have demanded nothing but that which is Reason, viz. to have the Surseance confirmed for three Months, (which the King hath granted by his Patent,) the Cloth which they have sequestred to be redelivered, and being marked for vicious to be sold accordingly: This is all the Favour I can obtaine, that an Arrest shall be granted, which shall permitt them for this time, to carry back into England their vicious Cloaths which they have brought hither. So now I am at a stand, for I will not presume, in a matter of so great Importance, (wherein consists the maine of our Commerce) to proceed, untill I shall be both fully authorized, and more fully instructed, for the Reversing or Interpreture of this Arrest.

The King and Queen are at St. Germain's, and are expected both in this Town upon Wednesday next. And so, &c.

Your Lordship's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville.

MY Sorrow for your unhappy Disgrace would find no mean, did not my confident Knowledge of your Loyall Duty to your Prince and Country, together with your Wisdom and Discretion, give me assured Comfort in my deepest Misdoubts. But I doubt not, but your honorable Services will soon remove all sinister Suspicious; and in the mean time, I repose my self in the Constancy and Patience of your Mind. For your kind Wishes I do most humbly thank you, knowing they proceed from the abundance of your loving Affection towards me; but in what State soever it shall please God to preserve me, I will ever ac-

An. 1600. knowledge a Duty to you and yours, with Honor and Respect. Your Commandments for the Recovery of your Family and Household-stuff, I will faithfully, and as near as I can, punctually observe. I beseech you, as you may with Convenience, inform me what Order shall be taken for my Provision, untill the Discharge of your Employment. Since November I have received only 250 Crowns. Mr. Secretary by his Letters, doth continue my Allowance at 30s. the Day; yet if I durst so presume, (but that I know the Weakness of my own Services) I would intreat the Day Allowance, which hath been rated at 40s. Pardon I pray you my Shortness, and so praying for a Release from your Troubles, I humbly take my leave, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 17th March 1600. O.S.

I Received your Honor's Letters when these inclosed were written, and ready to be addressed to my Lord Ambassador; whose heavie Misfortune I do the rather lament, because I finde her Majestie is deprived of a worthey Minister, in a time when his Service might have ben most behoofull to his Prince and Countrey.

According to your Honor's Commandment, I will presently sollicit the Kinge for the Reimbourment of a convenient Somme for this Year; and according to those Instructions which I receive, I will particularly in all Points, deliver those shamefull and disloyall Practizes, (as generally, heretofore I have done, as far as the confuse Knowledge which I had gathered would permit,) and withall, will set down both in French and Italien, the cheef Heads which principally do discover the Secretts of their wicked Pretences, and concern the Justification of her Majestie's Proceedings. Your Honor will be pleased to consider, how much it doth import her Majestie's Service, the speedy Repair of an extraordinary Ambassador to congratulate this Mariage, and the Supplie of this Place by the Residence of a Personage of Quality; whose Wisdom and Moderation may conserve the Alliance of these Crowns on her Majestie's part, and re-establish our Trade of Merchandises, which without speciall Instance, (by the Perverseness of this People,) is nowe in danger to decay. In the mean time, I humbly recommend my Endeavours unto your Honor's accustomed Graces and Favours, which I understand by many Letters from my Lord, you have vouchsafed to conferre upon me; whereby I rest engaged perpetually to wish your Honor's Prosperity, for her Majestie's Safety, and your Countries Service.

I humbly desire to be advertized, whether yt shall stand with your Honor's Pleasure, that I shall give Access to Charles Paget, and other English, who stand in like termes with him. Sir Henry Neville, by Permission from your Honor, held Intelligence with some of them; which was the Cause, that whilest I served under him, I did not refuse to be visited by them; but now, without Warrant, I must desire to be excused.

The Bishop of Glascoe is resolved to leave his Employment, and doth purpose to perswade the Kinge to bestow it upon one named Balladin, who hath ben his Assistant. This Balladin is a professed Enemy to our State, and doubtles will endeavour to do many ill Offices, yf his Powere shall sort with his ill-disposed Affection. The Earle of Mar may doubtless stop this Course, and doubtless will do yt, as my Lord Weemes doth assure me, yf he may in time be informed of their Purpose. I shall have occasion some times to use a Cyfre; yt may please you either to call for that which I used with Sir Henry Neville, or send one with your next. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

S I R,

21st March, 1600.

YOU shall perceave by this Letter that her Majestie hath given you Credit, the Copie whereof I send you inclosed. You shall also know, that altho' she hath forbore to touch in particuler this Offence, wherein the World may perceave how much Labour, and how many Benefitts she hath cast away upon that ungratefull Erle; yet you may by view of that which formerly I sent you, and that now you receive, in sommarye wise represent unto the Kinge, not only the Faët, but the Circumstances, for his owne Satisfaction. That he may see, that these Treasons spronge from a Root of Ambition, and were neither forced by Oppression nor Practice of his Enemyes; when by his own Confession, his Accusations of his Enemyes, have been avowed to have been only to colour his Pretence. Next it appeareth by the Confession of all his Conspirators, that the taking of the Tower, seasinge of the Citty and placing new Officers, callinge of a Parliament, and surprisinge of the Court, had more then private Ends. And yet it now appeareth that he stayed not here, if you read the inclosed, whereby you shall see what he resolved in Ireland, before he came over. The last that dyed were Sir Charles Davers and Sir Christopher Blunt, whereof the one of them, was dearer unto me then most Gentlemen in England: Yet I will hope, (seeing her Majestie hath now satisfied Justice in Execution of these principall Conspirators,) that the Erle of Southampton shall be spared. Of Sir Henry Neville's Fortune no Man taketh more Care then I do, beinge tyed therunto by all the Lawes of Friendship and Nature. And so for this time I committ you to God.

From the Court
at Whitehall.

Your very loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

P.S. You shall understand that her Majestie's Pleasure is, that you do present to the Queen this Letter, with all the good Compliments you can; not as one that nowe are to performe the compleat Office of Congratulation, (for which her Majestie intendeth to imploye some Personage of great Quallity,) but only that it may appear to the Queen, that when Sir Henry Neville went over, she had begonne this first part of a Welcome neerer her; which being once written, and his Imployment interrupted, her Majestie was contented that you should present unto her, because you may the rather have Opportunity to see her, and send back the good News of her good Estate.

Thus you have in Substance, as much as this tyme requireth, wherein now you know the Scope, I leave it to be managed by your Discretion.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 23^d March 1600. O. S.

THE King returned with the Queen to this Towne from St. Germaines on Wednesday last, since which time I have had Access unto him. When I deliver'd, " that as her Majesty was assured, that he was fully informed by his own
" Ambassador of the dishonourable and disloyall Practizes of the late Earle of
" Essex, so her purpose was, that he should have received Information thereof
" from her Ambassador; who being as far as Dover advanced on his way for " his Returne, was from thence recalled, and since discharged of his Employ" ment. Her Majesty's Pleasure was that I should remaine here for her Service, e" specially to receive his Commaundments; untill such time as she should send " another Ambassador, which she wold do with the first Commodity. I was " commaunded to advertise him of these late unhappie Accidents in her Realme;
" yf perhaps his Ambassador had been defective. And so I shewed, that though
" the late Earle at the time of his Arrainment, in Jollity and Gayety de Cœur,
" did labour (though all in vaine) to justifie his Innocency; yet before he went " out of the place where he was condemned, the Confessions of his Complices " enforced his Obstinacy much to relent; and that at his return to Prison, be" fore the LL. Keeper, Treasurer, Admiral and your Honor, he did freely and " voluntarily, with a hatefull Detestation of his Crime, set downe the Drifts and " Purpose of his Deseignes to surprize the Court, to posses him of her Majesty's " Person, and then giving her the Law, wold chafe from her Presence all such " her Servants and Ministers, as did not pleas the Tast of his Appetit, and after " fashion to his Phantasie, the Gouvernement of the Commonwelth. I declared
" moreover, the humble Acknowledgment, and sorrowfull Contrition that he " made for many particular Wrongs; namely, for that absurd and senceless Im" putation to your Honor; which he confessed to be ashamed ever to have char" ged upon you, sith his owne Conscience did freely acquit you of it. Lastly;
" I said, that his last and most humbell Petition to her Majesty was, that though
" the Greatness of his Offence did nether deserve Pitty nor Grace, yet that he " might find that Favour to suffer privately from the Veue and Presence of the " World. There the Kinge staied me, and said, nay rather the clean con- " trary, for he desired nothing more then to dye in Publik. I prayed him to " beleeve what I had said; and to knowe; that so hainous an Offence, in her " Majesty's course of Justice did require a publick Execution, for Example to o" thers not to attempt the like; which accordingly had been performed, had " not her Majesty remitted so much of the Nature of the Lawe at his own ear" nest Motion, and the instance of many who sollicitated for him. He asked me
" then of the Earle of Southampton; I answered as your Honor hath instructed " me. Then, whether all that were in Prison should suffer; I answered, that it " was not to be doubted, that as her Majesty had shewed the Powre of her Ju" stice in taking away the Head of this Practize, so she would vouchsafe to " shewe the Bounty of her Mercy, in giving Grace to many who were entangled
" in this Crime; perhaps rather upon carelesse Simplicity, then upon willfull " malice.

" Thus far I had a pleasing Audience; but when I spake of Reimbursement
" for her Majesties Debt, which I urged upon her long forbearance, the necessi" ty of her present Affaires, the Promises of his Ambassador to her Majesty, his Promises to her Majesties Ambassador, both by Writing and by Word of Mouth, he took Occasion to leave me; saying only, he would advise of yt". Since, I have in the former Subject given Satisfaction (both by Conference, and by Relation in Writing) to some Gentlemen of the King's Chamber, and to other French who best are acquainted with our Affaires of England, as namely to the Governor of Diepe; so likewise to many Scottish Gentlemen, to the Venetian Ambassador, and the Agent of Florence; and those English who are here of worth.

The King hath told Monsieur la Fontaine, that the Duke of Bouillon should have a hand in this Practice; and Monsieur de Rhosney hath said the same, to the Agent of the States. They could be content that it should be believed, thereby to weaken the good Reputation he holds in her Majesties Grace. I think it not amiss that the Duke should knowe how much he is beholding to them both. Monsieur de Rohan gives not the best Report of his Entertainment in England; nor the King not the best contented, with the great Honor which Don Verginio there received: Either because Monsieur de Rohan had not so great, or because it was greater then he found here in France. Monsieur de Messe doth labour to suppress the French Letter which in my last I sent; and doth say, he knows the Ambassador is too wise so much to forget himself; and doth endeavour to derive the Fault on his eldest Son, who lives with him.

Charles Paget this day came unto me with this Speche: That though he had found the Services which he had proffered, and some which he hath performed; to be neglected; and, as he complaines, Advertisements which he hath sent into England (whilest he remayned in Flanders) to be returned thither againe to his Disgrace; yet the World should never finde that he would faill of that his generall Duety, which by the Laws of God and Nature, his Prince and Countrey might challenge of him. Whereupon he said with many Vows and Protestations, and so wished me to advertize, that he is assured by a Gentleman of Honor, who is engaged himself in the Action, that the Kinge of Spayne is resolved this Year, to make som Attempt upon England. I have urged him to speake more particularly. He says that more he can say and more he is able to learne, yf he might perceave, that for his Services he might finde favour. Yet by Importunity I have wrested thus much from him, that the purpose is, to hold Ireland still in worke, and to assaill the Land in divers parts, for so he saith, by South and North. What I can conjecture by his broken and perplexed Speeches, is, that Sir James Lindsey is the Man that hath given him the Light of this Matter, (yf there be any such Matter,) who is Brother to the Earle of Crawford, and lives here in the Bishop of Glascoe his House. I am dayly enformed of the secret Conferences between the Bishop of Glascoe and Ayala the Archduke's Agent. Yt is not unlikely, that through Flanders some Men may be passed over.

The Duke of Savoy hath dissolved his Troupes. He retaines besides his ordinary Militia, 4000 Men, and sends into Flanders 4000 Neapolitaynes, and 2500 Spaniards. By your other Intelligence, your Honour will soon judge what grownd this hath, and if it be worth the intertaining. Any kindness from your Honor either by Letter or Message, (whereby he may be put in hope to have his Services as they shall deserve to be rewarded,) will bind him from time to time particularly to enforme, (whereof he hath means) any thing that shall be intended by Scotland or Flanders; for I find he doth nowe more then ever desire to gaine som Place in your Honor's favour.

Here is in this Town one John Colville, a Scottish Gentleman, whom Sir Henry Neville did much use; he is able to do good Service, and I find him willing and faithfull. Yf Occasion did so require, I think he would not refuse to goe into Spain for your Service; but withall he is poore, and hath a Wife in England, whom he would be glad might have some Reliefe. Some Curtesies he hath had from me, but my State is not able to sustain his Necessity. He is now going to Bruxelles, sent by the Bishop of Paris, but doth return within 20 Days. I have have praied him to be informed of these generall Heades. Yf there be any thing intended from those parts against England, either seperatly from thence, or with the Assistance of Scotland. What Supplies are intended for Ireland. The Strength of the Archduke in Men and Money. Who most doth govern his Counsaills both for Warr and Peace. What Somes of Mony are expected from Spayne. The Preparations in Spayne for Souldiers and Shipping, and in what Porte the Shippes do nowe ryde.

Here hath ben lately in this Town an English Gentleman, called Thomas Harrison, he came over at the time of the Treaty with Mr. Secretary Harbert, and sence he hath lived with the Bishop of Bologn; who hath by his means, entertained our young English Gentleman with extraordinary keindnes; as he pretendeth, for Love to our Nation, but of purpose, to spye out some Intelligence of the State of England, whereby he doth affect very ambitiously to do the King's som Service. This Harrison hath cast out seditions and scandalous Speeches amongst our Gentlemen here, of better Sort: That we shortly shall have in England Liberty of Conscience: And that Arbella should be married in the House of Austria. That he had knowen Soms of Mony by 50000 Duckats at a time; to come into England, to procure the Peace between England and Spayne. That the late Earle was disgraced for his Affection to their King, and so wished them to advertise. I should be tedious to wryte all his Follies; which I have heretofore forborne to doe, uppon Attendance of Sir Henry Nevill's retorne from Bologn, where now he is. I hear he doth purpose to goe to Bruxelles, which is not unlikely, for at Bologn he only conversed with Spaniards; the Commissioners may remember him. Here within these two Days, was apprehended one for an Attempt agaynst the King's Person. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 2^d April 1601. O. S.

UPON Munday Morning, the Day after I received your Honor's Letters, An. 1601. I repayed to the King's Lodgyng; who being informed by Monsieur de Villeroy, that I had Letters to present unto him from her Majestie, commaunded me to attend untill his comming forth of his Bed-Chamber. As soon as he came forth, I presented fyrst unto him those Letters wherein my Credence was comprehended; shewing how gratefully her Majestie did accept the Gratulation, which by his Letters she lately had received. I thought yt good fyrst to delyver those, though they were of a fresher Date, that I myght after with more assurance follow that poynt which her Majestie in the former had urged with so many lively reasons; which when he had read, I delyvered th' other, which I observed he perused over leysurly and consideratly. He then enquiryng of our latest Occurrents, "I related to him the late Execution of the two Knights, from
 " poynt to poynt, particularly what was contayned in Sir Christopher Blunt's
 " Confession; whereby I made it appeare, (as the King did acknowledge) that " though the late Earle did preach unto his Complices, never to undertake any " Matter against her Majesties Person, yet how uncompatible her Majesties
 " Safety and Lyfe was with the vastnes of his Deseigns; which as now yt
 " did probably appear, did ayme at nought els then the Confusion of her Ma-
 " jesties State, and Usurpation of her Crown and Scepter". The King rested fully satisfyed with the Relation which I made, saying, "that this was more
 " then before he had heard, or easily could beleeve: But I see (says he) that " when the Mynd is once possessed with disloyal Ambition, yt acknowledgeth
 " no more respect of Duty, nor Bounds of Modesty.

After

An. 1601.

After some pause I began to say, "that her Majesties purpose was, that he should have received those Letters which lastly I delivered, by the hands of her Ambassador; who though he could have followed her purpose therein with more Authority, and Strength of Reason, yet her Pleasure was they should be delivered, being assured that the Justness of her reasonable Demands would prevail with him, without Violence of more Perswasion. Only yt might please him to remember the Greatness of her manifold Favours, in a tyme when it did much concern the Establishment of his State, when all other his Allies, nether had power nor Will to support his Necessities. To consider her Patience, never so much as to put him in Mynd of Satisfaction, untill after so long and dead Silence, she had cause to suspect her self to be forgotten. Now when she doth demand it, it is in a time when his State is not only settled, but hath been reposed in assured Peace; when contrarywise her State is both entangled with a dangerous Rebellion in her own Kingdoms; and subject likewise to an actual War with a potent Enemy; whereby (which I said was considerable in his State) he did not only purchase his point at a better hand, but did maintayne it with more Security. I urged likewise a Suspicion of an Invasion from Spayne, shewing already the great Preparations there both by Sea and Land; which he utterly denied, and assured; that our State, in this, was more fearfull then there was Cause. I added only this, which I said I would be bold to speak out of my particular Duty to him, that I was assured, that at such time as her Majestie should send her Ambassador (which in Congruity could not be long) he should be so much pressed for Satisfaction, that I thought he could not have Power longer to refuse them: That yt would be more agreeable for his Honor, to prevent their coming with some convenient Sommes; which though yt were less, yet would yt be more acceptable, when her Majestie should perceave, that it did rather proceed from his gratefull kindness, then the Importunity of her Instance. He protested much of his acknowledgment of the infinite Benefits he had received from her Majestie, and how ready he would be upon all occasions, by Effects to shew his Love and Affection to her; and how much it greived him, that in that particular he could not give her the Contentment she desired, the measure of his means not suiting to the forwardness of his Desires. When I urged that the means could not be wanting to find Satisfaction for the present, he willed me to have Patience, and said he would advise for my Dispatch.

The same Day before Dinner, I delivered likewise her Majesties Letter to the Queen, with this Form in her own Language: "That her Majestie by those Letters, did present unto her her kyndest Love and assured Affection. That she would be tory to be yet to congratulate her happy Marriadge and long desired Arrivall into France, yf the late misadventures of her State, did not alleadge for her a just, tho' an ungratefull and displeasing Excuse. That to her Patience, yt would please her to add the forbearance of a few days, in which she would send a principal Personage of her Kingdom, whose Presence should make Fayth of that true Intelligence which she did desire to hold with her. In the mean while I did assure, that her Majesties wish could never be wanting, that as God had given her the Honour to be a happy Wife, so he would send her the Comfort to be a joyful Mother; that the Lillyes of the Crown, which have so long been blasted with those home-borne Storms, might fynde in her Issue a glorious and flourishing Repose. To all this she answered no more, then that she thanked her Majestie for her Curtesie, and me for my payns". It hath long ben beleaved that she is with Chyld, and so it continueth; but so much altered she is, in favour and fashion, di mali in poggio, that she may well wryte for her Devise, forma bonum fragile.

The Duke of Bouillon returned to this Court the last Week. "I presently informed him of all Particulars that then were, of this unworthy Earle; and sence, what this late Confession so pregnantly doth prove against him". He had undoubtedly, before I spoke with him, heard the Opinion of this Court about the Earle,

Earle, and that he should be Partaker with him in his Fact. Whereupon he sayd, Apr. 1651
 “ That he confessed he loved the late Earle as his own Brother, and that he might “ have served himself of his Blood, so long as he remayned in dutifull Obedience “ to her Majestie; but protested before God, as he hoped to have place in eter-“ nall Blisse, he was so far from being privy to any such Designe of him, that he “ never suspected so much Malice in him, so shamefully to forgett his Duty to “ his Sovereigne. For, said he, my Opinion is, and ever hath been, that the “ Subjeēt should not attempt against his Prince, not only not against his Per- “ son and Lyfe, but not against the Freedom and Liberty of his Will and “ Purpose. He protested moreover, that since his first going into Ireland, he “ never nether heard from him, nor ever sent to him, by Letter or Message; and “ wished, that the Counsel which he offered him might have had Credit with “ him; and then, said he, he should never have fallen into those desperate and “ disloyall Courfes. He told me moreover, that since he returned, he hath benn “ informed, that in England it was resolved to change the Religion, which now
 “ for many Years her Majestie so happily and gloriously had mayntayned. The “ Absurdity whereof when I began to confute; he said, he spake it, not that he did “ believe it, for he knew too well her Majestie's Resolution, and the Wisdom of “ her Counsaill: But you see, says he, how they play their parts on all hands,
 “ to disunite the Affections of the Religion.

It may please your Honor to command me to delyver him some Message, whereby he may take notice of what he hath advertized. It will be a means to retayne him in good Devotion toward her Majestie, whereof her Mynisters in this Place may make good use for her Service. “ I have also been with Mon“ sieur de Villeroy, and recommended to him the Entertaynment of this Amity;
 “ and so in generall prayed, that if by his Advertizements from Spayne he should “ understand that any Deseign was intended against her Majestie's State, yt
 “ would please him to give notice; which willingly he did promise, that Mon“ sieur de Boisfisse should inform her Majestie. I did particularly also discourse, “ first for some Reimbourfment for her Majestie's Debt, then for the establishing “ of our Merchants Trade; which I shewed by the Rigour of the late Arrest was “ utterly extinguished, and our Merchants upon the poynt to retyre from Rouen.
 “ To the first he sayd, I knew that yt was not proper to his Charge. But I re-“ plyed, I knew well that it did appertayne to his Province, to advise the Kinge
 “ what did concern his Honor, and to give Contentment to his Allyes of that “ Merit which her Majestie was; and that before his Retourn I had so treated “ with the Kinge, as that he promised to advise of it, which I did interpret, to “ be when he should retourn. To the second he said, that the Ordinance was “ only to defend our Merchants from some deceytfull Trade. But I shewed him
 “ the Irregularity of the Arrest, and the Impossibillity of the Limitation; and “ the Rigour, in not distinguishing between the Termes of vicious and defective.
 “ Yet he would needs perswade me, (which before I had not heard) that the “ Lords of our Counsell, upon Monsieur de Boisfisse's Reasons, did approve and “ justify the Arrest. From thence he broke out into a bitter Exclamation, a-“ gaynst the Justice of England in Maritime Causes, for the Redress of Violences
 “ by Sea; which not being punished, did encourage others in the same Offence;
 “ which were so intollerable, that he said, were yt not for the particular Affe“ ction which the Kinge doth owe to the Queen, he was not in Honor to en- “ dure it. I answered, that I had not heard of any late Wrongs, and for those “ which heretofore have ben committed, their People, of mync own Knowledge, “ have received so good Justice, that I could wish her Majestie's Subjects that “ have been wronged here, might be repayed with like Measure.

I understand that the Scottish here have a Jealousy, that their Kinge hath a purpose, to remove the Government of the young Prince his Son, into the Earle of Huntley's Hands. And for this Cause, he hath at one time employed out of his Realm the Earle of Mar into England, and the Duke of Lenox into France; who is, as they say, on his way, to congratulate this Marriage.

An. 1601. This Day at Nostredame, was celebrated the Obsequies for the late Queen Blanche, and the King and Queen both set forward to Fountainbleau. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 10th Aprill, 1600. O.S.

THE King departing from hence upon the last Speech I had with him to Fountainbleau, as I then advertized, and with him Monsieur de Villeroy, (though he presently returned, and since hath been retyred at his House at Conflans, this Weeke being wholly consecrated to Devotion,) I have had no convenient means to procure Answer of what I last negotiated; holding yt better to attend untill after the Feast, then to importune, in an unseasonable time, their Resolution in so displeasing a Subject. For nothing sounds so ill in the Ears of this Court, as the Repayment of their Debts, and the returne of those good Offices, which they have received from their Allyes and Neighbour Princes.

The King with the Queen doth keepe his Easter at Orleans, whether in Devotion he is gone to gaine a Pardon, the Pope having thither transferred the Jubile; which he promyseth in all Poynts shall be available, as that which the Yeare past was observed at Rome. Before the Holydays we look for his Return to this Town, whether his Guards are already come from Fountainbleau.

Here is a Speche of one Monsieur Beaumont to succeed Monsieur de Boisfisse; he is Sonne to the premier President of the Parliament here, a Man Del Espee, and one that was sent to her Majestie from the King, at such time as he besieged Amiens. It is not yet resolved, but he acknowledgeth he hath been sollicitated by his Friends not to refuse so honorable a Charge.

Though the Kinge some time since hath been possessed of the Countrey of Bresse, and of the Castle of Bourg, yet Monsieur Lesdiguieres maketh no haste to render the Fort of Montmelian to the Duke of Savoy; desyring fyrst to be satisfied of the Somme of 40000 Ducats, which since the last Warrs, for the Ransom of certaine Prisoners which he delyvered upon his Word, the Duke doth owe him: which Somme, the King doth permitt him to levie upon the Countrey of Savoy, before the Duke shall re-enter into Possession. They are likewise desyrous to see what shall becom of this great Army, which the Duke of Savoy and the Count Fuentes doth still keep on foot in Lombardie. The Venetians have lately sent to Monsieur Vaudemont the second Sonne of Lorraine, who is their Lieutenant of their Forces Oltromontane, to be in a Readiness whensoever they shall call him. Augustino di Hirrero Chanceller of Gaunt, who passed this last Week by this Town into Flaunders from Spayne, doth confirm that the Queen there is with Child. Whereupon some here discourse, that the Archduke and Infanta seeing themselves fallen from the Hope of the Succession of that Crown, yf the States would shew themselves conformable to any honorable Accord, they would easily be perswaded to chase the Spaniards from out their Dominions, disunite themselves from the Crown of Spayne, and renew the ancient Alliances, which in former time the House of Burgundy so happilie did hold. Nether would it be a matter of great difficulty to perswade the Duke of Savoy, upon the same Reason, his Children being the next Pretenders, to undertake for the Dutchey of Milan. In which Cause he should find som good Assistance from this Realme, and perhaps might prevail; but that the other Princes of Italy, who know the Violence of his unquiet Spirit, would oppose themselves to his Deseyns, as both envying and fearing his Greatness.

The Kinge here hath assured the Agent of the States, that the Treaty between her Majestie and Spayne is dead, and not likely to be revived. Partly because these these Troubles at home will not give leisure to attend to any forreigne Matters; partly because your Honor will not further deale in yt, to avoyde the Slander which the late Earle did affect to derive upon you. But they have been told, that the Reasons which induced her Majestie to hearken to the last Motives, were not founded upon so weake Grounds; that when occasion should serve to follow them, you would not ponere rumores ante salutem. Under your Honor's Favour, I will presume to say thus much by the way, that there is no Foundation to be made upon the Amitie of this Nation, especially on the Terms we now stand with them; witness both the small Respect which is born to her Majestie for the Reimburment of her Mony, and the ill Treatment of her Merchants, as well by the Greivances of many heavic Impositions, as by the Rigour of those late Edicts. Which do not only abridge, but by consequence banish out of their Country, and utterly take away, the free Intercourse of our English Commodities and Trade. Your Honor may be pleased to consider, whether it would not be convenient (at such tyme as her Majestie shall send her Ambassadors hether to congratulate this Marriage, and to reside here,) to have the Treaties which we hold with this Crown to be renewed, namely that of Bloys; whereby a universall Reglement may be established for reviving of our Trade, Order taken for annuall Payment of her Majestie's Debt untill the Debt be discharged, and Provision made in all Cafes Martyrime, and Wrongs by Sea that hereafter shall happen: For of those that are past, (most of them being of an ancient Date) in my poor Opinion, a generall Amnestie of both parts, will be the surest and most sufficient Remedic.

By Letters from Spayne yt is advertized, that of the Fleet which lately parted from Lisbon toward the Indies, 14 of the best Ships are lost by Tempest, and 3000 Men, between Marriners, Merchants, and Passengers; and from Flanders they say, that the Archduke hath contented all his Mutineers; and paid all his Garrisons so royally, that he hath advanced their Pay for two Moneths: Their Rendezvous for the time was the 15th of this Moneth by their Stile, and his Purpose is to besege Ostend.

Spinola, to those Gallies which now he hath, doth attend eight more, which some say, are by this tyme, readie to set forward. Sir William Stanley is to returne out of Spayne, and hopes to have an Employment in Ireland. Here is a Bruite which closely and secretly passeth, That the Archduke either hath lately sent, or shortly is to send, certaine Sumes of Money to be distributed to the Catholiques of England. I geve the les Credit unto yt, both because yt is not probable that the Archduke hath such Store, having so lately employed so much; and yf he had, yet he knows how to bestow yt to better purpose; yet this Report, is here by some, averred and beleaved.

This is all this tyme doth afford; for I will not put down the monstrous Accident which happened in this Town, of a Cordelier Fryer found to be with Child; who being as they say a Ermaphrodite, by the Assistance of one of his Companions, hath made Proove quis Sexus in ea est potentior. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 20th Apr. 1601. O.S.

YT may please your Honor to understand, that Monsieur de Rohan, or some one of his People to whom he committeth the Custody of his Papers, making no Dainty to divulgat this French libellous Letter; amongst others, it came into the Hands of one du Plomb a Rocheller, a Man de robbe longe; who did communicat yt to (128) the States Agent, as written from Monsieur de Boisfisse;
from

An. 1601. from whom I acknowledg (tho' only to your Honor) to have received it in the same Termes. The Signateur did seem to advow the same, and many Circumstances did augment the Suspicion. The Date likewise did prove much, which being of the 4th of March, the Day after (being Shrove-Munday, according to this Stile) the Ambassador dispatcht one la Motte with Letters to the Kinge; who comming hether the Saturday after, I cannot say he brought Letters to Monsieur de Roban, but I was with the King in his Chamber, when Monsieur de Roban did present him unto him. I entreated (128) the Agent (any Man being more proper for that purpos then my self) to take som Care and Paines to found the Censure and Humor of this Court. Who som few Days after, taking occasion to visit Monsieur de Messe, he discoursing of the Troubles of England, himself fell into mention of this Letter, and said, that he knew that his Brother-in-law was too wise to write in such manner, but perhaps his Sonn might do it. And when it was replied, that then his Brother was wronged to have the Letter signed with his Name; he answered, That the Father and Son both did signe alike. I now am humbly to beseech your Honor, that (128) the States Agent's Name may not be used nor revealed in this Cause; not only because I have engaged my Credite and Honestie therein; but because the confident Intelligence which is between the Ministers of Princes and States, is the most assured means we have to discover the secret Deseigns of this Court, and the inward Affections and Intentions of the King; which once broken by Falshood, or Indiscretion of Carriage, we shall remaine both hatefull to our Friends, and ridiculous in this Court, and for ever unprofitable for future Service. Monsieur de la Fountaine, who shortly will be ready for his Retorne, will be abell particularly to clear this Point, though he wold be loath to be seen in it; for he hath seen, as he taketh it, the very Original, in the Hands of one Tuillerie, one of the Maitres d'Hostel to the King. The Opinion he hath of the Father's Wisdom, doth interpret it rather to come from the Sonn; wherein his Profession doth make him more charitable then the Friends of Monsieur de Boisfisse do shew themselves towards him; for Monsieur de Messe, two severall times in full Assembly of Counsaill, did plainly say, that la Fountaine was embarqued in the Action, and to save himself was retired into France.

I have had at no time Talk with any of the King's Counsaill (before the Receipt of your Honor's last) of this matter. For finding both the King with the Body of his Court, possessed with an Admiration of the Magnanimity of her Majestie's Resolution, wishing that the last King had had but parte of her Spirit, to have quelled the Insolencies of the Duke of Guise in his Attempt of the Baricadoes; and saying many times in the Presence of his Nobles, That she only is a King, and she only knowes to rule; and all so perswaded of the Honor of her Proceeding, that Reason of State, the Dignity of her Crown, the Repose and Weale of her Subjects did require that Course which had been taken, and admit no Mean: I presumed, that so impudent and calumnious a Falshood wold dye smother'd in the Ordure of its own Shame, which by Complaints wold be maintained in Life, and stir up Envy in the Humours of many to recover the Copies, which before did never vouchsafe to harken after them.

Upon Saterday last I went to Monsieur de Villeroy, to receive the King's Answer to her Majestie's Letter, which he saith she shall receive by their Ambassador. I was then desirous to see what had been advertised in this matter; and saied, " that som one envying the good Reputation that Monsieur de Boisfisse had gained in her Majestie's Judgment, had divulged in his Name a malicious Letter, depraving much the State of her Government, and the Honor of her Nobillity. He presently took the Word out of my Mouth, and said it was a Falsety, and an Artifice invented by those who were aggrieved at the good Intelligence between her Majestie and the King. For Monsieur de Boisfisse, he knew him to be both wise and honest, and that nether he nor his Son had ever written to Monsieur de Roban. I answered, that I was neither to accuse Monsieur de Boisfisse, nor to enforce any thing to his Prejudice; of whose Integrity “tegrity her Majestie was well perswaded, and her Counsaill assured of his Wif-“dom; yet they thought good to enform him of the Wrong that was don him; An. 1607.

 “and for his Honor's sake wold be glad, that the Author of so great Villanie “might be discovered. He said, that yf her Majestie did suspect him, he should “write openly the contrary to that which was contained in the Letter; and of“fered me to see the Dispatches which he had written since the beginning of the “Troubles”. This is the summe of what he said, whereby, by that I could ga“ther, he was not more willing to disburthen Monsieur de Boissie of this Suspi- cion, then to cast the Imputation upon some of the Religion. Monsieur de Ro“han is gon into Basse Britaine. The Letter I have delivered to his Man here to send unto him, whom he left for those Purposes to receive and convey his Letters.

The King upon Thursday returned from the Jubilee at Orleans to (2ortueldirt) his Mystres here, with whom he dined at Gondye's House on Fryday, accompanied at the same Table with Count Soyssous, de Maine, his two Sons, Joyville, Duke de Bouillon, Zamet, and some others. I presented my self towards him after Dinner, but found he was not willing to talk with me, and so I retired.
 He is gon to Fountainbleau to the Queen, but shortly doth return; and so doth revive the Voyage into Picardy, to see the Frontier Towns as far as Calais; from whence the Dukes Montpensier and Nevers, do purpose, as they say, to pass into England, to see her Majestie and her Court.

I have delivered to the Duke of Bouillon, the Message her Majestie hath commanded. “Who doth humbly kifs her Royall Hands for the Honor he doth re“ceive so highly to be esteemed in her Princely Favour; protesting his Endea-
 “your shall ever make Proof, how earnestly he doth affect to desearve the gra“cious Opinion yt hath pleased her Majestie to conceive of him. He added, “that as he was sorry, the said Earle should enter into such disloyall Practices;
 “so now did he receive as great Comfort, that her Majestie was secured, and “her State repofed, by the happy Resolution of abridging his Days. The Honor “of her Government had shined so gloriously throughout the World, that the “Malice of Envie had no Power to obscure it with the Shadow of any Disgrace.
 “And this last Action, said he, hath so ben tempered with the Moderation of “Justice and Mercy, as yf any be so malicious not to commend it, none can be so void of Understanding not to approve it.” Then he told me, that on Fryday Morning last, the King made mention of the Letters which lately he re-ceaved from her Majestie, whereof, said he to the Duke, one of them is in a manner nothing else but Complaints and Greavances against you. The Duke answered, the Queen of England had just Reason to be offended with him, for at such time, said he, as I did negotiate with her for your Majestie, (the Good whereof your State and Subjects do now feel,) I engaged myne Honor for many things, whereof not one yet hath ben observed. The King made no Replie, but entered into Speech with the Marshal d'Ornano who only was present. But the King was taken in his own Subtiltie; for being with the Duke but two Days before, he asking me in what Forwardness our Treaty was with Spaine; I answered, that by reason of these late Troubles, there was some Intermiffion in the Prosecution of it, but my particular Opinion was, yt wold be entertained; and the smale Respect that her Majestie did receive here, and the no Satisfaction for her Reimbourment, wold advise her, since she had reason to make doubt of the Assurance of her Friends; as she might with Honor, to lessen the Number of her Enemies. He said, he had heard that her Majestie had written to the King, and pressed with som Instance for Repaiement. I answered she had, and wold presume to impart unto his Sight the Copie of her Letter, which I did accordingly.

The Queen's Answer will seem less strange, yf her Majestie will be pleased to consider, that though from the Place from whence she was born, she now is become Queen of France, yet Cælum non animum; nether hath Nature made the World at once worthy to bear more then one Phoenix. Upon the Delivery of the Letter I advertized her Secretary, who promised to sollicite for Answer. Sence

An. 1601. I have not heard from him, and therefore thought (as the Fashion is here,) that the Answer had ben sent to their Ambassador.

For our Marchant's Busyness, we now are in a Course to reverse the Arrest by Order of Law; wherein we are well advanced, and put in hope to prevail, yf we may find but indifferent measure of Justice. The King hath received Advertizement, of two Enterprizes that the Duke of Savoy hath intended, sence the Conclusion of the Peace; the one against his Person, the other against the Town of Marseilles; where it was once thought good to entertaine the Practise, but (Disrust) Monsieur de Villeroy did otherwise advise; alleading, that thereby the King must by Necessity be forced to enter into a fresh Warr. Notwithstanding Montmelian was rendered unto the Duke the 12th of this Month, Count Fuentes hath drawn 50 Pieces of Canon out of the Castell of Milan. He is cheef of the Army, which consisteth of 26000 Foot and 3000 Horse. The Venetians do arm strongly, and likewise the Grand Duke; but the King is advertized from Rome, Venice, and Zurich, that the Storm will fall upon the poor City of Geneva. He doth promise with many Protestations never to abandon them, and so he saith he hath written to the Pope, Spaine, and Savoye; but it is feared he loves his Ease and Purse too well, to undertake a Warr for a Huguenot Towne.

I most humbly thank your Honor for your carefull Remembrance of my Provision. Sir Henry Neville by his Letters doth promis Satisfaction untill my return from Lyons to Paris, which was the 12th of January, and from the beginning of February unto the 2^d of April; so that from the 12th of January untill the end of that Moneth, my Provision is defalcated. I beseech your Honor to have a favourable Consideration of me: The Som is not great, yet the Loss great to me. The Charge of Diet is not all in this Service; neither did I find a Difference between my Paines at Paris, and my Paines at Lyons. This which herewith your Honor shall receive, I received from (Poverty) Colvel, at his Return from Bruxells: And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

S I R,

21st April 1601.

THOUGH in my last Dispatch I dyd advertise you of those things which were convenient, yet I cannot let this yong Gentleman passe by you, without recommendation of him in such Occasions as he may have neede of you, himself being yong, and a Stranger in the Countre. He is Sonne to Sir Thomas Gore and to my Lady Marquisse, of her Majesty's privy Chamber. In which Consideration, though for himself I bear him good respect; yet I must add this to you in particuler, (for which I know he shall not fare the worse,) that he and my Children, by their Mother, are neere of Blood; so as I cannot but take great Care of him, and think my self beholding to those that do so. We have here for the present no News of late, saving, that England was never quieter, nor a Prince more admired then the Queen is, for her Clemency, which hath so well seconded her Justice: My self being perswaded, that as many have died as shall doe for this Treason. Out of Ireland, we have dayly News of great Success from the Deputy. To which Warr when her Majestie shall have given an end, she may thank only God and her owne Meanes; for she is so far from having received the least help from any other Prince in Europe, as you do see she is absolutely denied her due. Thus for the present having little more to trouble you, I commit you to God.

Your loving Friend

From the Court at Whitehall, &c.

RO. CECYLL.
Mr. John

Georges

Mr. John Packer to Mr. Winwood.Mr. Winwood,London, 27th Aprill 1601.

SINCE the Departure of Romano, by whom I advertised you of your own Business, I have nether had much Matter nor Commodity to write; yet I purposed, if at Baker's going last over I had not spent all that Day at the Court untill darke night, to have signified unto you, in what Danger of Death our good Lady was at that tyme; who, though given over by all Physitians, and held by all others for one of a more happie World, hath very miraculously, contrary both to all Men's Opinion, and her owne Desire in that Extremitie, escaped that extreme Perill, and is I thanke God yet reserved, to the Comfort of those, who were already in Sorrow and Lamentation through the Apprehension of so great a Losse. Yet is she very weak and amendeth but slowly, not able to stirre out of her Bedd; only we all hope, that in tyme, her perfect Recovery will follow so merveillous a Deliverance. I cannot yet write that which we both desire, but hope, that by the next I shall better satisfie you. In the meane tyme, my Master wisheth you not to account of your Stay in France untill his Discharge; for that you are now there in a more perfect Nature, and therefore he would not have you think so eagerly of your returne. He desireth to see the Accompt which he hath long expected, that he may know what further Course to take for you. Yf the Remnant of the Sale of his Stuff will not suffice for payment of you, he will either make you over what remayneth by Mr. Willaston, or deliver it here to Mr. Serles as you shall think best. And seeing all the advance of your Allowance is already run out, I will crave his Direction for the solliciting of Mr. Secretary againe in that point.

We imagine here, that the Fruit of your Cordelier will be a yong Antichrist. I did never make Question, but that you would finde that apish Discommoditie in your Lodging, which in one Sort you could hardly have avoyded in all Paris; but when the Master of the English Ape is your Harbinger, you shall be better lodged then you are now, or then we were both at Moret and other Places.

Now to acquaint you with our News; the Earle of Darby, and Lord Burleigh, are made this Feast, Knights of the Order. On Thursday next Mrs. Carew the Mayd of Honor, is to be married to one Mr. Lovell. There are 1000 Men to be sent speedily to Lough Foyle, with which Sir Henry Docwra hath undertaken to do so good Service, that he hopeth it shall be the last Levy her Majestie shall need to make. And so desiring you to excuse my hast, and to recommend me to Monfieur du Vallier when you see him, I leave you to your honorable Charge. From the Signet Chamber, &c.

Your assured Freind to Command,

JOHN PACKER.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.Right Honorable,Paris, 27th Aprill 1601. O. S.

SINCE my last to your Honor, being every day put in hope to see the Letter which the President de Thou had in his Handes, which was said to be the Originall, as in the Postscript of my last I advertized, and yet put off from day to day, I went my self at length unto him; the rather, because it is received, that he hath a purpose, to make an univerrall Stoarie of these later and present times. I said, that I had understood, that such a Letter was fallen into his Hands. I praied him, for the Authority which he did bear in this Seat of Justice, for the Duty which he did owe unto his King, whose Ambassador's Honneur was interest-ed therein, for his Love to the Truth, and the Hatred that every good Man ought

An. 1601. ought to bear to all such outrageous Insolencies, having so good Means as he had, knowing from whence he first received it, to discover the Author; whereby he should do a great Service to the King, a friendly Duety to Monsieur de Boisfisse, and an acceptable Office to her Majestie. He wold acknowledge no more, then that he had seen a Copie of such a Letter, which for the long Experience he hath had of Monsieur de Boisfisse's Wisdom and Honesty, he was assured did not proceed from him. He said it was an easie Matter, for any Man to adde the Name of another, to disguise his own Invention; an ordinary Practise here in France, where the Liberty was alike both of Pen and Tongue. To discover the Author he held it impossible, and as hard the Publisher; but said he was perswaded it came out of England, written by some of the Relligion, and foisted into the King's Pacquet. Which to my Understanding hath no more probability, then only the Credit of these Men, who wold be glad it should be so beleevd. This was all I could get from him. I then added, I understood what mark he had in hand, and offered to deliver a particular Relation of this late Action, from the first Discovery of the Treason. Praying him to be perswaded, that her Majestie held so much more grievous the least touch to her Honor, then any Violence that could be intended to her Person; by howe much more durable the Memory of her Honor was then the Life of her Person, which she knows to be mortall and to have end; when the Honor of her Name shall live and reign with the Age of Eternity. * He accepted my Offer, and confessed he had projected such a Worke; wherein he said, so often as occasion should be given to speak of her Majestie, though he were neither her Servant nor her Pensionarie, yet he wold so speake, with so much Reverence and Devotion of Duety, not as her worth doth deserve, but as the Baseness of his Pen might arrive to the highth of so divine a Subject. This President is the worthiest Man this Town doth hold, and so reputed, both for his sufficiency of Knowledge, and honest Integrity. He is a favourer of the Relligion though not professed. He hath ever been devoted to her Majesties Service, and in his yonger Age, as I understand, hath composed many noble Poems in admiration of her Vertues.

Upon Saterday, Monsieur de Messe did send to speak with me. At my coming, he charged me (but in very kind manner) with those Words which I did write to your Honor, that he should speake of Monsieur de Boisfisse's Sonn; which I justified word by word, neither did he deny that he had spoken them: But added, that he himself had written, when first the Letter was published, to Monsieur de Boisfisse, to know, whether some one of his were not the Author of it. He said when first he heard of it, he accounted it but a laughing Matter; that here in France, they were bold to borrow one another's Name, without sparing the Name of publique Persons or Ambassadors, as he by experience had proved, having born that Title many Years. He had littell thought it wold so ill have ben taken, and so wished I had forborne to have advertized it. I answered, that myne Eyes and Eares had served me to little purpos, yf so fowle a Matter should have passed my Knowledge; and myne Understanding to lesse, if I should not have advertized it. He knew in his Learning what fault it was, and what it did implye, Ignorare id quod omnes sciunt. Her Majestie, I said, did but only acquaint him with the Wrong that was don him, and commaunded her Councell to advise with him what Course best might be taken, for discovering and punishing the Author. Yf Monsieur de Boisfisse, or his Friend, did not hold his Honor particularly engaged herein, (which her Majestie doth hold in no lesse commendation then the Protection of his Safety,) I thought the matter might rest without farther pursuite. As for the Reputation of her Majesties Government, it was founded upon the infallible Grounds of Justice and Integrity; which could not be shaken, much less defaced, by the reprochfull Slaunders of malicious Tonges. At my Departure from him, he said, he had sent a Man of purpos to Monsieur de

* If the Reader will give himself the trouble to peruse Thuanus's Account of this Affair, he will find it to agree exactly with the Secretary's Letter, and the Account in Mr. Camden.

Roban, whose return would clear all Difficulties. The Answer from Monsieur de Ar. 1601.
Roban will be, that he never received such Letter, or that he hath lost the Originall, and that it was written in some disguised Characters; that the publishing was never by his Privy. Or ells, of all these Circumstances, his Answer will be so confused, as the Certainty will be no greater, then at the beginning. And to conclude, their Desire is, as it were by consent, to cast it upon the Religion in generall, and in particular to father it upon Monsieur de la Fontaine, and so I have informed him.

The Kinge passed this way in Post upon Fryday last to Verucil, where his Mistress is, and where since he hath ben, without other Companye or Trayne. The Army in Italy doth hold all Men's Discourses in suspence: Monsieur Lefdi-guieres this Week past did write to the Kinge, that the Number did yet increase. He doth not believe any Siege to be intended to Geneva, but rather some Attempt to surprize it; and therefore, hath demaunded leave to put in 12 Captaines, and some other Forces. Sence it is written, that the Army should be dissolved, and part to be sent into Flaunders, and part into Hungary. Which gives occasion of this Discourse, that the maintaining of this Army so long without farther purpose, was but to second some Enterprize intended in France: For sence that of Marseilles, whereof I lately advertized, there is another discovered at Metz, practized by Count Mansfield, Governor of the Countrey of Luxembourg; whereupon there are imprisoned seven of the cheefest of the Town, besides some other Captains. Yf that which I sent lately of Mr. Brisket be of purpose, yf your Honor shall so direct me, perhaps it will not be inconvenient to acquaint Cavalier Vinti the Duke's Secretary, with the Accident, who now is upon his Returne to Florence.

The Secretary of Florence who doth reside here, hath lately informed me from the Duke, of a Spoile committed by some English upon his Subjects, within 20 Myle from Lyvorno. He hath entreated me to recommend the Cause to your Honor. The Duke hath written to Corfini, to inform her Majesty and the Lords of the Counsaill of it, and to seek for Satisfaction.

Mr. Harrison lately returned to this Towne. He brought with him strange News, that a Proclamation should shortly be published in England, to declare the Lady Arbella Heir to the Crown. For fear I should forget, he told me two severall tymes, but after a diverse Fashion; which argueth the Truth and Judgement of the Reporter. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 7th May 1601. O.S.

IT may please your Honor to remember, that in December last, at the Instance of the Lord-Mayor and divers of the Aldermen, the Lords by their Letters, did recommend unto Sir Henry Neville, a Cause here depending between the Burgeoises of Rochelle and one Richard Etour, for a Sum of Mony of 14000 Ducats; which said Sum by certain Companies of London was lent to the Inhabitants of that Town, in the time of their great Distresse, at the Siege Anno 1572. The Rochellers, by the Court of Parlement having ben condemned by three severall Arrests, to repay the Principall, the Interests, and the Charges of the Sute; to avoid the Execution, have suborned one Martizan d'Hargues of St. Jean de Luz, by virtue of Letters of Mart which were granted unto him many Years since, to seaze upon the Sum of Money now in their Hands. Whereupon, the Cognoissance of the Cause was brought before the King's Counsaill, who upon Fryday last adjudged this Mony dulye to be detained by d'Hargues, and have returned Etour for his Satisfaction into England, unto Sir Robert Cross and o-N n n n others,

An. 1601. thers, by whom de Hargues doth pretend to have ben spoiled: As by the Arrest which herewith I send, will plainly appear unto your Honor. The pretended Causes which moved the Counsaill thus to proceed, are, That this Mony, as they say, was lent unto the Rochellers, to maintaine them in their Rebellion against Charles the 9th. Then, that the King's Subjects, wronged by our Nation, can find no Justice in England. Which they prove by Monsieur de Boisfisse, who incessantly in his Letters, publique and privat, doth bitterly exclaime for want thereof, against the Proceeding of her Majesties Commissioners. Much to their Dishonour in particular, and in generall to the State; wer it in the Powre of his humerous Passions to disgrace a Government, which could never have florished, as now it doth florish, with the abundance of God's Graces, if Justice, the only Pillar of a well polished State, should so much faill, as he doth not forbear to blaze to the World. Infomuch, as in all Causes which here I follow, either directly for her Majestie's Service, or for the privat Interest of any of her Subjects, be it with the King himself, or any of the Counsaill, yt is held a sufficient Opposition to stop my Mouth, to alleadge the Injustice of England towards the King's Subjects, daily attested by his Ambassador's Letters. But the true and essentiall Cause of this Proceeding, is, to break the Intelligence which hath ben between the Religion and her Majesties State; otherwise, an Assembly of so many grave and learned Men, in a Matter of such dangerous Consequence, wold not so resolutly have proceeded, yf they did not presuppofe, that this so ungratefull and unconscionable Dealing of the Rochellers, protected and justified by them, wold for ever (in occasions hereafter) either wholly withdraw her Majesties and her Subjects Affections, or at least much rebate that forwardness which heretofore hath been shewed, in lending Succors in so bountifull a manner.

This Morning I was with the Chancellor. " I told him I came not to debate " the Equity of this Sentence, though by his Permission I thought it very rigo- " rous, and all Circumstances considered, Satis pro Imperio. I shewed that this " d' Hargues had never Justice refused him in England, and therefore his Letters " of Mart unlawfully to be obtained. That since, all Letters of Mart, by con- " sent of both Nations, were revoked, and Commissioners on both Sides appointed " to determine those Complaints; who should stand for Ciphres, yf every Man " in this manner, might be his owne Carver. And lastly, that the Letters of " Mart of this particular Man, were revoked under the Great Seal by the King, " at the Instance of Sir Henry Neville, in the Month of July at Blois, Anno 99. " My request unto him was, that he wold suspend the Execution of this Arrest " but for 40 Daies; in which time I wold advertize and sollicit, that order might " be taken for the Contentment of all Parties, by some more peaceable and plea- " sing Treatment, without making this so violent and open Breach: For I cold " not I said in other manner interpret this Proceeding, which I did fear wold en- " gender much ill blood. He made a long Speech unto me, " justifying their " Proceeding in France, and condemning ours of England; saying, that lately " they received by Letters, that we made but a Mockery of their Subjects Suites. " To which I replied, that he that so enformed them, was transported too much " with his own particular Passion; and it seemed, that the Desire he had, for some " private Respects, de faire le bon Vallet, did make him forget the Quallity of " his publique Charge, which was by all gracious means to conserve the Amitye " of those Crowns, between whom he did negotiate. As for the Surseance " which I did sollicit, he said he wold advise of it; and praying him to assigne " me a time to return, he put me off for four or five Days"; in which time he will send to Monsieur de Villeroy to be advised, and so accordingly will give Answer.

Thus your Honor doth see how by degrees they grow on, and the purpose they have to exercise her Majesties Patience. Partly upon presumption of the Greatness of their own Fortunes, partely uppon the Necessity (as they suppose) of our Affairs, especially for the intercourse of our Marchant's Trade. So that howsoever the Position in Philosophie may be true, that amongst private Men that that Friendship is the trueſt which is inter duos; yet in reaſon of State, the Alliances of Princes wold not be ſo ſtraightned, but wold admit a more ample Enlargement etiam inter plures. But this violent Carriage of Monsieur d'Boiſſiſſe upon to ſinall a ground, may ſeem ſtrange, who ſhould in reaſon deſire (being now upon his laſt quarter) to leave behind him a pleaſing taſt, unleſſe perhaps he be animated from hence; and that, ſurcharged with the multiplicity of her Maje-ſties Benefitts, they do only now cauſam quaerere, cur ab amico diſcedere voluit.

I do not find here any great hope for preſent Reimbourſement. Yeſterday I was with Monsieur de Rhofny, “ who doth not acknowledge, that ever the King “ did adviſe with him thereof. His Office he ſaid was to execute the King's Com“ maundment, not to direct. When the King ſhould ſo commaund, he wold not “ be backward, in any Office that ſhould be agreeable to the Queen of England.
 Though likewiſe, he is thought to have alſo ſome dependance from Spaine, having an Expectation to recover the Principallity of Eſpinoy in Artois for his Sonne in Law, who doth bear that Title; and the Vicontée of Gaunt, whereof he pretends himſelf to be the Right Heire.

According to your Honor's Direction, I have ſent for two of the principall Drapers which trade at Rouën; who have fully enformed the Advocate and the Reporter, whom we hope to gaigne. We have obtained by Requeſt, that the Hoſiers and Marchant-Tailors may viſit ſuch Clothes, (whereof two peeces are brought to this Towne which at Rouën were ſequeſtered for vicious,) whereby the Malice of thoſe Drapers will clerly be detected; and withall, we have ſent for an Atteſtation from the Drapers of Diepe and Caën, to prove, not only the Loyalty of our English Clothes, but alſo the Neceſſity of the Trade, for the good of the King's Subjects.

Of this Army in Italy, we hear that it ſhould be diſſolved; but that it is, there is no Certainty. The Ambaſſador of Venice did ſhew me Letters of the 27th of the laſt, that it doth daily increaſe in Nomber, and that the Pope did levy 12000 Men. The Venetians are exceeding ſtrong both by Sea and Land. Their two Ambaſſadors which do com to congratulate this Marriage, are expected in this Town within eight Daies. In the French Contée there is great Preparation made of Vittail, but whether it be to reſreſh the Army, that is ſaid ſhall paſs into Flanders; or to furniſh the Army yf it beſiege Geneve, is not known; of which Siege now much is not ſpoken, yet Monsieur Leſdiguières hath put into the Town both Captaines and Soldiars. Madam de Nemours, who is Daughter to Daughter to Renée (Daughter to Lewis the 12th and the Dutcheſs of Ferrara,) hath had a Sentence this Weeke in the Court of Parlement againſt the Duke of Modena, for certaine Lands in this Realm in queſtion between them, to the Val-lew of 30000 Ducats of Rent by the Year, and 700000 Ducats, which this Crown did owe to the late Duke of Ferrara.

There is Speech of a Treaty between the Emperour and the Turk. The Diets for the Choice of the King of the Romans, is differed upon the Death of the Biſhop of Mayence. The King is in Diet at Fontainbleau, which he muſt needs keep moſt exactly, having ſo good a Governers over him as the Marquiſe; to the largneſs of whoſe favour, the Queen (they being both ballaſted alike) for fear of foul Weather, is forced to ſtrike Sayle.

Mr. Gore arrived here upon Sunday laſt. The Care I will have for his Good ſhall ſhew, that your Honor's Recommendation of him is an abſolute Commandment unto me. And ſo, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

An. 1601.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

9th May 1601.

BY your Letters of the 20th and 27th of Aprill, her Majestie perceaveth that you have very discreetly carried this matter, wherein I do concurr in Opinion with you, that there will be little gotten by further stirring in it; although for myne owne parte (befydes many other Circumstances) I find none so pregnant to me as this, that they would fix it so absurdly, upon so reverend a Person as Monsieur de la Fountaine. The French Ambassador hath had Audience of the Queen the last Daye; to whome the Queen dyd declare in very good Moderation, that she did acquit himself of it every way; only she insisted somewhat jealousy upon his Sonne: For Satisfaction whereof, the young Gentleman made many formall Protestations, and did promise, that he would by his owne Letters challenge all the World, that could prove any such thing against him. This Matter troubleth most of the Noblemen, and maketh this Ambassador, I think, observe himself les acceptable; for even indeed the same Coppies have been sent to the Palsgrave, and to divers other parts of the World, much to the Scandall of all the Peers in the Kingdome. Upon Monsieur de Roban's Answer, it is lyke enough that some new Matter will appear, untill which tyme I leave this Matter. Only I send you now two or three Books in English, wherein the Fact, with all the Circumstances, is clearly and syncerely delivered. I hope by the next Letters to send you the same translated into French.

And now, because you may be informed of the State of her Majestie's Affairs; First, concerning the matter of the Peace, (wherein it was thought her Majestie's Ministers were so drunken) I send you the Cobby of a Letter newly written by Mr. Beale and Mr. Edmondes, in answer to Richardot's Letter; whereof I wish you notwithstanding to make such use, as may serve best for her Majestie's Advantage in those Partes. For although I wold not have them ignorant, with what Caution her Majestie proceedeth; yet it may be, that that State will be the more respectfull, yf they think that the Spaniard continueth desirous of our Amity.

Out of Ireland (Thanks be to God) all things succede under my Lord Deputy so much to her Majestie's Honor and Contentement, as the Rebels in all partes of the Kingdome seeke for Mercy, and her Majestie's Charge for her Army is likely to be abated. Thus much I would have you know, because I would be loath that those, (whose Affections moove only as Princes stand great or little) might think us so unhappy, as to be obnoxious to them, who requite us with no Kindness: And yet it would not be so used, as to take away this good Argument, that her Majestie's extreame Expences constraine her to pres for Reimbourment.

The Ambassadors of Scotland have ben here well used of the Queen, and are this next Weeke to departe. And because you may understand what their Proceedings have ben, (contrary to fond Bruits) you shall know, that where it was given out, that they meant to handle the matter of Succession, and to demand peremptorily those Lands in England, which are in Question between him and the Lady Arabella, with some such other lofty Propositions; I think good to assure you, that they have ben so far from any such sower Propositions, as they have shewed, *that the principall Scope of their Jorney is for Congratulation of her Majestie's Escape, * and to cleare those Imputations, which have ben thrown upon the King, for dealing with the Pope and the Kinge of Spaine; and especially for suffering the Subjects of Scotland to carry Provisions to the Rebels in Ireland. †* Some small Requests they made for Sir William Evers, who is in

* See Cambden's Eliz. pag. 631. who is entirely silent in this part of their Negotiation.

† See Cambden. ubi supra.

*Prison for coming secretly to see the King in Scotland, which he afterwards abjured when the contrary was plaine, and so only imputed to him in that respect, pro delicto. But in conclusion, they did make a Request to the Queen, to adde a greater Somme to that Portion, which her Majestie hath long since yearly assigned him by way of Gratuity. In all which her Majestie hath not refused him, but even in that last, is resolved to geve him * such an Increase as her Majestie's Affaires will suffer for the present; with promise to continue it, as long as he shall make it appear unto the World, that he is willing to deserve her extraordinary Care and Kindness towards him.*

Lastly, because I know that Gratefullness in you, cannot but make you desirous to understand of the Estate of my Cousin Sir Henry Neville, (whome you have followed,) I think good in few Words to say this unto you: *That notwithstanding he did, beyond all Duty and Discretion, suffer himself to be defiled with the Pitche he touched, in being privy to the particular Conspiracy of this Attempt projected at Drury-Houle, where he dyd meete, and † where all the Articles were debated, he never seeking by any Man or Means to discover any part thereof; yet I thinke I may geve you this Comforte, that her Majestie will not he shall be tainted in Blood by an Arraynement; though for Example-sake, he may be proceeded with by way of Fyne and Imprisonment, for which purpose he is removed to the Tower. To which Course, being rather matter of Form then Substance, (seeing all Prisons are little different) yf any of his Friends should have industriously opposed, it had ben the ready way to have forced a Course of more Severity; for who doth not know Torrenti qui cedere novit, impetum minuit. And thus I committ you to God.*

From the Court
at Greenwich.

Your loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 17 May 1601. O. S.

SINCE my last to your Honor, I have againe sollicited the Chancellor here for Surseance of the Execution of the Arrest which I advertized lately to be geven against one Richard Etour of London, in favour of Martizan de Hargues of St. Jean de Luz; who by Subornation of the Rochellers, (reviving his Letter of Mart which many Years has lien dead,) had seized upon that Summ of Money which they were condemned by the Court of Parlement to repay to the said Etour. But notwithstanding all the Reasons that I colde alleage, the Inconveniences that might arrise by this violent kind of Proceedings, the Rigour of the Sentence, (the Money belonging to many poore Widdowes and Fatherlesse Children) the inconfionable Mallice of the Rochellers, whom to suport in their Fraud was to proclaim to the World, (and as it were to determine by Arrest,) that in France no Debts were payable to Strangers, and that the Surseance for so smale a time as forty Days wold bring no Prejudice to any Party; yet I cold receive no other Answer but a flat Refusall, pretending that it was not in his Powre aloane to graunt yt, and that the Counsaill to whom he had proposed the matter, did wholly oppose themselves against it. I mean to inform the King of

* The Augmentation was 2000*l.* a Year. Cambden, p. 631.

† I can't help observing, that Sir Henry Neville (in his own Case before printed) positively denies that the Articles were communicated to him: And leave it to the World to judge, if so wise and prudent a Man would have prevaricated in a Circumstance of such Consequence, and upon which he lays so great Stress. To which give me leave to add, that Cambden (Eliz. p. 630.) in his Account of his Examination before the Privy Council at York House, does not pretend that it was so much as objected to him, that he was privy to their Articles; much less that all the Articles were debated in his Presence, or that he was privy to the particular Conspiracy of that Attempt.

An. 1601. this unseasonable Proceeding, though he will be glad that the Rochellers have so plaid their parts; not remembring now so much what he was, when the Money was lent, as what he is, now it is to be repaid. The Alarm of the Letter is come to Monsieur de Roban; and here is now in this Towne one Durand a Man of his, to retyre the Originall which was left here behind him. Which when he hath don, his Master, he saieth, will never acknowledge the Receipt of any such, and so will advertize her Majestie. Though this Durand hath confessed in familiarity to one Santsover a Jarsey Man, that Monsieur de Boiffesse's Son is the Man that wrote it.

This Letter for her Majestie, I received yersterdaie, by the Secretary of Florence who resideth here. He in Kindness imparted thus much unto me, that he wold have ben glad, that as her Majestie indited and wrote her self the Letter which she sent, so the Queen here wold have don the like; but she was, as he said, advised otherwise by her Secretary Philipeau, because her Majestie in her Letter did not style her with the Title of Majesta. So that if the Queen here should have sent her Letter in Italian, using the Word Majesta, had ben to return more then she had received; and not to use it, had ben both not to yeld her Majestie her due, and to have shewed her self ignorant in the Propriety of her owne Language; and therefore to avoyd all Offence, yt was thought best, that her Secretary should write in French, which Style doth pass with both, without more Ceremony of Title. I answered, that as he dealt freely with me (for the which I thanked him) so I wold use the same Liberty with him; and said, that Philipeau, who from Monsieur de Villeroy his Man was become Secretary to the Queen, did not yet well understand the Place he held. For first, her Majestie doth in her Supercription, and in the Letter, call her Sorella, which did imply (her Majestie's State considered) as much Honor, as the Crown of France could give her. Then the Style of the Letter did run in the third Person, as a gli occhi suoi, la sorta sua, and the like, which only was proper to Persons of highest State. Lastly, it cold be no Note of Ignorance in the Italian Language not to use the Termes of Majesta, Altezza, Signoria, and the like; when as their best Writers, whose Letters are in greatest Request, do not only not use that Form of Style, but utterly condemn yt: And so I shewed him Claudio Tollemei's Letters, who was Secretary to Clement VII, to Francis I, Henry II, and to the Queen Mother, in all which he did see the Title of Majesta never used. The Secretary did approve her Majestie's Judgment, and excused the Queen, saying, that she was yet but in her Non-age, nether had she any about her that could aright advise her; that the King was content she should be nourished still in Ignorance; and concluded in these Words, In somma che volete voi, Ella non è la Reina d'Inghilterra. He was instant with me for a Coppie of her Majestie's Letter, to send to the great Duke; whereby, he said, the Duke wold receive great Comfort for the honorable Mention her Majestie did make of him, whom above all Princes he did most reverence; but I intreated to be excused, not presuming so farr without Permission.

I understand that (123 Superstition) the Ambassador of Scotland hath ben advertized of a dangerous Practise against (165 Counsail) the Scots King: That lately, one called (6. rt ygbul) Glarnet, hath ben sent out of (205) Scotland, with Letters to (χ zh dok ys) Bothwell, to hasten home with Diligence, where he should find sufficient Assistance. The principall Party who imploied this Party is the (χ cmygf 205) Queen of Scotland. The Party imploied did write from (6. zytod) Calis to (φ 179) Brussells, whereby this Practise is discovered. From thence he embarqued for (Δ 200) Spaine, but by the way the Ship perished, and he was drowned. To this purpose Letters have ben intercepted from (χ uxldyipixe) Master Gray out of (105 Health) England; that the (6. suylwn) Death of (6. reiga) Gowry should shortly be revenged. He hath likewise sent Letters to (θ pmhtey) Bothwell, and since one Andrew Cluer his Man, to speak with him, hoping to have found him at (φ 179) Brussells. (123) The Ambassador of Scotland hath sent one called Frezer, a Scottish Priest, to advertise of this Practise.

Practise. The (zshitlrugsy) Lord Simple being refused (as he saith) to pass through England, hath sent his Negotiation with Letters from (19) the King of Spain, to the King; from whom he hath received Answer, to attend here to know his farther Pleasure, till the coming of the (6.sepuixtubif) Duke of Lenox, who is expected the next Moneth. We here must have gli orrechi de Mercanti, to hear all, with relation to the Tryal of better Judgement. I am loath to be abused, and yet who is not. The Poverty of the Man from whom I do receive these Particulars, doth crave some reliefe; but farther I will not proceed, before I shall receive your Honor's Judgment of these. Monsieur de Beaumont hath received from the Mouth of the Chancellor, Commandment to prepare to succeed Monsieur de Boisfisse. * Monsieur de Betunes, Brother to de Rhosny, doth go to reside Ambassador at Rome. The King doth give him for his Provision for his Meubles 4000 Ducats, 2000 for his Voyage, and 12000 for his yearly Entertainment. † Monsieur de Villeroy did seek for this Imploiment, for his Son Monsieur de Alincourt; The Refusal whereof is the greatest Chek his Credit ever hath had in this King's Time. For besides that he sought it for his Sonne, and that all forrain Imployments being subordinate to his Charge, the Place which he holds, was ever wont by Prescription to have some Interest in the disposing of them: Now, his Corrivall in the King's Favour hath thus far gained upon him, not only to encroach upon his Freehold, but also for his Brother; whereby Monsieur de Villeroy shall receive only the ordinary Dispatches of Forme, but all Matters of Weight, and important Intelligences, shall be prevented by Monsieur de Rhosny, who by this means will make his Access more daily about the King, and his Credit stronger. Whereupon many conclude, Monsieur de Villeroy's Service is somewhat suspected with the King, especially in this Particular of Rome; to which Sea, (even in Matters of State) he hath ever been accounted superstitiously affected.

By Letters from Venice of the 12th of this Month the Army is said to be separated; 4000 Italians and 2000 Spaniards, do come down into Flaunders, and 800 Hors. The Allemaigns and Suiffes are licenced, the rest do go into Hungary. So that now it doth appear, that this Army standing so long up without any Attempt, was prepared only to second the Surprize of Marseilles, by assailing the Country of Province.

It is here reported, that Pietro de Medicis is lately dead in Spain. We look here every Day for the Kinge and the whole Court from Fountainbleau. I humbly kifs your Honor's Hand for the enclosed in your last Letters, and so I humbly take my Leave.

Your Honor's in all Duty, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 17th May 1601. O. S.

I Acknowledge it for an Argument of your Honor's great Favour, that yt hath pleased you so fully to communicat unto me Sir Henry Nevill's State. I should condemn my self of great Inhumanity, yf I should not be touched with his Affliction; the Cause whereof, the more I do consider, the more I rest thereat confused, that a Man of his Judgment, Wisdom and Experience, devoyde of all present Miscontentment, should lend Ear to the Devises of such desperate and unsensible Courses. But his Lady (whose Innocency doth suffer for his Oversight) doth deserve much Compassion, whom I know ever truly to have honored you, and to have placed the greatest part of her Glory in the Happines of your Honor's Fortune. Yet in this her heavie Misfortune, she with her many

I fear I must be forced to have recourse to your Honor for part of that Mony, which by your Directions I should have received from Sir Henry Neville. I am not fully satisfied, nor well cannot be, by that Order he giveth; yet to avoid your Honor's farther Trouble, I have intreated Mr. Packer, yf he may have Access unto him again, to solicit him. I very humbly beseech your Honor with favour to recommend me, both for myne Advance, and the Augmentation, for which in your former Letters, you gave me hope to move her Majestie. And so craving Pardon of this my Boldness, I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's in all Duty humbly to be commaunded,

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 23^d May 1601. O. S.

THIS Gentleman Mr. Anthony Tracy, passing this way from Florence, where he hath made some good abroad, being desirous to render his Duty and Service to your Honor, doth give me this present Occasion of writing, though this time doth not present much worthy the Understanding. Upon Wednesday the Duke of Bouillon departed from this Towne towards Sedan, with purpos to return within 20 Days. The same Morning I went to salute him before his Departure; "and withall, to inform him of her Majestie's prosperous Health, the Repose and Contentment of her Subjects, and her Assurance, by the Assistance of God, of the entier Reduction of Ireland. I likewise delivered the great Honor her Majestie had don to the Earle of Marre, and with what good Satisfaction he departed;" which I did, because those Vanities, whereof your Honor's Letters make mention, were not only bruited and beleevd, but wished and desired here. I inform'd him likewise of the reviving of the Treaty, which long here hath been feared; and by the passing of the last Messenger from Calais, is held as concluded: "The which, I said, the final Contentment which here was found, and lesse to be expected, did move her Majestie to entertaine. He sawe our Contentment was finale, the which I were the forier to see, because he did not see it likely to amend: and so said, that not 12 Days since in Council, upon Debate of their owne Affaires, they fell into Consideration of forrain Estates; when, he said, that their Neighbours were little beholding unto them, and namely England, from whence they had received so many Curtesies, and so great, as did deserve a more gratefull Remembrance." What was answer'd he did omit to tell me; but he replied, which doth imply the Answer, "That if the King might have had all his Demands of the Queen of England, he wold not so easily have hearkened to a Peace with Spaine; but this was to be considered, whether without those Aids from her, they ever cold have arrived to that heighth of State, to have had a Treaty either offered, or accepted. He concluded with me, that he found well that there was a Designe hatching, for the final Ruine and Destruction of the Religion; and so told me, for all our Treaty, we had no reason to be too confident, though it should take place. I know, said he, the Queen is wise, and her Counsaill watchfull, yet this, I say, can do no harm. I praied him to open himself more plainly; he answered, think I speak upon some Ground and advise of it:" More I cold not draw from him. Yt may be bc, he hath a particular end in this Speech, somewhat to allay the heat in embracing the Peace with Spayne, which I know he doth no wise affect; for the Successe thereof must needs take down the edge of their pride here, and weaken the State of his Brother Count Maurice, whose greatness he holds to be his own strength. When I took my leave of him, he praied me to recommend him to your Honor, and to intreat you, with assurance of his ductifull Service, to present in his Name to her Majestie, a most humble Request in the behalf of Sir Robert Vernon; of whom, having been bred up with him for certaine Years, he could not but have a loving and tender Care. He said he wold alleage no Excuse to mittigat the greatness of his Offence; but yf her Majestie wold shew him so much Mercy, at the instant of his Petition, to free him from that Punishment which otherwife he should suffer, he wold acknowledge it for a great Honor, and undertake hereafter, for the others more loyall and dutifull Carriage. I beseech your Honor to move her Majestie, and understand her gracious Pleasure herein. Yf she shall be pleased to grant this Grace, Sir Robert Vernon shall do well by his Letters to the Duke, to acknowledge with gratefullness, the Mercy her Majestie hath vouchsafed to shew him, at his Intercession. The Duke will receave it for an honorable favour, and add it to the Number of those many Obligations, wherewith he doth profess to the World, to be tyed to her Majesties Service.

Notwithstanding by my last I advertized, that by Letters from Venice of the 12th of this present it was assured, that the Army in Italy did dissolve; yet fence, contrary advices have ben receaved, that it doth rather increase, and that part is already descended the Mountaines; whereby the Suspicion of the Siege of Geneva is renewed, and the fear of the Inhabitants redoubled; who have advertized the King of their Doubts, and have recalled their Secretary, who did extraordinarily negotiate their Affaires here. Wherein they have hetherto found hard Measure; nether having hope to recover their Mony, (being the Sum of 350000 Ducats, which they have disboursed in the King's Service, and so is acknowledged and verified,) nor being suffered to enjoy the Balliage of Jesse by the Marechall Byron, (to whose Government of Bourgoyne, la Bresse is added;) which they did wynn during the late Warrs with their own Force and Charge, and fence by Agreement hath ben morgaged and assigned unto them.

This Siege of Geneva is like to bring som Alteration of Affaires in this Estate, ether at home or abroad. For yf the King (which he doth protest) shall send them open Succour, and for that purpose doth nominate Monsieur de la Noie, yt may upon good Reason, cause a Rupture between him and Spayne, whose Enterprize it is. Yf the King shall refuse, the Religion doth resolve to levie Armes for their Assistance, and so in a Synode held this last Week at Gerjoy by Orleans; it was concluded; which being once raised, can want no pretexts to uphold and reinforce themselves. The generall Opinion is here, that this State cannot long continue in these termes now it standeth, so generall are the Discontents, and so hardly to be composed. At Lyons lately there was a Boate upon the Rhosne, charged with Merchandizes, and with People to the Number of twenty, (supposed to com from the Excercise of Religion) assailed by the baser Sorte of the Towne. The People of the Boate protested, that they were Merchants and of Geneva; whereupon, as though it had ben but faelix error, they were more violently assaulted, and hardly escaped from being drowned. And fence at Bourdeaux, under the Conduct of a Capuchin Fryer, the Peopell did rise in Armes, went to the Place where the Religion doth excercise, there brake the Seates and Benches, abused the Pulpite, and committed many Villanies not to be named. Order is given for Punishment of these Abuses; but such, as will incense the Malice of the Offenders; not extinguish it; and rather aggravat then appeas the just griefe of those, that see themselves exposed to the Scorn of their Adversaries. Monsieur de Rhosny did send down very lately his Commissaries, to publish the Pancharte, for the levying of the Impositions and Gabells in Poitou. The People did mutiny against them, and assailed the House where they were retyred; from whence to save themselves, they were forced to escape by a Postern

An. 1601. Doore. The Comissaries are likewise sent into Bretaigne for the same purpose, where assuredly they will find the same Entertainment. Here is an Opinion, that the King will assemble a nationall Counsaill, for the deciding the Differences in Religion; wherein he himself will presidere, the better to play the same Traic̄t which he did at Fountainbleau the last Year, in the Conference between Monsieur de Plessis and the Bishop of Evreux. Perhaps the Speech of the Duke of Bouillon might allude to this Desseigne, which doth tend to no other end, then to exterminate the Religion of this Realme; which to maintaine, the former Trobles must be revived, and so this State fall into a Relapse; which will be so much the more dangerous, the les Comisseration their respectles Behaviour (being but yet upon the mending hand) doth desearve.

Your Honor will be pleased to inform me, what Answer Monsieur de Boissise hath given to her Majesties Demands; for before I shall thereon reply, I shall receive no other Answer, then that there Ambassador hath given her Majestie Answer, wherewith she doth rest satisfied.

The States are to receive this Year 150000 Ducats by three Paiments; for the first the Shippes are daily attended at Diepe. The Scots here have received, that upon the Execution of the E. Bonneton, one Corvell an Herault, did hang the King of Scotland's pourtraic̄t upon a Gallows; in the Market-Place at Edynburgh, for which Insolency (as he well deserveth) he was burned.

The two Extraordinary Venetian Ambassadors to congratulate this Marriage, arrived here upon Wednesday; they were honorably received out of the Towne by the Prince of Condé, and Marshall D'Ornano, and so accompanied to Madam the King's Sisters House, where they are lodged. The King is yet at Fountainbleau. And so, &c.

Right Honorable,

Paris 29th May 1601. O.S.

I Should not at this time have troubled your Honor, had not these Letters from Don Verginio, ben recommended unto me, as well for speedy as for assured Conveyance. I received them this Day by the Secretary of Florence, who intreated me to sollicite, that what Answer your Honor should send might be through his hands, for the better Discharge of his Duety, to whose Care those were from his Master so straightly recommended. The King is yet at Fountainbleau, where this Week the Counsaill there hath been assembled, with some of the Governours of the Port Townes, as Monsieur de Vic of Calais, de Chattes of Diepe, and the premier President of Rouen, and he of Reues. The purpose is to establish the Law of the Admiralty, which is held to be much out of Order; and to advise about the Reglement of Commerce, between the King's and the Archduke's Subjects, about which Affair long since I have advertized. Mr. Commartin, the President du grand Conseil, was sent to treat with the Deputies of the Archduke at Vervin; where much time hath ben spent, but nothing concluded; and so both Parties returned, with Continuance of the Treaty untill another Meeting.

Monsieur de Boderie, the King's Agent at Brussells, is now here; whether he shortly doth retorne. He doth deliver a very deplorable Relation of the Miseries of those Countreys, and a deadly Hatred of the People towards the Spaniards. Whereupon he maintaines the Discourse, that if the States would be induced to a Conference with the Archduke, and upon the first Entrance, propose the expelling of the Spaniards out of the Countrey, and thereupon insist peremptorily, without proceeding farther; the refusall thereof (for he holds that Point wold have this Effect) would cause a generall Revolte in all parts; when the People shall see, that it is not the publick Peace, or Deliverance from their Miseries, which is fought, but the Greatness of the King of Spain, and the entire Destruction of those Countries, under the Yoke of his Tyrannie. An. 1601.

Point

The Treaty for Hungary between the Emperour and the Turk is broken. The Emperour did demaund all Hungary to be restored, where he pretendeth to be King. The Turk, the Restitution of Strygonium* and † Giavarin, and the Arrearages of the Tribute since the last Warrs, all at one Paiment, and after yearly to be continued. There is a Bishop chosen of Mayence, Nephew to the last; so it is thought the Election of the King of the Romans shall proceed, which in liklyhood will fall upon Matbias, the Emperour's Brother. Of this Army in Italy, there is no more Assurance then in my last Advertizements; only this since is reported, that at Genoa there are arrived between 50 and 60 Gallies, wherein are to embarke 12000 Men of these Soldiers, to what purpose is not knowne. Some do interpret it against France, others against the Turk; for some Deseign in Barbary and Tripoly is named.

doth assure me of advice out of Italy, of certaine French Men that now are in Mytan, sent from hence secretly, to practice and hold Intelligence with Count Fuentes. The happie Repose of her Majestie's States, and the prosperous Success of her Affaires in Ireland, (both which God mainetaine) doth cause this People to change their Style, into a more humble and respectfull Pbrase. Their Desires having expected nothing lesse, then that in the one, so great a Storme should pass so mildly, without leaving behind a rough and high Sea; or in the other, that a Disease so dangerous, should be not only recovered, which long since, in their conjecture, was geven over as mortall and incurable; but also (by her Majestie's Prudence and well policed Constitution) perfectly established, through the whole Body of that Island. And now freshly is arrived a Bruite, which sounds much to her Majestie's Honor, of a great Defaict that the Spaniards should receive by the English, some few Daies since, not far from the Sluce. The Man that doth deliver this Report, is called Constantine Diell, a Sea Captaine of Diepe. He says, that he himself came from St. Lucar, and sawe the Fight, which continued six hours. Upon these former Premisses, they here infer, that the Treaty being now revived, the Spaniards will descend to more lowly Termes; and offer such Conditions, as the Honor of her Majestie, and the Safety of her State shall demand.

By Letters from Spain we hear, that notwithstanding the late Retorne of the Soldiars, the King doth impose a balidiesme upon all Oyle and Wine; and hath made an Ordonnance, to retire into his owne Hands all the Argenterie within the Realm, upon Confiscation of that which shall be concealed. He doth not except the Plate and Riches of the Church, whereunto the Bishop of Toledo doth oppose himself. He will take of all what he shall think good, and pay for it according to the Waight, after he hath tempered it by the Artifice of the Mynts, and turn'd it into Mony.

The French King is about a new Mistresse, called la Boidiffiere. Her Father demaundes 100000 Crowns, 70000 are said to be accorded. (27) Monsieur de Rbofny doth storm, that his miserable, sparing, and cruell Exactions upon the People, whereby he is becom the Hatred of the World, should be squandered in this manner; and doth desire to leave the Charge of the Finances. (144) The King doth answer, that he will be le Maistre; he knows his Service hath ben good, and many he hath that can do as good: Yf that he be so willing to leave that State, he must look likewise to leave the rest. The Princeesse of Florence that was, doth make way to this Love; hoping thereby to divert, or at least to divide the Streame of his Affections from la Marquisse, who now hath the sole Possession of all. And so yf she shall be so happy, to be delivered of a Dauphin, she may the more boldlie challenge a Preseance, and be tertia in amicitia. This Reglement for Marchants, which herewith I send your Honor, will not only banish forarain Coyne out of this Realme, but carry out the Gold of this Realme,

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable;

Paris, 3^d June 1601. O. S.

THE Letters which within this Box your Honor shall receive from le Grand Seigneur and Ephraim Bassa, to her Majestie, were delivered this Morning unto me, by one who is com lately out of Turquie, with Letters to this King, and some smal Presents, as a Cimmiterre, a Dagger, and a Feather. He cold be contented to be honoured with the Title of an Ambassador from the Great Turk. But by what I can understand by others; and find by Conference with himself, after long aboad that he hath made in those Parts, he was willing to make a Journey into his native Countrey, (for he is of Marseilles) and for his greater Honor, hath procured to be recommended to the King, by Letters and Presents. He sent to speak with me, with Intimation of these Letters for her Majestie. At my coming, he proposed, whether he should himself carrie them; or send them by one of his Company, or deliver them to me to be sent. To the which, finding him most willing, I wold not dissuade him; thinking sith he was a Man of no greater quallity, nor any very good fashion, he with his Company, whereof many have ben gathered up by the Way in his Voiage, cold not be but a trouble to her Majesties Court, and an unnecessary Charge to her. I have promised him, that he should be advertized, whether it be her Majestie's Pleasure, that he should go into England, and what Letters she wold send in Answer, should safely com to his hands. He saies he is Physition to the Great Turk; yet by his owne relation, he comes not directly from Constantinople, but from Belgrade.

The King is now in this Towne; but so closely at Zametz House, that his unwillingness to be seen, makes no Man willing to approach unto him. The Conference which was to be held at Fontainebleau, for reestablishing the Admiralty, and negotiating the Commerce between this Realme and the Archduke's State, is now to be treated on in this Towne. For the Commerce, (as I understand) there are three cheefe Points in Consideration: First, for the free Traficke of their People into the Archduke's Parts, as Graveling, Dunkerke and the rest, which hitherto the States have hindered. Then, that the Banner of France, shall be sufficient Warrant for free and secure Passage, without Search or Visitation. And lastly it is dispute, considering the ordinary Imberge that is used in Spayne, and that their Shippes are subject on all parts to the Visitation, whether it were not more safe for the Subject, and as commodious for the King, not so much to Trade into forraine Parts, but to erect certaine Staple Townes in the most convenient Places, where all forrain Commodities should be discharged, and their own vented out.

This Afternoon I was with Monsieur de Villeroy, " to whom I related the " hard Proceeding which hath been used, against the poor Man of London, in " the Sute which he hath had against the Rockellers. To the which he answered
 " no more, then that the Counsaill, when there should be occasion, wold yeald
 " a Reason of that which they had done, but not unto me. I wold not farther
 " reply upon him; but said, that I had understood of a Conference, which was " to be had for the Reglement of Commerce. I praied him to be perswaded,
 " that the Confidence which her Majestie had, of his Desire for the Conservation " of this Amity, did assure her, that he wold suffer nothing to be conc'uded,
 " which should be prejudiciall to the Treaties or Liberty of her Subject's Trade.
 " He

“ He answered, that no Man living, did desire more the Amity of her Majestie An. 1601.
 “ then the King, and so reciprocally was he perswaded of her Affection towards “ him: But said he, she is yll served, and her Ministers do not accord with her;
 “ and so began to invaigh, against the Evill which their Subjects there in England
 “ do receive. Concluding, that the King had lost all Patience, and now was re“ solved himself to provide Remedic for his Subjects Wrongs. I offered to shew “ him the Lyft of thole, who had acknowledged to have received good Satis“ faction in their Suites. Whereby I said it wold appear, that the Complaints “ which their Ambassadors did make, were more violent then there was Cause:
 “ And withall praied him, that I might have a Note of the Names of thole, (yf “ any such there were) to whom Justice had ben refused”. He refused to see the List which here I have, under the Scall of the Admiraltie: Notwithstanding, at my next going to him, I will present it to his Viewe. “ He stood much upon the “ Justification of Monsieur de Boisfisse's sincere Intention, for the Conservation of “ the Amitic between the two Crowns; which I was not willing to contradict:
 “ And for thole to whom Justice had been refused, he said it was to no purpose
 “ to give their Names, sith already they had ben presented to her Majestie's “ Countaill. Lastly, I requested his Favour, for the Moderation of the Edict “ against our Marchants at Roïen: But the Answer was, that the Arrest was “ conformable to the Laws and Ordonances of England, and his Opinion should “ be, to have it presently put in Execurion.

I found Monsieur de Villeroy in all his fashion, besides the Sharpness of his Answers, very strange and yll contented: Perhaps the more, because he had that Morning, received a Letter from Monsieur de Boisfisse, which the Bearer la Motte doth saie, did containe fresh Complaints of five severall Matters. At my taking leave of him, “ I said that it was not for want of Cause, as he himself might well “ know, that her Majestie's Ministers did not importune the King's, and his “ Ears, with the Multitude of their just Complaints; but that it was not her “ Pleasure, that they should with Bitterness exasperate the Greavances, but mild“ ly touch them, and so lightly pass them over. The Issue of this Conference will clearly discover, what purpose they have to entertain our Amity, with Contentment to her Majestie, and better Satisfaction to her Subjects; whereof I hope to be able fully to advertize your Honor, so soon as the Assemblée shall be dissolved.

The Ambassadors of Venice, Prinli, and Delfini, have taken leave of the King, and this Day do depart. Yesterday I was with them, to give Testimony of her Majestie's loving Affection, for the Conservation of their Commonwealth.
 Monsieur de Gast, Governor of Amboise, being at his House, not far from thence, was lately assaulted, by certaine masked and disguised Persons, and stabbed to Death. He was the Man, that gave the fatall Blowe to the last Duke of Guise at Blois. Yt is not doubted, but these Bohemians or Egyptiens, (for so here they are called) were aposted by the Duke of Guise, who now is at Marseilles, and the Prince Joyntville, who is in Lorraine. The Insolency of this Man's Behaviour, hath made him so hatefull, that he doth dye not only unlamented, but also unpittied; though the Example may draw after it a dangerous Consequence.

* We hear out of Italy, that Sebastian should be delivered by the Great Duke, to the Viceroy of Naples. Of the Army there, there is yet no Assurance that it is dissolved; though som Letters from Turin, of the 28th of the last, (which the Venetian Ambassador here hath received) do speake, that the Companies which were for the Archduke, should begin to march within three Days after. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

An. 1601.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 12th June 1601. O.S.

UPON those sower Answers, which I received from (Distrust) Monsieur de Villeroy, whereof my last of the 3^d of this present do fully enform your Honor, understanding that the Counsaill was here assembled, and entered into Conference for the Reglement of Commerce between this Nation and their neighbour Countreys, I took occasion to vissit Monsieur de Chattez; “ who
 “ at large delivered unto me, that Monsieur de Villeroy had the Day before read “ openly before them all, a Letter freshly received from Monsieur de Boisfisse, “ (which was that which my last doth certifie) wherein he doth not only com“ plaine, that no Justice hetherto hath ben done in England for the Reliefe of “ the King's Subjects, in the Wrongs which they have received by our Men of “ Warre, but doth give Assurance, that none hereafter is expected to be done;
 “ adding, that what Care the King hath for the Preservation of his Subjects
 “ from such Wrongs for time to come, or for Remedy of those which are alrea“ dy received, must be shewed by his Provyision from hence, without further re“ lation to our Justice in England.” This Letter was followed with as much Bitterness as it was conceived; and some that were present had particular Gre-vances, as Monsieur de Sourdiac Governor of Brest, who doth complaine of a Spoyle some Years sence committed by the English upon a Ship of his, which he hath sought by Course of Justice to recover, but hath ben returned in vaine, with loss of Time, and much Expende.

I understand it hath ben question'd, howe expedient yt might be for their State, to give forth Letters of Reprisall, but their owne Reason did soon beat them from that purpose; knowing, as best acquainted with the Nature of their owne Disposition, that it is not for want of Will or Desire, but of Might and Powre, that they are Plaintifes in this Case. The Governors of Diepe and Calais have not ben wanting to maintaine her Majestie's Honor; relating the great Obligation that this Realme doth owe unto her, and demonstating, by many Reasons, the Assurance of their State, by the Amity of England, and the Necessity of our Commerce. And there Monsieur de Chattez did shewe, that in an Assembly held at Diepe very lately amongst the Clothiers and the Drapiers, yt was proved, that without the Trade of our English Kerfies in Normandy, the poor Countreymen should have no means to live; for neither should he have Cloth to wear, being not able to reach to the Price of French Cloth, (the worst being at seven or eight Franks the Ell,) nether should he have Vent for his Canvas and Linnen Cloth, which only our Marchants transport into England. Nothing hath ben concluded amongst them for our Affaires of England; and yf any thing shall be, yt is only deliberated between the Chancellor and Monsieur de Villeroy. Upon Sunday last I was at Moncaux with the King; and taking notice of this Conference, “ I said, that though I was assured, both for his particular Affection to “ her Majestie, and his Desire in generall for the Conservation of this Alliance, “ that he wold suffer nothing to be innovated, which might tend to any Aliena“ tion of that Amitye which these two Crowns did enjoy, to the mutuall Re“ pose of the Subjects of each State: Yet not to be wanting in my Duety, I “ was bold to sollicit him, that in this Assemblie of Counsaill respect might be “ had, that the Intercourse of our Marchants Trade (which was the most appa“ rent Fruite of this Alliance) might not be abridged. He presently said, that “ he received divers Complaints, that our Marchants did bring into this Realme
 “ such Marchandizes of Clothes as were deceitfully wrought, and not tollerated
 “ to be sold in England: And though, for redress of that Abuse, he had made “ an Ordonance conformable to our Statutes, yet we did oppose our selves against “ yt. He said, his purpose was not that any thing should be innovated, but did “ desire that our Trade should be continued, and yet his Subjects not deceived.
 “ I an-

“ I answer'd, that those Informations did proceed from the Drapiers Drapants An. 1601.
 “ at Rouen, whose particular Gaine was interested in this Case; who did desire “ for their private Lucre, to have a Monopolic of Cloth-working amongst them“ selves. I praised that the Chaufetiers and Drapiers, who sold in retail, might “ be heard, who would shew the Necessity of our English Trade for the publique “ Good of his Subjects. Yt was convenient, I said, that our Marchants trade-“ ing within his Realme, should conform themselves to the Obedience of his “ Laws; but this Ordonance was no Reglement, but a Banishment of Clothes, “ enjoying an Impossibility not to be performed. He referred me for farther “ Answer, untill he spake with Monsieur de Villeroy: And then he lightly “ touched the Complaints of Monsieur de Boisfisse, for the which, he said, some “ speedy Redress must be made for the good of both Realms; wherein he was “ assured, that he should find her Majestie as willing as himself.

At my return to this Towne I went to Conflans, where Monsieur de Villeroy then was, to shew him the Attestation under the Seal of our Admiralty, (which I sent for from Rouen) of such their Subjects who had received Justice. “ I prai-“ ed him to peruse yt, whereby he should perceave that our Justice was not so “ faulty as he enformed. He wold not vouchsafe once to behold yt, saying, he “ was sufficiently enformed what our Justice was, and whatsoever this Attesta-“ tion did containe, was but des Contes. I replied, that it was an authentick In“ strument, and a legall Testimony, not to be excepted against in any Court of “ Justice. He said, he wold derogate nothing from the Faith of their Ambassa“ dor, who had often enformed them, that no Justice at all was done to their “ Subjects. I pressed him to declare himself, whether he spake figuratively, “ that not so much Justice had ben don as was required, or plainly, as the Words “ did importe. He answered, he spake plainly; confidently assuring, that tho'
 “ some Sentences had ben given in favour of their Subjects, yet not one had ever “ ben put in Execution; and withall he said, (and so willed me to write) that
 “ the King did assure himself, and so they did all, of her Majestie's princely Care “ for the Administration of Justice; and upon that Assurance the King wold “ write unto her, and shew, how much those Ministers, whom she did depute to “ determine those Causes, did fail of that Duety which was required of them;
 “ and did not doubt but her Majestie wold provide for hereafter, to moderate the “ Licence of her Admiralty, which now made no difference between Friend and “ Foe. To this I said, that he knew well the Course of her Majestie's Govern“ ment, That she ever yet was the Master in her own Dominions, and did look
 “ to be obeyed; nether had she used any other means to conserve her States in “ those Termes as now they stand, then by knowing her self how to command,
 “ and by teaching her Ministers to obey. For the Liberty of her Navy, I said,
 “ so long as she was in Warr with the Spaniards, yt was necessary for her Safe“ ty to stand upon her Garde: She had no Frontier Townes as the King had in “ France; the Sea was the Ditch, her Navie the Wall of her State, which “ ever were to stand ready in Sentinelle, to meet with the Deseignes of so “ great an Enemye. He said, for that, her Majestie might ever commaund the “ King's Ports and Navie for her Defence. I answer'd, she wold thankfully re- “ ceave any kind Office from so good a Friend, but yt toucheth too neere the “ Conservation of her State, to vallow her self of any more Forces then her “ owne. I after spake unto him for the Moderation of this Arrest against our “ Marchants at Rouen, upon those Reasons, which often before I have alleaged “ unto him; concluding, that this Ordonance was a Lawe rather befitting the “ Commonwealth of Plato, then the Policye either of England or France. His “ Answer was short, That nothing should be changed; That this Arrest was “ extracted out of our Lawes of England; That the only Respect to her Maje“ stie, and no other Consideration, had made them forbear from Confiscation of “ our Clothes these many Moneths; wherein they had shewed more Favour, “ then their Merchants find in England, to whom Extremity is used without Ju“ stice.

This

An. 1601.

This is the fume of the Speech I had with him. That which makes him thus peremptory at this time, is the Advertizement lately come from Monsieur de Rochpott out of Spayne, that the King there, the 27th of the last, hath confirmed the Peace with great Solemnity, and many Protestations of his infinite Desire ever to maintaine it; at which time he presented Monsieur de Rochpott with a Chaîne of 4000 Ducats. But this so great Keindness doth com many Moneths after the King here hath sworn the Peace; and after he hath failed of all his Attempts, against Marseilles, Metz, and Sedan.

This Assembly of Counsaill is dissolved. They will not be knowen of any Resolution, which must be made, as they saie, to Monsieur Commartyn, who doth return to Vervin, to meet with the Deputies of the Archduke. The States Agent doth fear, that they are resolved to give free Liberty of Trade for their Subjects into the Archduke's Partes; which if the States shall suffer, will much weaken their Strength and Reputation, and yf they shall impeach it, the King here will first openlie abandon them, and banish them from Commerce within his Realme. I beseech your Honor to be instructed, whether I shall sit downe by this Disgrace for the rejecting of this authentique List out of the Admiraltye as a Falsety, or whether I shall advow the Justification and Truth of it.

Madam the King's Sister, and the Duke of Lorraine, are expected here within few Days. I beseech likewise to be instructed, what Compliments I shall perfourme towards her from her Majestie. At Monceaux I did speake with Monsieur de Rohan, to whom I said, "that som Daies since I had received Commandment to visit him from her Majestie, and so entered into Speech with him of the Letter; which he denieth ever to have seene, and holdeth his Honor much wronged, that such a Falsety should be addressed unto him. At his coming to Paris, he wold use his best means to discover the Authour, to which purpose he used much Speech. But I praied him to spare that paines, her Majestie was assured that it was not divulged by his Privity, yet she cold not, for the Affection she doth bear to him, (and ever hath done to his House) but let him knowe, that a great Indiscretion was committed, that so infamous a Libell should publicquely be proclaimed, and spread abroad into all parts of the World. He praied me earnestly to intreat your Honor, in his Name, to assure her Majestie of his humble and dutefull Service, and that ever he will remember with most gratefull Devotion, the great Honor he lately received from her." The Princess of Orange doth very humbly kifs her Majestie's Hands, with Acknowledgment of the great Obligation of Duety and Service which her whole Family (de pere en fils) doth owe unto her. For whose perpetuall Preservation, in Highness of Honor and Happines of Content, her Praiers shall never be wanting, with that Service which she in that Court shall be able to perfourme. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

29th June 1601.

I Would have answered divers of your Letters before this tyme, but that our Resolutions depended upon the sending away of Mr. Edmondes; by whome her Majestie hath thought it not amifs, expressely to remember to the King, his ill Requittal; the rather, because it may appear to him, that you have done nothing, ex motu repentino or proprio, but by the Direction you have had from her Majestie, and not from her Ministers. In the Particularities of his Employment, diverse things be answered which your Letters have required, especially all things belonging to these Contentions which disturbe the Trafficq. You shall therefore by this Letter, only receive an assurance of all good Approbation in her her Majestie of your Endeavours; wherein make this Accompt, that I both have, and will performe towards you, all the good Offices that I can. An. 1601.

The Letters which have proceeded from the Duke of Bracciano, are answered particularly by an expresse Messenger sent to Florence. They do concern a Ship taken at Sea by an English Ship, in which Cause he is altogether abused by the Marchants; for he is made believe, that the Goods do belong to Florentines, whereas they are proved to be laden in Lisbon, upon the accompt of Portingalls; and only sought to be carried away by a Pretext, that they should have appertained to Portingalls dwelling at Pisa, pretended to have become Denysians to the Duke of Florence. Under which Collor, the Duke hath most unjustly stayed all the Subjects of England, before Justice demanded, or denied; being possessed with an Information, that the Ship laden with Sugars was ketched hard by his Porte by some English Ship that had ben in Legorn some three Days before; where now it appeareth full well, that the English Ship had never ben there, nor neerer within the Straights than Valencia, upon which Coast that Ship was taken. And further, (whereby the Injury is the greater,) this Man of Warr was sent into the Straights to this only end, that where two or three Pyrates were complained of to range in the Straights Seas, (against whom her Majestie had made many Proclamations,) this Ship should take them all by Force, and bring them home to answer Justice. A matter therefore very far from Indifferency, to take that from that Ship which she had gotten from an Enemy, especially when in the same Seas dayly her Majestie's Merchants are taken, to what Port soever they are going. But I will herein draw out my Letter no further; because her Majestie hath written at large to the Duke of Florence in this Case.

As concerning the coming over of the Turk's Messinger, her Majestie doth very well allow your Discretion in seeking to hinder the same. The Letter only contained an Advertizement of the Turk's Victories at Temiswar; whereof for myne owne part, I had rather the Queen did bake the Answer, then put herself to the Question between her Policy and her Christianity. Always, I hope, you find it so in your Power to manage the Cause, as the Messinger may not take it any Affront. And thus, referring you for all things els to the Correspondency which I know Mr. Edmondes will hold with you, I committ you to God.

From the Court, &c.

Your loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

Since the Arrest of the Merchants, another English Ship, commanded by one Captain Gifford, hath been arrested in Florence, and all her Men put into the Galleys, for no other then this; That Gifford meeting an Argousye within those Straights bound for Spayne, with whom one of those Pyrats was fighting, he being meerly ignorant that it was a Pyratt, joyned with him and tooke the Argousye, being altogether laden with Spanish Goods, carried her into the Port of Ligorne, leaving the Pyrats Company when he knew what he was, and yet is there proceeded withall as above said.

I have sent you a Letter for the Duke of Bonillon from Sir Robert Vernon; whereby it may appear, how much the Recommendation of his Estate hath wrought in the Queen's Mind towards him; whom she hath pardoned Lyf, Land, Liberty, and Ranfome.

An. 1601.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 1st July, 1601. O.S.

BY the returne of Monsieur la Fountaine, your Honor doth understand the Disposition of this Court, both for the Pretences whereon they ground their Greevances, and for their Desyre, (which they protest to be great) for the Preservation of this Amytie. Since I have been visited with a violent Fievre, which caused me the last Week to intermitt my course of wryting. Now upon Recovery of my Strengthe, I presume to sollicite your Honor, that that Difference, which yet dependeth between Monsieur de Boisfisse and her Majestie's Commissioners for the Administration of Justice towards the King's Subjects, may be cleared: For the verifying of that Record, (whereof in my last I sent an Extract to your Honor) will cut off all occasion of calumnious Obloquy. This last Week the Counsell did assemble agayne about Maritime Affairs, where Monsieur de Chattes was called. I find by him, that they which hold themselves most agreeed, are Monsieur de Sourdiac the Governour of Brest, and de Lusan Captaine of the Scottish Gards, and Governour of Blaye upon the River of Garonne: A Man too well known, for the Violence of his Passion, and hard Traitement of our Marchants which trade at Bordeaux.

Yesterday Monsieur de Chattes came to my Lodging, and brought with him Monsieur de Villiars, Governor of New Haven; who complaineth, that now, in this last Moneth, a Ship wherein he hath great Interest, returning from Peru, charged with Merchandises to the Estimate of 20000 Crowns, was taken by tow Shippes appertaining to her Majestie, whereof one is called the Craen, not far from Conquest in Britany, and carried into England. They both prayed me to recommend the Cause to your Honor, to whom Monsieur de Villiars will wryte particularly; in whose Favour (for the Curtesie which heretofore he hath received from you in those Causes wherein he hath used your Honor's Assistance, which he acknowledgeth with great Gratefullness) he doth repose an assured Confidence for present Redrefs. The Complaint, I understand, is come to the Knowledge of the Counsaill, and is hotly taken, that such a Wrong should be attempted within their own Ports by Ships of her Majesties: Which, they say, can receive no other Interpretation, than of an open and professed Breache of the Alliance between the tow Crowns. The King hath writtē particularly of this Cause to his Ambassador, and the Admirall to my Lord Admirall. Your Honor will be pleased to consider the Means those Governors of Port Towns have, both to do good and evill Offices, not only for the Intercourse of our Merchants Traffick, but for purposes of greater Consequences; whereof occasion hath been, and hereafter may be often presented.

I have received an Advertifement, by means of a Fleamish Marchant, who long hath lived in Florence in great privytie with the Duke, that there is a Resolution taken between the King of Spaine and the Pope, to assist the Rebels in Ireland with Men and Money before the end of this Sommer. The Great Duke hath been dealt with to contribute to that purpose, but he hath refused, excusing himself upon the extraordinary Charges which the Army of Spayne in Italy hath caused him to bestow, for the Defence of his own Territorys.

The King, the beginning of the last Week, went to Chalons to meet his Sister; but upon an Indisposition of her Husband, who is fallen into an Apoplexie, her Journey was stayed for some few Days; notwithstanding this Night she is lookt for in this Town. The Queen yesterday went from hence to St. Germain, and this Day the King. Here is speeche, that from thence they will both go to Bloys. But the Madames of Nemours and Guise, have made a Request both to the King and Queen, to be excused from their Attendance in that place; but the King hath answered, That sith they make no Conscience to goe to Saint Clou, they need not be so scrupulous to goe to Bloys. Here arrived last Weeke Weeke two Ambassadors from Saxony and Savoy, both to congratulate the Marriage. An. 1601.

There was lately executed at Venice, one Joseph Donati, a Senator of the Counsaill de Pregadi, who was found to hold Intelligence with the Spaniard and the Pope, (being pensionarie to them both) to whom he did communicat the Secrets of their State, and their Resolutions in Counsaill. He was discovered by a Boy, who was the ordinary Messenger between him and the Spanish Ambassador who resideth there.

Of this Army in Italy, (which is said wholly to be dissolved) 7000 are passed through Lorraine, and by this tyme are ready to returne to the Archduke. We discourse of nothing else in this Court but the Siege of Berke, and the Archduke's Preparation to besiege Ostend. Yf your Honor shall be pleased to speak to Mr. Dr. Caesar, that from his Register I might receive an Abstract of the Proceedings in French Causes, with Reasons, when they are refused their Demands, I should be better able, on assured Grounds, to give Satisfaction to the King and his Counsaill, and stop the Clamours of the Multitude, which is bellua multorum Caput.

Here is one sent over by Monsieur de Boisfisse, called la Motte, who sheweth himself in his most lively Collours; though he be every way a contemptible Companion, yet I beseech you, that he may no longer abuse your Honor's Favours, whereof, by his Carriage, he maketh himself altogether unworthy.

Madame is now arrived, and with her the Duke of Lorraine: This Night they are both entertained at Zametz House. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 2^d July 1601. O. S.

THIS Letter came to my Hands this Morning from Mr. Brisket, who by his hard Fortune remains still Prisoner at Thionville. Though I think yt conteynes no great matter, yet I thought good to send it by this Bearer, who hath other Letters for your Honor, and of purpose doth take this Journey for to procure his more speedy Enlargement. We understand that the Journey of Blois doth hold, whether the Counsaill doth sett forward upon Munday next. Madame and the Duke of Lorraine, this Afternoon, are gone to St. Germainys. And so I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 15th July 1601. O. S.

TO accompany those which your Honor shall receive from Mr. Edmonds, I may not omit to advertize, that since my last, (wherein I made mention of a Resolution taken between the Pope and the King of Spainne, to send present Supplies to the Rebels in Irelande;) I have ben enformed, both by Letters which freshlie are com out of Spainne, as also by a Scottish Man, and one Richard Ball an Irish Man, Servant to Richard Stainburst, who remayneth with the Archduke, (who for that purpose hath there ben employed, and from thence by this Towne returned the last Weeke to Brussels;) That at their Departure

An. 1601. parture from thence, there were 4000 Men in Readinesse to be imbarqued for Ireland, the which the King here giveth forth, to be already landed there. The Secretary of Florence, within these few Dayes, by Letters which he hath received from his Master, hath advertized me of some higher Desseign projected in Spayne, rather ayning at time to come, then at any present Innovation in our State, more then this; that not to suffer the Rebells in Irelande, for want of their Assistance, to render up themselves into due Obedience, must needs advance all Enterprizes that hereafter they shall undertake.

Of the Affaires here, I can more easly deliver in what Termes they were before Mr. Edmonds's Arrivall hither, then in what State they now stand. For as his coming is well interpreted on all partes, being a demonstrative Argument of her Majestie's Desire of the intertainment of this Amitye; so her Resolution ever to maintaine her Honor, and not to abandon her Subjects to their intended Indignities, doth bring them to a more true understanding of themselves, and to the Acknowledgment of those good Offices received from her, which without some Admonition, they wold be content to forget.

The last Weeke, Monsieur de Gieury, one of the Secretaries of State, (upon Complaint exhibited by one of Britanny, for a Shipp which he pretendeth to be taken from him by some English, and carried to Flushing in the Year 85, where the Goods were sold, as he alleageth, by the Appointment of the Earle of Leicester, who then commanded in those Parts,) dispatched Letters of Mart against all English; which fence, upon better Advisement he hath called in and caused to be cancelled.

Monsieur de Sourdiac hath long importuned the Counsaill, to be relieved by Letters of Mart. He is appointed to instruct Monsieur de Messe in his Cause, who must make Report thereof to them, and accordinglie they will determine. By which Course, Monsieur de Sourdiac is like to obtaine his Desire, when he may alleage what may advantage his Cause, without Opposition. Those poore Men of ours who here are Suters, do yet find smal Comfort. Phillipes, (the Execution of whose Letters of Mart, as he enformeth me, was staid upon Monsieur de Boissise's Letters, and promise to the Lords, that the King would give present Order to Monsieur de St. Luc for his Satisfaction) at his first coming, received good Words from Monsieur de Villeroy; but after, was sent over to the Chancellor, and from him returned to Monsieur de Villeroy, whom I have twice sollicitated in his behalf; shewing the Justice of his Cause, the long time that he hath spent, and the Expence that he hath made, to his utter Ruine, in following the Sute; that his Necessity was growen so extreme, that longer to delay him, was to deny him Justice. Yet I cold never get other Answer, but that he must have Patience, and attend till he had Leisure to move the King, and the King Monsieur de St. Luc. What Measure of Justice Allen hath found in his Cause, recommended by the Lord Tresorer, and now two Years in Proesse before the Commissioners at Rouen, (wherein it is said the Ambassador doth magnifie the Justice of France) by this inclosed will appear; wherein Sentence and Execution hath ben given against the two Captains, both not worth 40 Ducats in Goods or Credit, the liquid Summe of the Depredation being proved to amount to 9000 l. But the premier President of Rouen, being sollicitated to proceed against the Owners of the Ship, and the Vittailers, (as we accustomarily proceed in England) refused, without expresse Commandment from the King, or Letters from Monsieur de Villeroy; to whom I remonstrated this Proceeding, and praied him to wryte to the Commissioners; which at first he refused, but in the end, promised to write in generall, that Justice might be done, but wold not particularize in what forme; which was he said, to teach them their Duties, which in Discretion he wold not committ. The Cause of our Marchants at Rouen doth yet depend before the Counsaill, the Issue whereof, doth lye in the Mouth of the Reporters; which cannot expect any favourable Successe, before Judges, that hold it a Derogation from their Wisdoms to retract what once they have decreed. In this Confusion,

Mr. Ed-

Mr. Edmonds did find our Affaires; which before his Return, there is great Hopes he shall leave in better Fashion. An. 1601.

The Voiage of Blois, since the King's Returne from St. Germaines, is broken upon the Counsaile of the Physicians, who shewe the Danger that may arrive to the Queen, travailing in her eighth Moneth; and upon the Instance of those Ladies, who do persevere to protest against that Place. Fontainebleau, a base Village, shall have the Honor of the Queen's Delivery; for that Place where a Dauphin is born, by antient Privilege doth challenge an Exemption of all Impositions for three Years.

Poyton hath received the Panchart, and the Towne of Poytiers hath compounded for 2000 Ducats the Year. The Towns in Gascoigne and Guienne, do yet refuse; but the King hath sent the Marechal Biron, Monsieur le Grand, and Marechal D'Ornano, (who have most Credit in those Partes) to induce them by fair Means, without Compulsion to receive it. Zametz is condemned to be the Man, that perswaded the King so generally to demand this violent Exaction. The King, the more collourably to drawe them to undergoe this Yoke, doth promise to exact it but for three Years; but it is too sweet a Renew, once imposed, ever after to be abolished.

Madame, the King's Sister, hath had a great Misfortune since her Arrivall. The Night after the Day of her coming to this Town, she being gon the Afternoone to St. Germaines, her House fell on Fire, a great Part thereof is defaced, and much of the best Household-Stuff spoiled. Yt is doubtfull, whether the Fire came by Chance or by Deseigne; but that which increaseth the Suspicion of the latter is, that the Fire began on the Roof of the great Halle, where the Preaching was wont to be exercis'd.

I have satisfied the Turkish Messenger, by answering, that her Majesty should shortly have occasion, to write about some Affaires of her Marchants, when she would acknowledge the Receipt of those Letters; and by an Attestation under my hand, (which he required, for his particular Discharge to the Bassa of Belgrade) that I received those Letters and sent them to her Majesty.

The Duke of Bouillon doth with much Thankfullness, acknowledge the generous Favour which her Majesty hath ben pleased to shewe to Sir Robert Vernon at his humble Request; as more at large he will himself deliver by his Letters, at Mr. Edmonds's Return.

This Messenger being ready to depart, Charles Paget came to my Lodgings, and informed me of an Advertissement which lately he hath received from Brussels, That one Thomas James, a hard and desperate Ruffian, who hath lived in great Inwardness with Parsons the Jesuite, by whom he hath ben employed in Spain, and from thence lately is come to the Archduke to Brussels, where he hath ben treated with extraordinary kindness, and countenanced by Baldwin and Owen, is presently to be dispatched into England. Upon what particular Services he knows not, but such as he holds prejudiciall to our State. He describes him to be of a convenient Stature, red beard, of the Age of Forty five Years, born in Staffordshire at a Town called Noyall, bred up in London, where some time he was Apprentice. I thought it my Duty to send this, as soon as I did receive yt. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 20th August 1601. O. S.

UPON Monday last I went to Monsieur de Messe, (de Villeroy being with the King, who the Fryday before did go to Vernueil) to sollicite that the Declaration which was promised to moderate the Rigour of the Arrest, might be dispatched; "presuming, (as I told him) that they some Daies since had received Advice from the premier President of Roüen, whereupon they pretend the said Declaration shall be grounded. But he answered, that the premier President had not yet sent his Opinion, or yf he had, it was only in the Hands of Monsieur de Villeroy, who by reason of his Absence, could not communicat it to the Counsaill; but so soon as they should receive yt, without delay or more difficulty, yt should be dispatched. By which manner of Proceeding it doth appear, that they have no purpose to publish this Declaration, before they shall understand what Resolution her Majestie will take, ether in accepting or refusing their Overture for determining the Differences for Depredations. Of Monsieur de Rochpot their Spanish Ambassador, we hear nothing more, than that a Courier who passed lately from Spaine to the Archduke, did deliver, that he left him at Valladolid, where his People remaine yet in Prison. * The Quarrell did arise, that certaine Spaniards, reprehended in sharp Language the French, for bathing themselves, and shewing their Bodies naked upon the Banks of the River in uncivill Sorte, after the Fashion of their Country, in the Presence of the People; the which the French not brooking, the Night after finding the same Parties with many more walking by the Rivers side, suddainly assailed with their Weapons, and slewe two of them, whereof one was a Priest. The generall Opinion is that this Matter will be passed over, the rather, because the King in open Speech, doth not forbear to condemne the Ambassador's Peopell of much Insolencie, and himselfe of no lesse Indiscretion in the Carriage of this Action. As for the Defences which are made for Traffique hereafter into Spaine, they are but private, without publique Authority, and so as easilie may be recalled; and besides, this is rather the Pretext then the Cause, being a thing which heretofore often hath ben debated, as in my former to your Honor I have advertized.

The Duke of Lenox hath had his first Audience at St. Germain, where fell out a little Discontent between him and the Bishop of Glascoe, who moved that Balladyn his Assistant might be present at the Audience, which the Duke refused. After Audience, the Bishop returned to Paris without accompanyeng him to the Queen, whom he did not see before the Day after. Upon Thursday last, the Duke had his second Audience at Zametz House, from whence the Bishop excused himself. There, whether by the Inconsideration of young Gondy, or for want of due respect, the Duke attended and walked the better part of two Howers, before any one came to take notice of him; and at his Return from his Audience, he found some of his Pages beaten and all bloody, whom the King's had treated in that manner. I understand, he doth sollicite, that an Ambassador may be sent to reside with the King, for which purpose, one Baron de la Tour, Son in Law to Monsieur de Gondy, is named; and that the Privileages which this Crown hath antiently given to that Nation, may be revived; and namely, for himself he doth desire, to be invested in the State of the Captaineshipp of 100 Men at Arms, whereof the last that was possessed, was the Earle of Arran; who being found guilty of the Conspiracy of Amboise saved himself by flight, and sence, that Estate hath lyen dead. The Duke hath returned Sir James Simple into Scotland; he doth take the way of England. He is desirous his Countrey men should believe, that he hath much Credit and private Intelligence in her Majestie's Court. † The King upon Monday last from Vernueil, took Post toward Calais, accompanied with the Marshall Biron, Ballagny, Duke de Eguillon, Count of Auvergne, Messieurs de Gieury and Villeroy. The Motion was soddaine, for on Sunday Night the Queen received Letters from him, that he would meet her the Night after at Corbeill, upon her way to Fountainbleau, whether she is gon to attend her Delivery. The King did send to the Duke of Bouillon to follow after him, who yesterday departed from hence. Whereupon he sent for me, and told me, the King was gon to Calais, without means or purpose to give any Assistance to Ostend: But he had received Intelligence, that Count Maurice would do his utmost Endeavour to remove the Siege; which if he could effect, the King did hope it would breed some Alteration in those Partes, whereof he would be ready at hande to make his most profit. The Duke promised me, that if any thing should fall out worthy of her Majesties Understanding, he would write with Diligence to Mr. Edmonds. doth assure me, that the King hath sent for Barnevelt, to meet him there. His purpose is, presently upon his Arrivall to Calais to write to the Archduc, not to find his coming strange, for that he is come only to see his Frontier Townes, which long he had projected, but could not untill now find fit opportunity.

I send to your Honour, the Answers to the Grevances, wherewith Monsieur de Boisfisse doth pretend their Marchants to be furcharged; whereby it will appear, the Wrong that Passion may do to the Judgment and Discretion. Yf it shall be thought Convenient, that the Commissioners deputed for Matter of Depredation, may be authorized to take knowledge of the Grevances which the Subjects of each Crown can pretend; your Honor shall be freed from the trouble of many frivolous, yet clamorous Complaints; and her Majestie's Marchants relieved from many intollerable Exactions, which lately have ben, and daily are imposed upon them. I have sent to Mr. Edmonds a Coppie of the same, that he may communicat the Answer to our Marchants in London who Trade there. The Duke of Lenox departeth to morrow into Berry to see his Mother, who dwelleth not far from Burges. Here arrived the last Week a Nuncio from the Pope, to reside here; and this Week Monsieur de Betunes, did set forward in his Ambassage towards Rome. The Ambassador of Venice hath much importuned me to recommend particularly to your Honor, a Venetian Gentleman his Nephew, who doth desire to see her Majestie's Court, and to have the Happiness to kiss her Hands. I could not refuse his Instance, wherein I humbly crave to be excused. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 20th August 1601. O. S.

I Have been often and earnestly entreated by the Ambassador of Venice who resideth here, to recommend to your Honor's Favour this Gentleman, Marco Justiniano, his Nephew, and descended out of one of the principall Families of that Seignorie: Who having accompanied him into France, (as he professeth) should be ashamed to returne into Italy; before he hath seen her Majesty's Realme and Court; whose Hands, by your Honor's Favour and Curtesie yf he may have the Happiness to kisse, he will not only esteem it the greatest Honor that he ever hath or shall receive, but also the greatest Comfort wherein he shall follace the Course of his Age. I beseeche your Honor, at my humble Request, to vouchsafe him this Favour, and to excuse my Presumption, the which would not so far exceed the Bounds of modest Discretion, if the good of her Majestie's Service were not interested therein. And so, &c.

S I R,

21 Aug. 1601.

BECAUSE Mr. Edmonds will communicate with you his Dispatch, I refer you to his Relation: Only I have thought good hereby to Answer your Request for a greater Allowance. That first, I hope the Ambassador shall not long be absent. Secondly, That your Entertainment cannot be encreased but by a new Privy Seal; wherein yf I should importune the best Augmentation, it would prove but 10s. the Day; and when the Computation should follow what that would prove to if you should continue two Moneths longer, I would be forry but to make you better Advantage by pleading your Meritt lacking it, then to procure it. And thus, desiring you still to use your best means to procure me some Person that would live in Spayne, and there imploy himself in her Majestie's Service, I do end (only with that he should have such Reward as you do think fit to promise him)

Your loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Calais, 27th Aug. 1601. O. S.

PRESENTLY upon my last Dispatch by Mussy, I hasted in some Dilligence to this Towne, though I had no purpose to make shew of my self yf I had not found Mr. Edmonds here, whose Presence did generally collour my coming, and justifie my being here. For Monsieur de Villeroy, by many Letters which he did write to his particular Friends at Paris, did make yt known, that it would be offensive to the King that any Man should come, but only those whom by Name he did expressly call. I have not much now wherewith to importune your Honor: I will use my best Care to give Satisfaction to your Honor's Commaundment, for some fit Person whom you desseigne to imploy in Spaine. For the present, I remember, that by Appointment from Sir Henry Neville, I once had Conference with a French Man to that purpose, whom he in his Judgment did think very convenient for such a Service, and who at that tyme was very willing to undertake it upon very reasonable Conditions. The Man is now in England, called by Name Lois Cicogna. With whom he is I cannot directly enforme; but your Honor may be enformed by Sir Henry Neville's Son-in-law, or by Sir Henry Leonard, with whom he was in his Travails in Italy. The Man is of good Understanding in the Affairs of the World, and one that knows well his own Country; hath lived long in England, travaled in Germany, and most part of Italy. I think, unless his Condition in England be much better then I can conceive it, he will hold himself highly advanced, to receive from your Honor this Employment. But yf this shall not succeed, by Advertisement from your Honor, I will endeavour to send over unto you from Paris another French Man, so well qualified in all points for such a Purpose, as I presume no Man better; though I have not founded his Affections in this Particularity, but only know that he is desirous to entertaine any convenient Service. I presume it is your Honor's Pleasure, that the Party whom you would employ should come over fyrst to England; and so I will send this Man soon after my retorne from Paris, if in the mean time I shall not heare to the contrary. And so acknowledging the Comfort your Honor doth give me of the speedy Repayre of an Ambassador, and the Assurance I hold in your honorable Favour, I shall pass over the rest of my time with better Contentment.

Your Honor's, &c.

An. 1601.Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.Right Honorable,Calais, 1601.

THE dayly Expectance of Mr. Edmonds's Returne, did make us both forbear to wryte; and now, that he doth returne, yt were unseasonable for me to wryte any thing of the Affairs of this State, whercof by his Relation your Honor shall in all points receave ample and assured Satisfaction. I now only will acknowledge your Honor's particular Kindness towards me, sufficiently approved by many Favours, and clearly attested by your last Letters; the which I confels to be so great, as that without them I should have sunk long before this tyme, under the Weight of so heavy a Charge. The which, the more unable I know my self worthylic to discharge, the more confidently I presume to sollicite for the repayre of an Ambassador; whose presence the Honor of her Majesty, and the necessity of her Service doth require, this being now her only Alliance; and that, with a People drunken with the Pride of their high Fortune, and who in their best Sobriety are ambitious ever to be respected, tho' ever careless themselves to shew Respect where 'tis due, expecting externall Ceremonie, tho' matters of importance, and more necessary, are disregarded. Untill her Majesty shall be pleased otherwise to dispose of this Charge, your Honor's former Promise gives me boldness to beseech you to be a means for the Encrease and Enlargement of my Provision: That which this Year past I have had, being very stright and sparing, when my Occasions of Expence were not so great, which for the good of this Service, I have had, and shall have cause to enlarge. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.Right Honorable,Calais, 1601.

I Have thought good to advertize your Honor, that the King is determined to part from hence to morrow, or on Thursday at the furthest. He returns in Post, and will make no stay untill he arrive at Fountainbleau. The half of his Officers departed on Monday from hence, and to morrow doth depart Monsieur Villeroy. So Monsieur de Buzenval, whom they pretend to have sent for from the States, and la Boderie from the Archduke, will come too late to fynd the King here. He complaineth much agaynst the States, both of want of Respect towards him, and Care of their own Conservation; that during the tyme he hath been here, they have not advertised him particularly of their Affaires, and what Assurance they have to maintaine Ostend. The States Agents sollicite the King for som Succours of Money in this tyme of their Necessity, but he wished them to be content with the 100000 Crowns which they received the last Week. The Duke of Eguillon returned from the Archduke upon Satterday Night. By the Relation he makes, the Armie is slenderly advanced, and in despayre to gaine the Towne. The Duke of Elboeuf hath obtained leave of the King, to go to the Armie to see the Duke d'Aumale, who departed yesterday, and this Day the Marfchal Laverdin goeth thither. And so, &c.

Y^T may please your Honor to understand, that the King departed this Morning from this Towne. He dynes at Marquesi, and lyeth this Night at Bologn, from whence he will goe in post to Fountainbleau. So that yt will be more convenient for Mr. Edmonds (yf he returne) to take the way of Diepe; to which purpose I have written unto him, and recommended the Letter to Sir Thomas Fane, to be delivered to him at Dover; though I may presume to assure your Honor, † that the Affaire which here he hath negotiated hath his End: The King's Affection; which at the fyrst did seem violent for the Conservation of Ostend, being upon the sodaine strangely relented and carelesly extinguished. I have had some Speech thereof with Monsieur de Villeroy, and shewed, how strange her Majestie would fynde this so sodaine Retraict; and that she could not but hold her self to be mocked and her Ministers abused, and could not interpret in any good part these idle and fruitless Projects, which were it seems never intended, or but cast forth, only to make triall what she would or could do. He answered not much, only that he understood not, nor could give a Reason of these Fashions of the King's Proceedings, for which he was sorry. Upon the Complaint which the Kinge made, that the States vouchsafed not to acquaint him with their Estate, their Agent presently dispatched, that some Ambassador be sent to the King. When the King departed, he commanded if any came hether, to returne them. Letters are dispatched to de Buzenval, not to move from thence. This Morning arrived the News of * Monsieur Chastillon's Death, by a blow of a Cannon. We hear also, that the Archduke hath taken 25 Ships of the States laden with Fish. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 18th Sept. 1601. O. S.

I Have not written since my return from Calais, because the first should bring the acceptable News of this Queen's happy Delivery, who was brought to Bed this last Night of a Sonn (between the Hours of ten and eleven) at Fountainbleau. This is the greatest and rarest Blessing that could arrive to this Crown, and the only means, yf God shall prolong the Days of the King, to assure the Peace and Repose of the Crown.

I have againe sollicitated, that the Declaration may be published, which was lately accorded upon the Arrest for the Reglement of our Merchandizes of Clothes; but Delay is made, and Excuse laied upon the premier President of Roüen, whose Advise they do not yet acknowledge to have received. I must acknowledge that our Merchants are more courteoullie treated, without Impeachment of their Priveleages, or Fear of Confiscation of their Clothes; but so long as the Arrest shall remaine in the generall Termes, without a moderate Interpretation, they always shall stand at the Mercy of their Adversaries, who do but watch an Advantage to revive the Law to the Prejudice of their Trade. Monsieur de Messe doth promise, (because to him the Cause was committed) to procure a present Dispatch. He doth excuse himself from this Voiage into England, for the determining of the Differences in the Causes of Depredations, upon the Weakness of his Age, his

† What this Affair was does not plainly appear by these Letters, but by some Passages in De Sully's Memoirs, (who was sent to negotiate it with the Queen) and from Mr Winwood's Letter, pag 348. I think that some Measures were then proposed both for the Relief of Ostend, and for an offensive Alliance against Spain. Vid. Memoires de Sully, Vol. 3. ch. 4. pag. 32; 33, &c.

* Upon the News of his Death the King declared, — Que ce Jeune Seigneur avoit tant de bonnes & belles parties, qu'il n'en voyoit point de son age & de sa qualité dont les vertus fissent concevoir de si hautes Espérances de Sully, Vol. 3. ch. 4. pag. 42.

many

many Services, and former Employments ill remembred and worse recompensed; but especially, (as secretly I am enformed) as ashamed to retourn unto her Majestie, fearing that manet alta mente repostum, their unworthy proceeding in their Treaty of Peace, wherein he was employed towards her. Notwithstanding I am perswaded, when the King shall move the matter unto him, (which yet he hath not don) he will not refuse to undertake it, the rather now, because he shall bring with him the joyfull Tydings of the Birth of this Dauphin. Many in this Court forbear not to deliver, that if this Voiage of Calais had ben undertaken with advised Deliberation, it wold have ben followed with a more assured Resolution; whereas nowe, their Friends have ben mocked with Demonstrations of Hopes without Effects, and they themselves subjected to the Scorne of their Enemies, to whom they gave just Cause of Jealousie, without purpose to harm: But the Performance of the Journey doth discover the King's Affection in his owne naturall Inclination; and the suddaine retorne, the powrefull Hand that Monsieur Villeroy doth hold over him.

Of Monsieur Rochepot this we hear, that five of his People (whereof his Nephew is one) remaine still in Prison; tho' to appease the poursuite of those who had civill Interests in the Cause, he hath disboursed 2500 Crownes. He himself hath taken leave of the King of Spaine for his retorne, and is before this tyme at Bayone. Yt is said, the King hath already nominated one Monsieur de Bareaud to succeed in that Ambassage. For the Prohibition, which by particular Governors of Ports was geven for Commerce into Spaine, it hath not hetherto ben observed; and the King lately hath said, that at the Importunity of the Merchants in Brittany and Rochelle it must be repealed, who without the Trade of Spaine profess they cannot live. The King hath bestowed lately upon the Marquise, the Contée of Clairmont in Beauvoisin, within five Leagues of Verneville, which doth cost him 250000 Ducats. Yt is thought he will erect it into a Dutchie for her. Yet now her Pride must needs fall: Yt is not long since that this Queen did saie, that if she brought a Son, she then wold begin to be a Queene; but if a Daughter, she wished her Bed might be her Tombe.

Yt is intended that a Recherche shall be made of all the Financiers in this Realme. They shall be proceeded against only civilly, whereby Monsieur Rhofny doth promise millions to the King's Coffers: Monsieur de Zancy doth follow the Pursuite against them, who hath an Assignation of 80000 Ducats upon those Summes that shall be levyed from them. The Towne of Geneva shall receive this Week 42000 Crowns of their Debt; so yt is to be hoped, that seeing all their Creanciers receive in part Contentment, her Majestie only shall not be neglected.

I have been diversely advertized by Men of good Quality, of some Discontents conceived of the Marshall Biron's Entertainment. Whether it proceeded that at his landing at Dover, the Officers demanded Money of his People, which some do report; or of a Letter which he himself did write unto the King on his way to London, wherein he saith, Ma bourse me fait beaucoup de bien, Car on ne nous defraie point en Angleterre.

The Duke of Lenox is gon to take a Survey of France. From Berry, where his Mother doth dwell, he went to see Lions, and from thence is gone as far as Marseilles.

I have here dealt with one for Employment into Spain: He is in all respects a very able Man, and most willing to undertake it. For his Provision, he doth refer himself to your Honor's Favour and Discretion. Yf Mr. Edmonds cannot be found, (or not found fit) I will take order that this Partie shall be ever redy at your Honor's Call. I hope his Service will give your Honor full Satisfaction.

The Fleet of Italy which parted from Genua in July last, whereof Andrea Doria had the Command by Sea, and of the Service by Lande the Duke of Parma, being before Algiers, (where they did purpose to land their Men) by a so-

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable;

Paris, 26th Sept. 1601. O. S.

THE King came to this Towne on Monday last, to congratulat with his Mistres (who now is neere also to her Time) the Birth of the Dauphin. Yesterday he returned to Fountainbleau; and to morrow, in Honor of his great Happines, doth make a solemne Feast to the Princes: The beginning of this Week I went purposely to see the Dauphin: He is strong, and a goodly Prince, and doth promise long Life. There is only about him a Governess over the Nourse, but Officers of State are not yet appointed, nor shall not be, as the King doth saie, so long as he shall be under the Tuition of Woemen. I have had late Conference with (191) the Duke de Bouillon, about the Affaire which Mr. Edmonds did treat at Calais; “ whereof he doth assure me, the King hath not spake “ one Word fence his retorne from thence. Wherein, he said, some Error was “ committed; for their Ambassador hath written, that he never made any such “ Proposition, whereon that Forme of Negotiation might be founded. I “ answered, that Mr. Edmonds was sent to Calais, not upon that Conference “ which Monsieur de Boisfisse held in private with him, but upon the Reiteration
 “ and Verifcation of the same to your Honor, which likewise by his Letter “ he did communicate to Monsieur de Buzenval, with advice, to impart the “ King's good Intention to the States for their Conservation, which according“ ly he performed. Upon this, he said, that the King was jalouse of her Ma- “ jestie's Proceedings, which he termed doubtfull and irresolute: And that “ from Spaine they lately had been advertized, that what Demonstration soe- “ ver she doth make to the contrarie, she doth desire nothing more then to have “ her Peace. To this I replied, that yf her Majestie had not approved, by ve“ ry royall Effects, her resolute Care for the Conservation of Ostende, yt wold “ now have ben out of Season to debate of Succours for the Reliefe of the “ Towne. As for those Advertizements which the King should receive, I said, “ they were Artifices too palpable to take place, but only with them, who were “ content to serve themselves of any Pretext: Considering, that in the Negotia“ tion of the Peace, in measure as it proceeded, either the King was advertized
 “ by his Ambassador from the Mouth of her Majestie, or by her Ministers, whom “ expressly she sent truly to inform him. I remonstrated then unto him the Con“ sequence of the Loss of Ostend, which he did apprehend to be no less then the “ Ruine of the States. But he said, nether we here take it to be in danger, “ nether you in England, by relation of our Men which nowe come from thence.
 So that all the helpe the States can look for from hence, is their Praiers and good Wishes, and Liberty for some Voluntaries to goe in their Service, yet a la file, not in Troops, and secretly without avowe. That which makes the King so fearfull to re-enter into the Warr, besides the Greedines of his Desire to pass the rest of his daies voluptuouslie in his Pleasures (which he will never abandon, though they abandon him,) is the guiltines of his own Conscience, remembering the respectless and uncivill Carriage towards her Majestie in the Treaty of her Peace; which makes him fear, that she through Envie of Revenge, if once he were embarked againe in the Warr, wold paie him in his own Coyne; make her Peace, and then behold with as senseless Respect the Proceedings of his Affaires, as now he doth tender the Weall of her State. There was

was an Opinion, that the King wold return into Pycardie, and keep his Winter at Amiens, whether he assigned the States to send some of their Body to come to confer with him; but that Voiage is dasht, and the Court and Counsaill shall goe and remaine at Blois. The King himself doth threaten to go further into Poictou and Auvergne, and those more remote Parts, where the People are assembled in Armes about the Pancharte, and a new Imposition upon the Salte, which they refuse to receave.

The Queen of Spaine was delivered of a Daughter the twenty second of this Moneth by their Style; in Joy whercof the Ambassador Taxis, and Ayala the Archduke's Agent, made Fiers, and caused some Pieces of Cannon to be shot off.

Upon Thursdaie the King received Letters from Spaine, that the Fleet that was prepared to reinforce the Enterprise of Andrea Doria for Algiers, upon the Defeat of that by Tempest, was to be employed, and is departed for Ireland. And yesterday Monsieur de Vic from Calais doth advertize, that a Ship there arrived from Spaine doth relate, that he left them upon the Irish Coast.

Of Monsieur de Rochpot we look not to hear before he retorne. He departed long since from Valadolid, where he hath left a Secretary to negotiate untill the King shall supplie that place. Monsieur de Sillery is now with the Suissers, to renew their Alliance with this Crowne: They demand present and entire Payment of 1500000 Crowns, which is accorded. The Baron of Vignolle returned from England upon Wensdaie last, whom sence I have vissited. He acknowledgeth the royall Entertainment wherewith her Majestie hath honored the Marechal Biron, and therein demonstrated the Sincerity of her Affection to this King and his Crowne. For himself he professeth all Devotion of Service for many gracious Favours which her Majestie vouchsafed him in particular, and acknowledgeth the Honor he received from your Honor, by private Conference in your Lodging. The King would prefer him to Monsieur de Chatillon's Government. He is willing to accept of the Charge, wherein he sees much Honor may be purchased; but the Service which he hath vowed to a rich Mistress (Madame de Monluc) doth hold him in suspence, untill he shall find his Service either received or refused. Notwithstanding the States had rather the Place should have ben conferred upon Chatillon's Brother, who is very young of 12 or 13 Years, and do purpose to sollicite the King to leave them to the liberty of their Choice.

The Marshall Biron is not yet returned to this Towne. Some Avant Courriers do report, that after his Departure from London, there happened some Broile on the waie between his People and the Inhabitants of some one Towne through which he passed. I am sorry for the Report, which here is quickly received, and lightly beleaved, but have reason to be more sorry if it prove trewe. Monsieur de Beaumont maketh no great haste for his Voiage; he hath long ben in the Countrey, and will not be in this Towne these 20 Days. The King sent Monsieur de Messe this Week to the Spanish and Scottish Ambassadors, to advertize them of the Birth of the Dauphin. To all other Reasons which he can alleadge to avoide the Journey into England this is not the least, the Fear he hath that the Chancellier (who is now sick) should dye in his Absence. He hath hope to succeed him, but hath Monsieur de Sillery, a heavy Competitor. Now he himself, upon some Indisposition, doth keep his Chamber. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

An. 1601.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

4 October, 1601.

ALTHOUGH in praifing your diligence in advertifeing hither of all Occurrences, I muft a little accufe myne own Silence, yet I will not faile to do you right; becaufe I know, you will alfo make that Interpretation of my forbearing of late to answer you, which the multitude of my Bufyness, by the Interposition of Mr. Edmonds Imploymeent, and the Accidents of the Marshall Biron's aboade in this Court, juftly deserve.

You shall now therefore understand, that for the Cause concerning the Reliefe of Ostend, the Proceeding was according to your owne Reply contained in your last Dispatch, and therefore it shall be to little purpose for me to reiterate the same. For the Judgment which they pretend to make of the State of Ostend, or which they seem to collect out of some in this place, you shall do well to let it fall, That yf the Opinion of this State shall be concluded, according to the ordinary Discourses of such as pretend knowledg when they are most ignorant, it will be hard to keep things from misunderstanding between the two Crownes. For this I say, and this shall be found true, that though some ordinary Men of Warr and Courtiers, when they remember the Number of Bodies of Men within that Place, besydes the Valour and Wisdome of the Commaunders; are content to conclude, that the Place is free from Danger, especially as long as the Entry is open; yet must you remember, that the Place itself is full of Misery, for the Canon of the Enemy maketh his way; that Sicknes and continuall Toyl killeth the Souldier; that in the time of Winter, the Entry is often hindred two Moneths together by contrary Winds, and that when it is at best the Harbour is but badd; and lastly, that there is no means left for Salleys; nor that the raging of the Sea (especially since the cutting of the Dyke) spareth the Rampers of the Towne so much, but that it weareth and eateth them dayly; whereof a resolved Enemy still attendeth Opportunity, and dayly murdereth those with the Cannon, who are used to repair those suddain Breaches. So as all that have ether Sense of the Loss, or true Jugement in the Matter, do conclude, that gutta cavat Capidem non vi sed saepe cadendo. For which purpose, I am commanded to let you know, that after Monsieur de Boisfisse had notified to the Queen, the Felicity arrived to France, by the Birth of the Dolphyn, her Majesty moved him to represent to the King, how sorry she was, that of his worthy and favourable Care of the States Fortune, in this particular of Ostend there hath ensued no better Fruits then Rumour without Action; wherein if the King will have it, that he was mistaken in the Particuler, or that he doth not intend an Overt Breach of his Peace, her Majesty would be glad to know, what it was that could be meant by his generall Proposition, which must in somewhat appear, for all Generalls are made of Particulars. As for herself and her Proceedings, we wonder why the Person that discoursed with you, (or any other) should not answer himself, seeing the Effects prove her Majestie's Words, and therefore they are not to be accompted fruiteless Professions. In this point of the Danger of Ostend, you shall do well to imprint it in the King's Minde, even by her Majestie's Commaundment, that how so ever he may here from some that manage great Affairs of State in other Places, that there is less danger to the Towne then is spoken of; yet that her Majesty (who hath in it a wise and a gallant Commander, from whome she expecteth no borrowed Ware) doth plainly let him know, that without some Course of Diversion of the Siedge, the Place would be found courir extreme risque. In which Consideration, her Majesty never doubting that the King can resolve to abandon them, thought it good to represent by his owne Ambassador, and to touch it by you, how much it concerneth him to have an Eye to it, and how much it troubleth her own Mind, that in regard of that Peece of work she hath in hand (to drive the Spaniard out of Ireland,) she must must be dispensed with for sending Succours there. In this Case of the Spaniards, An. 1607. you may say you were commanded to deal with him, as one whome she would make no Stranger to her Affaires.

* On the 25th of the last Moneth, there landed between fyve and six thousand Spaniards in the Province of Munster, commanded by Don Juan d' Aquila, who was Generall of the Spanish Army at Bluett. These Forces upon their Landing, immediately summoned the poore Towne of Kingfale absolutely, in the Name of the King of Spaine. The Towne being but a poore Burgh, and some threecore fighting Men within it, refused to open the Gates; but I doubt not but by this tyme it is rendered. The Lord Deputy is hasting thither with the best Power he can make, and her Majesty is sending over six thousand Men, with all things thereto belonging; which being added to eighteen thousand already in that Kingdome, you must thinke doe put this Realme to a wanton Charge. She doth also set forth a Fleet to Sea, to waste continually those Supplies of Vittle and Ammunition, which such an Army requireth; the same for the most parte, being only maintayned with that which comes out of England. When you have thus far informed him, you may then say unto him, that her Majesty doth now sommon him, by the Remembrance of those precedent Offices, (wherof she containeth a contented Memory) to resort to his own Jugement, whether it be not secundum æquum & bonum, that he should make demonstration of the Care he hath of her well-doing: Yf not by any extraordinary Arguments, yet by Repayment of part of her owne. Wherein you shall let him knowe, that you have Order to receive his Answer. And though she doubteth not, but to be easily able to surmount all these Difficulties (howsoever she shall be dealt with by others,) yet she accompteth it but a common Fortune, (even to Princes that have greatest Means) to be some tymes worse furnished then the necessary Occasions of their Estates would require; and therefore, according to this Letter, which herewith I send you, (by which Mr. Edmonds setteth downe how far the King ingaged himself to him) I pray you get access, and negotiate it according to your Discretion for her Majesty's best Advantage.

For the partial Censure of her Majesty's Proceeding in the Treaty of Peace, the evident Circumstances do so well discover, both her Providence and her Magnanimity, that Words shall be but spent in vayne, to clear her from the Levity, or rather, the Iniquity of that Reporte. For further Proof whereof, even when the Marechal Biron was here, Coomans (being sent a new to set a fresh Vernice upon his former Table) was returned back without any Answer, after it appeared to those Councillers that dealt with him, that he had an underhand Warrant to propound specious Offers to us, but was not any way quallified (for ought they saw) with any Commission authentickall.

I have now procured a Privy Seale for your Entertaynment, whereof I will make you over such a Portion as shall be demanded by any of yours that shall followe it. Although her Majesty would not have it in any Sorte conceived, that she hath not an Intention to congratulate this Felicity befallen the King in the Birth of the Dolphin, by some Person of greater Quallity; yet by the Accident of this Access of yours, you shall do well to let fall unto him, the inward Contentement her Majesty nourisheth to her self thereby; but also to let him know, how glad she was to be able to advertise his owne Ambassadour of his Birth, before he knew it, and so indeed it fell out, that upon Notice from you, she commanded me to send him a Congratulation, and thus for this tyme I committ you to God his Protection.

From the Court
at Richmond.

Your loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

In the Carriage of your Relation to the King of this Accident in Ireland, you shall shew how far her Majesty is from any Discouragement, her Discontentment being only this, that where her Majesty was full of Resolution to have interposed

An. 1601. her self between the King of Spain's ambitious Deseigns elsewhere, she must now be forced to attend her owne Occasions.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 10th Oct. 1601. O. S.

I Wryte only to keepe my Custome, for I have not much now to advertise, and that not much important. Monsieur de Rochpot is returned out of Spaine, and arrived unto the King at Fontainebleau, the 6th of this Moneth. He hath left behind him his Nephew and the other his Servants in Prison, with a Secretary to sollicite their Enlargement; and such Affaires as the King's Service shall require, untill the Place shall be supplied, from which Charge, Monsieur de Barreau doth endeavour to be excused.

The State of the Finances is dressed for this Year; yt amounteth to 11 Millions; whereof 7 are appointed for the ordinary Expence, and the rest towards the Discharge of Debts. Wherein they do assure, due Consideration shall be had of her Majesty. I cannot insist for any certaine or named Summe, because I have no such Commission; only I move, that since her Patience hath ben so great in forbearance, she may receive some notable Summe, and that at one entire Paiement upon the first Assignations, and not to be deferred untill the end of the Year. By my next I hope to be able to send their Resolution, both of the Quantitie of the Summe, and of the Times of Paiement.

Monsieur de Villeroy hath done very good Offices, both in private to the King, and in publique before the Counsaill, shewing howe requisite it is, (even for the good of their owne Affaires) that her Majestie should receive herein a gratefull Contentment. Whereof yf he might perceave by some Means that her Majestie did vouchsafe to take notice, yt wold be very pleasing unto him, and give him Courage to continue the same Courses, for the Advancement of her Service.

* The Mareschal Biron and his Company, do speake all Honor of her gracious Entertainement, and of the State and Majestie of her Court. But that wherein the King's Subjects whose Loyaltie hath ben best approved to him, do repose their greatest Comfort, and did most willingly hear and most curiously hearken after, is the Assurance which they all give of her Majestie's Strength, and sound Disposition of Health; of the Vivacity and Vigour of her Spirits, and of the joyfull Contentment and assured Tranquillity of Mind, which here they do wishe and praie ever to continue. The Mareschal hath spent much time to recommend to the King the Sufficiency of Monsieur de Boissise and his good Services, and withall made his Appollogie for the manner of his late Proceeding; shewing, that whatsoever there he ether spake or heather hath written, against the Forme of our Justice, was grounded upon great Reason, and cold not have ben omitted, without he should have betrayed his owne Reputation, and the Duety of the Charge which he doth sustaine. I thinke he is to winter in England, for here is no hast made to dispatch Monsieur de Beaumont, nor Resolution taken who shall joyne with him in ending the Controversies of Depredations. I received this from a very good hand, that (144) the King gave this in especiall Charge to Mareschal de Biron, to sound the Affections of (105) the Queen towards (165) the King of Scotland; which he did relate to be so alienated, and in such termes, as my Pen hath shame to set down. Which he did only to feed and pleas his Humors, who doth not love (165) the King of Scotland, both that he apprehends nothing more then the Consolidation of the two Realmes; and upon Emulation, as being transported with the Self-conceit of the greatnes of his Fortunes, he doth beleve that all the World is enamoured with his Vertues, especially (105) England; the Love whereof he doth much affect, and is perswaded he doth possesse. The States Agent (upon especiall Com mandment from them) hath earnestly sollicitted this Weeke past for some Supplies of Money, in this extraordinary Charge which doth so much oppresse them; but the King doth not beleevc their Wants, and as for Ostend, he holdes it to be safe; both because the Army doth disband, whereof parte doth passe this waie every daie in troopes, and that the Archduc this Moneth hath advanced nothing forward; so that he thinks, that either he will raise the Siege, or yf he shall build Fortresses to lodge his Men this Winter (which yet are not begone,) yet having no means to make his Approaches nearer, nor to impeach the Libertie of the Haven, the Towne in his Judgment is not like to run any hazard.

The Duke of Lenox is returned from his Voiage, and had Audience upon Sunday last. He was entertained and lodged in the House, though on his first coming he nether was received on the waie, nor defraied, nor lodged at the King's Charge. Which they saie was the Entertainment that Monsieur de Betunes found in Scotland.

The Voiage of Blois doth yet continue, and the King saies he will goe farther, to cause exemplary Justice to be don upon the principall Authours of those Commotions in Limosin and Auvergne; which he doth confesse, want only an head to keep him and set him on worke. But yt is not thought that he will stir from hence before the Marquise be delivered. To morrow the Queen shall be churched, and so shall come to this Towne to conduct the Dauphin to St. Germain, where he shall be bred up. The Bruite of Coomans late going into England is come to this Courte, which doth nourish the Jalousies whereof I did lately write. We hear, that the Duke de Mercœur hath taken Alba Regale in Hungarie by Assault. I most humbly kysse your Honor's Handes, for the Honor it pleased you to do the Venetian Gentleman, which here he doth very liberally professe, and by his Letters which herewith I send, is desirous to acknowledge yt with all Thankfullness. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 15th Oct. 1601. O. S.

I Received your Honor's Letters upon Sunday last. Upon Monday, the King came to this Towne in the Morning, and dyned at Monsieur de Montglatz, where the Marquise doth lye. And because this Weeke the Court removeth from Fountainbleau, and the Counsaill is retired every one to his owne House, and uncertaine, how the King wold dispose of himselfe, untill the Court againe should be settled; I thought good to repair thither, to take the Opportunity of Accesse, yf any should be presented. And Dinner being ended, I praied Monsieur de Bouillon (for when the King is in private, no Man hath Entrance without Mediation of the Gentleman of his Chamber,) to signifie, that yf that time did not seem unseasonable I did crave accesse; Yf it were, that he wold be pleased to commaund, when, and where I should attend him. The King presently called for me; to whom (according to those Instructions, wherewith your Honor so plentifully hath informed me,) I delivered first, the Accident of Ireland; saying, " That tho' her Majestie was assured that his Ambassador had not omitted
 " to advertize thereof, (by whose Commaundment, he was for that purpose " particularly informed,) yet her Pleasure was that I likewise should relate it un-
 " to him; which then I did, with all Circumstances of the time and place; of " the Spaniard's landing, the Number of the Soldiars. the Name of their Com" mander, how far at the last Advertizement they had proceeded, and what " was presumed might be their Purpose and Desseigne. Proceeding on, he wil" led me to staye, and said, he marvelled much that her Majestie, having been so
 " fully forewarned by him of this Desseigne of Spaine, she wold not provide to " prevent

“ prevent it; which wold have ben don with lesse Care, and lesse Charge; for “ the Number of the Soldiers he was assured, was not greater then 4000, whom “ he held to be lost, if they were not seconded, and that speedily, with Men and “ Victualls. I replied, that it was no such easy matter as he did pretend, to “ meet with an uncertaine and imagined Desseigne. The Sea was large, and the “ Season of the Year subject to variety of Winds and Stormes; her Majestie’s “ Dominions of larger Circuit, then could be at all times furnished against a ca“ suall and secondary Attempt, of which Nature this Enterprize was knowen
 “ to be. I did assure, that this Accident did little trobell our State, and lesse “ alter her Majestie’s Mind; who having hetherto ever had Victory against her “ Enemies, and even in the self-same Place, did not doubt under the Power “ of God, that these Men should runn the Fortune of their Forefathers, in “ the Time of Gregorie the 13th. That, I said, which gave her the greatest “ Discontent was, that hereby her peculiar Desseignes wer somewhat disturb“ ed, and her means and thoughts detourned from the Assistance of the States;
 “ whose Necessity she knowes to be great, and without the greater Providence
 “ of God, and Succours from him, doth presage a great Alteration in their “ Fortunes. I then remonstrated to him, (insisting from point to point upon “ these Particulars which your Honor hath set down) the deplorable State of “ Ostend, and recommended from her Majestie unto his Care, the Protection “ of that Towne; which it might please him to have in so much the more par- “ ticular Recommendation, in that the Wellfare of their Fortunes did depend “ upon the Issue of this Siege: Which I shewed, both that the Archduke should “ be greatly advanced in Reputation by gaining that Towne; and more in “ Estate, by reducing all Flanders into a peaceable Possession; and the Hollan- “ der’s Commerce (which is the Peru of their Finances) by the losse of that “ Porte, in a manner ruinated, or much impeached.

“ To this he answered, that her Majestie was yll informed of the State of that “ Town, which he knew to be in as great Security, as the Chamber wherein “ then he was. I replied, that her Majestie received the Information from her “ owne Commaunder, whose Experience and Understanding in his own Profes“ sion I did report to his Judgment; praieing him to add, the Duety he doth owe “ to his Sovereigne, whom he wold not abuse with Fables and Discourse. He “ said, Sir Francis Vere did noe more therein then he himself wold do, yf he “ were in his Place; for who wold not in a Town besieged, seek by all means to “ have abundance of all Necessaries? And in this, (said he) pray the Queen of “ England to give me Credit, who am King of France and a Soldier: If Ostend
 “ have no worse Enemies within, then without, it never will be taken. I “ praied him to explaine himself. And so he said, that certaine French, and “ those of Honor and Quality, (who lately cam from thence) did enform him
 “ of very ill Treatment which our English Captaines do make towards their Sol“ dieres, whom they do defraud of their paye, and suffer to dye with hunger
 “ and cold”. I thought it not good to follow longer this Diversion, but to re“ turn to the Affaires of Irelande. And so delivered unto him, “ the great Charges
 “ her Majestie was constrained to maintaine, for the Preservation of that Realme, “ where there were now 18000 Men, (he interrupted me and said, oüy paiez, “ mais ilz n’y sont pas.) That now she did make a fresh Levie of 6000 more,
 “ and did set to Sea a sufficient Navie to commaund that Coast. I praied him to “ consider this seriously in his Judgement, and to compare her Majestie’s Occa- “ sions with the Remembrance of his former Estate; then, she did assure herself, “ that without attending any Motion from her, he wold out of the kindness of “ his own Nature, and the respectfull Care he did bear to the good of her Estate, “ give present Order for present Reimbursement. I added, that howsoever this “ Accident fell out inconvenient for our Affaires, yet for him it was not unsea“ sonable; so fitt an opportunity being presented to shew his Gratitude, and to “ acquitt himselfe in parte of those Obligations, wherewith he hath by so many “ Protestations acknowledged to be tyed unto her. He protested presently, that “ she

“ she had absolute Powre over his Meanes and Person. That to her, so great a “ Lady and Princeſſe, he did profeſſe himſelf her Servant; though otherwiſe he “ wold terme himſelf, her good Brother and Couſin. I answered, ſhe had often “ receaved theſe Salutations from him, and reſpectively entertained them. Her “ preſent Neceſſity did now require a more real Satisfaction, and I thought that “ ſhe wold hold all further delay, in the nature of a Refuſall; conſidering the “ Promiſſes of his Counſaill to Mr. Edmonds, who intreated patience only for a “ Moneth; and his owne of freſher Date at Calais, to the ſame pourpoſe.” We varied what his Anſwer was to Mr. Edmonds; but I urging ſtill to receive his Reſolution, he then ſaid, “ My Counſaill is now abſent, uppon Saterday I will be “ here with my Familie, and they aſſembled about me, with whom I will adviſe
 “ for her Contentment, and what I can do, I will do. As he was retiring him“ ſelf, I praied him to give me Pardon for an Errour I had committed, in differ“ ing that untill the laſt, which I had in charge at the firſt to impart unto him;
 “ the inward Contentment which her Majeſtie had receaved, by the Birth of his “ Sonne the Dauphin: which ſhe had firſt teſtified, by ſending the firſt Adver-“ tiſement thereof to his Ambaſſador by her Congratulation with him, and wold “ take an Opportunity againe to confirm, by a more ſolemn Demonſtration.
 “ His Anſwer was, that he was glad her Majeſtie had ſuch Speedy Tydings “ thereof, that thereby ſhe might know, that there was borne another Servi- “ teur for her. And ſo he diſmiſſed me.

Monſieur de Rhofny was not then in Towne, but arrived that Night. “ The “ next Day, I, upon the former Reaſons, challenged his Promiſe, which was to “ Mr. Edmonds, that within one Moneth her Majeſtie ſhould know, both the “ Somme that ſhould be reimbourſed, and the Times of Paiment. He answer“ ed, that he had already provided for her Satisfaction: But it was not he, but “ the King himſelf, that particularly wold give the Anſwer. I praied him that “ he wold ſpeak to the King that I might receive the Anſwear from him, which “ he promiſſed. So yeſterday againe I moved him in yt; and then he acknow“ ledged, that the King, upon the Speech I had with him, came to the Arsenall
 “ where he lodged, to adviſe about this Point for ſome Contentment for her “ Majeſtie; and the Reſolution he had taken he will ſend to Monſieur de Boi- “ ſiſſe, who ſhall communicat it unto her.” And more I cold not drawe from him. “ I have likewiſe ſpoken with Monſieur de Villeroy, and enformed him “ how farr I had negotiated with the King, and the Anſwear I receaved. I prai-
 “ ed him to continue the good Offices he heretofore had don, and to ſollicite
 “ that her Majeſtie might have the Contentment ſhe deſerved; which he wil“ lingly promiſed, and I think will as fully perform. I then moved him for the “ Declaration of the Arreſt, which was accorded. He ſaid, the Counſaill yet “ was not reſolved what to do in it. I answered, there was required no Reſolu-“ tion, all Points having ben debated and determined; namely, the greateſt Dif-“ ficultie, that the Conſiſcation ſhall be taken awaie. He replied, that no Man “ knew better then he what was accorded: But firſt they wold know, how the “ Affaires in England ſhould be diſpoſed. I asked, what Affaires? He answer“ ed, thoſe of Depredation. I ſaid, that ſom Weeks ſince Monſieur de Meſſe
 “ was expected in England; to joyne with Monſieur de Boiſſiſſe, to determine “ thoſe Cauſes. But he ſaid, that they did nether know that her Majeſtie did “ accept of the King's Offer, (which was to ſend a Commiſſioner into England), “ nether ever was it reſolved; that Monſieur de Meſſe ſhould be the Man: Only
 “ he had ſaid, that perhaps he might be ſent. This ſeems very ſtrange unto him;
 “ that the Execution of thoſe Cauſes ſhould be ſuſpended, which are already “ judged. And he complains, that now lately ſome of their Subjects have been “ ſpoiled by Sea by our Men of Warr, which he praied me to ſignifye to your “ Honor.” Your Honor may be pleaſed to direct me how to proceed in this Point; at leaſt that the King may know, that her Majeſtie hath long attended their Commiſſioner. Whatſoever Monſieur de Villeroy doth now pretend to the contrary;

An. 1601. contrary, Mr. Edmonds did fully inform him of her Majestie's Pleasure to accept of the Conference; and from the beginning it was intended, that Monsieur de Messe should be sent, for the nearness of Friendship between him and Monsieur de Boisfisse; for which cause the Counsaill did depute him, to confer with Mr. Edmonds. Now that he excused himself from this Imployment, (upon the Reasons which in some of my former I have alleadged,) they are constrained to serve themselves of this frivolous, and no honest Evasion. And whereas now they are agreed, that the Execution of those Causes which are adjudged is suspended; yt was accorded, that there should be a generall Surseance of all Parties and Causes, untill the Assembly of this Conference, which within two Moneths should begin, and in one Moneth dispatch and determine all Differences. I will not further prosecute this their Fashion of proceeding, but leave it to your Honor's Judgement. And so I humbly take my leave, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

P O S T S C R I P T.

Right Honorable,

My Dispatch being long, I have thought good to write these apart; wherein first I beseech your Honor to send me your Resolution, for that Person who should be imploied in Spaine, whom I have retained since my return from Calais, and will not discharge, till I understand your Honor's Pleasure; for I know not where to find another so proper for that Service. The King did demand of me of Cooman's being in England. I answer'd, as your Honor instructed me, though it did not please him to give Credit to my Words.

* Elliott, whom your Honor doth remember, who had lately served in good place in the War of Hungary, and since hath been in Scotland, did bring me this Discourse; which (because heretofore he hath ben a Partie in the Consultations of the Spanish Projects) I could not refuse to send. He acknowledgeth his Offence to be great, yet not greater then her Majestie's Mercie, in whose Grace he doth never despaire; which though he hath no means to merit, yet wold he expose himself to any hazard for the Service of his Country, to efface the foule Remembrance of his former Transgressions. Which I write, that yf these Times do require the Performance of a doubtfull Attempt, I know no one Man out of her Majestie's Protection, (to gaine her Grace) that wold more ambitiously undertake it, or endeavour to effect it with a stronger Resolution. Mr. † Tresham hath so often importuned me to recommend unto your Honor his Pretensions, that for my owne quiet I engaged my self by Promise, to write the Desire he hath to spend the rest of his daies in her Majestie's Service.

Sir Robert Drnery, upon the Arrivall of this Accident in Ireland, hath altered his purpose for Florence, and will return presently into England. The Count Lingie is here arrived from the Archduke, to congratulate the Birth of the Dauphin: and the Prince of Orange and the Count of Rentez have their Passport to pass into Spaine from hence, whether they are sent (as it is pretended) to congratulate the Birth of that Princeesse. The Duke of Lenox is upon the point of his Departure.

* This is the same Person mentioned more than once before in Sir Henry Nevill's Letters.

† This Person is likewise taken notice of by Sir Henry Neville, in several of his Letters.

Mr. Winwood

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 22^d Oct. 1601. O. S.

I Understand, that upon Tuesday last, the Duke of Lenox received Letters from his King; wherein he is commanded to hasten into England with such speed, that if it were possible he might arrive at London before the beginning of the Parliament. Mr. James Simple shall meet him there with Instructions, to enforme him what, and in what Form he is to negotiate. Hereupon the Duke hath sent one in post to Sir Thomas Erskin, to meet him presently at Calais; who, accompanied by the Lord Burley, upon Sunday last did go towards the Archduke's Campe, to whom they were recommended by Ayala, and for addressse to the Count Arenbergh. Upon Monday Monsieur Villeroy did meet with the Duke at the Bishop of Glascoe his Houſe. I cannot understand, that for the renewing the Alliance any thing is concluded, nor any thing more then in generall, for continuance of common Amitie, promised or intended. For the re-establishment of the Hundred Men at Armes, it is promised, that the Estate shall be invested in the Person of the young Prince, and that the Duke shall be his Lieutenant. This Morning he departed out of this Towne towards Vernueil, to take his leave of his Cousin la Marquise as he passeth, and so directly to Calais. He is gone from hence, not the best satisfied in his Treatment in this Court; neither hath he or his Company, left behind them any great Reputation, for Judgment or good Behaviour. The King came to this Towne with the Queen upon Sunday last. I have three severall times solicited Monsieur de Villeroy to know the King's Resolution for the Reimbourſment to her Majestie. His last Answer was, the King yet had not resolved; and when he should, for his particular, he would only advertize Monsieur de Boisſſe thereof. I opposed against that Proceeding; but he said, I had no reason to think it strange, since I well knew it was their forme, which ever hath ben used even with Ambassadors: So I purpose to addressse my self immediately to the King, to know his Resolution. I praised likewise Monsieur Villeroy to consider of this Conference, upon expectation whereof our Men who here did sollicite their Sutes attended at London, some to have Reason of their Wrongs, others to be released from the Sutes wherein they were entangled: But he said he must hear from Monsieur de Boisſſe, before he would give any Answer.

This Week there came unto me a Milanois Priest, named Stephano; who, as he saith, hath ben often employed by Sir Henry Cobham and Sir Edward Stafford. Since, by reason of these Troubles, he hath lived retired. He is now going into Spain, to serve in House the Constable of Castiglia. He doth pretend a great desire to do her Majestie's Service, and her Estates; upon assurance, that his Deserts shall receive Reward. I have thought good to accept his Offer, and do purpose to give him a Cyphre, and some Instructions, with address for his Letters. He demandeth no present Allowance, only a Note from me, whereby it may appear, (yf he shall do any acceptable Service) that he was by such means; and in such forme employed. He doth expect some Curtesie towards the Charge of his Journey, wherein I know not well how to refuse him; so that if I shall adventure some few Crowns upon him, your Honor will be pleased to see them allowed.

The Voyage of Blois doth yet hold, and the King's Resolution to go further; yf occasion shall require. Madame* these Weeks past hath suffered Persecution;

* This Passage makes me a little doubt the Truth of what is related by Cardinal d'Osſat in a Letter to Monsieur Villeroy, wrote some time after this. Wherein, amongst the Difficulties which he tells us the Pope made, to grant the Duke of Barr a Dispensation for this Marriage, — Une des plus grandes difficultez (says he) qu'il me fit, fut, que lors que ce mariage se traitoit, Madame, Sœur du Roy, lui fit dire, qui si S. S. faisoit envers le Roi, qu'elle fût mariée à Monsieur le Comte de Soissons, elle se feroit Catholique. Dont (adds he) S. S. dit avoir juste occasion de juger, que ce n'est point la Conscience, qui la tient en sa Sette; Mais que c'est une certain Oſtentation, & presumption qu'elle a, que le Saint Siége & toutes autres choses se doivent accommoder à ses apetits. Vol. 5. p. 315.

An. 1601. and by the Instances of the King, her Father-in-lawe, and Husband, (who lately here arrived) could not refuse to admitt Conference with the Bishop of Eureux, and a Capuchin Fryer, yet she remains constant and immutable. Yf her Majestie shall be pleased to take this occasion to recommend this her Constancy, and comfort her in this her Affliction, it wold be an acceptable Favour, and seasonable a point nommé, both to confirme and encourage her, and to give a Reputation to the Cause, which never had more need of the support of her gracious Protection.

Your Honor shall understand by Mr. Button; to whom by the Lords our Marchants Sutes for Depredation in France were recommended, what progress he hath made in their Causes before the Commissioners of Rouën. Wherein, tho' his Diligence hath no way ben wanting, (whereof the Marchants are bound to have due Consideration) yet after the travaill of nyne Months wholly imployed in those Pursutes, his Fortune hath not been so good, to return with Contentment or Satisfaction in any one Cause. In some Sentence hath ben geven, but the Execution hath ben made frustrate and Elusorie. The Particulars I will leave to his own Relation, whose Greevances, if Monsieur de Boissise can have patience to hear, and will compare with the Volume of his pretended Complaints, he cannot but in the Equity of his Judgment confesse, that his long Forbearance to complaine hath proceeded from this Ground, that Curæ leves loquuntur ingentes stupent. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

The Duke of Lenox, when he took leave of the Bishop of Glascoe, did resign unto him the Interest which long he hath possessed in that Bishoprick, the Fruits thereof shall now return to the Bishop. After the Duke departed, the King sent him a Cubberd of Plate valued at 2000 Ducats, which his Mother received.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

S I R,

3 Nov. 1601.

BY your last Letters of the 15th and 22^d of October, I do fynd how well you have discharged all thinges commytted to you with the King and his Counsell; though I assure you by the Course which the Ambassador held with the Queen yesterday, it appeareth, that nothing is more desyred then Delay; for he now begyneth to ask questyon, what it is which should be dealt in, when any Commyssioner should come over. Secondly, he would knowe the tyme. Thirdly, he protesteth that he is no way informed in partyculer either of the Time when the King will pay the Queen, or of the Somme, other than thus farre, that about January the Queen shall knowe what to looke for within compass of a Yeare. To all this, there hath been aunswered this muche; That this is very short, not only of her Majestie's Merytt, but even dyrectly contrary to the King's Assurance to Mr. Edmonds, which he was so farre from misunderstanding, as the Queen caused me to produce the Cobby of the Queen's Letter to the King, (when Mr. Edmonds made his second Voyage to Calais;) by which she did take notice of all the King's Assurances, even in every particular, and gave him many Thanks for the same; alleaging further, that the King himself had by his own Speache to you, spoken in a more certen Style then this of his. Wherein first, we must tary tyll January, before we can knowe what we shall have in compass of a Yeare; whereas it was expected, without any Question, that there should be a speedy Payment of une somme notable, for so were the King's owne Words. To be short, the Queen was very rownd with him in this matter of the Mony, and requyred him to return to the King playnly, that in tyme past she proceeded better with the King. Hereupon the Ambassador seemed a little perturbed, and promysed to wryte backe seriously, making no que- An. 1601.

 stion, but he should after the last Dispatch give the Queen better Contentment. For the rest, he hath been answered, that in respect of the coming hether of a Commissioner, whereupon depended many Questyons undecyded, the Subjects of nether Syde were fatisfyed further, then that the Arrest of Roüen was not revoked. I did also let him knowe, that the Queen had ben informed by you, howe well Monsieur de Villeroy had carryed himself; and in this manner our Conference past: It seeming to me, that ether all those should nowe be granted, tho' he meant not soddenly to open himself, or yf he dyd, that his Dispatches so authentically as he expected, was not yet come. For your Party, whom it seemeth you have kept upon the hand to be employed, it is very true, that I shall be very gladd if you have found me out a good one; but because it is very requysyte for settling of the Correspondency to purpose, that I should personally conferre with hym, I would be very gladd that you would send hym over pryvatly with some Letter from your self; which if he shall cause to be delyver'd when he is arryved, I will order it so as he shall have access unto me, in as secret Forme as he lyst. Write unto me also, what Entertaynment you imagine will content him. For your Milanois, I lyke it well that you do give him some Crowns for an Imprest; which you may put into your Byll of Extraordynaryes, for which you shall receave Allowance.

The News we have of Ireland are nether good nor badd. The Spaniards fortifye apace; the Deputy lodgeth by them, and doubtless will attempt the Place within ten Days; only the generall Alyenation in the Kingdome is suspicyous unto us if Tyrone come out of the North towards Munster, as he pretendeth for certen he will, and doubtless for his owne Reputation, he wyll hazard to attempt it.

The Opynion you had of the Duke of Lenox's purpose, to propound strange things at this Parlyament, is mistaken; for I assure you, he hath nether suche Commyssyon, nor such Resolution. Only he hath nowe a Desyre to see the Queen, and to returne to the Kinge; who hath also made an offer to the Queen (which she hath accepted) to send 3000 Scots to the North of Ireland. And thus having now thought fytt to acquaint you how things pass here, I comyt you to God's Protection.

From the Court at Whitehall.

Your loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 15th Nov. 1601. O.S.

According to your Honor's Direction, I have sent over the Partie, whose Name is Abel Pinçon, with a Desire full of hope, that his diligent and faithfull Endeavours may give that Satisfaction, which the Charge wherein he is imploied doth require. He hath in his yonger Years lived and studied in England; sence travailled in Italie, from whence Sir Anthony Sherley debauch'd him into Persia; from whom, upon unkeind Treatment, he departed in Muscovie. Your Honor will find him to be of a good Spirit, and though he hath run som wild Courses, now more settled, and not injudicious. The Instruction he shall receive from your Honor will much enable him, and make him fully capable of this imploiment; the which I do the rather presume, because he seemeth so sincerely to protest for his Vigilancy and Fidellity in this Service. I have often conferred with him, and cast all Doubts and Difficulties in his Course. The greatest are to find a good Pretext to collour his aboade, among a People jealous and suspicious of Strangers, who seldom travaill in these Parts for their particular Pleasures, without some subject of Busyness and Affaires. Then, for a speedy

An. 1601. speedy and sure Convoy for his Letters. Yt were to be wished, that he could find some Adresse, to give him a more speedy Entrance into the Knowledge and Practice of these Affaires; whereupon we have disputed, whether it were not convenient for him to go from hence to Genoa, and there to make aboade for one or two Moneths; in which time, (by reason of the continuall Intercourse,) he might insinuate himself into the Friendship and favour of some, either Genenois or Spaniard, whereby he may greatly advance the Service. I have particularly talked with him about his Entertainment, wherein he wholly referreth himself to your Honor's Discretion, yet he thinketh his Expence cannot be les than a French Crown by the Day. I have delivered him for his Journey, and to put him in Equipage, thirty Crowns. I have dispatch'd the Milanois with a few Crowns, but with good Contentment, upon an attestate under my Hand, that he made me privie to his Voiage, and that his Services should be worthely rewarded. I have advised this Person, not to stir out of his Lodging untill your Honor shall call for him. And besides assured him, that no other of her Majesty's Counsaill shall be acquainted with his Imploiment; to the end that he might understand, that his Safety did principally consist in his own sober Carriage, and the discreet Government of himself. And so for this time I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's in all Duty humbly to be commaunded,

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secrétary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 23^d Nov. 1601. O. S.

HAVING received Advertisement upon Wednesday last, by one that then arrived to this Towne out of Bretagne, that sense the Descent of the Spaniards in Ireland, they have ben refreshed with Vittails from St. Malo and Rosco, I presently repayed to Monsieur de Villeroy, and sollicitted Access to the King; saying, that I would not be much troublesome, only I had one Word to say, but that was important, and well could not suffer long Delay. Upon Thursday, the King dyned at Zamet's House, where I was commanded to fynd him. To whom after Dynner, (being presented by Monsieur de Villeroy,) I delyvered the Advertisement which I had received, "remonstrating the Insolence of this Fact, prejudiciall to her Majesties Affayres, and repugnant to that respectfull Duety which his Subjects ought to bear towards her Majestie; who could not be ignorant, how contrarie this was, both to the generall Alliance between the two Crownes, and to the particular Friendship and affectionate Care which he did professe to the Welfare of her Majestie's Estates. I praied him to be pleased to take notice of this Cause, and to give order that the Offenders might be knowen and punished, in Example to others; and that it might be published within the Ports of his Realme, forbidding his Subjects to entertaine Trafficke with the Spaniards now invading her Majestie's Dominions, and the Gouvernours to receive within their Ports eyther any Spanish Vessels retourning out of Ireland, or any other that there would touche, to carie Vittayle or Comodities to the Enemy. I must acknowledge to your Honor, the present and sensible Apprehension the King conceived of this Remonstrance, protesting both Punishment to the Offenders, and redress for future Abuse in this kynd; and so called unto him Monsieur Villeroy, to whom he repeated what I had related. Monsieur de Villeroy said, that he had understood the Day before, that certaine Ships were lately arrived out of Ireland into Bretagne for Provision of Vittail, but that they had Passports from the Lord Deputy. I replyed, that my Advertizement was of Ships freighted with Vittail out of Bretagne to the Enemy in Ireland; which how trew it was, I was not to debate. That which I did move was resonable, and far from Prejudice, that the King would adresse his Letters, requiringe the Offi-" cers

“cers of his Ports to take Order yf such Abuse should hereafter happen, that it “might be punished, yf not, yet to commaund that it be not practized. The An. 1601.
 “King commaunded Monsieur de Villeroy to dispatch Letters to that pourpose;
 “who then willed me to give him a Memoire of what I had proposed, which ac“cordingly I have done. The King then told me of a Ship of St. Malo, which “had been taken by an English Man of Warre, and carried into the Coast of “Barbary, where the Goods have been sold. To which I answered, That the “Truth is, there is an English Piratte who long had lyved out of her Majesties “Protection, that hath a Retreat in those Parts; whom to apprehend, she twice “had sent forth severall Shippes to bring him in. For any other Wrongs his “Subjects could pretend, her Majesty hath sufficiently approved her Care for “Execution of Justice; and yf that Conference which was accorded, might “have had place, all Parties by this tyme on bothe sydes might have received “Satisfaction, and a reciprocall Reglement have been established, to prevent “such future Inconveniencies. The King then asked Monsieur de Villeroy, “whether Monsieur de Messe would be ready within a short time to go into “England? He answered, that he thought he wold; and then said, because “they had understood by Monsieur de Boisfisse, that her Majesty had ac“cepted and did desyre the Conference, they were resolved yt should go “forward. I then sayd to the King, that his Ambassador in his last Audience “did treat on that point with her Majesty, and at the same tyme did delyver his “Answer for the Reimboursement, which was nothing conformable to those “Assurances, which she had grounded upon his many Promisses; nor to the Ne“cessity of her present Affaires. He confessed yt was trew, that he had pro“mised to Mr. Edmondes, that within six Weeks he should know what he could “performe. Ever since, he said, he had been mindfull thereof, and that Morn“ing had been travailling about yt with his Counsaill; and so would do, untill
 “he could know what his Estate would permitt, which his Ambassador should “shortly delyver unto her.

“He asked then how the Affaires of Ireland did pass. Myne Answer was “according to your Honor's Instructions. Adding, That the Pope was deeply “embarked in that Enterprize, at the Instance and Instigation of the Jesuits;
 “and that he was resolved to send thither, as Nuntio, Mutio Vitaleschi, som-“tyme Governour of the English Seminarie of Rome. Which I did purpose“ly, that he might see with what Eagerness the Pope doth affect the Greatness “of Spaine; and what Fyre-brands the Jesuites are, who now do press with “strong Assurance, their re-entrance into this Towne. The King was not wil- “ling to beleve, the Pope had any hand in the Action; which he said, “was un“dertaken without Consideration, and would accordingly succeed, which he “wished affectionately. He then said, that in his Judgement the Enemye's Def“feignes could not take place, and had reason to wish they should not, for the “Prosperity he desyred to her Majesty's Estate, which he would advance by his “best means. And concluded with me in these Words, saying, That as I lately “sayd unto you, so again I say, that yf she shall have need of my Life, the good
 “of her Service hath power to commaund yt. When I delyvered the Memoire
 “to Monsieur de Villeroy, I desyred to know when Monsieur de Messe was to “go forward, that her Majesty's Commissioners might be ready to joyne the “Conference with him, and the Parties who are interested in the Cause might be “assembled. He answered, that Monsieur de Messe did fear to pass the Sea in “this Season. The Resolution that should be taken, her Majesty should under“stand by Monsieur de Boisfisse. Whereupon I addressed my self to Monsieur de “Messe. I told him what I had understood by the King, and assured him how “agreeable the Conference would be to her Majesty, and how pleasing the Depu“tation of him to that Charge, of whose Wisdom and Discretion heretofore she “hath had an approved Experience. He answered, the King had moved him to “undertake the Voiage; wherein he was yet no more resolved, then to conform “himself to his Commaundments. He alleadged many Reasons for Excuse, the “Sharpness

An. 1601. " Sharpness of this Season, the weakness of his Age, the doubt he had of the " Issue of the Conference, which could not be grateful, they insisting upon " their Complaints, we upon the Terms of our Justice; and therefore he would " first conferr with Monsieur de Villeroy, about some means that might give a " generall Contentment to all Parties that were agreeed, before he would re" solve; which notwithstanding he would not do, but that by Letters from
 " Monsieur de Boisfesse; and by relation from Monsieur de Villeroy, and lastly
 " by me, he was assured, how much her Majesty did desire that he should be im-
 " ployed in this Action. I prayed him, that though this Conference should be " the material Charge committed unto him; yet to remember what was promised
 " when the Conference was proposed: The Assurance for reimboursment
 " within one Moneth; and the rappel for the Rigour of the Arrest of Rouen;
 " neither of which yet are settled; in both which he will endeavour to bring " with him Contentment.

After long Deliberration, and desyre of a collourable Pretext, (least there Judgments should be called in question) to recall those Defences which so lately were published; the Counsaill upon Saterday was fennight; hath re-established the Intercourse of Commerce with Spaine. Yt was expected that the Spanish Ambassador would have sollicitd the Repeall; but he knows too well; that the Estate of their Affaires; the Necessity of their People, and the Instance of their owne Subjects, would open the Trade; which was interdicted upon no greater Grounds, then to make Experience of a few Moneths, how their Marchants could pass without yt.

It is here advertized, that there are out of Italy 3000 Men, for Supply to the Arch-duke: 1800 Spaniards, and the rest Millanois and Neapolitans.

The Viceroy of Naples is lately dead. The Princessse of Lorraine departs from hence within a Day or two, and Madame with her; though she protesteth still for her unchangable Resolution. And so, &c.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 1st Dec. 1601. O. S.

Monsieur de Messe hath so much prevailed, yf not to be exempted, yet to be excused from the imploiment for the Conference, untill the Sharpness of this Season shall be passed over; which he pretended the Weakness of his Age in so long and wearysome a Journey, hath not powre well to support. I find some hope he hath (e chi ha tempo ha vita, for he doth greatly feare that the Issue of that Busyness, without some Appointment be made, will not succeed to Contentment) during this Delay, to procure his Release. Now the Resolution is taken, that Monsieur de Beaumont shall presently be dispatched, who this Daie is to take his Oath in the Counsaill, (for Ambassadors here are Councillers of Estate;) and then hath only to attend to take leave of the King. At twoe feverall times that I have had Speech with him, since the last Resolution for his Departure, he hath assured me, that he hath received promesse from Monsieur de Villeroy that he shall have powre to assure her Majestie for Satisfaction for her Reimboursment. I am loath to forespeake their kindness, yet I fear when it comes, it will scarcely be worth the paines which hath been taken to sollicite the Paiment; nothing proportionable to any part of her Majestie's Merite, or to the Occasions of her great Service; for I cannot understand that she is couched in the Estate of the Finances for this Year, for more then 200000 Crowns; and that Sume, (smal as it is) may be subject before the Year shall end to De-falcation.

I have

I have very lately had long Conference with Monsieur de Buzenwall, partely An. 1601. to know the Opinion he hath of the Strength of the States, partely to know the Affection the King doth bear them, and what Intention he hath for their Conservation. For the first, his Opinion is, that they are extreanly weak, and long cannot stand; which he doth interpret not for Years, but for Moneths. That suddainely they will sink, and when once they begin to faill, they will fall headlong, without remedy to be relieved, or hope to be recovered. And if they fall to a Peace, (which shall be by hazard,) they will run tumultuously, the one to prevent the other, nether respecting much their own good, or the good of their Friends. He compareth them to the Marchant who must needs plaie Bankrupt, who after the Stock is consumed, doth spend only upon Credit: And to a wasted Lamp, whose last Light doth give the greatest Flash. Their present State he holds to be their former Reputation, and their Enemies weaknes their only Strength. His Reasons are, their want of means, to support so mightie and dayly a Charge. Fonds of Treasure they have none, nor means to raise any. Within the Country there is Wealth sufficient, but that is to particular Men, whose Purse the Publike hath no powre to command. Abroad their Hopes are frustrate: England cannot, and (as he saith) hath so declared. France will not. The Princes of Germanie, devided more in Affection then in State, in their last Action have discovered the Dulness of their Spirit, and weakness of their Resolution. To this he added, the Disunion of the United Provinces; whose Considerations, privat Commodity, not Care of the publike doth commaund; which causeth these Enterprizes to be undertaken, wherein private Respects have most Interest. And when nothing doth combine but Gaine and Comodity, not Religion, (for it is lawfull not to confes the Religion there received) yt followeth, that their Gaine once decaieing, their Societie will soon after separate. Now for the King's desire, or pourpose of their Conservation, he saith, that he hath remonstrated the Necessity of their Affaires to him, to his Counsaill, to those in particular who commaund all, that from hence they must be relieved, or of force must fall; and hath negotiated their Cause, more like their owne Minister, then the King's Ambassador. But not being able to shewe any particular Utility that this Crowne shall reape by their Subsistance, as to hold any Towne in Hostage as her Majestie doth, (which is a great Mote in their Eyes) or to gaine any Soveraigntie over them, (the Nature of that People nothing symbolizing with the French Humor) nor to shew any other means to uphold them, without making a present Rupture with Spaine, (which who perswades is Anathema) he thinks the King will sooner resolve to retract from them the smal Provision of 150000 Crowns, which yearly of late they have received, sith it makes so great a Bruit and doth them no more good, then to be drawn to grant a greater Encrease. This is the Sume of what I learned of him, which I rapport to your Honor's Judgment.

The Duke de Maine hath sollicited the King for a Prolongation of the Terme (which within one Year doth expire) of those Towns which were given him for Securete at the Treaty for his accord, viz. Chalons, Seurre, and Soyssons: Alleaging, that being deprived of them, he lieth open to the Malice of his Enemies. That the Catholicks, in case they should be assailed by the Religion, have no other retreat or recourse. The King answered, that he wold be his Protector against all his Enemies: That he was mistaken, if he took himself to be the Patron of the Catholiks, whereof he only was the Head. He wisht him not to trouble him more with that motion, which he wold never accord. Sence, the Duke of Lorraine hath sollicited the King for him, and the Duke de Maine doth offer to pay the Garrisons at his owne Charges, but the King will not harken. He hath offered the Duke 200000 Crowns to content him, which he refuseth to accept.

Monsieur de Lesdiguieres, (who pretendeth a Debt of the Kings, amounting to the Sume of 160000 Crowns, which he disbourfed in his Service in the late Warres,) having often sollicited Repaiement from Monsieur de Rhosirey, without hope

An. 1601. hope of effect, arrested the Farmers of Salte in Dauphine, which he wold not release, untill the Farmers of Salte had assured him his Money. The Farmers make their Complaint to the Counsaill, to whom he himself did write, shewing what he had don, and the Reason; adding, that he knew that it was not the King's Pleasure he should so be treated, but of some, who did envie the good Services he had done to this Crowne. What he had done he wold maintaine with his Sworde; and whosoever should come to controll it, were he not the King his Master in Person, he wold make him bear away his Blowes. Order is taken, that within three Ycars his Debt shall be discharged. Monsieur Lesdignieres hath pourchased Lands and Possessions within the Territory of Berne in Suisse, and hath made himself Bourgeoise of the Towne: And some add, (though without Probabilitie,) that he hath made an Alliance with that State, offensive and defensive.

The last time that the King was at Vernueil, Monsieur de Boidiffiere, being in company with Monsieur Beauvoir Nangys, complained of the Wrong the King had done him for his Daughter, whose Honor he had ravished, and deluded him with many fruitlesse Promises, and at length had exposed him to the Shame of the World. He began thereupon to protest, that he was resolved to be revenged, and to kill the King. Beauvoir Nangys advised him to more Moderation; but seeing him persist in his Furie, departed, and sent unto him Monsieur de Montigny Governor of Blois, who found him in that phranticall Humor. De Montigny acquainted la Verrane, Controller of the Posts, (who is the Mezzano between the King and his Daughter.) La Verrane posteth to Vernueil, and advertizeth the King, who at that instant received a Letter from la Boidiffiere, solliciting for Access. The King returned Answer, commanding him not to stir from Paris, where he himself wold be within feaw days; then advised how to appease his Furie. To committ him to Prison were to exasperate his Frensie, and to discover his owne Shame to the Reproach of the World, and thereupon resolved to commaund Monsieur de Rhosny to deliver unto him 30000 Crowns, as he tendered the Safety of his Person, and his Life; which were forthwith delivered and received. And suse, he hath had no feeling of his owne, or his Daughter's Honor; to whom the King doth give 500 Ducats Pension by Moneth, whereof the Father retaineth twoe for himself.

I presume to deliver to your Honor these Particularities barely as I have received them from a very good hand, without Glosse or Scholie; which are here taken for assured Presages, of no less strange then suddaine Alteration in the Government of this State. Here is a sourd Bruit (I know not upon what Reason or Presumption grounded) that Monsieur de Villeroy will make himself Cardinal; and by reason of the many Infirmities of the Chancellor, that the King will make him Garde de Seaux, some add likewise, Archbishop of Lions; because the Chancellor's Sonn, (who is possessed of that Place) is become very fenceless, and void of all Understanding. The Marschal Biron is gone into Borgogne, and from thence doth goe to the Suisse, to confirm the Alliance which Monsieur de Sillery hath negotiated. He hath obtained leave to go afterwards into Italie, only for desire to see the Country. The Princesse of Lorraine is not yet departed, Madame being either sick, or not willing yet to goe.

Here arrived this Week past a Nuntio from Rome, to congratulate the Birth of the Dauphin. The Duke of Lorraine doth joyne with both the Princes for the Advancement of the Jesuits Pretensions, who are in great hope to be restored. The Earle of Westmorland is lately dead at Newport. Here passed this Week past through this Towne Thomas James, one of the Parsons the Jesuits Factors, into Spaine. Some three Days sence the King received News that Count Maurice is risen from before Bolduc.

I very humbly beseeche your Honor, to recommend unto the Lord Tresorier the Paiement of my Provision. The 14th of the last three Moneths were unpaid, whereby I have ben driven into some Extremities, and my Bills of Exchange change had been protested, if my private Friends had not saved me from that Shame. And so I humbly take my leave. An. 1601.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 8th Dec. 1601. O. S.

Y^T is so late since I wrote, and I now have so littell to write, that at this time I wold have forborne, but that this Gentleman (Mr. Hatton Farmer) returning from hence, was unwilling to present his Service to your Honor with empty Hands. The Princes of Lorraine departed yesterday from this Town, and Madam with them; whome the King did accompanie some feaw Leagues on their waie. The Duke hath receaved the Contentment he desired, both for the Debt which he pretended to be dewe unto him, for Mony disbursed in the late King's Service, and for the Dowery which the Duke of Barr his Son doth demand for Madame. She doth protest assuredly for the Perseverance in her Religion, and doth now carrie with her a Minister into Lorraine. Yet they which wish and long for her Revolte, do deliver, that she hath taken a time of six Moneths to resolve, which caused the Duke to surcease from further Sollicitation. Which was not disagreeable to the King's Desires, who rather doth wish her alteration in Lorraine, then in this Courte; to discharge himself from those Imputations of Unkindness and Hardness of Heart, which were divulged and made knowne unto him, and wold ever lye heavy and hatefull upon his Honour.

The Bishop of Eureux hath put that in print, which hath passed between the Minister and him, whereof I send one Copie to your Honor. The extraordinary Nuncio doth remonstrate to the King, the Discontentment the Pope doth conceave, for the dailie Assistance the States do receave from him; and shewed Letters from the King of Spaine to the Pope, complaining of that Wrong, and soliciting Redresse by his Mediation. He descended to Particularities, urging how prejudiciall the Voiage of Calais was to the Archduke's Affaires, whereby in the heat of the Siege of Ostend, he was constrained to divert his Forces, for the reinforcing of his Frontier Garrisons. Then, that by the Sumes of Mony which yearly he contributs, they are inabled to support the Charge of the Warr. Lastly, that the Residence of his Ambassador amongst them, doth presuppose an Alliance, and give them the Reputation of a formed and approved State. The King's Answer was, That his Jorney to Calais was only to see his Frontier Townes, and had no other end, as since the Effect hath proved. The Sumes of Mony which he supplied, were not great, and only were for Repaiement of parte of those Debts, which long sence he borrowed of them. His Ambassador was now in this Towne, and yf he should retorne, it should be only to clear his Accounts with them, and for some private Occasions of his owne. This Nuncio hath brought with him to the Dauphin certaine Reliques, and petit Presents, to the vallew of 4000 Ducats. Yf these were only formall Complements or externall Ceremonies, they well might passe without Observation; but this doth deserve the Consideration, that sence the Memorie of our Forefathers, the See of Rome was never so potent, nor the Alliance so straight, as nowe it is in this Realme. They only are heard and beleaved, do commaund in this Court, and that in cheefe, who were the first Authours, and most principall Actors in the League, and in consequence, Creatures and Vassalls of Rome. Monsieur de Rbosny (that his Brother may receave better Treatment, and more casilie advance the King's Affaires for his greater Credit) doth make way to the Pope's Negotiations; and for the Re-establishment of the Jesuits is so forward, (who

An. 1601. yet are not restored) that he will not oppose himself in a Cause, upon the Issue whereof, he well knowes, the Propagation of the Doctrine of that Church within this Reälme, doth chiefly depend. The Emperour hath resolved to send hether an Ambassador, whose Style I know not, but his Name is Schambourgh, Captaine of his Gardes, and Marechal of his Lodgings. The King's Agent there doth write, that besides all ordinary Complements for the Marriage and the Dauphin, he hath Charge to sollicite for Assistance against the Turk, and to move the King to withdraw all future Succours from the States. So that it seems (which the Nuncio doth likewise intimate) that there is a purpose, to combine in manie Forces together, for their final Ruine and Destruction.

The Duke of Bouillon from Maugulo, is retired to Sedan. The Arbitrament did take no great Effect. The Count of Lignes, loth to departe from that he holds, for Exchange, wold turne over the Prince of Espinoy to certaine Possessions, which the States in Holland do detaine from him. M. de Rhosny (who wold be glad his Sonne might recover any thing in any place,) better acquainted how to deny, then accustomed to be denied, and knowing the great Use that the States might make of his Favour, did never misdoubt to be refused in that Demand. But finding the Difficultie more then he expected, hath sence handled their Agent, solliciting his Affaires, as he takes it, somewhat uncurteously; whereof he being impatient, hath procured to receive an Answer (even in his Pursuites for Mony) from Monsieur de Villeroy, without renvoy to Monsieur de Rhosny. Wherein perhaps he may do some wrong to his Master's Service, which thereby may feel a present smarte. This Proceeding of his, will nourish that irreconcilable Pique which is between these two Grand Seigniors. Yet it wold well have becom'd his Patience, and the necessity of those Affaires of which he is to treat, to have humbled himself to the Humours of this Man, to which the Princes of the Blood do stoope and give place.

Since the Duke of Bouillon's Departure, (by such Offices as (144) the King hath done) Madame is greatly incensed against him; being contented to beleeve, that in this Conference which was intended, the Duke did not so much affect the Satisfaction of her Conscience, as the Vanitie of his owne Glorie; thereby to build upon her Weakness, Trophees, to raise up the height of that Greatness which he doth ayme at, to be received and revered as the Patron and Protector of the Religion. This Fantasie hath so deeply possessed her Mind, that she could not desemble her Displeasure; but hath declared, that this was a Traine complotted by him, to bring her Honor upon the Stage, and to leade her in Triomphe through the Reformed Churches, both within and without the Realme.

The King doth purpose to renewe the Fortifications of the Sea Townes in Provence, as of Antibes, and Toulon; rather, I think, upon suspect of some such like Practize which the last Yeare was intended upon Marseilles, then for fear of open Invasion. For so it stands between him and Spaine, both in Watch and Warde attending the Opportunity, who can first get the start of the other. There are Letters from Barcelona of the 14th of this last, which report the Fleet is returned from the Indies with nine millions and a half, whereof six are to the King. I have spoken with Antonio Perez about this point, who doth not remember that in his time the King's part was ever so great, unless it came by the Change of Governours, or the Sale of Lands. The same Ordonances being in those parts which are in Turkey, that the Children inherit not their Father's Lands, but all, both Lands and Estates, doth retorne to the King, upon the Decease of the Possessor. Monsieur de Beaumont did take leave of the King upon Sunday last, and will be in England some time the next Week. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Win-

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 21st Dec. 1601. O.S.

THE most I have at this present to advertize is, that here is nothing to be advertized. Monsieur de Beaumont (who departed from hence many Daies since for England) hath, as I am enformed, Commission to joine with Monsieur de Boisfille for the Causes of Depredation nowe in question, and Instructions accordingly howe to proceed. He hath likewise, as I understand, Warrant at his second access, (for the first will be only for Complements to be received into his Charge,) to give her Majestie assurance for some Reimbursement; but the Summe is so disproportionable to her Expectation, and to the Necessity of her Affaires, That I fear she hath cause of no les Discontent, to see her Merits so sleightly respected, then yf she should have been in her just Demands absolutely refused: For yf my Information doth not deceive me, he hath Powre only to assure 50000 Ducats for this Yeare now coming, and 50000 for the Yeare which shall followe. Which may seeme the more strange, because when the Estate of the Finances in October last, was dressed in gross for this Yeare which now ensueth; the Paiement assigned to her Majestie did amount to 200000 Ducats. In this proportion the Pensions are retrenched, or at least, they are desirous it should so be beleaved; as that of the Constables of 50000 Ducats to 50000 Livres, the Duke of Bonillons of 40000 Ducats to 10000 Ducats, and so through all; even to the Gentlemen of his Chamber. And so great a Greife is it to depart from Money, that Madame at her Departure, (though she founded in the King's Arms when she tooke her leave) entreating only the advance of parte of her Pension, and not for more then 6000 Ducats, could not obtaine that smale Curtesie. So yt appeareth by this great good Husbandry, (for the Revenew was never greater, which by daily Imposition doth encrease more and more,) that the Resolution is taken to have their Coffers well provided; either for the effecting of any Enterprize which shall be undertaken, or the withstanding of any Attempt (which rather may be doubted) either by forreigne Force, or Practice at home.

La Marquise is lodged in the Louvre, which doth minister much Subject of Discourse: And now (the Realme being blessed by the Birth of the Dauphin) doth give a great and publique Scandal. Yt hath been questioned, whither her Son should not be bred up with the Dauphin at St. Germain: And to the Incongruities thereof that were objected, the King made this Answer, That it could not be so scandalouse, the one being the Son of France, the other of the King. The beginning of the Holydaies here, the King did take Phisike, partly upon the Indisposition of his Health, (for the Zeal of his Religion did make him take Cold at the Midnight Mass upon Christmas Day Morning,) partly upon a great Discontent wherewith he was much troubled, by * an audacious pranke of the Prince of Joyntville, for the which he is commaunded to avoid the Realme. The Fact I have written apart, because the Circumstances are many, which I send herewith to your Honor.

The twoe latter Priests, as I understand, are come from Newport, whether they went to speake with the Legat or Nuncio which resides with the Archduke; and have found here their Compagnions, who long have attended them. Their Cause is recommended by the King to his Ambassador at Rome, and to Cardinal d'Ossat. This Favour they finde, by the means of an Englishman whose Name is James Hill, who sometimes hath followed the Duke de Mayene, and since the Affaires of the Duke of Mercœur.

I am enformed that the Bishop of Glascoe hath sollicitted the twoe Nuncio's which now are here, to be Mediator to the Pope, for the Erektion of two Semi-

* Bassompierre, in the first Volume of his Memoirs, gives some account of this Affair, to which I refer the Reader.

An. 1601. naries of that Nation, the one in this Towne, the other in Rome. They both refuse to treat with him, because he is Ambassador to a Prince whom they account not Catholick, and have entreated him to have patience untill they shall have Warrant from the Pope. Although this be a particular Practise of his owne inconsiderate Zeale, yet the Dishonour will fall upon the Person of the Prince, whose Minister he is known and reputed to be.

By Letters from Prague of the 4th of this Moneth, by that Style, the Archduke Ferdinando of Gratz, with the Duke of Mantua, did rise from before Caniſi; but their Retreat was so dishonourable, that their Men were cut in pieces, their Bagage lost, and the Artillerie left behind them. This Disaster is imputed to the Extremitie of a Storm, which with Violence did carry away their Tents; but the King's Agent with the Emperour doth write, that they could be content to borrow any Pretext to disguise the Shame of their Dishonour. The Prince of Orange passed this Week from hence into Spaine; and the Week before, Louis de Valasco from Spaine into Flanders.

I received these two Letters, from one that termes himself Captaine Smith. He seems to be in want, and would willingly perswade me, that I had Ordonance from your Honor to furnish him. I have answered, that if I had I would not refuse him, and untill I should have he must excuse me, not to furnish them, whose Demerits have cast them out of her Majestie's Favour and Protection. Elliot (as I am enformed by those who most conversed with him in this Towne) is returned into Scotland, from whence he lately came.

Yesterday the King received Letters from Calais, that Ostend should be either rendered, or taken by Composition. Whereof, though the Probabilities be very finale, yet the Report is generally received, and credibly beleaved; and the Cominaunders therein taxed, of want both of Courage and Loyaltie. The same Night the Lord Saker came from before the Towne, which at his Departure remained in the former State. This Pamphlet, will demonstrate the Passions which reign here. The Bishop hath found one who doth speak French to him, and beats him downe with his owne Weapon. There is a Book in the Press at Tournay, which beareth this Title, Les Nullities du Mariage du Roy de France, composed by one Boucher, one of the sixteen in the Fury of the League. So that these Passions do still boyl in their Breasts, which when once they shall break forth againe into Flame, yt will more easly ruinâ quam aquâ extinguere. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

P O S T S C R I P T.

After this Packet was closed up, I understood that the King hath received Letters the last Week from Monsieur la Boderie his Ambassador with the Archduke, that the danger wherein Ostende did stand ready to be rendered into the Enemies Hands, did arise by the Disorder of the Soldiars within; which by the Wisdom of Sir Francis Vere, and his Resolution, together with the happy Succours (which à point nommé arrived from England;) was remedied, and the Towne thereby miraculously saved: So now we hope the Chaunce is turned. It is sayd, that the Prince of Orange, when he was in this Towne, should give forth, that within few days there would fall out a great Alteration in the Affaires of the Towne; which may give just occasion of Suspect, that they held within an Intelligence, which gave them hart thus obstinately to persist, and hope to carrie the Place. The King was much perplex'd with the former Advice, for he knoweth he hath an Interest in the Conservation of the States, though he will not declare himself a Party in the Quarrell.

Mr. Secre-

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.Mr. Winwood,

2 January, 1601.

BECAUSE you may not be Ignorant of the Truth of her Majestie's Proceeding in Ireland, I have thought fit with all Expedition, to advertize you how things have proceeded in that Kingdome. * As soon as Don Juan del Aguila had landed 4000 Foot in the Haven of Kingfale in Munster, (for so it is trew he did, although at the first their Numbers weare supposed to be les,) he retourned all his Ships into Spayne, desyringe with all Expedition, that he might be supplied within a Moneth after. This Descent was made the 21st of September last, at which tyme the President of the Province, was gon to meete the Deputy, sixty Miles off. Both which, as soone as they heard it, drew downe to the Seafyde with all speed possible; and although in 14 Dayes after, they could not draw above 3000 Foote together to head, yet with those, and 300 Horse, they invested the Towne; as well to give Reputation to her Majestie's Cause, (thereby to contayne the Provincyalls,) as to hinder them from making any use of the Countreyes Provision. In the mean tyme, untill her Majestie sent her Supplyes out of England of Men and Munition, the Spaniards made divers Sallyes, though with small Advantage, and when the Supplyes did arrive, (which made up the Army hardly 6000 Heads) the Deputy immediately planted his Artillery and played upon the Towne; with purpose to force a Breach, which was done about the 5th of December; in which very instant, the whoale Power of all the Rebels (beinge indeed the choicest Men that ever Ireland had together) amounting to the Number of 6000 Foot and 800 Horse, weare come within 12 Myles of the Campe. At which Instant (even the very same Day) Sebeure arrived from Spayne within 8 Myles of Kingfale with 700 Souldyers, and great Store of Provisions of Victualls and Munitions; all which he thought to have landed in the Harbour of Kingfale; yf he had not found 6 of her Majestie's Fleet within the Harbour. There came also four Barks more to Baltimore and Beerhaven, which came in his Company, but were fevered, and so recovered that Coast, where they only have landed 150, in each of those Ports. All these that came in thus dispersed; were of this Squadron under Sebeure, who was driven backe into Spayne, when Don Juan first came on with the whole Army, it beinge at first 5000 Heads in all. This new Approach of the Traytour; concurringe with the present Arrivall of the Spaniards, though the Number of them was no greater, rayfed in the Minds of all the Kingdome (whereof the greatest Part were ill affected) so many shrewd Apprehensions, as gave the Lord Deputy great Cause to forbear the hazarding the Queen's Army (which was so greatly weakned by the incommodities of a Wynter Seige) from undertaking an Assault, wherein there were 4000 Boidyes, and of them 20 Companies old Souldyers, commanded by so many Captaines of the Low Countreyes. And therefore his Lordship took a Resolution to attend a better Commodity, when he should have removed the Forces at his backe, and so with les hazard proceed to an Assault; wherein the least Disaster he could have suffered, would have changed the whole Face of the Kingdome; and every encounter which had not been prosperous, accompted for an overthrow. The next worke therefore he did, was to send three or four Shippes to the Harbour into Castebaven, there to attempt upon the Shippinge, before they had unladen the Provisions. Where (to be short) the Admiral Sir Richard Leveson, notwithstanding that Sebeure had drawne the Shippinge under the Favour of eight Pieces of Artillery, (which he had landed to guard his Shippinge) after five Howers fight, sunk three, ran two on the Shoare, and fyndinge himself contynually played upon from the Shoare with Musketts Shott and the great Artillery, warped

* Morryson (who was Secretary to the Lord Deputy,) has given us a very exact Account of this whole Affair, to which I beg leave to refer the Reader. Vide his Itinerary, Book 2. p. 134, etc.

An. 1601. out as conveniently as he could, having twelve Men killed in his owne Shippe, forty Men hurt, and his Shippe shott through a hundred tymes. These Provisions being thus consumed, (which was the cheif end of all Sir Richard's going thither) he came back to King-sale: And Sebeure then resolved, first to send up his Spaniards to joyne with the Traytor's Army, thereby hoping to be able to enter the Towne by a maine Assault upon the Campe. According to which Councell, upon the 15th of December seaven Ensignes of the Spaniards joyned with Tyrone, Sebeure himself remaining behinde, and fortifying in Castlehaven, to the intent the King of Spayne might be sure of another Port to land his second Army, which is prepared at Lisbone to the Number of 5000 Souldyers. After the Spaniards were thus incorporated into Tyrone's Campe, (private Letters passinge between Don Juan and him) it was agreed between them, that on Christmas-Eve, Tyrone should attempt one quarter, and Don Juan should do the like in Front, upon a Signall given. Of which secret purpose, the President (by his Espiall in the Country) beeing able to advertize the Deputy, his Lordship resolved (as weake as he was) to rise and fight with the Traytors, which he did in this manner. He drew out 1000 Foote, commanded by Sir Henry Power (which was a volant Regiment, compounded of the best of every Company) and 300 Horse, with which only he rose; givinge Order to the rest of the Campe, to make good their Guards towards the Towne, which was ready to have sallied with 1500 Men. By that tyme this was done, the Rebell was come within half a Myle, (beeinge early in the Morning) whose purpose was to have put in all the Spaniards and 1000 Irish for reliefe of the Towne; which 1000 Irish were in the Vantguard, and the Spaniards in a Body apart, wyde from the Battalion and the Reare. The Deputy fynding the Place advantageous for him, (because it was out of the Woods and Bogges) commanded the Marshall Sir Richard Wyngfield, and Sir Henry Davers to charge with the Horse; who did it bravely, and brake the Foote in the Vantguard first, then did the Battalion begyn to breake, and so some Disorder appeared in the whole Campe; whereof the Lord Deputy espieing his Advantage, drew up Sir Henry Power with the Foote, and presently came on upon the Spanish Squadron first, and brake them; whereupon the rest rann away confusedly, and so the Deputy's Horse fell to Execution, as well of the Irish, as of them. There were in all, 1200 dead Bodyes left in the Place. Of the Spaniards, there were some 100 taken alive, and the rest, (being three or four hundred Slayne) the Irish all cut in Pieces: For the rest of the Rebells, they saved themselves by flight, beeinge near their fastnesses; without hope of which retreyt, they would never have come so far onward as they did: Nether would the Deputy have suffered that Army to have lodged so neere him, if once he could have got them into the Plaines. Hereupon this great Army's whoale Strength (beeinge the strongest that ever was amassed in Ireland;) is utterly broken; and therefore, I doubt not, but to advertize you by the next, that the Army hath entered King-sale: For upon what Price soever it be, her Majesty must have it, before the new Supplyes be arrived. Besydes these dead Bodyes, there were 800 hurt, and above 4000 Armes recovered by the Souldyers, whose greediness of Pillage, did hinder much of the Execution. It is true, that besydes the Glory of this present Success, this Victory (when in Trewth the Irish shewed great Cowardise, even in the Eye and Company of the Spaniards;) hath bredd so ill an Impression in their Myndes, as the Maisters of the Camp, and principall Commanders that are taken Prisoners, do not only exclaime agaynst their Cowardise, but do underhand murmur, that they are secretly accorded with her Majesty to betray them. Which Diffidence, although it be more imprinted then there is Cause, yet to tell you trew, they do now infynitely underhand work for Mercy at her Majesty's hands, and offer to renounce all Forrayne Support, and to joyne with her Majesty to their Confusion.

Thus have I given you the Substance of this Proceeding, whereof Sir Henry Davers is the Reporter; whom the Deputy employed hether, as a good Opportunity to help him to kysse her Majesties Hands; in whose good Opinion he hath been been a good while suspended, beinge knowne to be more devoted to the late Earle then became him, although he went not so farr as to break the mayne Poynts of his Alleagance. Of these thinges, I have thought it not impertinent to make some Deduction ab ovo, because I know that Nation so apt to Censure; especially beinge unacquaynted what the Misery of that Countrey is, where no Army that lyes in the Field need other Enemy then the Clymate. In regard of which difficulties, yf the King shall not be moved to thinke, that Gratitude tyes him to some other Course with the Queen, (when now she shall have most need of it,) I know not what may move him. I pray you therefore, when you take occasion to acquaint him therewith, let fall so much of that Subject as you think fitt in your Discretion; and as you may underhand, blowe it abroade, how little hope the King of Spayne may repose in the Irish Combination, when it comes to the upshot. Notwithstandinge this likelyhood of further Victory, her Majesty sendeth presently 4000 Foote more, 100 Lasts of Powder, and all things proportionable; having in four Moneths space before, sent 7000 Foote and 400 Horse into that Kingdome, mayntayns a Fleet upon that Coast, and prepares another for the Coast of Spayne. And so for this tyme I committ you to God.

From the Court
at Whitehall.

Your loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, January 6th, 1601. O. S.

I HAVE received many Dayes fence, your Honor's Letters of the 1st of December, by the Hands of the Party to whom they were delyvered. After his retourne to this Towne, he made som aboade of tenn Dayes for the Dispatch of his private Occasions; in which tyme, he often conferred with me about the particular Points of his Negotiation; for the better Satisfaction of his Understanding; and for the Address of his Letters: Wherein I have advised him, of all Matters that shall import; to send a Duplicat by divers wayes, that if the one shall miscarrie; yet the other may have a safe ricapito. And because here we speake of nothing more, then of the great Preparations which now are in hand at Lisbone, yf at his arrivall the same Reports shall there be veryfyed, I have wished him (the Eye being a trewer Judge than the Ear) to make a Step into those Parts, for his more easie Access to acquayntance, which may give him an Entre to the Knowledge of Affayres. I have procured him very speciall Recommendations, by Letters to the Ambassadors of Florence and of Venice, which resyde in that Court; which notwithstanding I have referred to his Discretion, to be used as present Circumstances shall minister occasion: For his owne Judgment must be his Direction, and in all Affaires of suddaine Dispatch, that Counsaill is only of use; which is taken sur le champ. He is now on his Way, and will be at Bayonne, by that tyme these Letters shall come to your Honor.

The late remarkable Accident of Ostend, did minister here very strange Discourses. For fyrst it was reported, (and that in the best Places) That Sir Francis Vere had sold the Towne to the Archduke for 200000 Crowns. Then, that the Capitulation was made by Commaundment from her Majesty; who was resolved to make her Peace upon these Termes: That she would deliver Ostend and Vlissing to the Archduke; and that the King of Spayne, should retyre his Forces from Irelande, and pay unto her those Soms of Mony, which this King doth owe her. But the Respit of a few howers, did make them acknowledge the Easiness of their Nature, too prone to entertayne any unworthy Conceyts, which may sound to the dishonour of their best Friends. Yt is here reported and beleevd, That the King of Spayne is resolved to come into Italy this Spring in Person. This Resolution doth make the Princes of Italy, the Seignorie of Venice

An. 1601. Venice, and the Grand Duke, (as their Ministers here do playnly discover) already ready to tremble. The Preparations are now great in the Duché of Milan.

Ambrosio Spinola (as the last Letters from Florence do affyrme) hath Commiffion to levy 6000 Men; and his Brother Frederigo is returned out of Spayne, with Satisfaction for his former Arrears; and Advancement for Provision of more Gallies, which now are dressing in Genoa, Naples and Sicilly. This King doth begin at these Bruits, to rouse himself; and to consider, whether part of this Storm may not fall upon some part of his States. Advise hath been given by sundry ways, that divers Sums of Mony, (and in good Quantity) have been secretly distributed amongst the Garrisons in Gascony and Bearn, and those more remote Parts, neare approaching to Spayne. The King, many times, out of the freeness of his owne Nature, (and perhaps of purpose) doth discover a great Ambition of Spirit, capable to undertake any high Exploite; yet the Love of Ease, and the Desire of Repose, which his Disposition doth affect (wholly devoted to Pleasures and Pastimes) and the State of his Body doth require, (dayly wearing and consuming,) and the Necessity of the Realme doth demaund; bearing still the Marks of the late Miseries, which yet are Blood Raw: Besides those his two Counsaillors do preach unto him, (the one, no Enemy to Spayne, the other an Enemy to all Attempts, wherein many must be used) All these are Arguments more then sufficient, that their Honor and Estate must be deeply Interested before they will be induced to an open Warre. In the last Audience which the Agent of the States received (wherein he sollicited for Assistance of Mony) he was asked, what Assurance his Masters could give for the Reimbourment, in case they should make their Peace with the Archduke? For to take in Ostage any of their Townes were to smal purpose, being so remote from this Realme, and unproper for their Service; and besides, could not be received, without open Declaration of Warre to the Archduke, which he was not resolved to embrace for their Sakes. Monsieur de Rhosny, sence the breaking of the Arbitrament at Maubugy hath made instance to the King that he might have Letters of Reprisalls against the Archduke's Subjects, sence Justice after due Requisition hath been refused to the Prince of Espinoy. The Counsaill did advise upon yt, and his Demand it was accorded: But being perswaded by Monsieur de Villeroy, that this Proceeding would make an Entrance into a Warre, he was content to lett the Matter fall, without further pursuit. Your Honor will give me leave to conclude this Poynt with this Motion; that whilst the Deseignes of Spayne are yet in Nubibus, uncertaine which way they will drive, and therefore the Affaires here in a great Irresolution, apprehending a Warre, because they have not an Assurance of Peace; yf her Majesty shall be pleased to hasten her Ambassador's coming somewhat the sooner, before tyme shall settle a clearer Judgment of those doubtfull Projects, his Presence may be able to worke those Courtes in this Place, which may, yf not advance, yet second and fortifye the Service of her State: Dum in dubio est animus, facile momento huc illuc impellitur.

We hear that the Archduke doth send to the Prynces in Germany an Ambassador named Vadeville, to Contrequar the Ambassage the States sent lately to them; to pray them to joyn with him, which may cause a generall Peace in Chrystendom; to reunite to his obedience his revolted Subjects, and licence him to levie with them 6000 Men. Amongst other Discourses which here we have, this is sayd, that yf the Archduke rises from Ostend, he will be willing to retyre himself from those Parts, and the King of Spayne as willing to recall him, (because there is now no hope that he shall have issue by the Infanta, which was the fundamentall Reason of that Transport) thereby to induce the States to a more easie accord; and because the Somms of Mony which he did contribute Monethly to the Warre, are wastfully consumed, and converted to the superfluous Magnificence of their Court.

The last Weeke, three of the Preists that came out of England, departed from hence, forward on their Journey. The Doctor is yet here. I am dayly asked the Reason of their Liberty: I shape my Answers, according to the Humours of

of the Demandors: To some I say, yt will now appear that those are scandalous and false Libells which some of their Sect have published, that in her Majestie's Reigne, any of their Profession have been persecuted, or have suffered for Religion: That their pretended Religion is but a disguised Maske, the more covertly to contrive their disloyall Practizes. That the Pope is but the Vassall of Spayne, to send forth the Jesuits under the colour of Devotion, to make way to his ambitious and tyrannous Deseignes. To others, that these are not the first that have been banished. That the poursuite of their Quarrels, (follow'd on both parts with so much Acrimonic) doth shew their turbulent and seditious Spirits: and how incompatible Liberty of Conscience would be with the Repose of her Majestie's Government, sith in their Persecution (as they terme yt) they prosecute one another with this deadly Hatred. They are gone to Rome to trye the Justice of their Cause, by the Teethe; where, which Party soever shall gain, the common Cause must needs loose; whose Nakedness will be discovered and shewn displayed, to the View of the World. I have been sollicit, to speake in their Favour to Monsieur de Villeroy, who took much Exception against the Word Banishment in the Passport; but I praied to be excused, assuring them, that I would neither meddle without Warrant, nether pro nor con take notice eyther of their Persons or Cause. I wished them to use her Majestie's gracious Favours soberly and discreetly, and for the right end, for the which it is in the Bounty of her Mercy conferred upon them. Yf no other Good succeed thereby, yet France doth owe this Obligation to her Majestie, that hereby the Jesuits Pretensions for their Re-establishment are much weaken'd, and the Nuncio in despayre further to advance them.

Here is in this Town a Flemish Gentlewoman who long tyme hath lyved in England, and as I learn is Wydow to one Deemock. She cometh from Rome, whether she pretendeth to have gone upon a bon Voiage. The Nuncio here hath sollicit the King to recommend her by his Letters to her Majestie, but Monsieur de Villeroy doth make some difficulty to dispatche her. The Queen likewise hath been sollicit for that purpose, and hath promysed her that Favour. The Solemnities of the Christening are deferred till Whitsonyde; from which the Grand Duke doth excuse himself by the Ambassador whom he doth send, as holding yt Presumption, to be Partner with so great a Potentate as the Pope. The Alliance with the Suissers is accorded, but yet not sworne; all the Cantons, both great and small, Catholique and of the Religion, renounce the Alliance of Spayne, and bynde themselves to a Ligue defensive and offensive with the Crowne of France, against all Princes and States in the World, saving agaynst the French Countée, (with which they will hold good Friendship and Neighbourhood) and the Duke of Milan, with the which they will continue their Ligue defensive and offensive, even against this Crowne: For they have the Droit de Bienveillance to that State, as pregnant as France, and yf it shall be assailed by any, do hope to have their part au gasteau. The Debt which this Crowne doth owe unto them, did amount to eight millions and four hundred thousand Crowns, for the which they are contented to be payd at divers Terms. The Treatie yet is not come amongst us, but I shall have means to procure a Copie to send your Honor. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

An. 1601.

- Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 12th Jan. 1601. O. S.

I Humbly kyfs your Honor's Hands for those happy and blessed Tydings, which being of the 2^d of January, arryved to me the 7th in the Morning. The King that Day was gone a hunting, but returned somewhat before the Evening; to whom I procured present Access, and said, "that I had received Commaundment to communicate unto him the happy and glorious Victory which it had pleased God to give her Majestie over her Rebells and Ennemyes in Ireland, as unto a Prince, her trewest and most assured Friend, whose Affections could not but sympathize with her in all Estates of Fortune; and now would rejoyce and joyne with her in Thankfullness to him for this memorable Blessing, which she in humbleness of Heart did acknowledge to be un vray coup de Ciel. Neither attributing yt to the Providence of her own Care, (though her Subjects will witness with her, that she hath not been wanting in the Dueties of a carefull and gracious Princess,) nor to the Wisdome and Valour of her Commaunders and Souldiars, (though she will not defraude them of the dew desert of their worthie Commendations,) but to the meer Grace and Goodness of him, who ever hath been the professed Patron of her just and rightfull Cause.

"The King answered, that he had already received Advertifement of yt", (the Messenger that brought your Honor's Letters, brought Letters to Monsieur de Villeroy, yet he made me not so much beholding to him, as to acquaint me therewith, that I might accordingly have directed my Addressse and Speeche to the King.) "Notwithstanding he sayd, that he thought the tyme long, untill he spake with me, to see how my Relation did agree with his Ambassador's Report. He fyrst told me how wellcome the News was to him; wherein he received as full Contentment, as in the Prosperity of his owne Affaires, for so he did account the Happines of her Majestie's Estate. He added, that he had not concealed his Knowledge hereof, nor the Joy which he had conceived; for he had communicated it to the Dutchesse of Brunswick, (whose Husband was slayne in the Service of the Ligue, and she hath hope to recover his Debts, which by his Accord with the Duke de Mayene the King should discharge,) to the end, that as she passed by the Spanish Ambassador's Lodgings to her owne, she should acquaint him with the News. Then he commaunded me to make him the Report. I beganne with the landing of the 15 Companies of Spaniards, and particularly delivered the Fight by Sea, with all the remarkable Accidents of Sir Richard Leveson; giving him to understand, that he was the Gentleman, who came to him to Calais to do him Reverence, and to present his Service to the Mareschal Biron". Which I did upon this Reason, because at that tyme he asked what he was? how he was allyed to the Lord Admirall? what his Experience was upon the Sea, and what Proof he had made of his Valour. "I then shewed, that the very same Day, the Rebell was approached with all his Forces, renforced by seven Enseignes of the Spaniards, that his Deseigne was to succour the Towne; the Complot between him and de Acquila to assaile the Lord Deputy, and the Consideration which moved him to resolve on that happie Counsaill, which he did with so great Valleur there put in Execution". (Which before he did not understand, being advertized, that the Rencounter was by Hazard not by Deseigne, and that the Lord Deputy went forth with those Troopes to discover the Ennemye, and not to fight.) "When I came to the Particularities of the Successse, and shewed, that there were 4000 Armes upon the Ground, He sayd, that that seemed most straunge to him, that the Irish should quitt their Armes and runne away. I answered, That yt doth seem so straunge to the Spaniards, that they can attribute yt to no other Reason, then to their treacherous Nature, who after they

“ they have called them in to the Assistance of their Rebellion, did abandon An. 1601.
 “ them either to the Fureys of the Souldiar, or to the Mercy of her Majestie; ~
 “ and now too late do repent, that ever they had Commerce with so brutish a Ge“ neration, only cladde with the Faces and Semblances of Men. The King then “ sayd, that his Ambassador had written unto him, that Tyrone did crave her “ Majestie's Mercy. I answered, that my Letters did speake nothing of yt;
 “ and I thought, the Guilt of his Conscience did rather crye unto him, that “ his Offences were so great, that they could not be pardoned. The King then “ did make a long Discourse of the Infelicities of the King of Spayne, how no“ thing did ever prosper that he had taken in hand; and so recounted the evill “ Success of the Voiage of Algeires, the shamefull Retraite from before Ca- “ nafi, the last Assault at Ostend, and now this Defeat in Ireland. I replyed, “ that these Disgraces did nothing rebate the highte of that King's Pride;
 “ who did at this tyme prepare a great Fleet at Lisbone, where 4 or 5000 Men “ were to be imbarqued for Ireland. That he doth make Levies of Men in all “ parts, and threatens to come into Italy, and as some say, into the Low-Coun- “ tries. To this he sayd, that his Advertisements from Spayne were only for “ 2000, that were ordayned for Ireland. And when the King of Spayne should “ understand, what Levies of Souldiar he would make in Gascony and Province,
 “ he would be better advised then to stir from thence. Hereupon I said, that “ were it not for the great Charges of this Warr in Ireland, (and so I particulari“ zed unto him the Number of those Forces which had been sent thither sence the “ first Descent of the Spaniards: Those Men which now are on the way, and “ the Fleet which is to be continually mayntayned upon the Sea) her Majestie
 “ would have a good Desire (and her Subjects no lesse) to take that Course;
 “ that sythe the Ambition of that King doth shew, that he is born to no other “ end, but the Disturbance of Christendome, perhaps he might be glad, that he “ hath Italy left him for a Retrayte. He answered, that that would be the “ way to make the King of Spayne to know himself, to finde him at home,
 “ where he would be found unprovided of all manner of Defence. Hereupon I “ replyed, his Majestie did well know what a chargeable Enterprize this would “ be, which must not be undertaken by the halves, but thoroughly seconded, and “ strongly reinforced. Yf he would be pleased to have some feeling of thease
 “ her Majestie's Expences, she should have cause to think her Charges well im-“ ployed for the Defence of the generall Repose, and be encouraged to conti-
 “ new in the same Proceedings. His Answer to this was, that his Ambassador “ had Commission to delyver to her Majestie, what his Estate could depart with “ for the present. To which I replyed, That sythe her Majestie's Charges did “ dayly encrease, without hope of Ease, yt would please him, to enlarge his “ Ambassador's Commission, for the assurance of a greater Somme. He answer“ ed, that he did not doubt but that her Majestie would be contented with that “ which now he could reimbourse, sence the Weakness of his Estate could not “ afford more”. And so he dismissed me.

The next Day I went to Monsieur de Villeroy. After some Specches to and froe, of this happie Rencontre, “ I sayd, that I had understood by the King “ that Monsieur Beaumont had Commission to give her Majestie assurance for “ Reimbursement of some part of her Debt. I prayed him to consider, whe“ ther the Somme would be proportionable, eyther to her Majestie's Debt, or “ to her long Forbearance, or to her present Occasions. And so I remonstrated “ unto him the Infinity of her Charges now passed, and the Continuance of the “ same, both to meet with all further Supplies which might be feared from “ Spayne, and for the establishing of a settled Policy in that Island, which after so “ long a Confusion would require muche tyme and muche Charge. Yet besydes
 “ all this, I sayd, that yf the King would be content to make present Repay- “ ment of any round and notable Somme, she would easily be induced to pre- “ pare a Fleet now this Spring, agaynst the Coast of Spayne. To this latter “ poynt he made this Answer, That his Opiniou is, that the King should joyne
 “ with

An. 1601. “ with her Majestie, for the Suppression of the Ambition of Spayne; and yf she “ would prepare a Fleet for those Parts, the Bruyte of yt would cost there 3 “ or 4 millions, and yet they would be found unprovdyed. I remonstrated un-
 “ to him, the Commodities that would in particular arise to the King by this “ Enterprize. That his Realme should still remayne in an assured Repose: That “ the King of Spayne, without his entering into Warre, eyther obliquely or di“ rectly, must needs be consumed in his Forces and Treasure. The States (of “ whom in reason of State he is bound to have a particular Care,) by this means
 “ will be secured, who otherwise without this, or some other extraordinary Af-“ sistance, cannot long subsist. That he shall acquit himself of part of his Debt;
 “ and lastly, shall shew a very kynd Gratefulness to her Majestie, to the Con“ tentment of her Subjects, who have not refused to sacrifice themselves for the “ Honor of his Service”. M. Villeroy did promise, to confer with the King particularly upon this Point. I was once of mynd to have moved the same to Monsieur de Rbofny; but I would not presume to proceed too farr without more especiall Warrant, and Instruction from your Honor. I cannot understand that Monsieur de Beaumont's Commission, doth extend farther then a 100000 Crowns; neyther is there hope, but upon this Ground, of any greater Enlargement for this Year.
 This will soon come to an Issue, for the Season of the Year will not admitt long Delay in this Negotiation. Which yf your Honor shall think convenient to have it followed, yt may please you to name a certayne Somme which is to be demanded; whereof there is reason, that if not all, yet a great part should be advanced. The States have promyse this Yeare for 300000 Crowns, and 100000
 Pound of Powder, which upon occasion may be enlarged.

The happie Successe of the Affaires of Ireland is very gratefull here, for no Man doth with the Spaniard should feat himself in those Parts; though perhaps they do think, that their own Greatness hath some dependance on their neighbour Troubles. The King presently dispatched Advertisements to all his Gover-nours within his Realme; nether have I fayled to deliver the particular Relation to all publique Ministers, whose Masters do hold Intelligence with her Ma-jestie.

I am informed, that one Patrick Dove an Irishman, (who lately departed from Rouen to England;) hath used very dishonourable and treasonable Speeches of her Majestie's Person, and of the Government of her Estate. Otwell Smyth hath received particular Information of his lewd and disloyall Carriage, and a Memorie of the Places and Persons, where and with whom he doth haunt in London.
 And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

20th Jan. 1601.

I Have received even at one instant, two of your Letters, one of the 6th, the other of the 12th of January. In both which, I do perceave your Care and Dexterity, in managing those things, which are committed to your Trust and Carriage. And for answer unto them, (because I am now otherwise diverted with our happy Tydings of Ireland, which arryved but some few Hours after your Letters,) I will only breefly tell you, that Monsieur de Beaumont hath received Audience of the Queen; but for the matter of the Reimbursement hath carryed himself so reservedly, as we do not know yet what particular Somme he hath Commission to make offer. It is true, her Majestie doth prepare (and is already very forward) to set forth at her own Charges, a Navy for the Coasts of Spayne. Wherein, because I do perceave by your Conference with Monsieur de Villeroy, that for the Consequence which it might draw with it to that State, (in this

this undertaking tyme of the King of Spainne's;) that this her Majestie's Deseigne might serve to good purpose, to induce the King to a far greater Reimbursement for this Yeaere, then I find by your Letter is already intended; you shall do a very acceptable Service to her Majestie, yf by insisting upon the same in the best form you may, you shall be able to draw the King to a larger Somme; by representing unto him both the burthensomness of such a Charge to lye on her Majestie alone, and the common Benefit which may be expected thereof, as well to this State as to others, that under the Favour of her Majestie's Warr with Spainne, live the more secured in their Countries. And thus much I have thought good to touch of this matter; referring all further Circumstances of your Letters tyll some fyttter tyme hereafter, because I might geve you some fytt Opportunity now to procure an Access to the King, by imparting unto him her Majestie's most happy Successes in Ireland, which are shortly these.

That Don Juan d'Aguilla, upon the Distress of the last Defeate of the Rebels, hath now yealded up by Composition, as well the Towne of Kingsale, as all other Places which the Spaniards were possessed of in Ireland, as Castle Haven, Baltimore and Beerhaven; whereof some of them might have proved as difficult for recovery to her Majestie, (by reason of their Situation) as Kingsale it self. Now you have as much as we have at this present, tyll the Gentleman that is sent from the Deputy to enforme of all other Particulars, be arryved. In the mean time, I would not omitt to geve you Knowledge hereof, because I doubt not but the French Ambassador will advertise so much to the King. And so I committ you to God's Protection.

From the Court
at Whitehall.

Your very loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

P O S T S C R I P T.

You may seem that the Queen's Resolution to send to Spainne is not so certaine, but that yt may change, yf she do not find by the King some good Office to animate her. Herein it is that your Dexterity may appeare, for in very trewth we are far on with our Preparations. But you may say, (yf he knew so much already) that this Newes of Ireland may peradventure stay us, if we be not spur'd by him. This Night hath been spent in Feux de Joye.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

20th Jan. 1601.

I Wrote unto you a short Letter of this Day, concerning the Action of Kingsale, whereof I had then received the first Advice. There is even now arryved Sir Richard Morrison, with a particular Dispatch from the Deputy, nothing differing from the former, saying that we finde the Nombres greater by Poll, then was conceived to be, for they were almost 3500 Heads, all Spaniards, saving some few Portugalls, and 300 Neapolitans; whereof 2500 in Kingsale, the rest in Castle-haven, Baltimore and Beer-haven. The Composition was to deliver up all the four Places, on condition that the Deputy should give them leave to return for Spainne with all they brought with them, Artillery and all things whatsoever; paying for the Transportation, at such Rates as the Deputy should allow of. He took his Oath not to land in any other part till he came to the Groyne: And yf Supplies arryved from Spainne before Wynde served him to imbarke his Army, he capitulated to remayne neutrall. For performance of all which Things; till they be gonne, Don Juan, and certaine Captaines remayne Hostages; and when they are gone, there remayneth Hostages of principal Men for the safe Return of the Shippinge.

These are the Formallities of the Articles; whereof the Substance; and Effect is this; that our Army having endured a miserable Seidge, in respect of the Cly-

An. 1601. mate, not being left above 4000 able Men; must ether have assailed 2500 at a Breach, or els must only have recovered the Place by Famyne, which would have asked forty Dayes longer; by which tyme a good Part of the Army must have perished, and new Supplies might have landed. But which was more, (and herein I assure you, his Proceedings were judicious,) there weare two of the three Places wherein the Spaniards had fortified, which would have cost the Queen a great deal of Charge, and have kept the Army on Foot and in Miserye to have lived in that Province; especially to have gone to those Places; where the Canon can hardly be carryed, and where already they had made the Places very tenable, in favour whereof they were Masters of two verie good Ports. To conclude therefore, by all Presumption, this Bridge of Gould, whereon the Spaniards shall make their Returne, will ether serve them to be Messengers of such Relations, as will give smal Appetite for any further Enterprize, (if they can arrive before the second Supplies come forth, for which these Men importun'd before the Rendition;) or else, such will be the Desire of Revenge, as the Kinge may happely resolve of some better dygested Enterprize; wherein by the way, I think it not amiss to tell you a pretty jest that passed between the Deputy and him. When Don Juan bemoaned the King's Misfortune to be so abused, to trust such a Nation, that had no Constancy nor Resolution; the Deputy asked him, what he thought of the Nature of the Countrey? Who to shew his extreame Alienation, sayd, that he remembred that part of the Scripture; when the Divell carried up Christ to the top of the Pinnacle to shew him all the World; wherein said he, I verily believe, the Devil did hyde Ireland from him, because it was fit for none but himself. And thus have you the Narration of all those things, her Majesty being much pleased with God's favour herein, and expressing a deare Valluation of him, whom God hath made the Instrument of the same: Wherein to speake truly what is evident, I do not think that ever England had a more worthey Servant. And so for this tyme I committ you to God.

From the Court at Whitehall.

Your very loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

P O S T S C R I P T.

What it is likely that this matter may work in that State, I am in much Dispure. For sometymes I imagine, that when he sees our Affayres go backward, that he begynnes to advise, that our over-Infelicity may be hurtfull for him; and that where we cannot attend the Necessities of other States, that then he must strayne himself; and so I perceave he hath done lately in the Matter of Ostend; for when he saw us so diverted, as he thought we must needs abandon that for a tyme, it appears by your Writings, that he is about to do some good Offices towards that State. How therefore now he will be glad to give any furtherance to our Actions upon Spayne, when he thinks we begynne to feel lesse Difficulties, you may do well to tast him; and as you may assure him, that notwithstanding this Combustion in Ireland, if he will but contribute some good Portion of Treasure, (though as default'd out of the Debt) in some further Proportion then he hath given Commission to his Ambassador, that her Majesty will send a stronge Fleet to Sea; so you may make him doubtfull, that when we shall see the purpose of the King of Spayne's sending into Ireland diverted for this Yeare, that then her Majesty will give over her Sea Action; in which he cannot be but Interested, by the Damage the other is like to receive. To conclude, I rather write this, because I see you understand the Nature of the tyme, and could be glad to worke upon it for the Queen's good, then that I can have hope of any thing from thence; only this I can assure you, that our Fleet will be ready within these 20 Dayes to sett Sayle, whether he do any thing or no, which shall live upon his Coast till October; whereof the Charge will not be so little as an hundred Thousand Crowns. Sir Thomas Parry is now upon his Departure, only he shall tarry some 14 Dayes to be acquainted with our first Progressions.

gressions, in the Matters of Depredation. Odonnald, and another great Rebell in Connaught, are fled into Spain with Sebeure, and proud half recovered Ulster, Hart broken, and in great Difficultie. An. 1601.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 24th Jan. 1601. O. S.

THIS Court is so barren of all Occurrences, that are of the Growth of this Countrey, that it doth borrow from abroad all Entertainment of Discourse; either from the Affaires now in Action in Ireland and at Ostend, or from the Deseignes of this Sommer to come, which the Preparations of Spain, Flanders, and Savoy, do threaten to project. The Archduke, (besides those Supplies which he doth dayly attend from Italy) doth make present Levies in the Franche Conté, and in the other his Provinces, for the speedy reinforcing of his Army before Ostend; which by the relation of the Soldiars which daily disband from thence and pass this Way, is full of Misery, and since the Slaughter at the late Assault, so weak, that it doth rather stand by the Reputation of the Number of the Heads, then by the Strength and Ability of the Soldiers.

Monseigneur de Boderie, in his last Letters to the King, doth describe a universall Desolation and Mourning in that Court, especially by the Infanta; who having lost all Patience, with the Presumption of her former Hopes, doth with much bitterness exclaime against the Counsaill of Spain, the King her Brother, and the Archduke her Husband, who perswaded her to come into those Parts, upon Assurance that at her Entery into that Countrey, the United Provinces would range themselves for her Service and Obedience: Whereas since her coming, she hath tasted nothing but Misery and Calamitie, whereof her Eyes and Eares have daily feeling; and can promise to her self for hereafter no better Amendments, but rather an encrease of her Sorrowes and Distastes. He writes, as though there should be in her a forward Inclination, (yf the Siege of Ostend shall not take place) to retire herself from thence, and to retorne into Spain. Your Honor doth understand, that the Archduke hath repealed the Prohibition of Commerce between his Subjects and the United Provinces, and doth permit all kind of Salt, Fish, Butter, Cheese, and Wine of Spain and France, to be received from them into his Countreis. But yf the State of the United Provinces were able to forbear that Commerce, but only untill this Lent were past, not only the Army before Ostend wold perish with Hunger, but also the Countreis of Artois and Hainault would suffer much Misery, whereof the last Year's Experience doth give sufficient Proove.

The King is offended that the Archduke did yeald this Reason for the Rappelle, viz. because his Neighbours and Ennemies did thereby make their Profit. Which he saies, must joyntly be interpreted against him and his Subjects, which by the way of Calais, doth furnish his Provinces with these Commodities; not against England, which usuallie doth not trade in that keind of Marchandize. This Weeke we understand, that the Admirall of Arragon (authorized with sufficient Powre for that purpose,) hath proposed an Overture of Treaty to the States; assuring them, that all agreeable Conditions shall be accorded, both for the Liberty of their Religion, and for the Maintenance of their antient Privileges; with addition of any other, which they hold reasonable to demand. Yt is thought here some neglect of Care, in those who undertake the Charge of that Government, that their Prisonnier, without their knowledge, should have means to receive Letters of a matter of that Importance; the only Bruite whereof (in such a hotchpot State, compos'd of so many bizarre Humours;) is sufficient to make a Rupture, which easily after will not be salved: And as great a Legerity in that Counsaill, (though the Overture was refused) to publish abroad the Particularities of these Conditions, carrying with them so glorious a Lustre; which cannot but stir up in the Minds of the best affected Phantasies, that which before

An. 1601. before they never conceived; and give Courage to the discontented Spirit, to profess with boldness, his Envy (which before was concealed) of Change and Innovation.

It is not yet assured that the Suissers have sworn the Alliance with this Crowne, though it is now some time since Marechal Biron arrived amongst them. For the Reimbursement of their Debt, which amounteth to eight Millions and 400000 Ducats, they are content to take four Millions. Whereof this Year they are to receive 1500000, and 400000 Ducats yearly untill the full Sum be discharged. The Catholique Cantons do renounce the Alliance with Spain, and joine with those of the Religion, in a League defensive and offensive with this Crowne, against all other States, saving against the Franche Conté, (towards the which they promise to carry themselves like Neighbours and good Friends,) and the Duché of Milan, with the which they will continue the Ligue defensive and offensive, even against this Crowne: For they pretend, that the droit de bien seance is as pregnant for their State as for this Crowne; and hope upon any Innovation, to have their part au gasteau.

Upon long Deliberation, the King is now resolved to reestablish his Navie in the Mediterranean Sea; whereby he shall assure his Frontiers upon that Coast, hold in bridle the Gallies of Spain, (which cannot pass into Italy, without touching in those Parts, yet touch without demanding Permission;) revive his Reputation with the Princes of Italy; who by his quitting the Marquisat of Saluces in the Treatie with Savoie, did hold themselves as abandoned, by opening the intercourse and access to them by the Sea; and by enabling himself to command those Seas; clear them of Pyrats, which the King of Spain doth undertake, but not effect; yet under the colour of that Charge, doth retain in his hands by Bulls from the Pope, the yearly Revenue of a Million and half in Ecclesiasticall Livings. The King's purpose is to make between 20 and 30 Gallies, and for this Year to make the Number 10. Whereof there are already 5 at Marseilles armed, and one in State to be put to the Sea. For the other 4, the King hath accorded with a Genevois Gentleman (that now is in this Town) called Francesco Lommeleni, to furnish fowre Gallies, the Slaves only excepted, for 40000 Ducats.

The Discontents of the Communallitie do daily multiply, for the Grievances of the Impositions; of the Nobility, for that their Services are not remembered, their Pensions retrenched, and they themselves not respected, nor admitted to the Government of the Estate. The Booke whereof I have heretofore advertised, is now in the Mouth of every Man, and com to the King's Hands, and many other of as scandalous a Subject are secretly spread abroad; amongst the which, there is one of this Title, Tyrannie des Tyrannies du Roi Henry 4th de France.

This Week Monsieur de Rhosny was made Captaine of the Bastile in this Towne. The Reason which is alleaged, is to place there the King's Coffers, and under Colour of that, the better to guard and assure the Treasure. It is thought he will fortify the Place, and lodge part of his Cannons, which here of late have ben made in great Quantity. The Jesuits have gained so far, that their Reestablishment is graunted in all Places within this Realme, saving within the Resort of this Parliament. Only, (upon an especial Grace to la Verrane;) the King hath licensed them to be received at la Flesche, not far from Angiers, yet within the Jurisdiction of this Parliament, whereof he is Governour. And because I have had this occasion to name la Verrane, I will not omit that he is now to marry his Daughter, with the eldest Son of the Count Molurier, who so long hath disputed the Principality of Sedan, and that Title with the Duke of Bouillon, and doth give her for Dowery in ready Money 80000 Ducats. Which is the more remarkable, considering the Services wherein he is imployed about the * King, which is to be his Mezzano for his Loves; the Place from whence he came, which is out of the Kitchen of Madame the King's Sister; that he hath many other Children both Sons and Daughters; and the small time he hath ben about the King, who in the Disposition of his own Nature is nothing Prodigall. In somme, this Man may dispend in Revenue of Land, 50000 or 60000 Franks by the Year.

* Lettres d'Etat, Vol. 3. p. 320. and Monsieur Amelot's Note.

Monſieur de Pleſſis hath eſcaped now lately to be murdered whiſt he was at the Sermon at Saumur, by the hands of a religious Man of the Order of St. Poll l'Ermite; who had aſſociated two others to joyn with him in this wicked Attempt. The two Complices have confeſſed that they were practized and induced by the Fryer; himſelf as yet, hath confeſſed nothing. The King, when he was informed of this Attempt, answered, that he would then believe it, when Monſieur de Pleſſis had a Kingdom to looſe. And ſo, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 3^d Feb. 1601. O. S.

THE two laſt Diſpatches of the 20th of January, which with ſo careful Diligence yt pleaſed your Honor to redouble upon me, came to my hands the 29th. The King was then gone a hunting, and returned not before the next Day, which was Satterday, and late in the Evening. Upon Sunday Morning at his riſing, I procured Acceſs; to whom when I came, he ſaid, “ that his Ambaſſadors had advertiſed him that the Spaniards in Ireland were rendered, but “ that the Particularities they had referred to my Relation. I then, according “ to thoſe ample Inſtructions received from your Honor, delivered from Point “ to Point the particular Articles of the Capitulation; which when he had well “ comprehended, I remonſtrated the Reaſons which moved the Lord Deputy to “ grant thoſe Conditions, inſiſting upon the number of Spaniards remaining “ within the Towne of Kingsale; the Weakneſs of his Army, which the Nature “ of the Climate, and Seaſon of the Year did dayly conſume: The Quallitie of the “ other Ports, inaccessible and tenable; the Attendance of freſh Succours; and “ laſtly, that her Maſteſtie did with more tender Care reſpect the Life and Safe- “ ty of her Subjects, (who could not but languish in that Winter Siege,) then “ ſeek after Revenge upon a miſerable Enemy; whom, though Famine would “ have forced within few Days to have render'd, yet being rendered, muſt have “ ben as now he is, returned into his Countrey. The King did highly commend “ the Judgment of the Lord Deputy, and ſaid, that he had taken the ſelf- ſame “ Course which he heretofore had done in his Warrs, and upon the like “ Occaſion would ever do; and from the beginning did wiſh might be taken for “ the more ſpeedy determining of that Warr, and the Repoſe of her Maſteſtie's “ States. He then asked what was become of Tyronne? I answered, that he “ was gon deſolate and forlorne into his Countrey, and thought, that the next “ News that ſhould be heard of him, wold be, that ſome one of his moſt confi- “ dent Followers had cut his Throat, and had made a Preſent of his Head, to “ procure his own Pardon. After ſome pauſe, the King ſaid; That now her “ Maſteſtie was diſcharged from that Rebellion, ſhe could not do better then ſend “ a good Fleet, (with ſome Aſſiſtance from the States,) againſt the Coaſt of “ Spayne, and to give the Command thereof to Sir Francis Vere. I answered, “ that before rendition of thoſe Places which the Spaniards did poſſeſs, her Ma- “ jeſtie had a purpoſe to ſend a Fleet towards that Coaſt; to the end, to returne “ the Force of Spayne from the pourſuite of that Warr. What now we ſhould “ do (the Spaniards being rendered) was uncertaine; whether ſhe wold wholly “ change her purpoſe, or a while adviſe, to ſee what the King of Spaine wold “ do, after the returne of his People, and ſo accordingly conforme her Deſ- “ ſignes. The King inſiſted ſtyll upon the ſame point, ſhewing the Facillitie “ of the Attempt, by the Weakneſs of Spaine. I replied, that the King of “ Spayne had taught her Maſteſtie, not to undertake any ridiculous or inconſi- “ derate Enterprize, to expoſe her Subjects to the Butcherie of her Enemies,

An. 1601. “ and the Honor of her State to the Scorn of the World. The King smiling, said, that the King of Spain was a most unfortunate Man. I answered, that the Success of yll founded Actions, was not to be imputed to Fortune, but to want of Judgment, and of due Consideration; and therefore, the Burthen and Waight of this Action (which once undertaken must ever be maintained) doth staie her Majestie from any present Resolution. The only way to engage her, was to enable her to undergoe yt; which he might do, yf it wold please him to contribute som convenient Somme, proportionable to the Charge of such an Enterprize, which I saide she wold be content to take in part of Paiement of her Debt; and then (as your Honor had commaunded me) I represented the great Benefit that thereby wold arise, both to his Estate, which should enjoy a continuall Repose, and to the States, who without this means, or som other as extraordinary, must be forced to strike Saile; and to accommodate their Fortunes to the Necessity of their Affaires. I added moreover, that the King of Spain being detoured by this unexpected Attempt, to send Succours unto the Archduke either of Men or Money before the end of this Sommer, the Provinces of Flanders and Artois wold stretch open their Armes, to embrace the Honor of his Commandements. To this he answer'd not much, but first complained of his own Necessities, unable to give that Satisfaction which was demanded at his Hands; and after, that he wold advise with his Counsaill what was to be done in this Particular which I did negotiate. I praied him to consider that the Season of the Year was far advanced, and wold not suffer any long Delay; and withall to understand, that her Majestie wold resolve either to make Warr or Peace, and not to stand any longer upon the defensive; which was but to lye at the Discretion of her Enemy, and permitt him to take such Opportunities as might best serve his own Advantage. In all appearance of Reason, it was to be thought that Peace wold be sought for at her hands; and she not finding her present State sufficient to maintaine the Charge of so great a Warr, will not refuse such Conditions of Peace, as the Honor of her State with Safety may embrace. And so concluded, that he wold be pleased to consider, whether it were convenient for the Good of these parts of Christendom, that the King of Spain should enjoy in Peace the Return of his Indies, but only for four or five Years.

This is the Substance of all that then passed, for he hasted to go to his Counsaill, which attended him in the end of his new Gallery, where he gave me this Audience. I took the first Comodity to give an account to Monsieur de Villeroi of what I had negotiated. He said, that he thought this an important Matter, and worthey of the King's Consideration; wherein he had already had Conference with him, and so wold sollicit, that it might take Effect. He enquired very earnestly, to whom her Majestie wold recommend the Conduct of this Action, for that wold be an especiall Motife, to induce the King to this Contribution. He wished me to sollicite your Honor, that her Majestie wold be pleased (by some one whom she should depute) to communicate to their Ambassador, the Generallities of her Intentions in this Action; by whose Relation the King might be made in some sort capable of her Pourpose, and by her frank Dealing with his Ministers assured, (which much he doth desire) that she doth repose a confident Trust in his Friendship. I asked his Advice, whether I should speak with Monsieur de Rhosny of this Matter; which he advised me in any wise to do, and said, uppon the Rapport of their Ambassadors they wold joyne together, and so wold (for these were his Words) tous les gens de bien, to advance an Action of so worthey Consequence. I find by him, that they do greatly fear, that her Majestie's Felicity will humble the King of Spain to sollicite for Peace. Which Opinion I have ben willing to nourish in them; and do assure all those who are most interested therein, That yf her Majestie did not receive better Contentment from hence then her former Treatment did promise, in case futable Conditions were offered, a Peace wold not be refused.

Hereupon

Hereupon I went to Monsieur de Rhosny, to whom I shewed, what her Majesty's Deseigne was in preparing this Fleet, before the Reddition of the Spaniards: What now her Intention is, yf she might receive from the King any convenient Contribution: The Equity of her Demand, not to engage the King in any Warre, for she was content that so much as should be contributed, should be retrenched from her Debt: The generall Benefitt that Christendome should receive, by rebating the Pride and Ambition of Spainne: The particular Good to this Crowne, (which without Jealousie should enjoy perpetuall Repose,) To the States, (who longer could not subsist without the Favour of a Diversion,) And lastly, That their Neighbours of Flanders (despairing to find Release from their Miseries under their Subjection to the Archduke;) wold retyre themselves to the Covert of this Crowne. He answered, that her Majesty, in his Judgment, should do better to imploy her Forces against the Coast of Flanders, and chase the Spaniards out of those Parts. Against Spainne more cannot be don, then now the Spaniards have don in Ireland, or her Forces lately have don at Cadiz; take some Port, ravage the Coast, and so returne. I answered, that her Majesty wold take in very kind parte, any Counsaill that should come from the King. I praied him to think, that she would not do that wrong to her Honor, to undertake any sleight or impertinent Action, nor to the Reputation the World had conceived of her Wisdom, to attempt any thing which should not first be digested with mature Deliberation. I moved him to take some good occasion to conferr with the King in this matter, and so farr to advance, as the Good of the King's Service should require. Which he promised, with assurance of his best Endeavours, that it might take effect". Your Honor doth remember, that Monsieur de Rhosny hath a particular Interest, that doth move him to this Action of Flanders, which he wold advance with the maine of his Powre.

Here is conceived a great hope, that if the States may be enabled to subsist but some few Years, the Archduke's Provinces (despairing to have Relief from their Miseries) will revolt, and rather betake themselves to the Protection of this Crowne, then to the Ligue of the United Provinces: Which yf yt should happen, the Opinion is, that the King hath no purpose to annex them to the Crowne, but to invest in them his Sonne of Vendosme. Upon the Rapport of their Ambassador's and your Honor's next Letters, which will give occasion of Accessse, it will be seen what will be don. The less need her Majesty's Affaires have of their Assistance, the more respectfull Reason, and real Proceeding, her Service shall find; which at this time will be more speedy, upon the Fear which is conceived, that a Peace will be tender'd; and the Jealousy which doth arise from Spainne, the Ambition of that King, being as they see, impatient of Repose. After long Debate, which hath been between him and the Towne of Genoua for the Marquisat of Final, he lately hath seized by Force, of the Towne and Port; greatly to the Prejudice of that Commonwealth, and to the Discontentment of this King; whereby, from the Duché of Milan, he hath a present Entrance into Provence.

Your Honor doth understand of a Conspiracy in the Campe before Ostend, to seaze on the Persons of the Infanta and the Archduke; for the which many, and some of Mark, have been executed. And sence that, whilest he was at his Devotion, he was suddainely surprized with an Epilepsie, (an hereditary Disease to his Family,) and some doubt is made that he will not easily recover his Senses and Understanding; but howsoever, in eo non sunt positæ fortunæ Graciæ.

The famous Arsenall and Stable of Dresden in Saxony, so renowned throughout the World for the Beauty of the Architecture, are both lately consumed with Fire, neither is it known how it came. The King doth threaten a Journey to Blois, and from thence to Poitiers, where the Counsaill shall reside. But he, in post, will go to Baionne, to viffit those Frontiers, for he doth not beleve much in the Peace with Spainne. Yet there is no probabillity that he will so far absent himself from Ostend. The Issue of which Seige (in the Opinion of this Counsaill)

An. 1601. Counsaill) will bring forth some strange Effects. And so I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 13th Feb. 1601. O. S.

A Late Conference which I have had with Monsieur de Rhosny doth minister the Subject of this Letter; with whom being yesterday at his Lodging, to know whither he had moved the King touching the Contribution wherein I have lately sollicitated him, in case her Majestie should undertake any Desseigne against Spaine: “ He answered, he had not, for (said he) I do not see “ what good Success may be expected thereof, either to the common Benefit of “ the two Crowns, or to the Dommage of the Ennemy. The best that can be “ hoped is, that some part of the Coast of Spaine may be assailed and spoiled, “ some Shippes taken or burned; wherof particular Men do feele the smarte, but “ the Ennemy himself is nothing weakned in his Strength, but he and his Subjects the more exasperated to pursue Revenge. Yf (said he) her Majestie “ shall be pleased to make any Ouverture of some solide Enterprize for the “ assurance of both Estates, the King will not only second her, but joyne hand “ in hand with her therein, and be ready (yf need be) to march before. I replied, that her Majestie's Actions did all aim at one end, that is, the Safety and Repose of her own Estates, and the Conservation of her Neighbours and Allies; and therefore yt was not to be thought, that she had espoused a “ Desseign against Spaine rather than any other, which should not be of the like “ Quality and Condition. For the Attempt of Flaunders, (whereof he spake “ the other day,) I said it had many great and dangerous Difficulties, for where “ should the Forces be landed, Ostend being now so strongly besieged, and environed round about with Forts, and the rest of that Coast guarded with so many good Towns entirely belonging to the Archduke. And then to what end, “ unless it should be intended to make a Conquest of that Country, which did “ pass the Bounds of her Majestie's Ambition; who did not desire to extend the Limits of her Dominions. He said, the Good that wold arise thereby to her “ Realmes, would recompence sufficiently all the Difficulties and Dangers that “ could be pretended. For so long as the Spaniard hath that Power in these “ parts, nether England nor France can much presume of any assurance of Repose. Yt is not Spaine but Flaunders that makes him so bold, to make so “ many Attempts upon England; and the Forces of 1588, which should have struck the Blow, were of Flaunders not of Spaine. Yf her Majestie would “ propose to the King this Enterprize, to chase the Spaniard out of Flaunders “ and the other Provinces, and for the meanes, either her self solely to make the “ Warre, and to receive monthly Contribution of such Summes as should be accorded; or to joyne her Forces with the Kings, and to avoid all future Jealousies establish by consent a Prince in that State; this he said were an heroical Project worthy of the Greatness of two foe potent Princes, which the “ King had reason to harken to, and wold be willing to embrace. But to waste “ Men or Money in any trifling Enterprize, which will be of no less Charge “ and Danger, then yf it were of Moment and Consequence, were nether for “ the King's Profit nor Honor.

This is the Substance of what he said to this purpose. “ Which, he said, he “ spake, not with Warrant or Commission, but by way of Discourse, that I “ might thereby make my Profit. For the King being in Peace with Spaine, it was not for any of his Counsaill to make Overtures of this Nature, but they were to proceed from her Majestie's part; which when they did, should “ be advanced with his best Assistance. He insisted long upon the nobleneſs of AN. 1601.

“ be

 “ this Action: Upon the greatneſs of the Conſequence, whereby theſe Parts “ of Europe ſhould be perpetually aſſured, and the King of Spain ranged to “ Reaſon. Upon the Facility wherby the Princes ſhould enjoy the Fruits of “ their Labours in their owne Dayes; for the Townes are not ſtrong, the Coun“ trey would render it ſelſe at the firſt Sommons, tyred out with the Miſery of “ an endleſs Warre, and longing after the Government of a particular Prince:
 “ The Archduke is now diſturb'd of Men, and hath ſmall meanes to be ren“ forced, when the King ſhall impeache the Paſſage of thoſe Succours which out “ of Spain and Italie, have no other waye then through the Countrey of “ Breſſe. And laſtly, the King hath his Magazines in Picardie ſufficiently fur-“ niſhed with all Proviſion, which may be neceſſary for ſuch an Enterprize. He “ wiſhed me to adviſe of it, and ſo to repair accordingly to him, which I pro-“ miſed to do in 12 or 15 Dayes.

I thought it my Duty in diligence to advertize this: Wherby your Honor may perceave, how eaſy it is (yſ this Man doth ſpeake as he doth thinke) to engage the King in a perpetuall Warre. For no ſooner ſhall his Armes appear in Flanders, but the King of Spain and the Duke of Savoy will fall upon Provence; the Doubt whercof did allay their Heat in the late Negotiation at Calais. But now the Alliance is ſworn with the Suiſſes (in that Form ſpecified in my late Letters) wherby this Crown is mightily ſtrengthened, and that of Spain for all Attempts as much weakned; they here now do not ſtand in any great awe of the Forces that can come from Spain or Italie.

Here hath lately bin diſcovered a Practize, which might have proved dangerous to the quiet of this State; Whereupon there are four now Priſonners in the Baſtile, whoſe Names are, Villebouche, Croiſé, St. George, and Chalu. The two latter have ſhewed to the King, a Liſt of the Names of 930 Gentlemen of Auvergne and Gascoigne, which hold Intelligence with the Duke of Savoy and King of Spain; and do confeſſe, that ſome Summs of Money have ben diſtributed from Spain amongſt them. They name to be acquainted with this Practice, Men of greateſt Place in this Realme, the Duke Montpenſer, the Comteſtable, Conte d'Auvergne, Duke of Eſpernon, Mareſchal Biron, and the Duke of Bouillon, againſt whom, the King's Diſpleaſure is moſt incenſed. He hath long bin at Sedan, in ſome Indiſpoſition of his Body. The King hath ſent one Monſieur Conſtant unto him, to wiſh him to come to the Court, becauſe the Air of that Place is unwholſome, and he given to Melancholy, which Company, and Converſation of his Freindes wold drive away; but as yet there is no Newes of his coming. This matter is kept very ſecret, and it is thought ſhall ſoe be paſſed over. The King was advertiſed the laſt Weeke from Rochell, that the Duke of Eſpernon, (who doth pretend the Gouvernement thereof to appertaine to him,) hath had a late Practize to ſurprize the Towne. Certaine Inhabitants are imprifoned, and one Burgeoiſe named Iſaac Paris, who held Intelligence with the Duke. All French Shippes, are now againe freſhly arreſted in Spain. The Pretext is, that there were certaine French, in conſort with ſome Hambourgers, who about the Streights, being aſſailed by the Spaniſh Gallies, did beat them, with loſſe of many Men. Here is the Count of Soulmes from the Palatine of Rhine. After Complements, his Message is to demaund rembourſement for many Debts which the Conte doth challenge (as dew to Casimire) to deſcend to him, to the Somme of two Millions. But he is content to remit the antient Debt, ſo he may receive 500000 Crownes, which he himſelſe did lend unto the King; which as he profeſſeth, he wold contribute to the States, towards the Maintenance of their Warre. And ſo, &c.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 16th Feb. 1601. O. S.

MONSIEUR de Villeroy hath bin this Shrovetide out of this Towne, and returned not before Satterday last. Upon Sunday in the Evening I went to him, willing to sound him, how he would accord in Opinion and Judgment with Monsieur de Rhosny, touching that important Point, whereof I advertised in my late Letters of the 13th of this Month. I held it not convenient to acquaint him how farre the other had opened himselfe in his Inclination for Flanders. Thus I beganne with him, " That according to the Counsaile which he gave me, " I had communicated to Monsieur de Rhosny her Majestie's purpose against " Spaine; which he did in no wise approve, holding it to be an unprofitable " and fruitles Enterprize, no better then that of the Spanyards in Ireland, or " some of our former in Spaine, and yet of charge and of daunger. Further I " did not proceed, but attended his Answer. Which was, That all Enterprises " by Sea, were chargeable for their Preparations, subject to many hazards in " the Execution, and seldom did succeed to Expectation. He did not thinck " that Monsieur de Rhosny did hold yt inconvenient that her Majestie should arme, but did judge yt more fitt for her Service, that she should imploy her " Forces against Flanders then against Spaine; in which twoe Actions the Dif- " ference is great. To imploy her Forces in Spaine was but to draw the Warre " into length, and to put off the Spanyard for that Yeare: But to bring the " Warre to an End, and to secure both her owne and neighbour States, was to " make Flanders the Seat of the Warre; whence the Presumption of all At- " tempts, both agaynst England and France, did receive their Root. To this " I replied, that which he said could not have place, but by chasing the Spani- " ard out of the Low Countries: which he acknowledged to be his Meaning. " That I said was an Enterprize of many and waighty Considerations: Fyrst yt " would require a Royall Army: Her Majesty after that infinite Charge which " she hath for many Yeares sustayned both at home and abroad, could not well " support so great a Burden. Then, where should that Army descend, Ostend " being besieged? Lastly to what end should she undertake this Action? Syth " the Sea did circumscribe, as well the Bounds of her Ambition, as the Limits " of her Dominions: Which I sayd appeared by her reall Proceeding both with " the States, and here with them, in the Danger of their Troubles. To the " fyrst he answered, yt was for her Majestie to resolve, what she would do a- " gaynst the Ennemy. And something she was to do, for he wold advise her " rather to make her Peace, then to stand upon the Defensive; though sayd he, " I am so well acquainted with the Affection of the Spaniard, that he thincks, " to make and keepe a Peace with England, would dryve him headlong into " Hell. Then the Resolution being taken, yf she shall be pleased to commu- " nicat yt to the King, and for the more assured effecting of yt, demaund his " helping hand, she shall fynd him most willing to returne unto her the like " Assistance, which he doth acknowledge to have receaved from her, whereby " he hath recovered the Establishment of his State, which now in peace he doth " enjoy. He said, there was no meanes but by raising the Seige before Ostend; " nor noe meanes to raise the Seige, but by some notable Diversion. And to " the last doubt which I proposed, he answered, that the King's Ambition was " likewise regulated, and could be content that there were a particular Prince " established in those Provinces. He proceeded, and said, that yf this Action of " Flanders shall seem expedient, her Majestie is to resolve speedily. The oc- " casion will not ever be presented, and the Season of the Year doth hasten on. " She might cause her Mynisters to negotiate with their Ambassadors; he was " assured they should fynd sincere Proceeding, and the like I should receive heere. " He wished the Bruite of the Attempt of Spaine might continew, though the " purpose

“ purpose were altered, to continew the Preparations which there were great for An. 1601.
 “ Defence, and where, (by his Advertisements,) 20 Gallies were ready for the “ Sea, to come down into Flanders. He discourfèd long with me upon this Subject; but becaufe I had not that which I came for, (which was to know whether he thought the King would joyne his Forces with her Majesties, and declare himfelfe openly in the Action, yf yt should be undertaken,) I retourn“ ed back to the Number of the Forces; which I faid could not be lefs then “ 20000 Foote, befydcs a competent Cavallry; and I doubted, whether fo great “ a Force might well be spared out of the Realme. He answered, that must be “ advifed on and confidered: That the King could not affift with Men without “ declaring Warre, and that demand did break off the Negotiation at Calais; “ whether he fayd, an Information that Dunkerk would revolt, did bring the “ King. I replyed only, that her Majesty would not preffe the King with un-“ reafonable Demands, and fòc fccimed fatisfied: And now doe attend your Ho-nor’s Commandments, which fhall inftroct me how to proccede. This doth fccme but a Nicety in him, for what real Affiftance can the King give in fo im- portant an Action, which long can be concealed, and being discovered, doth not imbarque him in the Warre? Yf her Majesty fhall be pleafed to imbrace this Action, the Nomination of a Prince to this State whofe Advancement will be pleafing to the King, Affurance that he fhall not be left alone in the Warre, and fome hopes tendred to Monsieur de Rhofny, may have power, to make the King without Scrupule, declare the Warre.

This fmall tyme of Repofè which they have had, hath already engendred many corrupt and fuperfluous Humours, which not being difcharged without, will breede a Contagion within the Body of the Realme. And Flanders remayning in the Hands of Spaine, will ever be a Lance in theire Sydes; efpccially yf the Crowne (which they cannot but expect) fall upon the Head of an Infant King.
 I befcech your Honor excufe this my Boldnefs, yf my Zeale to her Majesty’s Service hath transported me beyond my Modesty and Difcretion. And fo, &c.

Mr. Win-

An. 1601.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

27th February 1601. O. S.

I Have not much more to advertize, then that Monsieur de Beaumarch, (Tresorier d'Espargne now in Quartier) did very lately send unto me, by Order from Monsieur de Rhofny, to know what Commission I had to receive the Somme of 50000 Crowns, which now he had in his hands for her Majesty, and what acquittance I could give for his discharge. I repaired to his Lodging to give him Satisfaction in his Demaunds. " He then told me, that Monsieur de Rhofny was now resolved to send the saide Somme to their Ambassador in England, who should receive the Discharge for the Payment, from her Majesty. This course, (as I said unto him) will be more honourable for the King, (for the transport either in Specie or by Exchange, will be both of Danger and charge,)" yet yf this be but a Collour to gaine Tyme, (as your Honor shall commaund me) I will sollicite the Payment; for this is the tyme, and now the States are to receive the first Parte of their Assignation, which is 100000 Crowns.

The President Jeannin is sent by the King to the Archduke, and departed from hence upon Tuesday last. Yt is sayd he is to treat about the Subject, which Monsieur Commartin and others have so long negociated with little purpose, namely, about the Confins of those Countries; and to demaund the Soveraingty of the Conté of St. Paul, which the King doth hold to appertaine to this Crowne. Some adde, that he is to demaund the Delivery of Boucher; who published that Book, of the Nullities of his Marriage. But the principall Point of the Negotiation, is about the Affair of Monsieur de Rhofny for the Principallity of Espinoy for his Son in Law, and the Vicomté of Gaunt for himselfe. Wherein he is to proceed with Protestation, (in case he shall be refused,) that the King cannot in Honor give longer delay of Justice to his Subjects; that is, refuse to graunt at their Instance, Letters of Reprisalls, wherby they may have meanes to right themselves. Hereby it doth appeare, what Power Monsieur de Rhofny doth hold in the King his Master's favour; and that since he hath imbarqued himselfe in the Cause, he will cælum terris miscere, rather then receive a disgracefull Repulse.

Parsons the Jesuite hath this last Week written to the Ambassador of Scotland: Excuseing himselfe for the Writings which he hath published, to the Prejudice of the Scots King. And entreated, (by his Mediation,) to fynd some entree into his favour and good opinion; with no want of Protestations, that he will relinquish the Service of any other, and only adhere to him, upon the smallest shews that he shall make of his Inclination, towards the favour of the Catholiques. Monsieur de Rhofny, in the last Speech I had with him, did touch this Point; That there were many Practises to alienate the King of Scotland from the Religion which he professeth. And when I answered, that he was a Prince wise, moderate, and discreet, and so well founded in the Religion he professeth, that ther was no fear that he wold suffer himselfe to be seduced: He replied, That Ambition did know no other Religion, then that which did make way for the Advancement of her Desseigns. Yt seemeth, he hath received some Advertisements to this purpose from his Brother, the King's Ambassador at Rome. The Trueth is, the Continuance of the Bishop of Glasgow in this Place of Ambassador; and many Sollicitations which he hath made to the Pope (by Letters) to make the Bishop of Weefmes Cardinall, have done a generall Wrong to the Reputation of his Judgment, as well as his Honor.

Here daily come petty Complaints of the Relligion and Catholiques one against the other. At Lyons, the 20th of the last Month, there went forth out of the Towne, betweene 15 and 20 of the Court presidial, and defaced the Temple of the Relligion, by breaking down the Doors and Windows. And at Montpellier, in publick Disputation it hath bin defended, that the Pope is Antichrist.
Whereupon,

Whereupon, the Clergy of Languedoc have made to the King a greivous Complaint, which the Nuncio here doth pourfue with much Vehemency. Letters are ſent downe from the King to the Chambre mipartie at Caſtres, to take Knowledge of the Complaint, and to proceed accordingly to a ſevere Punifhment: But the Relligion is the abſolut Maſter of that Towne. The Duke of Nevers doth pourpoſe ſome time the next Weeke to depart from hence towards England, (a Voiage which long he hath projected,) to kiſſe her Maſteſtie's Hands, and to ſee her Court. There are ſome dozen of his Friends which intend to accompany him, and amongſt them the Vidame of Chartres. The Duke is gon this Day to take his leave of the King who is now at Fountainbleau, but hath a purpoſe to retyre himſelfe for ſome few Dayes to Veruneil. Of any further Jorny, we ſpeake coldly.

Monſieur de Rhofny doth perſwade the Jorny into Poiſton, to eſtabliſh the Pancharte, which ſtill is refuſed; the reſt of the Counſail are unwilling the King ſhould engage his Authority with his Subjects, in a matter of that quality, which they are obſtinat never to admit. And then, pretending to viſit the Frontier Towns of thoſe parts, to paſſe by Rochell without entring in, is to give the world to underſtand, that therefore he doth paſſe by, becauſe the Towne will not ſuffer him to enter as Maſter, but with the Officers of his Houſehold, and a limitted Train.

The Advertiſements of the Preparations of Spaine are daily confirmed; the Marquis of Spinola hath made his Levy of 6000 Men, and as the Seafon will permit, will paſſe the Montaines and bring them downe. Frederigo is returned into Spaine, where they arme in all parts, both by Sea and Land. In the Kingdom of Naples, ther are to be levied 4000 Men; where likewise, and in Sicily, is prepared great Proviſion for Shiping. There are Letters from Rome, that the Engliſhe Priests are there arrived, and that the French Ambaſſador hath receaved them into his Protection. Thomas Fitzherbert (who ſo long hath lived in Spaine) hath taken upon him the Robe of a Jefuitte in Rome; and Thomas James doth ſucceed in his place, to be Factor for the Engliſhe in Spaine. And ſo, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Articles between the two French Ambaſſadors Boiſſiſſe and Beaumont, and the Commiſſioners of her Maſteſtie.

Comme pluſieurs propoſitions ont eſté faites par les Deputez du Roy Tres Chreſtien, pour mieux aſſeurer le Commerce des Francoiſ, en quoy les Commiſſaires de la Royne ont taché de leur rendre tout contentement. Auſſy leſdits Commiſſaires penſent devoir propoſer de leur part.

Sur le Premier Article.

Les Ambaſſadeurs de France reſpondent, qu'ilz n'ont pouvoir d'accorder ladite abolition, leur eſtant ordonné par leur Commiſſion, de demander reparation des dommages receus par les Subjects du Roy depuis ſon advenement à la Couronne ſeulement; mais non de quitter

Art. I.

Que puisque les Princes ont trouvée bon que l'on ne recherchaſt plus avant les Memoires des choſes paſſées, que ſeulement Depuis la jour de l'advenement du Roy preſent à la Couronne; que conſequement il y ait Article qui porte abolition de tout ce qui ſeroit paſſé

An. 1601. quitter ceux qu'ilz ont soufferts auparavant. Partant prient les Seigneurs Commissaires & Deputes de sa Majesté serenissime d'avoir agreable, que le Seigneur de Boisfisse, (estant de retour en France, comme il espere bientost,) retourne le commandement du Roy la dessus, qu'il ne doabte point qu'il sera au contentement de sa Majesté Serenissime. En quoy ledit Seigneur de Boisfisse offre de faire tout le meilleur office qu'il luy sera possible.

Sur le 2^{me} Art.

Accordent, que les Lettres de Marque qui seront cy apres octroyez, ne se puissent cy apres executés sur la terre, sinon que pour grandes & justes considerations, il fust autrement Ordonné par les Conseils de leurs Majestés.

Sur le 3^{me} Art.

Accordent, que suivant le 3^{me} Article du Traicté de Blois, le Roy commettra certaines personnes pour adviser & arrester avec ceux que ladite Royne Serenissime voudra commettre, de la quantité & qualité des Gabelles & peages, & autres droits qui devront estre pris sur les Marchandises, & qu'icelles impositions arrestes, ne puissent estre accruez: à la charge, qu'il en soit fait de mesmes, pour celles mises sur par ladite Dame: Et que les Subjects du Roy n'en paient non plus que les Anglois; ainsy qu'en France, pour ce regard, ils sont Traictés comme les Subjects du Roy.

Sur le 4^{me} Art.

Disent, qu'il n'esche notification audit Arrest que pour le regard de la confiscation des Draps, laquelle jusques icy n'a eu lieu. Et prient lesdits Ambassadeurs que lesdits Deputes de la Royne se vneillent contenter que ledit Seigneur de Boisfisse face pareil office pour ce regard, que pour le contenu au premier Article.

Sur le 5^{me} Art.

Respondent, que l'Exemption du droit d'Aubaine a esté accordée par le 32^{me} Article du Traicté de Blois: Et ne reste pour en jouir effectivement, sinon, que la Royne Serenissime vneille declarer se avant ce temps la.

Art. 2.

Que puis que les Marchants doivent estre en la protection des Princes, il ne soit point donné lieu à l'execution des Represailles sur la terre.

Art. 3^{me}.

Que toutes nouvelles charges & imposts, qui ont esté levée sur les Subjects de sa Majesté, depuis le Traicté de Blois, soyent ostés.

Art. 4^{me}.

Que le dernier Arrest donné contre nos draps soit revoque.

Art. 5^{me}.

Que nos Marchants soyent exempts de la Loy d'Aubaine; attendu la rigueur d'icelle, & que pour ce regard l'on a trouvé bon d'en privilegier ceux des Provinces Unies, desquels les Subjects declarer sa Volonté sur la continuation dudit Traicté.

jects de sa Majesté pensent que les merites n'ont pas devancé les leurs. An. 1601.

Sur le 6^{me} Art.

Seront expedies toutes provisions necessaires pour rendre les Jugemens executoires, par tout le Royaume de France.

Qui est ce que lesdits Ambassadeurs de France ont estimé debvoir respondre auxdits Articles; se reservant cy apres de proposer de leur part ce qu'ils jugeront, pour faciliter & entretenir le Commerce des Subjects du Roy en ce Royaume.

Art. 6^{me}.

Et d'autant que les Lettres de Pa-reatis, sans lesquelles on ne peut aujourd'hui executer les jugemens des Commissaires hors le ressort du Parlement de Rouën, sont longues & de grands frais: Qu'il soit pourveu en la Commission, que les Coppies d'icelle collationnées à l'Original, suffiront pour l'Execution desdits jugemens par tout le Royaume, comme il en a esté par le passé.

Et que les Villes Privilegiées n'en puissent pretendre exemption.

Replique des Commissaires de sa Majesté, à la Responce faicte par les Ambassadeurs de France aux Propositions desdits Commissaires.

Art. 1.

C'a esté l'intention & desir de sa Majesté pour le bien des deux Estats, & pour conserver entre eux l'amitié, de vider toutes causes de plainte sur le fait des Depredations. Et pour cest effect, elle Envoya Monsieur Edmonds expres vers le Roy, pour luy faire entendre ce bon desir qu'elle avoit, & recevoir de luy semblablement sa resolution la dessus. Avec lequel fut accordé, que l'on ne rechercherait des choses que ce qui seroit arrivé depuis le commencement du Regne du Roy present: Et que pour ce mieux effectuer, on enverroit par deça des Deputez. Suivant quoy, nous presumons que les Ambassadeurs fassent ou deussent estre authorisez pour ce faire. Et comme ainsy soit, que l'on ne puisse nier, que pour bien composer les Affaires, & pour continuer le Commerce entre les deux Royaumes, il soit necessaire d'accorder ceste abolition là; nous esperons, que s'ilz ne sont desia pourvus de Commission suffisante pour cest effect, ilz useront de toute diligence pour avoir plus ample pouvoir du Roy: Et que Monsieur de Boiffie ne partira pas que le Traicté n'ait reçu pleine conclusion sur ce point là.

Art. 2.

Quand au second Article, il semble raisonnable qu'il soit absolument accordé sans aucune telle restriction d'ordinaire ou extraordinaire; parce qu'autrement, l'Estat des pauvres Marchants sera aussy incertain & dangereux, comme il est à present.

Art. 3.

Pour le troisieme, s'il y a bonne intention de venir à reiglement & accord sur ce fait des Taxes & Impositions, dont les Subjects de sa Majesté ont grande occasion de se plaindre, il n'y peut avoir du temps & de personnes plus propre à cest effect que sont les Ambassadeurs maintenant Authorisés, & le present Traicté: Et pour la forme que l'on aura à tenir en ce Reiglement là, on s'en doit rapporter aux Traictés cy devant faicts entre les deux Couronnes.

Art. 4.

Touchant le quatriesme, il est manifeste que ledit Arrest donné contré nos Draps, est en plusieurs poincts par trop extreme & rigoureux: Et pour les raisons que l'on alleguoit en ce fait là, on y a maintenant pourveu par Acte du dernier Parlement. Et ne peuvent nos Marchants estre aucunement en feureté, jusques à ce qu'il soit entièrement revoque. Ce qu'ayant par cy devant esté

An. 1601. esté promis à Monsieur Edmonds, devoir estre long temps a effectué, on trouve estrange que cela ait encores maintenant besoing de Nouvelle Solicitation. Et de le laisser en suspension, cela ne peut estre sans danger, parce qu'il ne laisse pas de pouvoir estre Executer à la premiere occasion.

Art. 5.

Pour le cinquiesme, veu les molestes que les Subjects de sa Majesté traffiquans en France recoivent souvent, par la rigueur de ladite Loy d'Aubaine; & considéré aussy, que les Subjects du Roy ne subissent rien, de tel icy; C'est chose juste & conforme à l'amitié qui est entre les deux Couronnes, que cela nous soit maintenant accordé, comme il est à plusieurs autres des Amis & Alliez de la France, sans nous renvoyer à l'interpretation du Traicté de Blois, n'y d'aucun autre.

Art. 6.

*Quant au sixieme, nous acceptons la Responce qui y est faicte; & requerons, que cela puisse estre effectué le plustot que faire se pourra; à Cause del Interest des parties, qui ont maintenant proces en France.
Et quant à la derniere reservation desdits Ambassadeurs, les Commissaires se reservent aussy pareille liberté; desirans cependant, que lesdits Ambassadeurs vueillent premierement par leurs determinations & Conclusions en ce Traicté, donner ordre à ces propositions, qu'ilz leur ont presentées, sur lesquelles les Subjects de sa Majesté se plaignent grandement; afin de mieux entretenir l'Amitié & le Commerce entre les deux Royaumes.*

Propositiones ultimo loco inter Dominos Commissarios hinc inde Agitatae.

Art. 1.

Et si dicti Admirallus, Viceadmirallus, seu eorum loca tenentes, nullos, vel minus idoneos fidejussores acceperint, culpa eorum interveniente, de Injuriis ipsi respondere teneantur.

Art. 3.

Nihilominus nulli subditorum utriusque principis, sub pœnis supradictis, ulla Armorum terrestrium sive maritimarum genera, ubicunque fabricatorum, præter ea quæ ad necessariam navium defensionem sufficient, ad hostes alterutrius principis transvehent seu transportabunt: Nec alterutrius principis subditi libertate Commærcii, in præjudicium alterutrius Principis, quovismodo abutentur.

Art. 8.

Justissimum est, quod si qui tam immanes ac barbari reperiantur, qui omni humanitate spretâ, adeo in subditos alterutrius principis sævierint, ut eos in mari navigantes interfecerint, vel submerferint, vel hostibus vendiderint, gravissimis pœnis juxta demerita plectentur.

Mr. Winwood,

14 March 1601.

HAVING informed you in my other Letters, of all those particularers which do concern the Causes of Depredation, which are handled here by the Commissioners, I think it good also to let you know, what hath passed between this French Ambassador and me, concerning the State of the Affairs in Flanders. I have told him, that in respect of some things which I have heard to have passed between you, and some Councillers of that Estate, by way of Discourse, (who being informed by you of her Majesty's purpose, to do something upon the Coasts of Spain, seemed in no sort to approve that so well, as some other mayne Actions in Flanders) it is our Desire to fall into Consideration, what is probable that each Prince may be brought unto; for otherwise it is in vain to speak of things in Generaltys, secundum Optata, when in the particular, there is no such Correspondency of Desire or Action, as may bring forth any profitable Consequence to the Place in danger. For whilst the King doth still wish, that something might be done, and that it must be a common Action, and a great Deseing, and that wee can never understand rightly, what the King will put in Execution, when it shall come to the upshott; there ryseth no fruit of such Discourses. In which Consideration I used this Liberty unto him; to let him know, that when I consider what the King may contribute to all such Actions, I found that it must needs fall within one of these three heads, either by an Army to be compounded between him, the Queen, and the States, and so to declare himself; or els to yeald Support of Mony; or to dispose himself to all frendly Offices; as in Connivence at this Subject's taking the States Paye, or in fashioning his Proceedings at home and abroad, so as to interrupte or retarde those things which they practice or prepare, for the Advancement of their own Deseings. For the first I told him, that for my own part I dream'd not of it, for we found by former Experience, when it came to any such Periode, then the King flew from it absolutely, and seem'd rather to object, that it was a Course only propounded by us; to draw him to break his Peace, so as thereof I tould him, it was needeles to dispute. For the second, I thought it a thing most easy for him to do, most reasonable, and that whereunto none need to be privy, or if they were, there were many Pretexts to cover any such Proceeding. Whereof you may take occasion (by the way) to lett fall, how little hope we have to receive any good Satisfaction: First because when there was such a thing on foot, and that the King had spoken in the highest Style, yet when it came to particularity, he offered a Pay for two or three Months, of such Troops as wee should send; when of all Charges, that is accompted the least, for Pay to Troops issues with tyme; but that which lyeth heavyest upon is here, is the first Levy, which cost more for every headd, then fower Moneths paye, before he passe the Seas: So as in that point, it shall not be amifs for you, to prevente any barren offer. You shall also let him know, how short his last Payment of Fifty Thousand Crowns doth come, ether in her Majesty's Expectation, or of the Condition of his Promises; being so much the less valuable also, because her Majesty sayeth, that she receaveth as yet no Certainty in the World, ether when the next Payment shall beginn, or what it shall be. I pray you therefore, lett him know that so much is observed, and pres that point, as that which induceth the Queen, rather to approve this first mean Payment. And for that Summe, you shall understand that her Majesty has commanded me, to speak to the Ambassador, that it may be ether made over by Exchange, or els brought over in Quart d'Escus; which if it be, her Majesty will send to Deipe or Calais for it. For the last Point likewise, I went thus farr with him, that I was thus perswaded, that if the King listed, he might very easily (tanquam aliud Agens) hinder the coming down of the new Supplies thorough Bresse, of which great good might follow. For yf her Majesty should enable

An. 1601. enable the States to putt any Army into the Field, which might be doing before June, (before which tyme they will not be ready to pass the Mountaynes,) there might be some good Desseing executed, considering the State of Enemy as it is for the present. Thus have you all that passed here, only I think good to advertise you, that one Furtado, putting himself into a Acquaintance with the Spanish Ambassador in France, pretendeth, that there is styll desire on the other fyde to renew the Treaty, whereof I thought it not amiss, in generall termes, to lett so much fall to the Ambassador how wee were now nouvellement recherchez; though I dyd no way name the Man, nor the Manner, nether shall you need to doe it. You may do very well to use this Language, yf they shall say, that we take not hold of their Propositions, or follow not opportunitys; that whosoever speaks, she acteth and acteth alone: For notwithstanding her own Warr defensive, her Fleet which now goeth to Sea with the first Wind, and shall be again seconded with another Fleet, to be able to lyve out till Winter, being added to the Charge she hath been at in the Low Countries since Ostende was besieged, hath and must cost her above 300000 Crownes: So as her Majesty wasteth not only in Royall Defences of her own Kingdomes, but spendeth her Treasure and People in Actions of Undertaking, and in so long a Proportion, as no body need to doubt (yf others would engage themselves a bon escient for any thing) but she would be ready to conjoine Royally. I think it also not amiss, to give you one Caution; (least happily they shall think to confound her Payments to come, by offering some Proportion of Mony, which now they will pretend that they will contribute) that you do of your selfe make them sensible, that her Majesty expects a Separation of that which they have resolved in Payment of her Debt, and that which they will do now to this common Interest, which toucheth him as near as her. And thus I commit you to God's Protection.

From the Court

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

Of the same Date.

SINCE the Writing of my other Letter, we have so farr forth yeilded to quallifye certaine of our Demands, (to fatisfie the importunities of Monsieur de Boisfisse that preffeth to be gonne) as wee are content to referre the ordering of the Matters of the Impositions and Taxes to some other tyme, to be handled by other Ministers, to be specially instructed therein: And that in the mean tyme, there be Declarations or Tables delivered of both sides, of the Dutyes and Impositions which the Subjects are to paie in ether Kingdom; that our Merchants may only satisfye the avowed Rates by the King, and not be subject to other Burdens and Charges, which the particuler Towns at their Pleasure impose on them. The other Point is concerning the Matter of the Aubena, wherein the Ambassadors desire to be excused, from expresse byndeing themselves that the King shall grante the same, both because they have no sufficient Power from the King for that extraordinary Matter, as also, for that they should offend in good manners, and due respect, to tye him by Stipulation to that, which is to be mediated as a Curtesie: But they do seriously protest and promise, that they will employ themselves to their uttermost to the King for the effecting thereof; and they give good hope, that they shall obtain the same. In all the other points they have undertaken to procure us direct Satisfaction from the King, the which performed, wee have yeilded that we will then conclude and perfect with them our private Treatie. Concerning these Matters of Depredation, wee have entered into the Examination of the particuler Complaints of our Side, and do fynde

fynde it to be a common Unhappines with them, that they are able to give us An. 1601. verie little Satisfaction touching former Diforders. And fo I committ you to God.

Richmond.

Your loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable;

Paris, 17th March 1601. O. S.

I shall be able at this time only to advertize your Honor of the ordinary Occurrences of this place. Yt is some Daies since the News came, of the Death of the Duke of Merceur; who in his retorne from Prague fell sick at Nuremberg, and died (as yt is reported) of the Plague the 19th of the last Month. His Body is brought into Lorraine, and is to be buried at Nancy. Upon Saturday last Monfieur Schamberg, Ambaffador from the Emperour, arrived to this Towne. He is lodged by the King, but not defrayed, only he hath bin presented with some Provisions for his Table. He is much agreed, that he was not accompanied into the Towne by the Ambassadors of other Princes, (only the Count de Saulmes went forth to meet him,) but complaineth especially of the unduetifull respect of Ayala, the Agent for the Archduke; the good of whose Affaires (as he saith) his Ambassage doth particularly concerne; to whom he is to goe, so soone as from hence he shall be dispatched. Unless I shall receive from your Honor contrary Commaundment, I have no pourpose to visit him; for in a matter of doubtfull Dispute, peccatum omissionis, I presume will be most pardonable. Yesterday he received his first Audience. Whilst he was with the King at the Louvre, (his whole Train attending him there,) the Doors of his Lodging, which is al Hostel de Madame, were broken open, his Coffers ryfled, and in Money taken away, to the Somme of 3000 Dollars.

Monfieur de Buzenval doth presently returne into the Low-Countries. In his Letters of Credence to the States, the King doth write, that he doth retorne only for the dispatche of his owne private Affaires, and that they must not think strange his departure from them, and return into France. Which is to no other end; but either because that the King hath passed his Promise to the Pope's Nuncio, and the Ambaffador of Spaine, for his retorne only in that Forme; or that upon Complaynt of his retorne and abroad there, this Reason may be alleaged; and for Satisfaction, yf need be, the Letter it selfe may be produced. In the mean tyme the States have received their first Paiement, viz. 100000 Crowns; and attend the second of the same Somme in May, the last in September: And besides, the King doth accord them a Levee of 2000 Men, which will be ready to passe the next Moneth. Monfieur de Buzenval hath in charge, yf perchancie Baronio the Italian (of whom I advertized your Honor in November last) should passe that waye, to sollicit the States to apprehend him and retain him, untill they should understand more from the King; * who is of opinion; that he was aposted with those Instructions, by the Duke of Savoye, to fowe Jealousies and Suspitions in the Minds of his Subjects; therby to alienate them from their dutifull Allegiance, which they do owe unto him. Yf he shall come into England, your Honor may be pleased to have an Eye unto him, for there are many Presumptions that he is an Impostor; though the matters which here he delivered, do carry with them great appearance of Probability, and have wrought a strange Opinion in the Minds of the most judicious in this Court. And yf his coming be a Practize, there was an yll Choise of his Person, for he is known to many to be of a dissolute and lewd Conversation, and often to have changed the Profession of his Relligion. His Name is Brochard Boron, born in Chiauvenne, a Towne of the Grisons.

* Vide Cardinal d'Offai's Letters; Vol. 5. pag. 142, 143.

An. 1601. There hath been good Justice done at Saumur for the intended Assassinat of Monsieur de Plessis. The principall was first strangled, then his Body burned, and his Head affixed upon the place, where the Murder should have bin executed: The Complices were publickly whipped, and the one banished, the other sent to the Gallies. I understand the King hath a desire to recall Monsieur de Plessis to the Court and to his Service, but wold have it proceed from his Suit and Petition. Monsieur de Rhosny hath undertaken to mediate the matter, and hath sent a Gentleman expressly for that purpose, to Saumur to him. That Isaac Paris, who was suspected to hold Intelligence with the Duke Espernon for the Surprize of Rochelle, hath endured the Torture ordinary and extraordinary, but hath confessed nothing; and nothing being proved agaynst him, upon Caution, is restored to his Liberty. This Weeke past the Allarum was so hot and generall, that the Warre should be declared agaynst Spaine, that the King at his Arrival to this Towne from *St. Germain*s did send unto the Ambassador of Spaine, to assure him that this was a fond and frivolous Bruit, raised without appearance of Subject; and that for his part, as he was willing first to make the Peace, so he will be found ever carefull to conserve it really and sincerely. Notwithstanding, upon the Advertisements of the Preparations of Spaine, Monsieur de Guise hath Commaundment to return to his Government of Provence; and Order is given, that twenty two Companies shall be sent downe, to reinforce the Garrisons of those parts.

Since the beginning of Lent, certaine base Comedians have publickly plaid in this Towne the Tragedy of the late Queen of Scottes. The King being then at Vernueil, I had no other recourse but to the Chancellor; who upon my Complaint was very sensible of that so lewde an Indiscretion, and in my hearing gave an especiall Charge to the Lieutenant Civill, (to whose Duty the Provisions for such Disorder doth appertaine,) to have care, both that this Folly should be punished, and that the like hereafter should not be committed. Since, Monsieur de Villeroy (upon the Notice which I gave him) doth promise that he will give order both for the Punishment of that which is past, and for future Remedy. Here have bin certaine Brouilleries between this Queen and the Marquise: Whereupon Madam and Madamoiselle de Guise, whom the King doth suspect to be affectionate to the Queen, rather upon Faction then good Devotion, and to exasperate her against the Marquise, with whom hitherto she hath bin content to live en bon mesnage, are by his Commaundment (as some say) removed from the Court. The Prince Joyntville was lately in this Towne, wherewith some of his Freinds did acquaint the King; upon hope, that though he would not expressly recall him to the Court, yet by Connivance he would have suffered his Returne: But the King gave them to understand, that though he had the Boldness of his late Father, (who came to Paris at the Barracades, contrary to the Commaundment of the last King,) yet he should not meet with the like want of Courage in him, not to dare to punish so disobedient a Contempt. Which Answer made him presently to retire. Since, the Count of Auvergne hath challenged him to fight, but they have not met: Against whom, one Combelle a Gentleman of some Quality, hath discovered many pernicious Practizes, which now he doth handle with the Duke of Savoie. These daily Practizes of this Count, do minister Subject of Discourse to the Mouthes of all Men, of the Incertitude of this State, sith he doth continue yet with confidence, with too careles a respect, (yf in fear then in great Misery,) to committ the Safety of his Person, (whereon the Surety of this Repose doth depend,) to the Embracements of the Sister of this Man, who is known to have a Spirit fashioned only ad sinistrum; both capable to undertake, and resolute to put in Execution, what Mischiefe most may be feared.

Monsieur de Rhosny the Weeke past was received Conseillier of the Court of Parlement. Yt is a Dignity not ordinarily conferred upon Men of the Sword, unless they are Prynces of the Blood, or Paires of the Realme: Yet Monsieur le Grand did receive the same Honnor in the last King's Tyme. This doth make the

the way to Monsieur de Rhosny to be Duc and Paire of France; who to avoid Envy, will not mount up per saltum to the highest Degree of Honor. The Duke of Nevers parted from hence many Dayes since towards England; but purposed to staie by the waie at St. Valleries, untill his Company should be assembled at Calais. The Vidame of Chartres (who promised to be his best Pilot) is fallen sicke in this Towne, and keepe his Bed; but whether the Sicknes be real or dissembled by him, for a Pretext to disengage himselfe from a Journey, which for many Reasons he was unwilling to undertake, may be disputed. The Voiage of Blois is deferred untill the Weeke after Easter. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

An. 1602.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 28th March 1602. O. S.

UPON the Receipt of your Honor's Letters, (which came to my hands the beginning of the Weeke, which here is called la semayne peneuse;) I repayed in dilligence to Fountainbleau; whether the Day before, a Dispatch from the French Ambassador of the same Subject, had brought Monsieur de Villeroy. I sollicited him to be a meanes for my Accesse to the King, though, I said, I knew that tyme to be unseasonable, being wholly appropriated to their Devotions; yet the desire of Monsieur de Boisfisse to be disengaged and set at liberty for his retorne, did make me with more Boldness importune him. The King gave me Accesse upon Thursday. To whom I said, "That by the Dispatch he had received from his Ambassador, he did well understand all that hath passed, and now is concluded, in the Conference between them and her Majesty's Commissioners; wherein Order is taken, that the just Complaints of his Subjects shall be satisfied, and a Reiglement established, to prevent all future Abuses in that kind, in the same prescribed Termes as they themselves have conceived and proposed. Wherby doth appeare the affectionat Desire her Majesty hath to give him Contentment, and the Assurance which she doth repose in his Amitie and Alliance; having as it were in part abandoned the Care of the Safety of her State, in restraining her own Subjects to such rigorous Conditions, and cast it upon his Love to her, and the Affection of his Subjects; tying them to no other Bonds, then to the Bonds of Gratitude, and that common Honesty, which the Law of Nature and Nations doth require. I said there now rested nothing for the Entertainment of a compleat Amitie, but that he wold be pleased to enter into a reciprocall Consideration of those manifold and extraordinary Impositions, wherewith her Majesty's Subjects trading within this Realme, are greivously furcharged, not only against the Intendment of the Treaties both ancient and modern, but contrary to his Privity and good Pleasure, at the Appetite of every annuall Officier, who doth govern in those Towns where they trade; and so shewed to what Insolencies of the Fermiers of Customs, not only our Marchants, but every particular of our Nation passing through his Realme, are dayly exposed. I remonstrated, that there was no one Abuse whereby the Amitie of the two Crowns was more wronged, then by the Pretext of the Droit d'Aubeine; under collour whereof, upon the Decease of any Englishe Marchant, the Books of Accounts of the deceased are searched, and often embezeled; his Chambers, Coffers, and Counting-houses ryled; and by reason of the Intercourse of Commerce which is betwene Marchants of the same Trade, Fellows, and Copartners, the Goods of the Survivors are often seized and sequestred, and either are to be quitted, or with Charge redeemed. Upon these Remonstrances made to her Majesty, by the humble Petition of her Marchants, I said, she could not but take notice of their so just

" Greifes,

An. 1602. " Greifes, and in their behalf make instance; that he wold be pleased to remit this Royaltie; which though it were but a small, yet wold be esteemed an acceptable Favour. His Coffers did not receive therby (by the relation of his Financiers) 200 Crowns a Yeaere through his whole Realme; and what should by this Privelege be wanting in his Coffers, wold be tripled in his Customs: For by reason of the abovenamed Insolencies, our Men trading within his Realme, did rather deserve the Name of Pedlers then Marchants, they being only Factors, Prentices, and Servants, lodged in Chambres Garnies, who bring no more Marchandises with them but what they know will have present vent. Whereas yf they were delivered from this Servitude, the Masters themselves wold com, and bring with them their Families; and habituat themselves in his Towns. I concluded, that this Privelege was demaunded with the more Confidence, because sence his coming to the Crowne, it had bin granted to the Marchants of the United Provinces, whose Deserts, yf the Deserts of our Nation did not equall, yt was for want of Power, not of Duty.

The King's Answer was to this effect: " That by the Dispatch which he had received from his Ambassadors, he had received that Contentment which he ever promised to himself: For though at the first some Difficultie was made to yeald to those Articles, which by his Instructions his Ambassadors did propose; yet considering the Necessity which they did import for the Conservation of good Amitie, he was assured the Queene wold not refuse to condescend unto them. He did desire no more, then that his Subjects might trade peaceably and securely, without fear of those Dangers, wherewith they have bin heretofore infested; which should no waies encourage them by coullerable Pretexts; to favour the Desseigns of the Spaniards, whom no Man did more hate then he, and whose Ruin he did foresee. For the Moderation of Impositions, he said, that if the Complaints of our Marchants were just, the French had no less reason to complaine; and therefore he thought it reasonable, to the end that the Subjects might in their particular taste of the Fruit of this Amitie, that a Conference might be held; both to mitigate the present Grievances, and to prescribe a Reiglement generallie to be received and observed. Of the Droit d'Aubeine he acknowledgeth the Commodity to be small, for he bestowed it upon his Servants, and commonly upon the fyrst that did demaund it. He did not remember, that he had given a generall Remission thereof to any Nation, but only to the Scotch, who did challenge it by Right of Prescription. But when I assured him that the Hollanders did enjoy the same Priveledge, he said; he wold advise of it; and not be found difficult to a Nation, whose Deserts he did hold in a gratefull Remembrance.

Thus far I proceeded in the Morning, when the Bishop of Challons did call the King to the Ceremonies of washing the Feet of the poor Children. In the Afternoon the Emperor's Ambassador had Audience, and took his leave. " Who being dismissed, the King called for me, and then I entred into Discourse of the Fleet which now her Majestie doth send to Sea; which I said was the first part, and was to be seconded by another not inferior to it. And that notwithstanding this present Expence, and those former both in Ireland and at Ostend, wherby he might easily imagine her Treasure to be exhausted even to the bottom; yet she wold not be wanting to joyn with him in any heroical Action, either for the Advancement of the publick Good, or to the Damage of the common Enemy. This wold be wished, that either Overtures might not be proposed, or if proposed, might be followed; for when they turne but to Discourse, they leave behind them an Impression either of Distrust or Neglect. I added, that he had understood by his Ambassador, that her Majestie was invited to a new Treaty with Spaine, which she thought good confident-ly to communicat to him; not meaning in a matter of so great Importance, to resolve without his Counsaile and Advise, much lesse without his Privity and Knowledge.

“ To this he answered, that he was glad the Fleet was departed, for he hoped it would arrive to the Coast of Spaine, in time to meet with the Indian Fleet, which yet was not returned, but daily attended. His Desire was to joyne his Resolution with her Majesties. Yf she will make her Peace, he will likewise strengthen his Alliance with Spaine: Yf proceed to Warre, he will accordingly conform his Affaires. This, he said, is an Artifice of Spaine, to disunite the State of their Affaires thereby to disunite their Forces and Affections; and therefore Spaine did make Peace with him, though upon unequal termes, hoping before this tyme, to have had of England a better Bargaine then yet he hath found. He then spake of the Forces of Italie, which do begin to march the 15th of April, consisting of 6000 Italians and 2000 Spaniards. Whereupon I moved him to hinder their Passage but only for 10 or 15 Dayes; but he answered, there was no meanes. Lastly, I solicited, that since her Majestic had staid so long time for the 50000 Crowns, that he would give Order that the 100000 Crowns might be sent at the same time to Diepe; which would save both charge and labour. Which Somme, though it were small, yet she doth accept it with more Contentment; upon assurance, that the next Year she should receive a much larger Remboursement. He answered, that upon Tuesday he looked for Monsieur de Rhosny, and then he would resolve with him of all these Points, whereof I should receive from Monsieur de Villeroy a particular Answer”; and so he dismissed me.

Since, I have acquainted Monsieur de Villeroy with all that passed in this Audience. Who said, “ that before he had conferred with the Counsaile, he would returne no Answer to their Ambassadors Letters: And touching the Conference which your Honor hath had with Monsieur de Beaumont, the King would speedily resolve; whose Answer I should receive from him, the end of this Weeke”. Hereupon I returned to Paris to speake with Monsieur de Rhosny, before he should be gon to keepe his Easter at his House in the Countrey. “ He utterly condemneth the couching the Articles in conjunctive Termes, which he would have conceived in Termes disjunctive, viz. Quod nec capiant, nec sistant, nec de via divertant, nec spolient, &c. But being copulative, their Ships are subject to be staid and visited; which (he saith) the King in Honor may not endure”. But he remitted me untill my returne to Fountainebleau, both for that Point, and the Remboursement of the Mony; which he would be content might be by Exchange, yf the Charge were not too great; which will not be lesse (if Exchange may be found,) then 1000 Crowns. The King (yf he change not his purpose) doth set forward to Blois upon Monday next, and hath advertized all the Ambassadors to attend him thither. He doth not intend to make there any long stay, but to returne about the end of Maye; and as the States shall advance their Affaires, so he will make his Approaches to the Parts of Picardie, as farr as Callais. And that the Archduke shall not take offence, the Queen will accompany him in this Voiage. She is reputed to be with Child; and the Marquise doth marche with her, passibus æquis.

Roderigo de Lajco passed by this Way upon Wednesday from Spaine; and hath brought orders, for present Paiement of 1500000 Crowns. Since, the Prince of Orenge is come to this Towne from thence, and is gon this day to visit the King. Here are Advertisements out of Italie, of a Deseign that the Spaniards have upon the Isle of Wight, (which Monsieur de Villeroy hath confirmed to me,) and from Genoa it is written, that Frederico Spinola hath some hope with his Galleys to possess himself of some Port in England. Baptista Taxis the Spanish Ambassador is recalled; and the Ambassador of Spaine in Savoy doth succeed in his place.

Sir Thomas Parry shall receive from me all those Offices which my duty to her Majestic's Service, and my respect to him do commaund. I have solicited for his Passeports which shall presently be dispatched; and that for the Exemption of the Imposts of Wine, Monsieur de Villeroy doth warrant shall passe here

An. 1602. without further Dispute. I have used the Boldness to recommend unto your Honor a Florentine Gentleman named Pietro Guiccardini, who is now on the Way towards England, with Recommendations to her Majesty from the King. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 1 April, 1602. O. S.

I Am intreated by the Secretary of the Grand Duke who resideth in this Court, to recommend to your Honor's Favour, an honorable Gentleman called Pietro Guiccardini; who after much time which he hath bestowed in Spain, (where his Brother now doth remain Ambassador for the Duke,) and since in this Court, being recalled to the Service of his Prince, before his Return, doth much desire to have the Happiness to present his humble and devoted Service to her Majesty: For which purpose it hath pleased this King by especiall Lettèrs, to recommend him to her gracious Protection. Tho' in respect of those long and mutuall Courtesies which do dayly pass between the said Secretary and me, I could not refuse him in so reasonable a Demand, yet those noble Virtues of Learning, Wisdom, and judicious Experience, wherewith this Gentleman by his Study and Travells at home and abroad, hath furnished his Mind, did most prevail with me. As these will have much power to move your Honor (from the Respect you bear to the Advancement of Virtue, in what Subject soever it shall be found) to embrace him with Honor, Love, and kind Affection; so they must reciprocally bind him in Uprightness of his Judgement, to make a true Estimate of those favours which you shall be pleased to impart unto him; and not only with thankfulness to receive them, but to retain them engraved in a perpetuall Remembrance of Gratitude and Devotion. I will not presume further to enlarge my self; the touch of your Honor's Judgment will soon discover of what Allay his Worth is. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

According to that Appointment which in my last I signified unto your Honor, I returned to Fontainebleau, to receive Answer of those Points, which in my last Audience I had negotiated with the King: Where after Attendance of seven Dayes, and all convenient Sollicitation which might not seeme importunat, I received this Answer from Monsieur de Villeroy; " That the King was now resolved that Monsieur de Beaumont should deliver the Answer, concerning that Conference which your Honor had with him. I then asked, what Resolution the King had taken for the Adresse of the 50000 Crowns. Of that, he said he had not yet spoken with Monsieur de Rhosny. Whereupon I replied, that the first and more important Matter was of that quality, that not to resolve thereof, was to resolve, and no Answer, was an Answer sufficient. But for the latter, it wold seeme strange (though in truth for the Merit, the Somme being so small, it doth not deserve much Consideration,) that yt should not be remembred, being recommended particularly by their Ambassador; and I having informed him, that Monsieur de Rhosny (to whom the King did renvoy me,) had returned me to him; saying, that it was his Charge only to give

" Order

“ Order that the Money should be paid, when he had received a Mandement An. 1602.
 “ signed from him, how and in what manner the Paiement should be made. But he excused himself upon Monsieur de Rhosny, and more could not say, till he should speake with him. The next Morning, which was Wednesday last, when the Court removed, and the King and Queene departed from thence towards Blois, I went to take my leave of him, and to pray to be excused from Attendance for four or five Dayes, because I was to retorne to Paris, for some Services for her Majestie's Ambassador. Then he said, “ that the Daie before yt
 “ was determined by the Counsaile, that the 50000 Crowns should be made over
 “ by Exchange, yf there were means; yf not then yt should be sent to Diepe,
 “ and be delivered to those whom her Majesty should authorize to receive it. There Desire is to make it over by Exchange, that the Mony should not go forth of the Land; but because the Exchange is high, and not easie to find a Marchant that will charge his Freind with the Paiement of so great a Somme, it wold be most convenient, that the Mony might be rendred at Diepe, in such time as the Ship that shall bring over Sir Thomas Parry (yf he take that way) may retorn, charged with that freight.

I have joyned with our Marchants (at their Instance,) in two Requests presented to the Chambre Royal; wherein are remonstrated the Violence which our Marchants do suffer, by that Licencie which the Officers of Roüen and Caën do assume, to impose upon them new Daces and Imposts, contrary to the Treaties between the two Crowns, and the good Pleasure of the King. The Commis-faires of the Chamber have taken Cognoissance of the Cause, and have given forth Commissions for the Examination of the Truth thereof; but because by those Memoires which I received lately from your Honor, I perceive that there is a purpose that a Conference shall be held, for the Reiglement of these Abuses, (which in these Parts are grown insupportable,) I will retayn the Commissions in my Hands, without proceeding farther, till I shall be advised by your Honor.

I fynd Monsieur de Rhosny and Villeroy much altered from that Language which they held with me in the beginning of Lent. Not that I take them altered in Judgment and Opinion, but that the Practizes and Discontents of the greatest Personages in this Realme (which do threaten without speedy Prevention, some Alteration in the State at home,) will not give them leave to attend the undertaking of any forreign Enterprize. Yt is here reported, that Bourg in Bresse, hath failled to be surprized, and doubted not, with the Consent and Privity of Marechal Biron; in whose Name, Monsieur de la Fin (Brother to Beauvoir la Noche, late Ambassador in England) is said to have treated with Count Fuentes and the Duke of Savoy, whose second Daughter the Duke doth seeke in Marriage. The Pretence of this League, (whereof in some of my former I have advertized) is founded upon these Poynts, viz. For the generall Reformation of the State, the Abolition of Imposts, and the Correction of the Life of the King. * De la Fin hath bin this Easter at Fontainebleau, whether he came upon the Faith of the King; but he hath his Name according to his Nature, for he is trop fin to discover much. He advoweth his being with the Duke of Savoy, whom he acknowledgeth for his best Patron and Benefactor; and doth justify his Carriage and Demeanour there, sith the King doth neglect his truest Servants, in whose Service he and his Familie are wholly ruinated. He doth not deny that he hath not mediated the Marriage aforesaid; which is so farre approved by Savoy, that yt rests only in the Mareschal to bring it to effect. The King stands in great Perplexity; not to take notice of this is to embolden all others, and to expose himselfe to Scorne and Contempt. And to call any one in question, were to cause the Flame to breake forth, which he doth hope Silence will suppress, and Suffrance with time will extinguish.

When the Ambassador of Wirtemberg delivered me these Letters to her Majesty and your Honor which herewith I send, he let fall, but in careless and

I answered, that yf he wold remember the Troubles of the last Year within the Land; then the Rebellion in Ireland, supported by forrain Power, his Master might find many Reasons whereunto might justly be attributed this Delay, without Imputation of Neglect. And that her Majestie having never forgotten her Freinds, in any reall Office of Amicie; doth hope she may be excused, yf upon so just Reasons, she shall forbear to satisfie all Compliments of Ceremony in their duest Season. And so, &c.

I Have often sollicitated Colvell to discover, yf during his Abode in Flanders; he knew any now in England which are Pensionaries to the Enemy; or any other that holdeth Intelligence with him. Now this last Weeke falling into the same Discourse, he named unto me one William Sterville, who, as he saith, for many Yeares hath had Correspondence, first with Thomas Fitzherbert, and since with Owen, and Sherwood a Preist, and doth receive a Pension by their meanes. I heretofore have known one of that Name; some time of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford, and since belonging to the Earle of Worcester; but whether he be the same Man I dare not affirm. Herewith I send your Honor many of his Letters, though signed with a contrary Name; and the Ciffres and Address of Sherwood, with an Acquittance of Money received; all which the Party above-named delivered to me yesterday in the Afternoone. I have thought it convenient to advertize this apart from my ordinary Dispatch. And so, &c.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 14th Apr. 1602. O. S.

UPON Tuesday, being ready to depart out of this Towne towards Bloys, I received Advertisement, that in the Night before the Constable received Letters from the King, wherein he wrote, that he is advertized from all Places, that these Preparatifs for War, which are in hand both in Italy and Spaine, are only desseigned against him; and particularly, that the King of Spaine will assaile the Frontiers of Provence, with 88 Gallies and 22000 Men; and that the Duke of Savoie doth send his three eldest Sons into Spaine to remayne there as Hostages, for assurance, that he shall at no tyme make his Peace with France for his own privat Advantage, to the Prejudice of the common League between them. Hereupon the Constable hath commaunded Monsieur de Guise in the King's Name, to hasten down with all speed to his Gouvernement of Provence, who this Day doth take post thither. Upon this Advertisement, I went presently to * Antonio

* He had been many Years Secretary of State to Philip the Second, to which Place he was every way equall. The Spanish Historians pretend many Reasons for his Disgrace; but the true one was his too great Familiarity with the Princesse of Eboli. Monsieur Amelot (in his † Memoires Historiques, &c. very lately published) has collected many curious Particulars relating to this great Man, to which I refer the Reader; and shall only beg leave to add, that ‡ Mr. Cambden's Reflection seems to be a little too severe, since 'tis evident from this and other Passages, he was very much esteemed and frequently consulted, both by Sir Henry Neville and Mr. Winwood.

Perez,

Perez, with whom I ever have bin bold, in any thing wherein her Majestie's Service might have the least Interest. I told him what I had heard, and pray-ed him to let me know, whether I might advertize this for a Truth; being a mat-ter of that Importance, for the Service of both their Majesties. He assured me there is nothing more true, and confirmed all the abovenamed Particulars, with these Circumstances added. That the Advice doth come from the Grand Duc, and from Monsieur Lesdiguieres, who sent expressly Monsieur St. Julian, a Man of Quality, to the King. And that there is appearance herein, he said, that both Taxis and Ayala are to go away. The King in his Letter to the Constable, doth discover the great Perplexity wherein he is. Whereat no Man doth marvayle, considering the Jealousies and Deffiances amongst his Nobility, the Heaviness of those Impositions wherewith the meaner Subject is oppressed, and the gene-rall ill Treatment that the forreign Allies have received at his Hands.

I have received from the self same hand, that the Parties apprehended for the Practize against Bourg in Bresse, being brought to this Towne, have confessed, that they were practized only by Monsieur de Biron, and for the Service of the Duke of Savoy. Which yf yt be true, (for I would not presume to touch that String with Antonio Perez;) it is to be feared, that he will declare himselfe a Partizan of Spaine. I held yt necessary to advertize your Honor hereof with the greatest diligence, before my going to Bloys; where I purpose to arrive with the King the end of this Week, who is yet at Orleans. The Marschal de Retz is declared Gouvernor of that Place, though Monsieur d'Entragues doth chal-lenge it by Capitulation, being an Article between the King and his Daughter. But the King doth make Difficulty, unless he will deliver up the Promise which the King made in writing with his owne Hand, to marry his Daughter; which yet he hath refused, as the only Warrant to justifie his owne, and her Honor. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

Right Honorable,

Paris 19th Aprill 1602. O. S.

IT may please your Honor to remember, that some Yeares since, you was sollicited to assist with Instructions the Deseign of Monsieur Pasquier, the King's Advocat in the Chambre des Comptes; who then did undertake to write agaynst the Jesuites, and to decyfre to the World their audacious Practizes a-gaynst the Persons and States of Princes, and the lewd Impostors of that hypocritical Society. After many Difficulties, and Deffiances of the Counsaill, (tho' he himself be Catholick,) it is printed, tho' not published or authorized; and for that affectionate Devotion which he doth bare to her Majestie's Service and Safety, (which in other of his Works he hath manifested,) and because the Practizes of that Generation against her State, is the most notable part of the Subject of his Booke, he hath assumed this Liberty, upon the assurance of her Majestie's Grace even to the meanest of her devoted Servants, to present unto her one of the fyrst Copies that are come to his hands, with a Letter from himselfe; and hath in-treated me to recommend them unto your Honor, to whom he hath sent another Copie, and this Letter, which herewith I send. Your Honor may be pleased to let him understand by your Letters, with what gracious Acceptance her Majestie doth vouchsafe to receive the Affection of his Service; which will be as Nectar and Ambrosia to the good old Man's Spirits, who wanteth not much of 80 Yeares; and will confirm in their Devotion many in this place, who have selected (as the choicest Subject to recommend to all succeeding Ages) her glorious and happy Government.

An. 1602. Concerning the Subject of my last of the 14th of this Moneth, I have seene freshe Letters from Monsieur de Villeroy from Blois; which do confirme the principal Particulars of those Advyses which I received from Antonio Perez, especially the great Preparations both in Spaine and Italie, by Sea and Land. Wherein he writes, that he cannot yet give Judgment, how those Spanish Preparations shall be employed: For some Advertisements are, that they are only for Defence; others, that the Spaniards will renew their Enterprize of Ireland; but the most assured, which do come from the best Places, are, that they are intended agaynst France: Which, he saith, doth make the King stand upon his Guard, and provyde for his Frontiers. The King is at Blois, and now entering into a Diet. No Man yet is departed from hence, only the Pope's Nuncio is gon, to complayne of the Passage of the late Levies into Holland. * He is wholly Spanish, and (as Antonio Perez yesterday told me) doth hold, that this Peace betwene France and Spaine cannot long stand.

Now that I have procured my Lord Ambassador's Passports, and provided his House, (which doth only attend his Presence,) I do this Day set forward to Blois: From whence we understand not, whether the King will there make stay, or passe further; yet the Grand Conseil is assigned for Tours. Combelle (who hath bin a busy Negotiator with the Duke of Savoy) is this Weeke cast into the Bastile; and those Reports (especially of Mareschal Biron for the Marriage) do dayly multiply, and are confirmed.

Yesterday there came to me an Englishman called Moore, who doth acknowledge that he hath bin many Years out of England, and since, hath lived in Flanders. He saith, he hath long bin an humble and penitent Supplicant to her Majesty, for her gracious Pardon and Favour to retorne into his Countrey; which untill he may be so happy as to obtayne, his purpose is to lyve in a Realme, which doth hold Amity and Alliance with her Crowne.

This infamous Libell (which doth favour as much of Folly as of Madnes) which herewith your Honor doth receive, was yesterday delivered unto me by the Party to whom yt is addressed. He doth hold himself bound in his Reputation, to make answere unto yt. But because perhaps Silence wold be the best Answere, and that there are many things therein contained, which are not to be managed by the Pen of every Man; I have advised him to have patience, till your Honor shall be pleased to advise thereof. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Right Honorable,

Blois, 28th April 1602. O. S.

AT my Arrivall to this Towne, I found the Court in this State. The King was entred into his Diet, having before bin purged and let blood for the Gout, which is fallen into his right Foot. He now walketh abroad, yet the Weaknes of his Foot doth make him still complaine. As he passed down the River, he visited la Marquise at Bugancye, who presently after did follow him hither, and was lodged in the Chasteau: Which the Queen did take with so much Impatience, that during her aboad there, she kept her self retyred in her Chamber, eyther spending the whole Day in her Bed, in Tears and Lamentations, or yf she did ryse, yet wold she not be perswaded to put on other Robes, then those of her Chamber. She refused to open the Doore to the King when he knocked, who returned with this Answere, that she was impedita; and being invited by the

His Name was Maffeo Barberini, a Florentine. He was afterwards Nuncio in ordinary in France, and was advanced to the Pontificat in 1623.

King to the Comedy, whether he did conduct the Marquise, she refused to goe her selfe; and when the King did send for her, she made this Answer, That it was not decent that the Maids should go, whither the Mystris would not go. The Marquise is departed hence, and now she fynds her selfe in some better moode.

This League (which in many of my former I have mentioned) is now fabula vulgi. The King as he passed by Orleans, did acknowledge to Monsieur de Fouart, Governour of Gergeans, a Towne upon the River of Loyre, that these following were combyned against him with the Duke of Savoy, viz. the Constable, Monsieur de Monpensier, the Count d'Auvergne, the Duke d'Espernon, Marschal de Biron, and the Dukes of Bouillon and Tremouille. De Bouillon hath bin here, and so cunningly carried the matter, that he hath not only freed himself from all Imputations imposed upon him, but so farre is received into the King's good Graces, that he hath committed to his Charge (which he hath undertaken) the reconciling all those of the Relligion, which may have pretext of ill Satisfactions, namely la Tremouille and du Plessis; and for his paines, doth receive 4000 Crownes in contant, and 3000 of annuall Pension, couched upon the State of Navarre. The Duke doth well know the King's Disposition, that the best means to preserve his Credit and Estimation, is to keepe him in Feare and Jealousie. Nether doth the King ill understand him, who doth hold him fast with this Hooke. D'Espernon is here with his three Sours, and most Men think the tyme long till he be gon. Count d'Auvergne is at Paris, and so is the Constable, who doth make Procces agaynst Combelle, who hath bin employed in all these Practizes, and hath revealed the Secrets of those Actions; whereat the King is offended, yet hath not Courage to make knowen his Dislike. The Marschal Biron is the Man who most is feared; who hath most meanes to do most harme for his particular Person, wherof his former Valeur doth retain his Reputation; and for the Scituation of his Gouvernement of Borgogne, joyning unto the Franche Comté, and so near a Neighbour unto Savoy. The Enterprize of Bourg was not without his Privity; and since, there hath bin a Practise upon Narbone, though without Success. The King hath sent for him by three severall Messengers, the Baron de Luz, the Vidame of Chartres, and by de Curez Marschal of the Lodgings. If he comes he deceaves the World; yf not, yt behooveth the King in dilligence to hasten to him.

The Kyng came hether with purpose to establishe the Pancharte in those Parts, where yet yt is not received. But here is come the Farmer of that Imposition of Limoges, who doth complayne, that in that Towne he was assayed by the Commonalty with that Violence, (wherof he beares and shewes the Markes,) that yf the Officers of the Towne had not interposed themselves, he had not escaped with his Lyfe. Since, a Deputy is sent from that Towne; who doth declare, that the Resolution of that Towne and Countrey is, never to accept that Servitude. The Rochellers had Commaundment to send their Deputies hether; who by the King's Advise ment have bin perswaded, at least to make Semblance to accept the Pancharte, therby to draw on other Towns who make difficulty to undergo yt: But they wold not give ear, and soe are departed. So now yt is thought, the Kyng doth purpose to abolish from all Places this Imposition of the Pancharte: For the Refusal of one Province or Towne, is a Warrant sufficient for all others to follow that Example. Only there is wanting some honest Pretext, of this so gracious and extraordinary Gratification: For therefore to abolish yt because yt will not be payd, may prove of ill Consequence for all other Impositions, and will draw into Contempt the Souveraign Authority; which Executions of Justice, and Fear of Punishment only do support; especially with a Nation, which by Nature and Art, hath ever bin nourished in a lawless Liberty.

The Advertisements of the Spanishe Preparations do still hold good; and the King, for all Events, hath sent to Monsieur de Vic his Ambassador there, to give Orders for the Levy of 4000 Suisses, and hath pourpose to raise 4000 Foot and

An. 1602. 1500 Light Horſe, and will make Recruits of his Companies of Guards from

“ I have bin with Monsieur de Rhoſny, to know whether this 50000 Crowns “ ſhall be payd by Exchange or Specie: But he preſently made with me que- “ relle d'Allemande, for that I wrote unto your Honor, the Speeche he had “ with me in the beginning of Lent: Which he did, only to take an occaſion “ agayne to re-enter into the ſame Diſcourſe. At length he did reſolve to ſend
 “ the Mony to Diepe, and did accordingly give order to the Treſorier d'Ef- “ pargne. But when I ſollicited him, that he wold give particular Charge, that “ the Payment might be made in quart d'Eſcu; he answered, that yf I could “ fynd no other Reaſon but that, the Thyrd (according to the Ordonnance of “ France) muſt be payd in that Coin which here is called Dizims”. And when I remonſtrated to him the Unworthineſs of this Proceeding, both for the Honor of the King and the Reſpect to her Maieſty, yet he was ſo impracticable, that he wold not permit the Treſorier d'Espargne to accommodat this Difference; who was willing, and did offer to give Satisfaction. So the matter doth reſt till the King ſhall commaund, whom I pourpoſe preſently to move therein.

From hence the King doth goe on Satterday to Tours. Yt is uncertain whether he will paſs further, or how long he will ſtay there, yet he ſayeth that he will be at Paris by the end of May. And ſo, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Tours, 7th May 1602. O.S.

IN my laſt I advertized your Honor of the Indispoſition of the King; of the Diſcontents of the Queen, of the generall Acknowledgment of the Practizes of ſome of the cheife of the Nobility, of the ill Satisfaction of the meaner ſorte of the People, and laſtly, of the Opinion which here is conceaved of the Preparations of Spaine, and what Order is taken not altogether to be unprovided, upon any Attempt that may be pretended. The King for his Health is now well, but the Apprehenſion of theſe Practizes within the Bowells of his Realme, joynd with the Alienation of his Subjects Affections, have ſtruck in his Mind a deep Impreſſion of Melancholly and Diſcontent. La Marquiſe hath gaigned the upper hand, and doth carry away the Maſterie from the Queene, who vowed never more to ſee her; yet, ſhe being returned from Noſtredame d'Ardeliers, whether from Blois ſhe went in Devotion, here found the King, and now agayne (which ſince the beginning of Lent ſhe hath not had) hath free Acceſſe to the Queene.

Monsieur de Curez is returned from Mareſchal Biron, and with him came a Secretary of his, who is ſaid to be employed by him to the Count Fuentes. Yt is not denied that he hath bin in Italie, but for his owne particular Affaires; and at Milan, to buy Stuffs of that place for his Maſter. The Mareſchal in his Letters to the King, doth intreat he may be excuſed from coming untill the Af-ſembly of the States of Borgogne (which the 17th of this Moneth by their Account do meet) ſhall be diſſolved: From which, as he ſaith, it is not convenient for the Service of the King, that the Governour of the Province ſhould be ab-ſent. Then he doth proteſt to render himſelfe, and to juſtifie the Innocencie of his Loyalty and Service; and yf he may find that Favour to meet his Accuſers, he will make them mentir et mourir, (for thoſe are his Words,) before the King's Face. The King doth not content himſelfe with this Anſwere, nether hath reaſon to think that he hath pourpoſe to com; the rather, upon the Relation of de Curez, who is ſaid to report, that the Mareſchal hath made great amafs

amass of Victuals, Munition, and Powder in his best Places; and especially at Dijon, wher he now remaineth. Hereupon the President Jeannin (scarce twoe An. 1602. Dayes since returned from the Archduke) is sent thither; who being premier President of that Parliament, is thought to have sufficient Credit to contrequar the Power of the Mareschal, and to retaine in Ducty the People of that Province, yf any remuement shall be attempted. De Curez is likewise sent back, to hasten the Repair of the Mareschal. The more frivilous his Excuses are the more doubtfull is his good meaning, and the more suspectfull are all Delayes. The King's purpose is, yf he will present himselfe, with courteous Treatment and kynd Entertainement to regayne him, and with the greatest Favours that he can charge upon him, to assure him to his Service; and so farre will be from giving him any publick Disgrace, that he will not take more then a confused Knowledge of the general Bruits, which cannot be dissembled. The Practize of his Marriage with the Daughter of Savoy is avowed: And now it is said, that from the begineing, the Mareschal did acquaint the King therewith. Either that it is so indeed, or that they Desire yt so should be beleevd, thereby to save the King's Honor; who will have Patience to passe over with Silence so bold a Complot of a particular Subject.

The King from hence doth goe to Poitiers, whether the Counsaile is already gon. In the way he will visit his Aunt at Frontevreau (who is Abbess of that Place,) and the Duke of Montpensier at Champigni, where Messieurs de Bouillon and Tremouille do meet him. Of this Voiage to Poitiers; no apparent Reason is yealded, more then that it is hoped the Presence of the King and Counsaile, will reestablish the Devotion of that part, which this Year past was doubtfull and wavering: The rather, when he shall depart without urging the Imposition of Salte; which on this side the Loyre he did purpose to charge generally upon the Countrey, as beyond the Loyre long hath bin accustomed. He doth not purpose to staie there above six or eight Daies; As he shall understand from the Mareschal, so will he resolve of his time, and way of Retorne. Within one Moneth, he sayeth, he will be at Paris: Whereof, the Retorne of the Marquise to Vernueil, is a great Presumption.

The Marquis of Spinola doth march with his Troopes; which will not passe, or scarce arrive to 6000: For before he set forward his Souldiers did disband, and 400 did refuse to go, without Commaundment from the Seignorie of Genoa; who did leave them to their owne Discretion; whereupon the greater Part is returned back. Upon the Continuance of the Preparations of Spaine, the Levies here do daylie advance. The King himselfe doth acknowledge, that he is in doubt, whether he shall attend the Issue of the Deseigns of Spaine, or begin the Warre with him. And in this Irresolution he will ever remaine; partlie upon the Contrariety of the Humours of those of his Counsaile who govern his Affaires; partlie upon the Weaknes of his own Judgement, which never doth resolve in cold Blood, but in Furie and upon Impetuositie, as the Extremites of his Fortunes by force do carry him. He will submit himselfe and the Honor of his Crowne to many Indignities, before he will hearken to an open Warre; from which the Jealousies within the State, do diswade him (as well as his particular Inclination,) to the Continuance of Peace; wherein, his Wishe is to end his Daies.

The Ambassadors of Spaine and the Archduke went jointlie for Audience in one Coach, the Daie the King departed from Blois: But they had their Accessé apart, though the Subject of their Treaty with the King was the same. For they complained of the Succors which from hence are sent to the States; of Money, Men, Powder, and 200 Elmes, now licensed to be transported, to mount their Canon. Hereupon they demaunded leave of the King to depart, since they remained unprofitable for the Service of their Masters, with whom the Premises do argue, he hath no desire to continue good Amitie. This the King himselfe doth deliver, but his owne Answer he doth conceale. Notwithstanding, Taxis is con-

An. 1602. continued in his Charge; and of Ayala's Departure, there is no proof but his own Word.

The President Jeannin hath composed the Difference between the Count Lingis and the Prince d'Espinoz; who shall receive 50000 Franks of yearlie Revenue, for the Possessions which are detained from him. The Archduke doth urge that the King would presse the States, to retire their Shippes from before his Ports of Dunkerke and Neuport; wherby the Commerce of the French with his Subjects, is impeached. The King for Formality may speake herein, but his Towne of Callais, which hereby is enriched, by the Monopoly of all Trade into Flandres, Hanault, and Artois, will induce him to take for Paiement, any Answer that they shall give. And yf the States, to pleas the King, shall retire their Shippes, yet her Majesty hath too great Interest, not to suffer the Liberty of abord in those Ports. And so, &c.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Poictiers, 15th May, 1602. O. S.

THE King with the Queene arrived to this Towne upon Sunday last; where, received by the Magistrates, the Seige Presidiall, and the Body of the Univerſitie, they both made their solemne Entry. Since, the Marschal Biron hath sent Letters to the King, wherin he doth intreat to be excused untill the beginning of the next Moneth, within which time he doth promise to render himselfe in that Place wher the King shall be. Withall, it is said, that he hath sent a Gentleman to visit Monſieur le Dauphin, and to recommend the Duety and Service which he doth owe unto him, to the Care which he doth desire Madam de Monglat his Gouvernante, to have of his Safety and Education. Hereupon the King, who before was pourposed to go from hence to Bourg, and according as he should be advertized from the President Jeannin, from thence either to retorne towards Fontainebleau, or to go forward to Moulins, doth now resolve upon Monday or Tuesday next, the selfe same Way he came, to retorn towards Paris.

The Duke de Bouillon, (who is reputed the sole and fundamental Cause of all these Miscontentments, the which without more speedy Prevention and carefull Provision, will expose this State unto the Violence of the same Storms, with the which so lanelie it hath failed to suffer Wreck) knowing the King to be by Nature fearfull, and one, that beares more respect to his Enemy, then love to his Freind, and therefore more willing to gaine the one, then retain the other; besides, so much devoted to his Eale and Repose, that at what Price soever, he will conserve it, since he was at first to pay so dear for it, doth much apprehend the Reduction of the Marschal; and doth doubt, that the Complices of that Intelligence, will combine together to capitulate, that he should be desarçonné, and removed from his Charge. The King to call them in, will refuse them nothing; partlie to gaine them by his Favours and Curtesies, partlie to breake the Intelligence complotted among them, by dismembriing and disuniting their Affections the one from th' other; in which kind of Artifice he doth hold himselfe to be a Crafts-master.

To give shew of some Satisfaction to the People, here is an Arrest of the Counsaill, for the Surſeance of certain Impositions. The Title is somewhat specious, but the Subject in effect ridiculous, the Exceptions being as ample as the Rule. The Pancharte doth yet stand where it hath bin received, but ther is a pourpose to take it away generallie out of all Bourgs and Villages, and likewise out of all Towns, saving those which by Priveledge are exempted from Paiement of the Taillez, in which number are Paris, Orleans, Roüen, Lions, and some others.

The

The chiefest Cause which moved the King to come into these Parts, was thereby to give Contentment to the People; to whom, the Presence of their Prince, could not but be pleasing and agreeable. But it is doubted, that at his Departure from hence, he will leave the Countrey and People, much more discontented, then he found them at his coming hether. At Limoges upon the late Emotion, wherein the Farmer of the Pancharte was chased out of the Towne; by Commaundment, the Consuls are changed, and the Captaines removed from their Places. In this Towne, for the last Yeares Disorder, when first the Pancharte should have bin established, many of their Priveledges shall be retracted, their Governours chaunged, and the Creation of the Maire either cleane taken away, or with Limitation left to the Election of the Bourgeois.

In this Towne I visited the Duke of Bouillon: Who said unto me, " that notwithstanding he ever had professed himselfe a devoted Servant to her Majesty, and endeavoured to make proof thereof in all occasions, yet his unhappiness was such, not so to be esteemed and reputed by her. I answered, that no Man knew better then himselfe, what place he ever hath held in her best Graces; and therefore, I presumed, he wold not do that wrong to his Judgment, to prefer any light Information, before his owne knowledge. He knew, that there were many in this State, who did desire that the good Intelligence between her Majesty and the Relligion in this Realme, should be weakened, especially at this time, when both the one, and the other, have so just Cause of Discontent, for the small respect their Services do receive. He then said, that some four Moneths since, he received a Letter out of England, wherein he was advertized, that her Majesty should say, that he was acquainted with the late Earle's Practizes and Deseigns. He made many and solemn Protestations to the contrary, protesting likewise, that nothing could fall out more grievous unto him, then that his Honor should be touched in the good Opinion of her, whose contrary conceit, for the Reverence of her Wisdom joyned with the Favours he had received from her, could not but much blemish his Reputation in the World. To this I answered, that I could not impeache the Credit of his Information, whose Author I did not knowe; yet prayed him to call to mind what had passed, when the Matter was more fresh; and to remember, what Answer I delivered unto him by Commaundment from her Majesty, upon the selfe same point. Yf since her Majesty had cause otherwise to conceave of him, I assured him, that he should have received Notice thereof by Messagè from her selfe, and not by Information from any other.

" From this, he entred into Discourse of the present Brouilleries and Jealousies of this State. Wherein he acknowledged, that the King by his Reports, was willing the World should believe, that he and Monsieur la Tremouille, should be imbarqued. For which Disgrace, he particularly alone had contest-ed with the King at Blois, and both together in this Towne, justifying the Loyaltie of their Service; that though they had many Reasons of Discontent, and so professed themselves to have, yet those Discontents should never have force to transport their Duties, from their due Allegiance to their Countrey, Prince, and Relligion. The King (as he saith) denied that ever he had reported that they were engaged in this Complot, or that ever he conceived so wrongfully of them. But he particularlie charged the Duke of Bouillon, that there was an Intention to make a Match betwene his Daughter, and the Count d' Auvergne's Son. To which he answered, that he had acquainted him both with the Motion, and the Refusal, whose Resolution was to marry his Daughter to one of the Relligion. He concluded with me, that all things here are in a Confusion, the Discontents generall, and not dissembled, but professed and avowed. No present hope of better Contentment, for the Meanes are not great, most Men complaining that their Services are not remembered, much lesse respected, or rewarded. Yet those Means which may be found, are not taken; the Greivances of the People daily increasing together with their Mife-

An. 1602. " ry, as much by the Infolencie of the Fermiers, as by the Burden of their Ex-" actions. The King himselſe doth grow daily more and more ſuſpicious and " miſtruſtfull, jealous of his Perſon, jealous of his State, upon the Apprehenſion
 " of theſe forreign Preparations, founded upon an aſſured Correſpondencie
 " within his Realme. Yet ſo far he is from any Reſolution to prevent theſe
 " Miſcheifs, that he doth thinck to take notice of them, is to accelerate the " Daunger which he feareth. For his own particular, he doth pourpoſe whol" ly to retire himſelſe, unleſs the Service of his Countrey ſhall recall him from " his Repoſe": And from hence, with his Lady, who with her Siſter la Tremouille is com to ſee the Queene, doth directlie go downe into Turene. This Speech in effect he had with me, which he wiſhed me to write unto your Honor.

Frederico Spinola's Gallies do paſſe. The Number is advertized here only of eight, yet ſome name fourteen; the Error may be, becauſe thoſe at Sluce, with theſe on the way, do make that number. Yt is expected that her Maſteſtie's Shipps will give a good account of them, before they arrive at the Port they deſire; thereby to redeem their Diſgrace, by the Eſcape of thoſe which are now there. By Letters from Lions the 19th of this Moneth this Stile, the Army of Italie was then in the Valley of Aouſt in Piedmont; the Number was no greater, then in my laſt I advertized. When I demaunded Audience about the Payment of the 50000 Crowns, Monſieur de Villeroy did undertake, without troubling the King, to reduce Monſieur de Rhofny to more Reaſon; but he hath refuſed him.
 Now the next time they both ſhall meet before the King, Monſieur de Villeroy will move the matter, that without more delay the Paiement may be made at Deiſe in quart d'Eſcus. And ſo, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Orleans, 25th May 1602. O. S.

MY laſt Letters were dated from Poictiers of the 15th of this Month, which I ſent to your Honor by one John Hall a Marchant of Bordeaux, whom there I met in his retorne towards England. In the Poſtſcript of that Letter, I added, that the King in his way to Poictiers having balked Champigni, (whether he promiſed to come, and wher Proviſion was made to entertaine him) In his retorne towards Tours, being again invited by Monſieur Monpenſier, who cam himſelſe though weak and ſickly for that pourpoſe, did determine to ſojourne there a Day or two. The Sonday after, which was here Whitſonday, he towched the ſick, and thereupon faining that he had overweariſed himſelſe, (for the number of them was great,) in the Afternoone being retired, he gave forth that he found himſelſe in ill Diſpoſition, and wold the next Day take Phyſick, of pourpoſe (as now it appeareth) to have ſome coulorable Pretence to break off the Journey to Champigni. That Night, between nine and ten of the Clock, he received two Packets, the one from the Mareſchal Biron, the other from Monſieur Leſdiguieres, concurring both to one end; advertizing, that beſides the 6000 Men under the Conduct of the Marquis of Spinola, (which have Commaundment to make ſtay in the Franche Compté for fifteen Daies,) there are pre-ſently to follow two other Armies, the other of 15000, the other of 12000 Men.
 Hereupon the King did preſentlie ſend for the Duke de Bouillon, to whom he did communicate theſe two Letters; and withall, reſolved the next Day to depart, and to retorne the ſame way he came, without viſiting Monſieur Monpenſier:
 Adding, that he had received from his Countrey of Bearne an Advertizement, to have care of his Perſon, for that there was a deſſeign to poyſon him. Yf Monſieur Monpenſier had cauſe of Diſcontent, as ſceing himſelſe not only not reſpected,

spected, but by unkynd Speeches disgraced by the King, (as not fearing the Softness of his Nature, which he holdeth not capable of any high Desseign) this coming to his Knowledge, (which cannot be concealed) that he should be reputed a fit Subject of so unworthy a Thought, must needs aggravate his Discontents, and cause him to joyne more straightly with them, who supported by the Reputation of his Qualitie, will abundantlie supplie what may be required, either in the Malice, or Boldnes of his Spirit. To the former of these Advertizements, the like were sent the Weeke before from the Grande Boutique of Genoa, which is a Society of Italian Marchants, retired from all parts of that Countrey to that Towne. But the Improbabilitie of many Particularities specified in the Relation of their Advertisements, (viz. That the Pope was joyned in League agaynst this King, with Spaine and Savoie. That he wold excommunicat him for an Hypocrite. That he wold recall the Dispensation for his Marriage, which was obtained by false Suggestions, and Misunderstanding, and so declare the Marriage unlawfull, and his Children illegitimate,) did much weaken the Credit of the more substantial Points.

Notwithstanding all these Advertisements, the King doth purpose to attend the Extremity; and yf by Patience his Peace may be preserved, not to enter into Warr. Not that he thincketh not these Preparations in Italie to be projected against his State; but he hopeth, (measuring the Affections of Spaine by his own Humours,) that now these Practizes within the Realme are discovered, and as he presumeth defeated, (for de Curez is returned with assurance that the Mareschal will come and render himself,) He will alter his Desseign, and not begin the Warre on even hand.

No Man here doubteth that the Gallies of Spinola do passe, and it hath bin reported, that they have bin seen upon the Coast of Bretaigne. I have moved Monsieur de Villeroy, that the King wold be pleased to give Commaundment to the Gouvernors of the Ports, to advertize into England from time to time, in measure as they shall passe; which he doth assure me is expressly commaunded, and accordingly shall be performed.

The King hath spoken twice to Monsieur de Rhosny, to give order, that the 50000 Crowns might be paid in quart d'Escus. But he hath alleaged so many Inconvenients, yf in all Paiements, the Ordonnance of France to pay the Thirds in Douzaines, be not observed, that the King is content to yeald to him. The Truth is, (and so Monsieur de Villeroy told me) Monsieur de Rhosny hath stood so violentlie in this Point, that he doth hold it a Dishonour now to relent. But howsoever her Majestie shall be pleased to interpret this Treatment, yet in the Termes the Affaires do stand here, the least Evill will be to accept of this Paiement; for upon the least Alteration that shall be misdoubted, either within or without the Realme, occasion will be taken to make Stay of the Money, for the use of their own Service; which already is practised against the poor Townie of Geneva for 20000 Crowns, which should have bin paid six Moneths since, and now is suspended for two Moneths longer. Your Honor may be pleased to let me know, whether this Paiement shall be accepted, and withall to commaund me, how farre I shall proceed for the Exchange of the Douzaines; wherein, by the Favour of the Tresorier d'Espargne, (who doth blush at this Proceeding of Monsieur de Rhosny,) so much may be procured, that no great Loss shall be sustained. The Mony shall be at Diepe, at what time your Honor shall advertize that the Ship shall be ready to imbarque it. The Tresorier d'Espargne doth look, for his Discharge, that he that should come to receive it, should have a speciall Procuration, which attested under my Lord Tresorier's Hand and Seal shall be sufficient; though at the first it was demaunded, that it should be signed directly from her Majestie. He hath likewise moved me, to sollicit for an Acquittance for the Receipt of the said Somme; which he doth desire may be, by rendring up some one of the King's Obligations, yf any there be of that Somme; or yf the Somme shall be greater, yet upon rendring up of the Obligation, it shall be acknowledged before two Notaries, that so much of that Bond remaineth to

An. 1602. be paid, which will be as authentick as the Originall it self. By the Experience of the Paiement of the 20000 Crowns now three Years since, I am assured the Tresorier d'Espargne will stand precisely upon the Form of his Acquittance, which must be presented to the Chambre des Comptes, and allowed there.

The King doth arrive here to morrow, where he will keepe in Solemnity la Feste dieu. Here he will attend the Mareschal Biron, who doth promise to com upon Sunday next.

I had not thought I should have bin troublesom to your Honor, for the allowance of any farther Provision; but sith I heare nothing of Sir Thomas Parry's coming, and that the first Moneth is now expired, the extraordinary Charge of this Voiage of Poitiers, doth enforce me to beseech your Honor, that my Provision may be allowed; which yf you shall be pleased to assign, upon the Mony which here is to be paid, I will receive it in that Coine which is currant in this Countrey. And so, humbly recommending this Favour to your Honor's Remembrance, I take my leave, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Fountainbleau, 4th June 1602. O. S.

I Received your Honor's Letters of the 20th the 26th of the same at Orleans; which then was the Rendezvous given at the King's Departure from Tours; yet he stayed at Blois till the Satterday after. At his Arrivall at Orleans, he received Letters, that the Mareschal Biron was on the way to find him, and on Sunday would lye at Montargis; whether the King did presently send unto him, to meet him at Fountainbleau, whether he arrived on Tuesday Night. * Upon Wednesday Morning the Mareschal arrived slenderly accompanied, not with his ordinary Train. The King received him with great appearance of Love and Kindness, and entertayned him with Discourse the greatest part of that Day. Upon Thursday Morning arrived here the Count of Auvergne from Paris; who purposing to meet the King in his retorne at Tours, received Commaundment to stay at Orleans, where he attended ten Dayes, (as I presume, sent for by the King, for he departed from Orleans with Discontent,) where he was in a manner confyned for ten Days, for the King would not suffer him to come nearer to him, but there commanded him to attend his coming; and when he was there, would not endure his Prefence, but as often as he approached towards him, sent him away in such sort, as the Standers by might easily perceave what Jealousies he did conceave of him. The same Day the King gave order to la Curee, Colonel of the Chevaux Legers, to draw his Companies to this Towne, and keep them all Night ready sadled, and his Companies in Armes. In the Evening, the Guards had warning watchfully to attend, which that Night were redoubled, and so since maintained. The Gentlemen of the Chambre were commanded not to stray abroad; to whom the King himself, in the returne from his Voiage, did recommend the Care of his Person.

† About eleven of the Clock in the Night, the King did send for the Mareschal, who came and found him sate upon his selle percée. After some Speeche held with him, being dismissed, as soon as he was out of the King's Chamber, Monsieur de Vitry, one of the Captaines of the Guards, with this Speeche, that he was sorry, yet bound to execute the King's Commandment, seized him Prisoner in the King's Name, and so willed him to render his Weapon. He made some smal Resistance, asking if he should render his Weapon, who had five and thirty Wounds in his Body, all received for the Service of the King; then asked, if there was never a one present, that would know particularly the King's Pleasure. The Duke de Montbason went into the King, and came forth, with Commandment to the Captaine, to execute his Charge; so he presently carried him to a Chamber in the Palace, where yet he lodgeth. The Count of Auvergne was then within with the King, where he likewise was seized on, and carried into another Corps of the House. The Lieutenant of the Marechal's Company, and his Secretary named Hibbert, (whom I have advertized in my former to have been imployed by him to Milan;) were apprehended at the same time. These are all the Particularities which with assurance I can advertize your Honor of, and what I have thought convenient to send; and may serve in part; for answer to the beginning of the last Letter, which I received from your Honor.

An. 1602.

This Proceeding is termed un coup d'Etat, and as it is presumed, will strongly establish the Sovereign Authority, which did begin to branle and totter up and down. And howsoever it may incense the Rancor of the Faction, yet hereby the Majestie of the King shall be freed from a generall Contempt, into the which it was likely headlong to fall, without hope of Resource.

Monfieur de Espernon, (who with his Sons attended the King to Poitiers, where they returned to Loches, a place in his Gouvernement, but he brought the King back to this place,) the Day the Count Auvergne came, went in post to Paris.

I here attended to have Access, to sollicite the Payment of the 50000 Crowns, in the forme your Honor doth prescribe. The Ambassador of the Duke of Wirttemberg hath often been with me for answer of the Letters which he sent to your Honor, which I have hitherto excused, upon this farre Voiage of the King. I beseech your Honor to excuse me, though I presume to sollicite your Answer to Monsieur Pasquier's Letter. Your Honor shall thereby maintaine in Devotion the Affections of the good old Man, whose honest Intentions have never bin wanting to her Majestie's Service. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

9th June 1602.

YOU shall understand, that two Merchants of Genoa, the one named Francisco Soprany, and the other Phillip Bernardi, having conjoynd with other Merchants of London hir Majestie's Subjects, did set forth to Sea by way of Trade to the Indies, a Ship of this Town called the Suzan Parnel, under the Charge and Conduct of one Rowland Citmore, a Marryner likewise belonging to this place; with purpose, that the sayde Ship having performed her Voiage according as was agreed on between the Fraytors, should have returned homewards unto the Straytes, and there have vented their Commodities. But so it fell out, the said Ship in his returne encountred with much foul Weather, and with other ill Accidents incident unto the Sea; insomuch as she spent her Mast and some other of her Tacklinge, and was thereby forced to come for England; from whence, the said Merchants mutually consented to send hir and hir Loadinge (being for the most part Hydes) to Newhaven, with purpose to have transported the sayde Merchandize from thence to Roane. Now Sir the Ship coming into Newhaven, was presently seized on, the Goods sequestred, and the Company most of them committed to Prison, under pretext that these Goods had been robbed by them at Sea, whereof there can be no Proof made, neyther is it other, then their Supposition: For the sayde Merchants have protested, that those

An. 1602. those Goods came to them simply by waye of Trade, without giving Offence to any Nation in the World, no not so much as to the Spaniards themselves. I pray Sir therefore, procure as much as in you lyeth, that Restitution may be made; for the Merchaunts, such as are Englishe I mean, and have the greatest Interest therein, (though the Italians be named) are such as I am willing to pleasure, being of very honest Condition, and such as I do often make use of, for better Correspondency with such, as I doe imploy abroad for her Majestie's Service. They will appoint some discreet Person to follow you, and to informe you of all other Particulars fitt for your Knowledge, to whom I doubt not but you will yeeld all the Furtherance you may. And so I committ you to God.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

13th June 1702.

HAVING now received your Letter by Mussy of the 4th of this Month, by which you advertise the manner of the Duke of Biron's Apprehension, which is an effect of the former Bruities, I have thought good to returne you notice of your owne Diligence, because her Majestie also hath made a very good Judgment of the same. Wherein I think it fitt to note thus much unto you, (because I know not how the Posts report unto you of their Allowance,) that there is no Man bringeth a Pacquet from you, but he hath, as long as the Court hath been in these removed Quarters, 15 l. and sometimes more; and so had John Mussy, who if he had made haste according to the Date of your Letter, he had been here two or three Dayes before the Ambassadors Pacquet. Because I have also been advertised, that Biron and Auvergne were sent to the Bastile, whereby it is like your next Letters will advertise matter of further Progres, her Majestie hath staied Sir Thomas Parry for fower or fyve Daies, that she may write the more particularly to the King upon this Subject, according as she shall hear the Circumstances of his Treasons, and how far the King of Spaine is touched, or how far the King either will or must take notice of the same; because her Majestie may speake in such a Style, as the Knowledge of that Subject shall minister Matter. You shall also understand, that Sir Thomas Parry taketh his leave on Thursday, and that her Majestie resolveth that you shall tarry there some two or three Months, untill he be better acquainted; for which you shall have an Allowance made over unto you, as soon as I can speak with Packer about the Reckoning.

Concerning the Duke of Wirtemberg, when the Ambassador comes, there shall be an Answer made, such as I can procure; and for Pasquier, I will write unto him my self, according to her Majestie's Directions. In the mean tyme I pray you let me hear from you as often as you may, how all things pass since this Remeuement, and amongst other things how Madam la Marquise stands in this tyme. And thus I commit you to God.

THE Day after the Imprisonment of Marechal Byron and Count d' Auvergne, the Kyng called for me, to whom when I came he used this Speeche. " I have sayde he, discovered a dangerous Practize, which by the Space of three " Years and more, the Marechal Byron hath complotted with the Kinge of " Spaine and Duke of Savoy, against my Person and my State. Yt is foure " Months, fence I have had perfect Knowledge of this Confederacy, * and could " have been content to have concealed it, and would now have pardoned and re- " mitted, if by curtesie and fayre means he would have been induced to confesse " and acknowledge his Errour; but now God have Mercy on his Soul. I can- " not say, as the last Kyng sayde at the Death of the Duke of Guise, nor we I " am King, but I say I am sorry, and that with my Heart, for this Man's fall. " Some say I am a Hunter, others that I make love, but I wake when they " sleepe. From hence I will go to Paris, where I will not stay above four " Dayes, but will hasten into Borgogne, to assure that Province. In the mean " tyme I will make a Dispatch to my Ambassador, wherein he shall have Order; " to acquaint my Sister of England with the Particularities of this Accident. To this his Speeche I answered, " that as her Majestie could not but condole " with him, for the late feeling which she hath had of the like Misfortune, " that his owne Creature, whom he had charged with so many Honors, should " practize against the Repose of his Realme, so could she not but rejoyce and " congratulate with him, that by his Providence and Wisdome, so dangerous a " Complotth hath been discovered and prevented, by his Care and speedy Reso- " lution. I sayde moreover, by long Experience she did well understand the " Practises of Spayne, which though they did not attaine to their End to which " they cheisly did ayme, yet were they not frustrate of all purpose, when Per- " sonages of great worth were thereby dismembred from the Service of their " Prince and Country. This is all that then passed.

Now to relate unto your Honor what is delivered of this matter, I shall enter into a confused Labyrinth, so infinite are the Circumstances of this Practise, and so variably related. And to begin ab ovo: It is said, that the Discontent of this Marechal did first arise at the Siege of Amiens, when he did perceave, that the King underhand, by the Generall of the Cordeliers, did coverly treat for Peace with Spaine; apprehending, that the Bruit of his Name would be silent; the irregular Ambition whereof, hath thus precipitated him into this shamefull, yet willfull Ruine. The Peace ensuing, his Discontents did increase, which then were professedly founded upon the King's Parsimonie, which he termed Misfery, his Wants not being able to satisfie the others lavish and profuse Expence. Then, † when the King had purpose to marrie the late Dutches, yt is received; that there was a Confederacie united between these two Prisoners, the Constable, the Dukes Monpensier and Espernon, to advance the Pretensions of the young Prince of Condé, against the Children, which the Law by after Marriage, doth presume to be legitimate: The Duchesse dying seasonably for the Kyng, and fortunately for his Realme, the Partie did still remayne good for the Prince, against Count Soissons, who reputed him as illegitimate, did protest against the Title du premier Prince du Sang, which by the Arrest of the Court of Parlement, was

† The Duke de Sully in exprefs terms tells us, Que le Sieur de Sillery Bruslart fut envoyé (à Rome) à l'instance sollicitation de Madame la Duchesse de Beaufort, à laquelle il s'estoit engagé de Parole de faciliter en bref la dissolution du Mariage du Roy, son Mariage avec elle, & la legitimation des Enfants qui luy estoient desja nez pour estre estimez Enfants de France. Vide his Memoires Chap. 81. Tom. 2. pag. 245. Edit. Amst. 12^o.

An. 1602. judged to be his due. * The Duke of Savoie came shortly after into France, and in this Court practized many, even unto mean Captaines, and the basest Souldiers, but absolutely gaigned him, this unhappie Conte, and (it is feared) the old Constable, who is extracted out of the House of Savoie, (for his Mother was thereof a Naturall Daughter) and is here esteemed Partaker of all these Conspiracies. The which, though the Kyng is content for the present to dissemble, yet either he wanteth Power, or hath not will to conceal.

The Sommer after followed the Warre in Savoie, wherein though the Mareschal did great Service, and surprized the Towne of Bourg, yet, as now it appeareth, both by Conviction from his owne Letters, and his late Confession, † he held Intelligence with the Duke, to whom he did discover the King's Purposes and Deseignes, and at that tyme, with him, did complott to take away the King's Life. Particularly it is proved by a Letter written with his own hand, that when the Fort of St. Catharine was besieged, he did contract with the Enemy, to bring the King within Danger of Shott, and to give the Signall, that they should not shoot in vaine. Whiles the Peace was in treating at Lyons, the King had some Intimation of too strait Intelligence between Auvergne and the Duke of Savoie, whereupon one Comblat a Follower of his, that had been employed in some Messages, was there imprisoned. The Peace concluded, the Mareschal did openly profess his Discontents, upon Pretext, that the King did give the Government of the Cittadell of Bourg to one Monsieur de ‡ Boisse of the Religion; at which time, the King did suffer himself unworthily to be braved by him, with insolent and outrageous Speeches. Sence which time he hath not ceased to pursue his Practices with the Duke of Savoie and Count Fuentes, (who perhaps for that purpose was sent to the Government of Milan,) by the Mediation of de la Fin; who did serve himself with his generall Letters of Credence, and did reserve the Particularities unto himself, which now he hath delivered into the King's hands. The Contract between them and the Mareschal doth import, that he should marry the eldest Daughter of Savoie, with whom he should have the Dutchie of Burgogne which shall be erected into a Kingdom, to the which should be annexed the Franche Comté, la Bresse and Champaigne, and what else he should gaine by the Sword in France, with 40000 Crowns in ready Money.

The first Discovery of these Practices was in February last; but he who did discover le pot aux Roses, is Combelle; who in his Returne from Milan, (where in an Assembly held about these Affaires, la Fin there treating for the Mareschal he for the Count de Auvergne, at which time he undertooke to assassinate the King as he passed through Lyons) was arrested Prisonnier, for having lately before murdered his Uncle, to enjoy with more libertie his Wife, of whom he was become Amoureux. He to avoyde the Punishment of this Fact, made this Motion, that he might be brought to the King, to whome he could reveal many Secrets concerning his State, and the Safety of his Person. Hereupon la Fin came to be knowen, who upon assurance of his Pardon and hopes of Reward, did render himself about Easter last; and shortly after, did deliver up unto the King, all the Memoires and Letters which he had reserved, written all with the Mareschal's own hand. This is the brief Narration of this Fact, and the Somme of the most important Circumstances. Yt is much to be marvelled, (but that God had blinded his Understanding by the Presumption of his owne Worth and Vallour, and by the base Conceit he had of the King's Weakness and timorous Nature,) that being in place of Suretie, within his own Gouvernement, where he was possessed of many strong Places, and should have been assisted with Forreigne Power, that he would come to render himself to the Discretion of the King's Mercie. For besides the Acculation of his own Conscience, he could not but know, that the King had many Presumptions and Proofes of his Practizes. That the King had redoubled his Guards against his coming, that he had sent for Men of Action and Execution from all Parts to meet him at Orleans, where this Tragedie should have been play'd; that there the Witnesses were examined, first apart, and then confronted; that the President Jeannin had Commaundment to inhibit the Parliament at Dijon and Provence to yeeld him further Obedience; in case he did make refusall to come. No Man did thinke, that the King would have put on this Resolution, and if he did, that he would have mayntained it. At Orleans he wold not adventure it, for fear the Town, which ever hath been factious, should have risen, and by force procured his Liberty. And if Monsieur de Rhosny had not violently prosecuted this Course, threatening otherwise never to see the King nor Court, (for he found no Safety in his owne State but in the other's Ruine,) the King would have been content with Silence to have passed it over. And if he had but returned to his Lodging at Fountainbleau that Night when he was apprehended, his Horses were saddled, and his People in readines to have been gone. Which if he had done, the Warr by this Day had been kindled in all Parts and Quarters of this Realme; which shortly after would have flamed forth in that Fury, that their former Troubles in respect of this Confusion, wold seem to have been but ludus and jocus; for the Forces in Italie did but attend le mot de guet to assaile Provence both by Sea and Land. The 6000 Italians which now are passed to the Archduke, should have remained with the Mareschal: The Archduke though he hath his hands full at home, wold not have stood at gaze. But that which was not least to be feared, the King doth take notice of another partie in his Realme, perhaps no less dangerous to his Repole, although pretended upon the specious Pretext du bien publick, and Reformation of his Estate. The first light of this Ligue came by one Monsieur de Anjou, who in pure Devotion and Love, frankly acknowledged to the King at Blois, that he had been demanded by his good Friends of what Party he was of; when he answered, he knew no other Party but that of the King; it was replied, that then he was of the worst and weakest Part. He remonstrated to the King, how by the heavy Exactions wherewith his Subjects were oppressed, he had lost the Hearts of his People; yet, that he was not more hated for the Crueltie of his Oppressions, then despised and contemned for the Dissoluteness of his Life. The King did will him to go and repeat to de Rhosny what he had said to him, which he did: Whereupon, there was an Arrest published, for the Surseance of extraordinary Paieiments, and a Stay made for further Proceeding in the Establishment of the Pancharte, and from pressing the Imposition of Salt beyond the River of Loyre.

The King doth name the Cheifes of this Association besides the Prisoners, the Constable, Monpensier, Espernon, de Bouillon, and Cardinal Joyeux. At Poitiers there came to the King one named St. Bonnet of Limoges, who informed him, That in his House, there signed fowre by fowre, for the Reformation of the State, more then four thousand Gentlemen, all sent thither by the Duke d'Espernon. Yet here he is, in good grace with the King, who doth in publick acquit him of the Practice of the Mareschal.

Upon this Imprisonment the King did send Monsieur de Rochepot to the Constable, to command him to keep his House, (who was then at Chantilli some ten Leagues from this Towne) upon paine of Rebellion; yet at his Instance, he was content he should come to the Court, where I have seen him treated with accustomed kindness. He did send likewise to Monsieur Monpensier to come presently to the Court, adding, that he would take all delay for refuse, and refusall for Rebellion. But sence, he hath sent a Gentleman, to wish him to stay untill his Health may permit him to travail; who is under such Indisposition, that 'tis thought he cannot long endure.

The King came to this Towne on Satterday was se'night, and the same Day sent the Prisoners to the Bastile. Upon Monday the King gave Power to the Parlement

An. 1602. Parlement to make the Mareschal's Proceſſe, and to his Complices, of what quallitie or degree foever. Sence, he hath been interrogated by the two antient Presidents, and Counſaillers, and hath confessed all the Particularities which were demanded, only he doth denie, that he ever practized against the King's Life: yet hath confessed, that he was made privie to that Practice. At his first coming into the Bastile he was impatient, dogged, and sullen, refusing to eat, or to name the King, much less with Duty and Respect, nor would not be induced to ask for Grace and Pardon; but cursed and damned at his Folly, which brought him into that Place. He is now more moderate, yet not so mortified, but that he would willingly live. He often repeateth his Services to this Crown in generall, and in particular to the King, whose Life he saith he hath saved five severall Times, and noteth both time and place.

The Opinion is, that he shall dye, and that before the end of this Week. The Count de Auvergne hath so many good Friends which intercede for him, namely la Marquise * his Sister, who never was more powerfull in the King's Favour then she is at this present, that he is assured to have Pardon, as the other is to suffer.

The last Week the Mareschal Laverdin was sent into Burgogne with certaine Companies, and sence Monsieur de Rhosny hath drawn out of the Arsenal 15 Peices of Canon, to mount up the River of Marn. The Parlament of Dijon by divers Letters, have assured the King, that that Province will firmly remaine in dutifell Allegiance. Yet the Baron de Luz, who was the Mareschal's Livetenant in that Government, and an especial Actor in all his Practizes, doth fortify himself at Solduc, a Place of some Importance in that Province; but as it is thought, rather to purchase his Peace upon easier Terms, then of desire to stand out. The King this Day is gone towards Fountainbleau, with purpose if he be not diverted, to make a Step to Dijon to establish Monsieur le Grand in that Government; but whether he shall be Livetenant to the Dauphin, or to Alexander, the second Son to the late Dutcheſſe, is not well known.

Now the Spanish Desseigns are defeated in France, it is to be presumed, that they will turn their Forces to a second Employment. I send your Honour herewith a Note of such Troopes as are transported, and are to pass out of Italy into Spaine, with an Advice from the Court there, with the which Monsieur de Villeroys's Advertisements, (as he saith) do concurr, and particularly for the Isle of Wight. After many Instances and Remonstrances, that her Majestie could make no other Interpretation of this Treatment for the Money, then that there never was purpose to make Payment thereof, Monsieur de Rhosny hath accorded the Paiement in the Specie of quart d'Escus, and this Morning the Tresorier d'Espargne did assure me, that by the 12th of the next by their Style, the Money shall be ready at Diepe. They do desire and expect that an Obligation of de Beauvoir and de Fresuez made in the Year 1591, for the Sume of 52500 Crowns may be render'd: The Bond shall be copyed and collationed by two Notaries, and attested by the Tresorier d'Espargne, that there remaineth to be paid 2500 Crowns, which is their forme of Proceeding here, and cannot be prejudiciall to her Majestie. Your Honor will be pleased to let me know, whither it be needfull that I assist at this Paiement; and if it be your Pleasure that I should receive my Provision out of this Paiement. The little Satisfaction which the Party hath given me, who many Days since is returned to his Employment, doth give me lmal Encouragement to adventure againe in the same kind; yet because your Honor in your last doth so commaund, I am now treating to that pourpose with a Gentleman of great Worth, whom I know in loyall Duty to be affection'd to her Majestie's Service, he doth promise to use therein his best Endeavours, and within six Dayes I do attend his Answer. I beseech by your next to know your Honor's further Pleasure, and if such a one shall be represented unto me whom I may commend for that Service, whether I shall send him over unto you, or how otherwise dispose of him. An. 1602.

Right Honorable;

Paris, 24th June 1602. O. S.

THE Proccs of the Mareschal is not much advanced since the Date of my last. The Stay hath been upon the Attendance of de la Fin, whom the Formallities of their Justice require should be confronted with him. He arrived here upon Sunday last, and brought with him a Caskett full of Letters and Memoires; according to the Contents whereof, he made Motion to the Counsaill, that the Interrogatories might be dressed upon which he should depose, to the end that he might affirm nothing which he could not authentically prove and justifie. The beginning of this Week hath been spent in perusing these Writings, wherein have been found such a confused Chaos of Brouilleries, and so many of all sorts and quallities embarked therein; that they are sorry they have so much, and do endeavour by all means to cover the Shame of this Practice, wherein they hold the Honor of their Nation to be deeply interested; wherein Resolution is taken, that the Parliament shall take notice of no other Particular, either Person or Matter, then of that which doth properly concern the present Estate of the Mareschal's Cause. He himself since his Imprisonment hath often said, (and particularly to Monsieur de Villeroy and Sillery;) that in his Designes he hath ben very wicked, but that there those about the King, which are ten times more wicked, but not so unfortunate. These and the like Speeches, as it is thought, do make some in this Court to think in their Consciences, that in the State they now stand, they hold the Wolf by the Eare; for to remaine here is to be in danger dayly to be surprized, and to depart is to accuse, and yet not to save themselves. The Mareschal's End doth draw near, there remayneth only to finish the Proccs, to confront de la Fin, and then, when the Chamber shall be assembled, to give Judgment; and the same Day; by Custome, the Execution doth follow.

The Count d' Auvergne is nothing sensible of his Misserie; but hath spent his tyme in scoffing at the Mareschal's Sottish Simplicite, (for so he termes it,) who was so kindly perswaded to quitt his Government, where he might have held the King plaie for many Months, to come and cast himself into the Armes of Mercy. Madam de Angoulesme (the natural Daughter of Henry II.) doth intercede for him upon this Reason, that he is all that is left (his Children only excepted) of the House of Vallois. At the time of the Imprisonment la Marquise was at Vernueil, and certaine Bruites were spread, that she had a part in this Action, which many did wish, and therefore did believe. She, to shew her Grace and Power, came to this Towne, where she was received in Court with more Favour then was expected; and because the World should acknowledg the Error of that wrongfull Imputation, the King did entertain her whole Dayes together in publick, sometimes in the Louvre, sometimes in the Tuilleries Garden; the Queen did give her free Access into her Chamber, which she did as freely accept; wherein the King doth use this Artifice with the Queene, perswading her to treat her kindly, that he may with more facilitie retire out of her Father's Hands, the Promise of her Marriage which still he retaineth; which done, he voweth to give her a Congé and send her away. The Queene (who belceveth good sooth) profusely bestoweth on her all the Careffes and Curesies she can devise; and at their last meeting, did treat her as her other self. But she, that hath ben taught the Secret of her Mestier, out of the Schoole of an exper-

An. 1602. enced Mistress, her Mother, is not to learn this Lesson, Che me fa carezze che non siuole o ingannata m'ha o ingannare mi vuole, and therefore resolveth to be made much of, if the retaying of that Promise can effect it, which yet, she will not consent her Father should deliver. The Chancellor did this Week past urge him much for the Delivery of it, and did advise him to use that means, to purchase Grace for the Count de Auvergne. He answered, His Daughter's Honour ought to be more dear to him, then the Life of his Wife's Son, especially of such a Son of no greater Merit. How the King upon this Action will govern himself towards Spaine, doth at this present seem doubtfull.

The Voiage of Burgogne is broken, where the Mareschal Laverdin is received into the Cittadell of Dijon; and all the Governours placed in the Townes of that Province and la Bresse by de Byron, have voluntarily rendred themselves to the King's Discretion. The Baron de Luz hath quitted Solduc, and with his Wife and Children is fled into the Franche Comté, having carried with him all his owne Wealth, and what he could transport of the Mareschal's, to the Value of 60000 Crowns, and there remaineth at a place called Gre. Yet the Companies of Souldiers do dayly advance, which were sent into those parts, and the Cannon doth march on. We understand not that the Suisses which were levied are discharged. Monsieur Lesdignieres is in Armes, and his Troops do increase; but this may be to waite upon the Duke of Savoy, who is gone down thither, and this Week past hath visited his Forts upon the Frontiers of Dauphiné. Now we begin to speak, though with no great Certainty, of sending an Army into Picardy. The King's coming will resolve us herein, who is expected from Fountainbleau to this Town within a day or twoe. It is not unlikely that the King will temporize a while, to see the Issue of this great Expedition of Count Maurice; who, in the Opinion of this Court, will bring forth some strange Alteration in those Parts.

The Spanish Ambassador sence the breaking out of these Brouilleries hath had Audience; who by endeavouring with many formall Reasons to excuse his Master, and to cast the Hatred of these Practices upon the Duke of Savoie, did seem rather to accuse him, then to acquitt him. The King's Answer was, that he could not carrie so unworthy an Opinion of the King his Master, as to suspect him to be partaker of such base and vile Attempts, so far abhorring to the Laws of God and Nature; but if he would do Justice upon the Count Fuentes, * whom he could not but hold for an Assassin, he should do great Satisfaction to the World. Howsoever the Mareschal hath carried himself in this Negotiation, rashly, presumptuously, and too confidently, yet no Man doth hold him so unadvised in matters of so great Importance, to treat with the Count Fuentes as a particular Person, unless he did know him warranted with a sufficient Power from the King of Spaine; who from the beginning did purpose to take notice of these Proceedings, not according to the Deseign, but according to the Success.

The Baron of Tours this Day departed from hence towards Scotland, where he is to remaine Ambassador Resident. Arthur Poole is I understand some two Daies sence arrived to this Towne from Flanders, where one of his Sisters is married of late to one Radish an Englishman. Arriano Champoli a Jacobin Friar of Palermo in Sicily, upon his Recantation before the Congregation of Ablon, where the Relligion of this Town hold their Exercise, by the Minister of this Church named de Montigni, hath ben recommended to Monsieur la Fontaine, to be recommended by him to be Minister of the Italian Church in London, whether he

* Mathieu informs us, that the Sieur d'Escures expostulating with the King for imprisoning the Mareschal, when he had brought him sous la parole de sa Majesté, qui l'avoit assuré, qu'il n'auroit nul desplaisir; Le Roy (says the Historian) luy monstra lors les charges du Mareschal par Lettres expressees escrites de sa Main, &c. Ce que voyant d'Escures il recogneut qu'encores le Roy avoit usé de trop grande debonaireté & patience envers luy: Ven qu'il estoit question de la Mort du Roy & de Monsieur le Dauphin: Et qu'il se trouvoit mesmes, que le Comte de Fuentes avoit proposé à la Fin, " que jamais l'Estat d'Espagne ne se fieroit aux François, si ce n'estoit qu'ils feissent faillir la Race des Princes du Sang, en commençant par le Roy & son Dauphin. is gone. Now I understand that this Fryer as he passed through Rouen, had secret and often Meetings and Conferences in Places suspicious, and Times unreasonable, with the most malicious Papists of that Towne. I have intimated this Indiscretion of their Minister, to the Deputies of their Churches; and remonstrated, that the least Inconvenience that by this Legerity would ensue, would be a Blemish to the Reputation of their Wisdoms, and to that Gratitude which they are bound to acknowledge to her Majestic, whose Realme having ben a Retrait and Assyle to their Persecutions, more Judgment would be required, then to turn over to her Land such a Rascaille; whose corrupt Conversation would infect her Church with Errour, and Commonwealth with Sedition, and that he was like to prove a dangerous Practicer against the State.

Here hath lately ben with me a Gentleman from Monsieur de Sourdiac, to make offer of the Sale of fifty thousand Pound of Powder for Cannon, whereof by this Post I send the Example, and of certaine Pieces of Cannon, the Particulars whereof I send herewith to your Honor.

I beseech your Honor, that for that time which her Majestic shall be pleased to commaund my Aboad here after her Majestic's Ambassador shall arrive, by that meanes which shall seem most convenient, the King and Monsieur de Villeroy may take notice of her Pleasure therein; otherwise I shall remaine altogether unprofitable for her Service, and not so able to performe those Offices, which my Duty doth require to her Ambassador. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 7th July 1602. O. S.

AFTER that de la Fin had presented unto the Counsaile all the particular Letters which had passed between the Mareschal and him, with those which passed between him and Count Fuentes, he made a Petition to the King; which requested, he might have a generall Abolition of all Offences that could be alleadged against him, not only in this particular Action of the Mareschal's Treason, but all other Crimes wherein he hath offended against the Laws; and for his more assurance, to have it enterined in the Court of Parliament before he should be confronted with the Mareschal. Now the Crimes wherewith the World doth charge him are, That he is Sorcerer, a Forger of false Money, an ordinary Assassin, a Sodomite, and one that upon all Purposes, hath usually accustomed to counterfeit the King's Hand. Yet the Mareschal at the first time of his Examination by the premier President, being asked whether he knew such a one of that Name, and whether he did repute him for an honest Man, he answered, pour fort homme de bien, & que plus est, (said he) il est mon Cousin. At the same time, (according to the Form of Interrogatories,) being asked, how he was called; he answered, that he was called Duke de Biron, Pair and Mareschal of France, whose Sword had placed the Crown upon the King's Head, and restored all them into their States and Dignities. Further, being demanded to reveal his Complices, (which he refused,) the * President wished him to consider, that he was in the Hands of Justice, who wanted not Means to draw the Truth from him. He answered, he knew his Meaning well, and withall unbraced his Doublet and shewed his Breast covered with Scarrs; and asked, what part of his Body they could put to Torment which had not already sufficiently been torn for their Safetie, and the Service of his Countrey: Which made the

* Achilles de Harlay.

An. 1602. old Man with Tenderness of Compassion, to melt into Tears in that abundance, that for that time he left him.

The Pairs were summoned to assist at his Judgment. The last Thursday the King came of purpose to this Towne to presse them to appeare, for they hold it to be an arbitrary matter, and alleadge the Judgment of the Constable St. Pol in the time of Louis the 11th, who was condemned by the Court of Parlament, without the Assistance of any one Pair. The King doth desire (which he hath very openly discovered) that the Connestable and the Duke d'Espernon should be present at his Judgment; upon hope, that the Mareschal, when he shall see his Complices to be his Judges, will loose all Patience, and accuse them both in the Face of the Court: For although at the first he did acquit the Duke de Espernon, yet sence he hath cast forth many doubtfull Speeches, whereby it appeareth he holdeth his Loyalty for much suspected. The Day for the Assembly of the Pairs cannot hold, for that the Proesse is not fully instructed, and when it shall be, they purpose to excuse themselves: Some, that they are his Allies; others, that they are not bound to be there present; the others, not to seem too forward to wishe or hasten his End. There are of late other Witnesse come in, which must be examined and confronted with him; as a Man of de la Fin's who did remaine about the Duke of Savoy, and a Nephew of his returned from Spaine; and some other Particulars of this Practize are come to Light, as a Woman of Sens in Bourgoigne that should have ben apsted into the Marquises Service to empoison the King, and of three Spanish Captains apprehended in Basse Bretaine, at a place called Chincarneau, and lastly, two others apprehended in Lorraine by the Duke, which are accused to have some Deseign against the King's Personne. In this latter there is named an Englishman called Pits, born in Oxfordshire, where his Friends yet do dwell, not far from that Towne. He long hath lived in Lorraine, and governed the Affaires of the Cardinal, who doth command that State. What can be proved against him is not yet knowen: His Friends deliver only this, that the last Year when the King was at Callais, discoursing with some of his Acquaintance of the Subject of that Voiage, he should saie; rather then to see him King of England, he himself would be his Bourreau.

In Burgoigne all Troubles are well composed. The Mareschal Laverdin hath Commaundment to approach with his Forces near to the River of Rhone, for the Aid of Geneva, if the Duke of Savoy shall assaile that Towne; who doth arme, and under the Colour of a Jubilee long sence commenced, and now continued for two Months, hath made a great Amass of Armes and Provision for Warr. If the Mareschal's Enterprize had succeeded, the first Deseign was to assaile Geneva, which they did hope to surprize, and the second, to besiege Lyons. The King is given to understand, that the Duke of Savoye, upon the Newes of the Mareschal's Imprisonment, did fall into that Impatiencie, that he tore his Hair from his Beard, and offer'd, if he had not ben withheld, to run his Head against the Wall.

This Week past the Agent of the States was put into some hope by Monfieur de Villeroy, that the King would approach towards the Frontiers of Picardy, with resolution to imbarque himself into their Warre; but by the Audience which sence he hath had, he hath found him nothing disposed to breake with Spaine. Yet now againe Monfieur de Rhosny doth assure him, that the King doth purpose this Weeke to advise with the Counsaile upon that Affaire, and if he shall resolve for the Warre, to send expressly to her Majestie, to know how farre she will be pleased to joyne with him. But by the Forme of their proceeding it is more probable, that they will resolve nothing suddainly, untill some Newes shall come of the Success of the States Armie, whereof here is not one word.

It is taken here to be a very hardy Enterprize, to cast themselves into the Strength of the Enemies Countrey, where they can look for no Succour, nor find any Retreat; and where there is an Army one fourth larger then that of theirs, which doth waite on their heels, to serve themselves of all Advantages.

I am informed that there are Watches set upon the Ambassadors of Spain's and the Archduke's Lodgings, and Don Emanuel's, whom Fortado hath brought with him from Delf in Holland, upon hope to make his Appointments easie; but rather it is thought, to see what Credit he hath gotten in those Parts, to draw the States to a Parley of Peace. The Duke of Savoie had no reason to make doubt to gaine a strong Party in France, when as he could fasten 12000 Crowns upon the Count Chiverny the last Chancellor's Sonne, (who may dispend 120000 Franks a Year in the Heart of this Realme) which he confesseth he did receive, at such time as he was Hostage in Savoie, upon the last Treary of Lyon. The King hath given him his Pardon, as likewise for the Murder of his Wife; whom finding to be with Child at his retorne from Savoie, he caused to be strangled before his Face.

The Pope hath written Letters to the King, wherein he protesteth upon his Knowledge, that the Preparations of Italy were never projected against France, but either against the Turk, Ireland, or the Low-Countries. No Man doth believe that those Forces were prepared against Rache in Fez, though that be most generally bruited.

Upon Thursday last, certaine Italian Comedians did set up upon the Corners of the Passages in this Towne, that that Afternoone they would plaie l'Histoire Angloise contre la Roine d'Angleterre. I caused one of the Affiches to be taken downe, which presently I presented unto the Chancellor before the Body of their Counsaile; and shewed, that if the Pollicie of their Government did permit these insolent Indignities, her Majestie might justly think, that they did neither carrie due Respect to the Honor of her Estate, nor make any worthy Esteem of her Amitie and Alliance. The Chancellor did send for the Lieutenant Civill, to whose Charge it doth appertaine to give Order for such Abuses, and gave him Commandment to inhibit the Play; which was done, and ex proprio motu, the Lieutenant committed the cheife of the Company to Prison, where yet they remaine. It was objected to me before the Counsaile by some Standers by, that the Death of the Duke of Guise hath ben plaied at London; which I answered was never done in the Life of the last King; and sence, by some others, that the Massacre of St. Bartholomews hath ben publickly acted, and this King represented upon the Stage.

I understand that yesterday de la Fin was confronted with the Mareschal; who shewed so little Moderation in the Violence of his Passions, that he attempted diverse times to take him by the Throat; so that the Archiers of the Guards, which were his Keepers, were called in to govern his Armes. The King is now at St. Maur, where he taketh the Water of Pogues. These Bruites of the Dauphin, which herewith I presume to send, would make one believe, that in these Practises he should not have been spared. And so I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's, &c.

P O S T S C R I P T.

I received this Morning this Advertifement from our Merchants at Roüen, which doth come very late, that in this Paiement of quart d'Escus, there will be great Losse in the Mynt, both because their Coine here doth want the just Weight, and that there is much Counterfait in that Specie, especially in Normandy, wher this Somme is collected. Otwell Smith, if not by himself, yet by some Italians, might undertake the Exchange at a lesf Losf.

An. 1602.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

17th July, 1602.

THE Expectation to heare of the Conclusion of Monsieur de Biron's Tragedy, and the contynuall Readiness of the Ambassador to depart, have made me silent longer then was fitt, although I know not many things where unto you can expect much Answer. For in the Matter of Money, (before I received your last Letter) I conceived the incommoditie to have it brought over in Specie, in respect of the lightness of the Coyne, and therefore it is ordered to make it over by Exchange; for which purpose, certaine Merchants here are dealt withall to receive it at Diepe or Roüen, upon the Arrivall of Sir Thomas Parry there; who hath an originall Bond justly agreeing with that Somme, and one hundred Pounds more, which he hath order to deliver; and if he may get it all now paid, then need there no more Circumstance then the Delivery of the Bond; which methinks weare reasonable, the Queene losing so much by the Exchange, as that overplus of the Bond. For the Powder and Cannon whereof you wroate and have sent Example; though it cannot be denyed but the Powder is good, yet her Majestie is so well furnished with both, as she shall not at this tyme have occasion to use them, whereof I thought it my part to advertise you.

As concerning your self, in what forme you shall live after the Arrivall of the Ambassador, you may be assured that I had ever Care of your Reputation, who have so well deserved there; and it is as convenient for her Majestie's Honor that good regard should be taken thereof, as it is of Necessity that you should spend some tyme with her Minister, who must needs be to seek at his first coming. You shall therefore know, that her Majestie hath dealt with the French Ambassador here, to make it known to the King by Monsieur de Villeroy, that notwithstanding she hath an Ambassador Leger there, yet she hath commanded your abode for some few Monethes, wherein she doth desyre, that notice be taken of you as of her owne Servant; in which respect she desyreth the King will esteem you, and upon any occasion of your Resort to him, eyther with any thing from the Ambassador, or from her self, to give you favourable Access. You shall also receive your ordinary entertainment which you had before his coming, and shall upon your retourne perceive, I doubt not, how well her Majestie hath been informed of your Dilligence; to which (whatsoever addition I can make) you may be assured of my good Will, to whom, I pray you, forget not to write as often as you may, though there be an Ambassador; for although Matters serious, and in Negotiation are most proper for the Ambassadors Dispatches, yet you may find the subject of many things for your Letters, because her Majestie loves to hear the Discourses accidentall of that State and Court, wherein your Letters have heretofore given her Majestie very good Satisfaction. And least you should think the Ambassador should take Apprehension of it, you may take notyce that you weare so directed to doe; for the Queen told him her self, that it was not possible, that he being a Stranger, can be informed as you may be, whose quallitie as Ambassadour tyes him to a more Reservedness from Companies than it doth you, that may make your self a Courtier with less Notice and Observation; and so for this tyme I commit you to God, &c.

at Greenwich.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 21 July, 1602. O. S.

BY those Letters which I lately sent by Romain, your Honor doth understand, that upon Saterday last the Mareschal Biron did appear in the Court of Parliament, where the Chambers, the Presidents and Councillours, with the Chancellor and some of the Councill of Estat were assembled, to heare what he could alledge for himself, and thereupon to determine his Cause. It is said, he spake long, and not to ill Purpose, "Insisting much upon the great Services performed by his Father and himself to this Crowne, and in particular to the Person of the King. He acknowledged some Errours he had committed, whereunto Vanity and Ambition had induced him, but said they were only in Conceit, and imaginative Projects, whereas his Services were real and of effect, whereof the Realme doth now enjoye the Advantage. He beseeched the Court in Uprightness of their Judgments, to make a difference between him and de la Fin his Accuser; whose Leudness had first debauched him, and now charged him with many false Accusations. He broke off his Speche through abundance of Tears, which he prayed might be imputed not to the want of Courage, but to a just Indignation, to see himself in that State, to the which the Jealousies of some, and the Envy of others had long sought, and now found means to bring him". When he had ended his Speech and returned to the Bastile, the Chancellor solicited the Court to pais their Voices, but it was thought more convenient to defer the Judgment till Monday. The Court assembled early in the Morning, and then sat till two of the Clock in the Afternoon. Then the Judgment was given, that he should be beheaded in the Greve. Upon Tuesday, when the Chancellor was to go to the Bastile to take from him his Order, which is the Form of degrading the Nobility, and the premier President to pronounce the Judgment of the Court; either at the Instance of his Friends, or because the King had so ordained it, Monfieur de Sillery was dispatch'd to know his Pleasure, whether the Execution should be publickly at the Greve, or within the Court of the Bastile. The King referred it to the Discretion of the Parliament; where this Morning it was decreed, that notwithstanding the Arrest given upon Monday, the Execution should be privately within the Bastile; where he suffered this Day between the Hours of four and five in the Afternoon, but in Extremity almost of Rage and Passion, using many Rodomanades to the Executioner and Company that assisted; neither could he be induced to yeeld himself to Death, or to the Punishment of the Law. His Death is generally lamented, yet his best Friends do acknowledge, that from his Infancy he had been a great Blasphemer, and that he was of a Disposition so savage, that he has with his own hand murdered five hundred Persons in cold Blood.

Monfieur de Boisse Governour of the Citradell of Bourg, is here arrived; who doth deliver, that the Neapolitans have made offer to pass through the Countrie, but were repulsed by some Companies that were there placed for that purpose by the Mareschal Laverdin. Thereupon the Maistre de Campe of these Troopes, came to expostulate about that Matter, protesting against that Wrong as a Breach of the League. The Mareschal answered, that he had received no particular Instructions from the King in that Point; and untill he should, by reason of those Jealousies within the Realme, he could not grant them Permission to passe. But he replied, his Master did not send him to ask Permission for that which he knew to be his own Right, and so departed.

Yt is here advertised that Grave is besieged by the States Army; which doth give occasion of Discourse in this Court, that Count Maurice doth know well how to make the best use of his Friends for his owne particular good, either without respect of the publick Service of his own State, or of the common Benefit of his Neighbours and Allies. The King is enformed that there is a Rebellion

An. 1602. in the Kingdom of Naples, and that the Inhabitants of that Towne have besieged one of the Castles called the Castle of St. Martin; and withall, that two Bishops are lately imprisoned at Rome, who had a purpose and practize to poison the Pope. The Cleargy, in a Synode which hath been held in this Towne, have made a Levye of six hundred Crowns, to be bestowed upon the English Catholics who live here. Henry Constable hath for his share 200, and so much hereafter of annuall Pension. By the same means I understand, that our English Priests have a Resolution to settle themselves in a Colledge in this Universtie called Mignon, which by the Marquise's Favour they hope to have appropriated to the Nation. Yf only professed Papists would reside there, it might pass without Opposition, for her Majestie's Ministers in this Place might make good use of some of them for her Service; but if it shall be turned to a Seminary, in that Forme which Rheimes heretofore hath been, and now Dorway and St. Omers are, your Honor doth best know the Danger and Dishonour that thereby may ensue univervally to the Realme.

The King is now at St. Germain's, drinking the Waters of Pogues. There is smal Appearance of any Voyage this Summer; and if perhaps he shall approach to the Frontiers of Picardy about the end of the next Winter, it will be a Voiage much like to that of Callais, for his own Pleasure and particular Contentment: The States shall not receive thereby any Profit, nor the Spaniards any Prejudice. And so I humbly take my leave

Your Honor's in all Duty humbly to be commaunded,

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

6th August 1602.

BECAUSE I know not yet whether Sir Thomas Parry be over or no, I think it not amiss to direct my Letters unto you, especially seeing they containe not (for the present) any other matter then to deliver this Packett inclosed to the Son of my Lord Thomas Howard. For any Occurrences here, there are none happened since my last, her Majestie's Army prospering well in Ireland, in so much as only their Expectation of Spaniards keepe the Rebels in Pride; but thereof you shall shortly see some Issue, for after mid September there is no great likelyhood of any Army; and for myne owne Part I am persuaded, whensoever they shall send this Yeare, their Numbers will be very small, and their Resolutions no more, then to possess some Port, and fortifie the same untill the next Yeare, that they may be readier to send such Forces as may be able to marche into the Countrey, which now they are not provided for. And yet they doing so much, it will keep some Reputation, and their holding any one Port in that Kingdom give great Encouragement to the Rebels, and the Enterprize will not be given over: In doing whereof the King understands sufficiently her Majestie shall be put to charge to expell them; wherein, this one Position I lay down to my self, that if it be thought that the King of Spaine will not land with smal Numbers and keep a Haven which may conveniently be besieged, (that for the purpose he hath, which is only to maintaine a continuall Fire in that Kingdom) he shall trouble the Queen as much with one thousand Men well fortified upon some Neck of Land, as if he landed five thousand in the best Town in Ireland. For though no Man doubts he shall ever be able to carry that Kingdome from the Queen, yet Experience teacheth us sufficiently, that in respect of the generall Defection in that Kingdome, and the Alienation of Hearts from this Government, she shall still be eaten out with Charge, as long as he hath any footing there. Thus have I rather discoursed with you to fill up a Letter, then for any other other Occasion which offers it self at this tyme, and therefore I do now commit you to God, &c. An. 1602.

Your very loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Diepe, 7th August 1602. O. S.

FROM Rouën my Lord Ambassador by his Letters to Mr. Willaston hath called me to this Towne, whither, with some Difficultie the King's Receivours were intreated to bring back the Money, and that with the greatest Diligence, because the Captaine of her Majestie's Shippe doth advertise, that the Vittaille therein doth grow skante, scarcely sufficient for above two or three Days, which in a Contrarietie of Wynd or fowle Weather might cause an Inconveniencie. At my Arrivall here, I found the Mayster of the Shippe which transported my Lord, arrested by a Marriner of New-haven for the Sume of eleven Crowns, which as is pretended he took from him the last Year. As his Lordship hath just Reason to be sensible of this Indignitie, so I have remonstrated to the Governour Monsieur de Chattez, that as this Treatment is a private Wrong to the Party, who hath an Attestation under the Captain's Hand of the Shippe, that that Shippe of New-haven, out of which the Plantiff doth pretend this Money to be taken from him, was entirely restored, without dommage to any particular Person interested therein, the which Monsieur de Villiars Governour of New-haven hath often acknowledged to me, so yt is a Disgrace to her Majestie's Ambassador; which if his Lordship should exasperate, it would appear, that at one blow, the Lawes Civill, (whereby the Country is governed) the Lawes of Nations, and in consequence the Alliance between the two Crowns, and lastly of Courtesie and good Manners, whereof he is knowen to be a religious Observer, were much impeached. Monsieur de Chattez (whom your Honor doth know to be a kind Gentleman, and who here hath honorably treated and feasted my Lord) doth offer rather then his Lordship should conceive any unkindness against him, or the Plantiffe complain for want of Justice, to reimbourse the Money out of his own Purse. At Rouën upon Tuesday last, the Mareschal Vervacques was received Governor thereof by the Parliament, which is as much as to say, that the King doth purpose to suspend the Government of that particular Towne and Place, from the Consent of the generall Governor of the Province; and therefore at Paris yt is said, the Count de Auvergne shall be removed to Loches, that the King upon that Pretext may retyre that place out of de Espernon's Hands. I have omitted in my last Dispatch from Paris, to make relation of the Book which this Post doth deliver to your Honor, the Author of it is one Dr. Ely who professes the Laws at Pont Muffon. I have sent my Lord of London 50 Coppies, and as his Lordship shall advertize, more may be sent. And soe, &c.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 21st August 1602. O. S.

BECAUSE it is likely that my Lord Ambassador shall attend some time for his first Access to the King, and now 'tis long since your Honour did hear from hence, I do presume to return this Messenger, though these Times present no great matter that doth require an Express dispatch. It may therefore please your Honour to understand, that my Lord Ambassador arrived in this Towne the 14th of this present; the Day after (which was Satterday) I went to Monceaux, to advertize the King thereof, who that Afternoone was gone to Ternay, a Place belonging to the Duke of Mombason, (two Leagues from thence,) upon an Assignation given him by the Marquise, from whence he did not returne before almost Midnight. Upon Sunday Morning between five and six, riding from Meaux (where I lodged,) towards Monceaux, I met him in the Field, accompanied with some 15 Horse; to whome having deliver'd the Cause of my coming, he willed me to go and speake with Monsieur de Villeroy, for that he then was going a hunting. He went to the place from whence he came the Night before, and dined at Fresuez, a place where the Secretary of that Name doth now remaine, an English Mile from Terny, where he was entertained that Day until the Evening. On Monday Morning he called for me, and then said that within four or five Days he would be at Paris, where my Lord Ambassador should hear from him. He entered into Discourse of the Affaires of Irelande, where I had occasion to reforme in him two Errours whereof he was possessed; the one, that certaine Spaniards to the number of 5000, were landed in that Realme; the other, that her Majestie had revoked her Fleet from the Coast of Spaine, which I assured him was refreshed and reinforced. He called to him Monsieur Villeroy, before whom he told me, that he had received that Morning Letters from Flanders, wherein was advertized that the Archduke had lately sent into Ireland to assure the Rebels, that within a short tyme they should receive Succours from Spaine. To this I answered, that they should find her Majesties Shippes upon the Seas ready to waiste them over; and at their landing, her Forces would attend to entertaine them with open armes; and so he dismissed me. Now for his coming to this Towne, I understand that he hath written to the Marquise, to go to Vernuille, where he will find her, and that yet for five or six Days he will not be in this Towne.

These latter Troopes of Spaine for the Archduke are not yet passed; for because at the first their Passage was disputed, after Permission they refused to stir; and since many of them are disbanded, so that of 3000 Neapolitans, there are not now 1200, which are yet at Nissi in Savoy, a Towne belonging unto the Duke of Nemours.

I have seen Letters of the 16th of this Moneth from Rochelle of certaine Merchants, who at St. Lucar by Sevill, in those Gallies which lately arrived from Naples, did see Sebastian of Portugall. They relate that he was enchained, apparlled and for his Diet treated like other Forcatz, but did not row at the Oare. They offered him Money, Apparrell, and other Commodities, which he refused. * There came to see him the Duke de Medina Sidonia with his Wife; he asked him if he yet had the Sword which he gave him at such time as he was sent Ambassador to him from the last King of Spaine, and praied that he might see it: The Duke caused to be brought twelve Swords, which when he had viewed, he said, that amongst them the Sword was not; the Duke sent then for as many more, amongst which he found the Sword, as the Duke himself acknowledged. He doth comfort himself much in his Affliction, and desireth to be carried into Portugall, where he will discover a Million of Treasure, which he did hide before his Departure from thence.

* Vide Mathieu's Cronologie Septenaire, pag. 247. Edit. Paris 1605. 8^{vo}.

This

This Queen at her coming into France did bring with her a Florentine Maide called Leonora, married sence to an Italian named Concigno. She, who ever hath had much Power over the Queen, lately fell sick; and being without hope of Recovery by the help of Physick, under Pretext of Cure for her Health, the Queene did send for from Sienna a religious Woman, a professed Capuchina, who is arrived in this Towne; whom she holdeth to be a Saint and a Prophetesse, as one that heretofore (as she saith) hath foretold her all that hath befallen her in her Life, as that she should be Queen of France, and that at the end of ten Months she should be delivered of a Son. This Vanity is the more distastfull in this Court, the more Conformity it hath with the Humors of the * Queen Mother, whose Curiosity, devoted to the Superstition of Divination and Sooth-saying, through too much Credulitie to attaine the good she expected, and to decline the Evill she feared, embroiled this Estate in that Confusion, that the Memory thereof doth make this Queen in her Vertues les gracefull, and in all Actions subject to Interpretation, obnoxious to the Prejudice of Malice and Indiscretion.

Here is arrived in this Towne an Ambassador from Savoie called the Comte of Visebi, as it's thought to justifie his Master's Honor against such Allegations as may be pretended against him, in the Enterprize of the late Marechal. The Lord Hume arrived here the same Day that my Lord Ambassador did, but late in the Evening, chusing rather not to be seen, then seen not so well accompanied as he was, who entered into this Town with more then an hundred Horse. I understand of no greater Negotiation he hath to treat, then to congratulate with the King for the Discovery of the late Enterprizes, and to give thanks for the establishing of the hundred Gendarmes in the Person of the young Prince, which for ought I see, is rather in Demonstration then in Effect, and so will remaine untill the Delivery of the Queene, which is attended now in October. If then she shall bring forth a Daughter, the King will make a Present of her to the young Prince, with all other Favours to advance his Honor.

The Hopes for the speedy takeing of Grave do not succeed, the Enemie's Army is approaching near, wherein hath been some Confusion, for the Admirante will command, and the Marquise of Spinola will not obey. Don Giovanni de Medicis, Unckle to this Queen, is said to be arrived at Brussels, and likewise the Duke of Ossona a Spaniard, who lately lived in this Towne in the Ambassador's House dissolutely and ridiculouly. The Duke of Parma is likewise expected there.

I left Pynson at Rouen with purpose to pass to Lisbone, but he is returned to this Towne: I find his Heart doth not serve him to retourne into Spaine. He is willing to go into Flanders, wherein what your Honour shall command shall be put in Execution, and so I humbly take my leave, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

POSTSCRIPT.

My Lord Ambassador hath received this Message from the King by Monsieur Gondy, to repayre to Monceaux upon Monday next, where he shall understand his further Pleasure.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

30th August 1702. O. S.

MY Letters would be superfluous were it not to obey your Honor's Commandment; sith for the good of her Majesty's Service and my private Respect to my Lord Ambassador, I do communicate dailey unto him, not only

* Katharine de Medicis.

An. 1602. what I understand of the Affaires here, but the means also whereby I receive the Understanding thereof. If therefore I shall present crambem bis coctam, which cannot but bring with it an unfavory Taste, yet your Honor will be pleased (sith so you do command) to accept it in place of better Service. My Lord Ambassador received his first Audience at Monceaux the 25th of this Moneth. His wellcome shewed how gratefull and acceptable his comming is. The Lord Hume was first heard, and the last the Ambassador of Savoie, who did but enter in and go out; not that he had littell to say, but that the King was not willing to hear much, for it grew late, and he had appointed that Evening to hunt the Wolfe. It is here said that this Ambassador hath three principall Points to negotiate. First to expostulate the Reason why these latter Troupes, which lately were to passe through la Bresse, were hindred in their Passage. Then to justifie his Master's Honor, and to protest in his Name, that he never was partaker of any practize with the late Marechal, but only in the last Warr of Savoie; at which time all means were lawfull for him to advance the Course of his Affaires, for Dolus an virtus quis in hoste requirat? Lastly to demand Justice against la Fin, whom he chargeth by many sinister Accusations wrongfully to have slandered the Honor of the Duke. La Fin is in this Towne, and often frequenteth the Court. He challengeth a Promise to be Marechal of France, but the Duke of Tremouille having ben refused in the same Pretension, upon this Reason, that that Estate should be reformed to the antient Reglement, (which doth admitt only the Number of four,) it is not likely his Desyre shall take place. The King doth grow very weary of him, and his Counsaile do hold it convenient to have him removed from the Court, who doth dayly buz in the King's Ears new Practices, which should be complotted against him and his State, and thereby doth drive him into an univerrall Defiance of his most loyall Subjects and truest Servants.

Here is arrived the Administrator of Strasbourgh. He is come to demand Assistance of the King against the Cardinal of Lorraine, who doth encroach upon his Freehold, contrary to that Capitulation of Partage which was accorded between them for the Bishoprick of that Place. He is lodged and treated by the King, which is the greatest Favour he hath reason to expect from hence; for there is no Appearance that the King will declare himself in a Cause, whereby he shall give just Offence to the Duke of Lorraine, (whose dispence is chiefly supported by the Revenew of his Son the Cardinal,) and to the Pope, (who would wrest this to a Matter of Religion,) and of the Church, whereof this King doth affect the Title of Protector. The King hath sent the Cardinal Joyeux to Rome much against his will, upon this shew of Honor, that because he is the Protector of the French Nation, his Subjects in their particular Causes cannot want his Countenance and Assistance, nor the Affairs of State his Service and Presence about the Pope. The purpose is to send him far from hence, where the good he can do, will be to do the least harm; and remove him from the Duke Montpensier, thereby to weaken and dissolve that Confederacie, which under the specious Lustre of Religion and du bien public, whilst the Heads subsist, shall want no Fauters to embrace the Party.

The Duke of Bouillon was never in worse Termes with the King then at this present; he lately received a publick Indignitie, which would not easily have ben offered to a particular Person. The Principalltie of Sedan for more then an hundred Years hath ben under the Protection of this Crowne. Sence it came into his hands, he hath purchased many Liberties and Privileages, and in a manner incorporated it into this Estate, so that the Inhabitants of that Towne are naturalized through this Realme and wholly exempted from the Droit d'Aubeine. Now very lately, and which before never was practiced, the ordinary Coach which weekly doth pass from Paris to Sedan was arrested by the Fermiers of the King's Droits, and 800 Ducats which was found therein leazed to the King's Use, as Money forfeited to be conveyed out of the Realme, and so by Arrest of the Counsaile it hath ben adjudged, and the Mony confiscated.

This

This Charity Monsieur de Rhosny doth lend to the Duke de Bonillôn; whereint he may be the bolder, because the Viconté of Turene is seated in the Heart of the Realme; otherwise this rude Treatment might make him renew the ancient inscription over the Gates of Sedan, si Dieu ne me veut, le diable me veut.

This is all that we hear from Grave, that the Admirante is retired with his Army towards Raveiften, to impeach Count Maurice of his Virtaille; whose Campe is diminished by the Departure both of French and Dutch. Here are Letters of the 26th that speak of the Disgrace befallen to Sir Francis Vere, and to Colonel Temple. The Archduke hath received a partito for 300000 Ducats, payable in four Months. To the latter Clause of this Advertisement, which herewith I send, and which I received from _____, here are Letters of the 11th of the last from Lisbonne, that say, Frederigo Spinola did then depart with six Gallies. I have once or twice visited Monsieur de Boisfisse since his returne. As his Carriage in the Charge he held in England, did promise when he should be returned, no great Good, so the littell use that here is made of him, doth threaten no great harm. The King doth much mislike his want of Moderation; and Monsieur de Villeroy doth now acknowledge, that he was an unfit Minister to maintaine the Amitie between the two Crowns.

The Queen came to this Towne upon Satterday last, but the King hath ben these eight Dayes at Vernueil. And so I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Since the Date of those Letters (which I deferred to close up untill my Lord Ambassador should be ready to send away) the King is here arrived, who at this time is much offended with the Messieurs of the Parliament who will not be induced to condemn Hibbert the late Mareschal's Secretary, and refuse to verify the Edict for the enbauncing of Money, which Monsieur de Rhosny doth violently prosecute.

This Day old Pasquier was with me. I beseech your Honor to save my Credit with him, and to give him that Comfort, of her Majestie's gracious Acceptance of his Duty and Service; and withall to be pleased to remember the Duke of Wirtemberg's Ambassador.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

1st September 1602.

I Have now written to Sir Thomas Parry, and sent him such Occurrences as the present time doth afford; his Letter (being only written upon his Arrivall at Rouen) requiring no other Direction, but to let him know that her Majestie is very well satisfied with the Course he hath taken, in transporting of the Mony hether by Exchange.

As concerning Pynson, I have perceived by his Carriage and Behaviour, that he hath been crossed again in his Purposes for Spayne, whereby he seemeth to be so terrified, as he doth rather offer himself to be employed for the Low-Countries. Whereunto, although I know not what other Answer to returne him, but that he may meet with as many Difficulties there as in the other place; yet because I find he hath some Witt, and pretendeth a great Desire to do Service, for to recompence the great Charges he hath stood me already without any use at all; If you finde now that he may be able from Brussells to settle some good Correspondency with me, I will be contented to continue my former Entertainment to him, although I must needs tell you, I see no reason why he should deserve so large a Stipende there as in Spayne: But I wholly refer it to your Discretion, as well this, as to agree with him of the Means of conveying Letters

An. 1602. ters unto me, and the place where his Entertainment is to be configned, either by way of Antwerpe or Paris, or otherwise as you shall think most convenient, so as only I may be sure to receive his Advertisements with Expedition, which otherwise will prove but fruitless unto me. Whatsoever you shall agree upon in this matter, I will not faile to perform it. And so I leave it to God's Protection, &c.

From the Court at Oatelands.

Your very loving Friend,
RO. CECYLL.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 15th Sept. 1602. O. S.

Notwithstanding the Care which here hath ben taken to dissemble all Grievances which ought justly to be professed against Spainne, whom the World doth take notice to have had the greatest hand in these late Practices, yet now both the King and Monsieur de Villeroy do not spare to use this and the like Language, That there is no means longer to endure this Fashion of proceeding, dangerous to their Safety, and disgracefull to their Honor: That will they, will they, they must resolve for the Warr: That Spainne will never cease dishonorably to practise against the State and Person of the King. Be it that this proceeds from some fresh Discovery since the Execution of the late Mareschal, or from more mature and better digested Resolution; or, (which I fear is most probable) that they accommodate their Speech to the Humors of them with whom they speake; and now that the Season of the Year is past for Action, they make shew of Inclination to the Warr, thereby to amuse their Neighbours and Allies, and to detourn them from Consideration of Peace; yet this doth hold them en cervelle, that unto that Remnant of Neapolitans (which since the stay of Passage remaine at Nissi) there are come downe in Savoie twenty two Companies of Spaniards, and are in Garrison at Conflans, Charbonniere, and Montmelian, but in the Town, not in the Castell. This gives occasion of Discourse, (though upon small Ground) that sith the Duke of Savoie would never suffer, no not in the time of Warr, that the Spaniard should hold Garrison in his Country, that there should be an Exchange between the Dutchies of Milan and Savoie. The Descent of these Souldiers, was to put two of the Regiments, viz. of Ravestlin and Bourgh, which were with the Mareschal Laverdin, into Garrisons at Valence and Romance; the rest, retrenched of their Recruits, are returned, and nine Companies are to be sent to the Frontiers of Picardy.

'Tis written out of Italie, that the King of Spainne doth furnish the Duke of Savoie with 500000 Ducats; 300000 at Milan, and the rest at Rome. Antonio Perez is advertised, that those Gallies at Santa Maria should be for Alghiers; upon which reason, (to assure his Assistance) the King of Morocco hath sent his Son Hostage into Spainne.

The Edict for enhancing the Value of Money is passed, but not yet publish'd: The Crown of Gold at 65 Pence, of Silver 64: But all which are not Weight are to be brought to the Mynte. This will breed a great Confusion, and much doth discontent the Subject, only the King hath the Gain, who hath and will gather into his Hands the whole Trefure of the Realme.

Monsieur de Espernon is gone to his Government of Metz to give Satisfaction to the People of that Town, which generally is discontented with the Lieutenant called Subole, and to remove him from thence: Who if he had used his best Discretion to have gained the Love of the Towne, he was then in a fair way to have removed Monsieur de Espernon, and possessed himself absolutely of the place. We hear that the Archduke's Camp is in great Confusion, many mutined, others others revolted, Alphonso d'Avila and Conte Trivulcio disarmed, and confined within the Walles of Brussels. An. 1602.

The States have written to their Agent to advertize the King, that upon the taking of Grave, (which they presume so they may receive some comfortable Assistance from him) they will descend the River with their Army, and enter into Flanders. The Agent hath demanded 1500000 Crowns. This is iniquum petere ut æquum ferant; and Monsieur de Rhosny willed him once for all, to ask the King's Elspargue. The Marschal d'Ornano hath advertized the King, that the 15th of this Moueth by their Stile, Spinola with his Gallies did pass by Bourdeaux.

The Turk doth come down strong upon the Emperour with an Army of 200000 Men, and hath already invested Alba Regale, which the Duke of Mercœur the last Year did recover. Cigala his General at Sea is gone forth with sixty Gallies, and doth bear towards Calabria. He hath chosen out his time seasonably for his purpose. The Emperour's Army is 30000 strong, and wholly employed in establishing the Frontiers of Transilvania; and the King of Spainye hath providently dispossessed those parts of Italie of Men and Gallies.

Thus far I had written some Dayes since, attending howerly when my Lord Ambassador would dispatch. Since, the King is advertized from Prague that Alba Regale was taken by Assault the 28th of the last, and all within, without Mercy, put to the Sword. The six Gallies of Spinola, accompanied with eight Galleons, were seen the 13th of this Month at Bell Isle. The solemn Ambassy of the Suisses is on the way, viz. two of every Canton, who come to swear the Treatie, which at the beginning of this Year that unhappie Marschal did negotiate. Where the King will receive them it is uncertaine, either here where now he is, or at Fountainbleau, where the Queene doth desire to go to be delivered. But wheresoever it be, the King by Contract doth defray them, from the Day they set forth, untill the Day they be rendred at home. The best Answer the States Agent doth receive to his last Propofalls, is, the last Payment of the 300000 Crowns, which was ordered for them; but Monsieur de Rhosny by his good Husbandry doth retrench them of 20000 Franks, according to the new Reglement, which herewith I send unto your Honor.

My Lord Hume (unwilling to make a long Harvest of a little Corne in this unseasonable Weather) at his third Access to the King did take his leave, and departed from hence on Monday last. He was presented with a Jewell beset with Diamonds, wherein is wrought the Medalia of this King and Queen, esteemed at 7 or 800 Crowns.

Touching this Letter which herewith I send addressed to your Honor, this is all I can say; Captain Jacques, who is sent for into Spainye, is the Person that giveth the Advertizement. Here lyeth sick at Taxis House one Richardo de Marteno Lieutenant of the King's Guards, who is going into Flanders: He speaketh much to the purpose of this Letter. But sith they are so good to give so fair warning, it seems they have no regard to do any great hurt; and now all other means fayle, great Words must maintaine there Reputation. I have delivered your Honor's Letter to Monsieur de Villeroy, which he kindly accepted. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

An. 1602.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 29th Sept. 1602. O. S.

MY Lord Ambassador, upon Advertizement that the Gallies of Spinola were lodged within the Harbor of Blauet in Bretaigne, having demonstrated to Monsieur de Villeroy how contrary this proceeding is even to the very litteral Words of the Treaties, much more to the Correspondence of that Amitie which her Majestie in real Affection doth bear to this Crowne, and he thereupon promising purposely to conferr with the King thereof, and to know his Pleasure therein, thought it convenient that I should repair unto him, and receive from him the King's Answer. After I had followed with him the same Reasons which my Lord Ambassador before had urged, adding, "that their Hopes of being received, entertained, and refreshed within their Ports, did give them Courage to undertake this Enterprize, and that without those Favours, the naturall Course of the Sea would cause the Gallies to run a hazardous Fortune; He gave me this Answer, that Blauet was an open Bay, where the King had no Force to keep them out; yet so soon as the Country had News that there they were, the People did rise up in Armes, and assembled at the Sea side to chase them thence. He said, that there were many Creeks, Harbours, and Retraicts upon the Coast, where both Gallies and other Shippes might retire, as without giving them warning, so without asking them leave; but within the Ports where the King did hold Governours or Garrison, they could not be so hardy to offer to enter, neither should they be received but with shott of Cannon. I then remembred unto him an Ordonance published by the King some three Years sence, that no Shippes of Warr, of what part soever, should harbour in their Ports; which I praied, if it were recalled, might be renewed, and if refused, revived. He answered, the Edict stood still in Force, and upon any Instance that should be made that it was not observed, the Observation thereof should be efficaciously recommended to all particular Governours, to whose Charge the Care doth appertaine.

"I then, being so willed by my Lord, moved him for the King's Answer for the Reimbourment of her Majestie's Money, which his Lordship had pressed to the King, by whom he was address'd for Answer to him. But he said, in that point he had not yet moved the King, but would do it when the time was seasonable. I replyed, that no time was out of Season for that Subject, the King being so well able to satisfy her Majestie's Demands, and her Occasions dailey pressing, and after so long Forbearance, attending Satisfaction. To this he answered, that he best knew the Conveniency of the King's Seasons, and before to move him would be but lost Labour, without Contentment to my Lord Ambassador, whose Patience herein he did pray yet for some few Daies": And more I could not draw from him. This Answer I do interpret, that when the Estate of the Finances for the Year to come (which now is in hand) shall be dressed, the King will resolve what Portion he will pay of her Majestie's Debts, and this Year now running he will pass over with the Paiement which is received of 50000 Crowns: Yet Monsieur de Beaumont upon his Departure from hence, of which I then advertised your Honor, to some particular Friends did deliver, that he had Commission to assure 200000 Ducats; and Monsieur de Buzanval, who then was here, and had seen his Instructions, though he would not nominate the Sume, yet said it was more then 50000 Ducats.

Here hath ben of late nothing more currant in this Court, then that there is intended a Treaty between her Majestie and the Archduke; which is said by some to be so farr advanced, that there should be a Meeting assigned for Conference between your Honor and the President Richardot: Wherein, all Estates of Christendom being deeply interested, the Ministers of such Princes which reside here have taken the Alarum, and because they fear it, do beleieve it.

it. I find no other Head of this Opinion then this King and Counsaill, who are willing under hand to make way to this Bruit, whereof they desire the World should be possessed, not that they believe it, (for they know the contrary,) but hereby (under the Mantle of this colourable Pretext) to cover the Weakness of their Resolution, in not taking notice of these Practices of Spaine; holding in reason of State, this to be a Reason more then sufficient, that therefore they may not break with Spaine, because the Queen of England doth intend her Peace. Before the Arrivall of my Lord Ambassador, to all those, who jealous of the Honor of this Crowne did move for Warr, the King's Answer was, that he in his own particular did hold it to be his only Course, but would attend to resolve, untill he should hear what the English Ambassador had to say: Now upon his second Audience, he complaineth, that he expected that many Overtures should be made unto him from her Majestie; both to have encouraged, and enabled him to break with Spaine; which not coming, he must have patience, untill he shall be able to subsist by his own Forces. To this I have answered, what other Overture can they desire of greater Importance, then her Majestie's dayly Actions well knownen to the World, and acknowledged by Spaine both by Sea and Land? Or what hope can there be that any Overtures from her Majestie shall be received, when their own Ambassador hath ben disavowed in his Propositions, and their own Words ben gainsaid by their own Mouthes? And if they desire any Overtures should be proposed, it is for no other end then to establish a more assured Friendship with the Crown of Spaine; desyring to make known to that King, that though these and these Overtures have ben made them; yet they hold his Friendship more dear, then to break upon any Considerations that may be tendred, either of Honor or Profit. But besides the univerrall Constitution of this State, the particular Carriage of all Matters sence the Discovery of the Mareschal's Practices, do shew no Inclination to the Warr: As Commandment to the Court of Parliament, not to name the King of Spaine in that Procefs: The Language of Monsieur de Rhosny to the Spanish Ambassador: The good Treatment the Ambassador of Savoye hath here received, to whom the King's last Words were, he desired to have Peace, and Peace he would have. And which is most materiall, to make Warr with Spaine, must enforce a more streight Alliance with England and Holland, and that must cause an Alienation from Rome, and draw the King to serve himself of his Subjects of the Religion, the cheefest whereof, are now not only the best, but the only Captaines of his Realme; all which, they that now sit at the Sterne of this State will avoyde, tanquam Scillam & Charybdim. So that there is no probabillity that here they will be induced to the Warr but in one of these two Cafes; either for their Defence if they shall be assailed, or that the Archduke's Provinces shall submit themselves to their Protection; which long they have hoped for, and now, by this violent Confusion which there daily multiplieth, (thinking nothing impossible to the great Fortune of this King,) they promise to themselves will shortly follow. Notwithstanding, the King hath sent for the Duke of Bouillon, upon shew, that he shall have cause to imploy him; and to be here by the end of November, because, being Premier gentilhomme de sa Chambre, (now Monsieur le Grand is gone this Week to his Government in Bourgoigne) his Presence will be requisite for the setting downe of the State of the Household for the next Year. The Duke doth hold the Wolfe by the Ears, for not to come is to acknowledge himself guilty of all those Calumnies whereof he long hath ben charged; and yet (whereof he is not ignorant) the Cardinal Joyeux telling the King, the Court of Rome was possessed of this Opinion, that the late Mareschal did suffer because he was too good a Catholick, whereas no Man said black is their Eye to some of the Religion, as deeply tempred in that Affair as he: He answered, he had begun with a Catholick, and would end with a Hugonot. But it ever fareth thus with him, in his Absence he is in Disgrace, and in Court no Man hath more appearance of Grace and Favour.

Here lately hath ben broken upon the Wheele alive one Fontanelle, who in the time of the League was Lieutenant of Bretaigne under Duke Mercœur. He had

An. 1602. complotted with the Spaniard, to deliver into his hands certaine Ports in that Province; which the Gallies of Spinola did confirm, who demanded for him at Blauet.

Upon Wednesday last the Count de Auvergne was delivered out of the Bastile, and at Zamet's House, where the King then dined, presented himself before him on his Knees. The King asked him in the Presence of the Nobility, what he demanded? he answered, Pardon, and his Grace. The King, after some pause, said, I graunt you both; and say to you as Christ said to the Woman in the Gospel, allez vous en & ne pechez plus, and so raised him up and embraced him; which the Nobility present afterwards did, every one in his rang. The King then took him with him in his Coach to the Louvre, and the next Day a hunting, and so he remains in Court as before. He first acknowledged to Monfieur de Rhosny his fault by word of Mouth, and confessed that he had received by the hands of the late Mareschal 10000 Crowns in Specie of Italie, which for fear of Discovery he sent to Avignon to be changed; and that they both received the Sacrament by the Hands of a Minime never to discover one the other. Afterward the King sent the Chancellor, and de Sillery, to take his Confession in writing, which containeth five Sheets of Paper. He hath as it is said runne over all those who at the first were nominated in this Practice, which Monfieur Montpensier misdoubting, hath humbled himself before the King, and demanding Pardon on his Knees, hath obtained it. This is the second time that this Count hath fallen into this keind; but hereby it appeareth how potent these Mediatrices are, who have interceded for him.

I understand that a young Youth named Crocher, whose Father is a Goldsmith in London, who long hath ben a roaging on this syde the Seas, is lately come out of Spaine and returned into England. He passed by Diepe, from whence I am advertised, that by some Language he there should use, he did discover, that during his aboad in Spaine, he did undertake some Attempt against your Honor's Person: This is a lame Advertizement; but Timidos mater nunquam plorat.

The King this Day is gone to St. Germain's, as it is thought to bring Monfieur le Dauphin to this Towne, to be present here at the swearing of the Treaty, which with the Suiffers is contracted as well in his as in the King's Name, whose Deputies are expected here the 5th of the next. The Number of the Soldiers in Savoie do daily increase, so that of Spaniards, Neapolitans, and of the Country, there are 10000, and now are lately come downe 500 Maistres, (for that is the Word of the Letters of the 25th of the last Month Stylo Novo) which cannot be feawer then a 1000 Horse; and the Duke hath brought downe out of Italie and Piedmont twenty two Pieces of Cannon. Hereupon it is discoursed, and not without Reason, that he doth purpose some Enterprize upon Geneva; yet the King here doth fear Lyons, the Moyetie whereof is composed of Savoiards, which he hath lately reinforced with a strong Garrison, and given Commandment to the Burgeois to keep Watch and Ward.

Whilist I was writing these, the Newes came of the Blow which Spinola hath received; the due Reward of his Folly and Pride. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 29th Sept. 1602. O. S.

BEFORE these Letters can come to your Honor's Hands, two Moneths will be passed, and the third somewhat advanced, since my Lord Ambassadors Arrivall into France. I hope therefore (which I humbly beseeche) that her Majestie in her gracious Favour will be pleased to give me leave to return; the the rather, because I now remaine unprofitably here, unnecessary for her Service, and unfervicable to my Lord Ambassador, who as having no need, hath had final use of my Presence about him. Herein I crave your Honor's Favour, to which I humbly submitt my self; and if upon my return my longer abode shall seem convenient, I am at Commaundment to be returned hither, and the absence of a few Daies from hence in this dead Season (which will give me the Happiness to kiss your Honor's Hands) will not prove ill employed, whereby I may deliver somewhat, which in the time of my Service here, Pen and Paper have not spoken. But I retourne to that Favour which ever I have received from your Honor, and which whollie hath Power to dispose of me. And so I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's in all Duty

humbley to be commaunded,

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

1st October 1602.

BECAUSE you may know that your Letters of the 6th and 15th of September have been received, which came in the Packett of the Ambassador, I have thought good to write unto you these few Lines, thereby to let you know also that her Majesty well alloweth your Dilligence, and requireth during the tyme of your abode, that you continewe the same. For your abode there, write freely unto me your Mind; whether it be any way so cross to your own particular Fortunes as that you would be gladd to retourne, for I will herein inclyne my self unto your owne Affections, as one to whom I wish well, especially seeing within a littell while Sir Thomas Parry will be acquainted, and gather good Experience of the Place. This I write, not because I have any Disposition you should be revoked, or because your writing gives not very good Satisfaction, but rather as an Argument of my Care of you: And so put an end of that matter. I am gladd you have dispatched the Partie for the Low-Countries, of whose Labour when we see the Fruits, we shall be better able to judge of his Merit. In the mean tyme, whatsoever Mony you have given order to disburse, the same shall be answered in his due time. And so I committ you to God.

From the Court
at Oatlands.

Your loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

Because you shall see my Letters to my Lord Ambassador, I leave all other Particulars, and the rather because we have no News which you know not. The six Gallies of Spinola are drowned and sunk by our Shippes, saving one that saved her self in Calais. The States Army is in Garrison since Grave is taken. We have some eight Shippes on the Coast of Spaine, which cannot long tarry out.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 7th Oct. 1602. O. S.

HERE is lately arrived to this Towne the Landgrave of Hesse. When he departed from his home, he gave forth that his purpose was to travaile into Italie, and to take his way through the lowermost parts of France. In Dauphiné he spoke with Monsieur Lefdiguieres, who first advertized of his coming to this Court from Marseilles. There first making shew of Alteration from his Voiage into Italie, he crossed into Languedoc, from whence in the way he passed

An. 1602. fed by Monsieur de la Tremouille, and so arrived to this Towne the last Week. Though he hath in his Company many Lords of great Quallitie, as the Count Holloc, and one of the House of Nassau, with such others, yet he remains here very private, and walks up and down slenderly followed, and most commonly attended only with one Man. He is now lodged the next House to the Louvre, which belongeth to Monsieur Monglats, to the end he may have access to the King, and the King to him, without passing through the Streets. He would be content the World should believe, that the same Caprice did move him to see France, which moved the Duke of Wirtemberg in the Year of Jubilee to go to Rome, which is the Cause he is so retired; yet he is no more known, then the Sun to give Light through a mistie Cloud at Noon-day. It is received, and so I am informed by them to whom he hath declared himself, that he is come to make an Overture to the King from the Princes Protestants of Germany, to contract with them a mutuall Alliance for the Maintenance of the Religion which now they profess, and the Conservation of their antient Liberties; in which Ligue they do presume her Majestie will be pleased to enter, and in Consequence the Kings of Scotland and Denmark, the Estats of the United Provinces, and Duke Charles of Sweden. To induce the King to this Alliance, he doth assure him, that the Princes Electors will declare him at the next Diet King of the Romains, against the Archduke Albert, whom the Emperour doth desseign to be his Successor. To what Issue this Negotiation will come may seeme doubtfull, yet the Landgrave hath great Hope that the King will embrace his Overture, and send one expressly to the Princes to treat this Alliance. He hath named Monsieur de Calignon Chancellor of Navarre, but because he is of the Religion, the King doth hold Monsieur de Chamburg more proper, who being Catholick and extract-ed out of that Nation, may negotiate this Busyness with less Bruite, and if it shall be evented, with lesse distaste to the Pope, whom he is not willing to offend.

But if this Treatie take Place, your Honor can best judge what effects will follow, and if the same Causes in the same Subject, accompanied with the same Circumstances, do ordinarily produce the same effects, it is likely hereby may arise a strange Revolution in the Estate of Christendome, and in all Apparance the House of Austria doth draw near his highest, if not farthest Periode, the Rebatement of whose Pride, the Landgrave doth most aim at; wherein this Crowne, being the most potential Instrument shall find this true, that quando Africa piange Italia non ride.

The Administrator of Strasbourg (whose Negotiation in the Forme he proceeded was communicated to the Cardinal of Lorraine his Adversary, though he treated only with the King and Monsieur de Villeroy.) receaving no other Satisfaction then good Words and fair Promises, had taken his leave when the Landgrave arrived; who sence hath retained him here, and doth follow his Cause with that earnest Affection, that he hath hope, that the King for earnest of his future Amitie will undertake his Protection upon this Reason, that Leopold, Brother to Ferdinando of Gratz, is to succeed the Cardinal of Lorraine, who ingrossing into his Hands the whole Estate of the Bishoprick of Strasbourg, may at his Pleasure possesse himself of the Towne, and so cut from France the ordinary and almost only passage into Germany.

Here is a great Discourse whether the Duke de Bouillon will come to the Court. Yt is dellyvered by them who best do know it, that the Count de Auvergne since his Enlargement, should secretly repair to the Princesse of Orange, and advise her, as she tender'd the Life and Fortunes of the Duke, in diligence to advertize him not to come, for that the King was resolved criminally to proceed against him. The Chamber in the Bastile where de Biron was lodged, doth remaine still hang'd and furnished, which la Marquise told the said Princesse, was to entertaine one of her best Friends. The Constable hath wished that he were at Sedan, where in all Extremities he should find a back Doore. The premier President not many daies sence did say, that he did see nothing plainly in these Proceedings,

Proceedings, but the Desire which Monsieur de Rhosny had to marry the Duke de Bouillon with the Marechal's Fortune: Which he spake the rather, because the King, (upon the Refusall of the Parliament to condemn Hibbert the Marechal's Secretary) hath taken from that Court the Cognoissance of Causes de crime de leze Majesté, and conferred it upon the Grand Counsaill. The French Proverb saith on ne prend point les Lievres avec le Tambour; yet the Marechal had as fair Warning, and who knows whether there be not some Artifice in this to keep the Duke from coming; either that thereby his Contumacie may condemne him in the Judgment of the World, and so the King have more just Cause to be incensed against him; or that it is wished he should absent himself, untill the Envie of the Marechal's Death be blowen over. The King doth charge him, that the last Year in December (when he went into Brabant about the Arbitrament between the Duke d'Espinox and the Count Lingy,) he then did treat with the Count Soare and the Duke of Arscott, and did undertake to induce the States to a Peace, or a long Truce, for which Office he did then stipulate for himself 400000 Ducats. The King doth take Exceptions against this; First, that the Duke did intend that Peace, that the Spaniard might have more leisure and libertie to invade him: Then, that at that time he had a Practise upon Artois, which the Duke did know and discover, and diverted the principall Favourers of this Desseign from entertaining Intelligence with him

The Deputies of the Suisses arrived here on Monday: There are two and forty for the Grisons and other Commonalties to joyne in this Ligue; only the Canton of Zurich, though content to be a Friend to this Crowne, will not be bound by Treaty, but doth remaine in Freedom and Liberty. Yesterday they had access to the King. The Chancelleir did feast them; from whose House to the Louvre the Duke d'Eguillon did conduct them to the Louvre-Gate. Monsieur Monpensier did there receive them, and brought them to the Entrance of the Great Hall, where the Count Soissons the Grand Maistre, did entertaine them, and accompanied them to the Ante Chambre, where the Prince of Condé did meet them and presented them to the King; who did attend them in his Chambre which here is called la Dorée in the greatest State. This Day they are gone to St. Germain to visit Monsieur le Dauphin. On Sunday the King doth swear the Treaty to the Cantons Catholick in the Morning, and in the Afternoon at Evensong to those of the Religion in our Ladies Church. And so hoping by your Honor's Favour to be the Messenger of the next, I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's in all Duetie humbly to be commaunded,

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

THIS Morning Charles Paget came to my Lodging, and enquired of me, whether by your last your Honor did take notice of the Receipt of his Letter, which lately he sent inclosed in my Packet. I answered, your last Letters did only concern some particular Matters which were sent by an extraordinary Post, but by the next it might very well be your Honor would signify something which might give him Contentment, and so he departed, as I might well perceive, ill satisfied. In the Afternoon towards the Evening, he found me againe at my Lodging, and after some Speech to this purpose, that though his Services were neglected, and that that neglect might breed an Alteration in his Duty and Affection, yet having taken some Years since the Resolution to spend the Remnant of his Life in that duetifull Alleagance which a faithfull Subject ought to bear his Prince and Countrie, whereby tho' no other worldly Comoditie did arise, yet his Conscience should receive the Comfort thereof, he would suffer

5 U

An. 1602. nothing to come to his Knowledge; which might concern her Majestie's Person and State, which he would not discover; and so related, that he had received an Information, that about the 11th Day of August last there departed from Rome an English Jesuite, whose Name he knoweth not, of the Age of thirty Years, a Man of a good Fashion; of a sanguine Complexion, a yellow Beard, of a full and quick Eye and middle Stature; who furnished by the Spanish Ambassador with a Somme of Mony, did take his Course towards England, with purpose there to attempt against her Majestie's Person. He made much difficultie to name his Author; but because I urged Sir James Lindsey, who within these two days arrived to this Town from Rome, he acknowledged him to be the Man, but so that I would promise to conceal his Name. As he saith, Sir James Lindsey hath seen the Man, who passing by him on a time when he was walking with Parsons the Jesuite, Parsons will'd him to behold him well, and asked whether if he should meet that Man in England, he would take him for a Jesuite. I should much fail in Discretion, but much more in Duty, not to advertise this, though I have this Assurance, that the powerfull Hand of God will ever protect her sacred Person, against all disloyall Practises of Fury and Malice. Howsoever this Advertisement may prove, yet yf your Honor shall be pleased to give my Lord Ambassador Commission to bestow upon him some gracious Words, his Lordship may receive the Fruit thereof by many kind and friendly Curtesies. And so, &c.

THE particular Care wherewith your Honor doth vouchsafe to affectionate the good of my poore Estate, (which so high and undeserved Favour I ever do acknowledge with the serviceable Devotion of a gratefull Spirit,) doth embolden me againe to present to your Honor's Consideration my humble Petition for my Return; wherein I do chiefly respect the Advancement of her Majesties Service, when as all Stay more then necessarie, must grow distastfull to my Lord Ambassador, whose Honor in this Court, though 'twill ever be maintained by the Merit of his Worth, yet much doth relye upon Reputation. To your Honor's Letters of the first of this Month, with the Acknowledgement of an eternal Obligation, I answer that I am your only Creature, to whose Judgment I submit the Course of my Fortunes. The Experience of this Place wherein now sometime I have served, doth make me know what sufficiency is required in forreign Employments, and withall to acknowledge myne own Wantes and Imperfections, so that to affect so great a Charge were meer Presumption: Yet not to embrace with duetifull Regard what her Majestie shall be pleased to conferr upon me, were not to expresse with lively Gratitude her gracious Acceptance of my former Endeavours, nor those Favours whereby your Honor hath enabled me hetherto to pass without Disgrace. My Ambitions are not greater, then to be reputed worthy to serve my Prince and Countrey, (the Comfort whereof how great it is, my Soul doth testify within me,) which whether it be at home or abroad, I hold not different, in the Service of so gracious a Sovereign, who dayly regarding with the Eye of respect the Travails of her Servants, doth vouchsafe to vallerw them, not according to the Waight of their Worth, but to the Measure of her Grace and Bounty. And so, &c.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.Right Honorable,Paris, 20th Oct. 1602. O. S.

BY the means of the Ambassador of Scotland I have spoken with the Partic this Morning, from whom he received the Advertilement which I sent by Mr. Bridges the 29th of the last Month. He averreth the same by many Procestations to be trew; and addeth moreover, that Parsons did very earnestly and often deale with him to receave that Man into his Company, whom above all other Marks he noteth to have a high Nose, and to pass him through Scotland into England. I find by him, that the Jesuits for their Countenance, have recourse to the Duke of Seffe, but for their Affairs and Practices to one Antonio Taxis, authoris'd there by the King of Spaine. By the Opinion he makes, that Company doth decay much in Reputation in that Place, and Parsons is ecryed for an Imposture. Only the Faction for Spayne doth support them, where so long they are gracious, as they by their Projects do nourish the Ambition of their Pride, and augment the Fury of Revenge, wherewith they waste and consume away: And tho' their Forces do faile, (which are brought to a low ebb) yet their Malice hath neither Bottom nor Brink. This Point is only left them, wherein I refer my self to the Favour of your Honor's Judgment and Wisdom. Though I am not bound to believe all I hear, yet I am bound to relate what I beleve not. Defects of Discretion, by the Patronage of your Honor's Favour are venial; but the least Escape of Duetye, at the barre of myne own Judgment, can suffer no milder Sentence then of eternall Condemnation. And so for this time I humbly take my leave, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

THESSE Letters which say so little do plead much for my returne, and in this Season which followeth, what can be expected of any great Worth? The Landgrave hath received great Honor in this Court, where he hath been treated by the King, entertained for his Pensioner for 12000 Crowns a Year, made Colonell Generall of the Forces in Germanie, (which Place Jehan Guillaume de Saxe heretofore hath held) and at his Departure was presented with an Enseigne of between 3 and 4000 Crowns. He hath left behind him the Reputation of a worthy Prince, one who is of good Presence and a gracefull Behaviour, of a free, open, and understanding Discourse, well studyed, well languaged, and so far delighted with our English, that he both speaks and writes yt. He is nothing touched with the Vice of his Country, and so earnest for the Religion, that here they call his Zeal, Passion. This Note is cast upon him, that he knows himself not to be of the ordinary Mould of his Country, which makes him to be searching and diving into all Affairs; not out of a desire of Knowledge so much, as from a busy and overweening Humour.

In the Ceremonie for the Treatie with the Suissers (which was observed with great Solemnity) this only is worth the Observance, That the Spanish Ambassador, though invited, absented himself from thence, whose Eyes had not patience to see such a Morsell to pass by his Master's Mouth. In his last Audience, which was Sunday last, I understand he sollicitated that the Galley which saved her self within the Haven of Calais, might have Permission to depart from thence, which the King hath granted.

An. 1602.

What I lately advertised of Monsieur Monpensier, Monsieur de Rhosny is the Author; which when it was done only before his Uncle the Cardinal Joyeux, it is easie to see out of whose Mouth he spake it.

Monsieur de Bouillon hath written to the King, that he will be here by the end of the next Month. His Friends think he shall be best, to be ever a coming, and never to come. The Opinion holds strong; that the King doth purpose to make the Chambre d'Edict, in the late Mareschal's Lodging in the Bastile, tho' upon no other reason, yet to satisfye the Party Catholique. And so, &c.

Mr. Winwood;

4th Nov. 1602.

I Have perused both your Letters and imparted them to the Queen, wherein her Majestie noteth your Zeale and Discretion in the matter advertised by (123) the Ambassador of Scotland, having given that convenient Order that is fittest in the Case, for all the Ports are laid for him, and all suspected places of Landinge. I pray you, Sir, upon your next Access to the Kinge upon some other matter, let him know, that where he hath done me the Honor to write unto me a Letter of his own Hand, contayning his favourable Opinion of me, and his Thanks for doing good Offices between both Princes, I have entreated you to do this Office for me: First, to excuse my Silence in not making an Answer by writing to him, desyring his Majestie to conceive, that I have not so little common Sense as to forbear to expresse my Thankfullness by a Letter for the Honor he hath done me, out of Ignorance how well it would become me in Reverence so to do; but only, that it is not the Custome here for Men that hold my Place, to presume to answer forraigne Princes with Letters; otherwise you may assure him, that when I consider how much I owe him as a great and mighty Prince, dear to my Mistres, and one who did me so many Honors when I was imployed towards him; the Thanks which he hath vouchsafed to bestow upon me for my great desyre to preserve the Amitie to the best of my Power, are rather new Burthens to me then Favours, untill it may be my Fortune by some humble Service to deserve both the precedent Favours when I was there, and these which I acknowledge to have received, in his vouchsafing to expresse Thankfulness where I have merited nothing extraordinary, except it hath bin in seeking to preserve the Amitie to which my Duty tyed me, and in being possessed with earnest Wisshes, that it might be my fortune to receive his Commandments, which I resolved salvo jure always to perform, but yet had never means to shew it by effect. In this sort (upon some accident of resort) I pray you speak unto him, and withall let fall unto him, that if I knew that his Majestie had any Affection to any of our Dogges, Hawkes, or any such like things which this Countrey yeelds, I would thank you to make me acquainted with his Majestie's Pleasure, that I might be his Agent to procure them; I having sometimes debauched his Ambassador with such Exercises. Now you know my Meaning, which is but to return Complement to a complementall Letter, (which I think his Ambassador procured, to make me more diligent,) I leave the rest to your Discretion.

Concerning your returne, howsoever her Majestie shall resolve of your Imployment for the Low-Countries, whereof as yet there is not Certaynty, because I see by your Letters that you desyre to be at hoame, I will not fayle to urge it as much as I can; only I could wish that you might be able to bring some certayntie what we shall get this Year of the French Kinge, to make you at first more welcome. And so for this time I committ you to God.

From the Court
at Richmond.

Your very loving Friend,

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 9th Nov. 1602. O.S.

MY Lord Ambassador understanding that the Post did retaine certaine Letters in his Hands, which how much they might import he doth not know, hath geeven him Commaundment to depart, and withall permitted me to plaie the Interloper, both that the present Occurrences do not require an exprefs Dispatch, and that from Fountainbleau (whether all Ambassadors are summoned) he expecteth a speedy Subject, and more worthy of his Letters.

After long merchandizing between the King and the Baron de Luz, the King unwilling to grant him greater Grace then a safe Conduict to come and retorne; he precisely insisting upon an absolute Abolition, which at length he received by the President Jeannin, accompanied with him, arrived to the Court some fifteen Days since. He there was mued up for some Days, in the same place and manner as de la Fin before had been at Easter last. Since he hath been in this Town attending on the King, though otherwise much retired; not of shame to shew himself, for from his Infancy he hath been used to these Treacheries, but either not trusted by the Kinge to converse in all Companies, or mistrusting his own Safetie, which lyeth open to the Envy of many great Personages; whose Honor, to save his own, he hath not spared. The King doth hold himself fully satisfied with his Relation, and protesteth, * that for a million of Gold he wold not but have recalled him; for it seemeth that he hath discovered the Caball of these Treasons, delivering the originall Letters written by the Hands of the King of Spaine to the late Mareschal, and impeaching so many, that it is easier to name who is not, then who are (in the Estimation of the World) held Partakers in this Complot.

Monfieur d'Aumont being lately returned from the Franche Comté, (where it seemeth he had some secret Conference with the Prince of Orange who there doth live retired,) made an Overture to the King of some Enterprize in those Parts; which he finding not to be apprehended, sollicitted the Princeesse of Orange (who now is taking her Voiage into Holland) to prosecute that Affair with the Kinge: The Kinge answered, he cold receive nothing from the Mouth of d'Aumont, who was embarked with the rest in this Conspiracy, and who is (said he) yf not by Practize, yet by Privitie and Consent. Monfieur de Praslin, one of the Captaines of the Guards, is now sent into Borgogne, for the Apprehension of some suspected Persons, and the Mareschal Brissac Lieutenant of Bretaigne, hath lately sent to the Bastile, Mombarreau Governor of Renex. This is the Stranger, for that during the Ligue he ever maintained the Reputation of a good Patriot and faithfull Subject, and sence of an honest and upright Man. Himself is not of the Religion, which his only Son doth profess, and wherein his other Children are instructed. His Disgrace is much lamented, to whose Resolution is attributed the Reduction of Bretaigne, which the Duke Mercoeur did promise to himself to dismember from this Crown. I cannot learn that he is charged with greater matter, then that by some Letters found about Fontanelle, he is suspected to have held Intelligence with him in his Practizes; and that yt is said he did procure Fontanelle's Head to be taken down in the Night; which by Commaundment from the King was set up upon the Gates of Renex. There are deputed certaine Masters of the Requests to take his Examination, and to make Rapport thereof to the Grand Conseil. His Friends do fear, that his heaviest

* Mathieu in his Cronologie Septenaire (pag. 321. b.) gives us the very same Account. But de Sully gives another turn to this Affair, and says, — Il embarassa beaucoup de Gens, descouvrit plusieurs desseins, dont il y en avoit de bien vagues, accusa plusieurs personnes qui n'en ont jamais rien sceu, & auxquels le Roy n'en fist jamais pire chere, &c. From whence it may probably be inferred, he concurred with la Fin in his Information, and might discover something to his Disadvantage.

An. 1602. Charge will be the Disfavour of the Mareschal Brifac, who ever hath been his formell Enemy.

The Administrator of Strasburgh in his return passing by Troyes in Champagne, where he lodged; the Morning after, a Ligue from the Towne, was arrested in the way by the Fermiers of the Doüane, his Baggage seized, and his Coffers rifled, and such Money; and whatever else of Valew he had, was taken from him; though he shewed his Passport signed by the King, and justified by an Exempt of the King's Guards, who was sent to be his Guide and Conductor. Yt is not doubted but these Men were aposted by the Cardinal of Lorraine to give him this Affront; yet if exemplary Justice be not done for this Insolencie, yt will be presumed, that from hence it was, yf not commanded, yet favoured and abettéd. We here have had a strong Assurance, that Buda in Hungary should be taken by the Emperor, but I fear the News is too good to be trewe. The Priests Appellants to Rome are returned, though not yet arrived to this Town. The Difference between them and the Jesuites is accorded, according to the Copie of the Bulle which herewith I send your Honor. And so I humbly take my leave, &c.

Your Honor's in all Dutie humbly to be commanded,
RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 26th Nov. 1602. O. S.

I Have observed in some of my former how universall hath ben the Infection of these late Practizes against this State; wherewith, as most of the Provinces are known to be touched more or less, so, many great Personages, at the first little suspected, are found now dangerously to be tainted. And then I advertized, that de Praslin (one of the Captaines of the Guards,) was gone forth with his Archers for the Apprehension of some suspected Persons; amongst whom, one Guyenvelle a Bourgoignon in la Franche Comté, and one Goage a Follower of the late Duke of Guise, are brought Prisoniers into this Town. This Partie, being charged to have lately made certaine secret Levies of Men in the Confines of Bourgoigne and Champagne, confessed, that he received Commission to that purpose from the Prince Joynville; who hath acknowledged frankly to the King, that during the Time of his Disgrace, the King of Spayne did often recherch him, whose Offers he did not refuse; but sence that he was received into favour, he hath abandoned all Intelligence with Spaine, on purpose wholly to adhere to the King's Service. Some few Dayes the Matters so rested, then this young Prince did brave the Baron de Luz in the King's Chamber, threaning Revenge, and provoking the other to declare himself; so now he is restrained of his Liberty, and committed to the Custodie of his Brother the Duke, who hath lodged him in the Hostel of Guise. It is said that he hath received large Sommes from Spaine, for whose Services he hath now undertaken (and now was at the Point to performe) great Matters; into whose Hands at least he made shew he had means to deliver amongst other Towns, Vitri and St. Desier in Champagne. The President Jeannin is said to be sent to the Duke de Maine (who now is at Soissons) to retorne to the Court, and to bring with him his two Sons the Duke d'Esquillon, and the Count Sommery. Their long Absence from the Court hath ben strange, (the Elder being the only Minister of the King,) which was imputed for want of Mony; but the contrary is found, for it seems they have had more then well they can justifie, who are charged to have touched the Doublons of Spaine, and in no smal quantity.

We now are come to the Crisis of this long Discourse, concerning the Duke of Bouillon's comming or not comming, and shortly shall see what will be the Issue thereof. The King hath lately sent a Valler of his Chamber named Guichard, chard, with Letters to him to hasten his coming, but principally to espie his Actions, and to sound his Resolutions. The Duke retained him in his House not above an hour, but returned him to the King with this Answer by Letter, That upon the 16th of this Month according to our Style, he wold set forward toward the Court: Yet here is no News of him; and his best Friends do wish, that he should forbear a while, untill this Storm be blowen over; and rather submit his Reputation to the Censure of the World, which the Integrity of his Innocence shall have Power to reestablish, then to render his Life into the Hands of those whose Displeasure is implacable, and so the Fault which he shall therein make, irreparable. There are many apparent Arguments, that yf he comes, his Doom is already geeven. The Passages, though not all, for that is very difficile, yet the most, and most ordinary between his House and Sedan, are stopt and guarded. The King hath purposely commanded the Agent of the States to informe his Masters, how far he is entangled in these Practices, thereby to weaken the good Opinion which he holdeth with them, and with the Count Maurice. Monsieur de Rhosny doth profess himself his formall Adversary, and in all Places and Companies doth talk of him, as of a base and unworthey Companion; and which is most considerable for this particular Instance, the Cognizance of Crimes de Leze Majesté is taken from the Parliament, and conferred upon the Grand Counseil; which is composed of Masters of Requests, which are Hirelings and mercenary Advocates, at the Devotion rather of Authority, then of the Justice of the Cause. The Religion doth begin to take the Matter to Heart, and do thus interpret this Proceeding; that their Adversaries are willing through his sides to wound their Cause, and to the end to give but one blow for all, to strike at the Head of their Body; for Monsieur de la Tremouille, by the Indisposition of the Gout is impuissant and unable; Lesdesguieres is now in his declining Age, and besides homo novus, and lastly seated in the remote Partes of this Realme, within which compass his Reputation is confined. The Duke's Friends give forth, that these Imputations are laid upon him; that he should have Foreknowledge of the late Marechal's Discontents and Purposes to rise up in Arms, and for his better Pretext should counsell him to urge the Establishment of the Council of Trent, and the Revocation or Modification of the Edict for Religion, which the Baron de Luz doth affirm, not out of his own knowledge, but by hearsay from de Biron. The Count de Auvergne doth charge him, that he should nourish him in Discontents against the King and his State, and practise with him to attempt upon the Conté of Avignon; about which Matter one Comblat two Years sence was imprisoned at Lions, and did negotiate between them. Comblat for many Daies together, (and confronted with Auvergne) denyed that ever he negotiated any other Matter between them, then the Marriage of his Son with the Duke's Daughter; but now he hath learned another Lesson, and justifieth all the Count of Auvergne's Accusations. By th' end of this Week, if the Duke come not, we shall understand in what Terms he resolveth to stand; either upon his Guard, at his House in Turene, (which is strongly seated and fortified, and as well appointed for Men, Victuall, and Munition,) or whether he will endeavour to retire to Sedan: The Retraict is dangerous, but the Place so good, that he will make his Peace, if once he get thither, upon even hand. I am going now to Fountainbleau to see the Catastrophe of this Affair, where I shall have the Comoditie to performe your Honor's Commandment of the 4th of this Month, which I received the 21st. I presume to take hold upon your Honor's Favour for my Returne at the shutting up of the Estate for this Year, for then will be knowen the Somme and Times when her Majestie shall receive her Money. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

Mr. Secre-

An. 1602.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

2^d Dec. 1602.

I HAVE little at this time necessary for a Letter to you, saving only to let you know that I have received yours of the 15th of November, for which I thank you; and though my meaning is not either to condemn Pinson, or to throw any Imputation upon you for nameing him, seeing myne own Direction hath ben the Continuance of his Entertainment, and that I know it is hard for Men at the first Entrys to settle themselves in good means of Discovery, yet when you may without perrilling him, yt were not amifs that you did make him understand, that I find but little favor in any thing he advertizeth.

Wee now long to heare the Success of the Duke of Bouillon; the Issue of whose Fortune will be read in his first act of coming, or refusing it, to the King; both of them in my Opinion being very perillous, considering how great a touch and wound that manner of sending for him is to his Reputation and to his Mind; of whose Fortune, and the Progreis of his Cause, I pray you remember my Lord Ambassador to advertize with speede, as it is carried in one Degree or other. I pray you also remember my Lord Ambassador (because I have forgot it in my own Letter) that he do not suffer this time of the Year (wherein the King's Finances are ordered) to pass on, without exostulating that Satisfaction, which hath ben assured both by the King's Ambassador himself here, and otherwise; for which he may use this Argument, that it were better her Majestie were never promised, then still to find their Promises fruitless, which is both shew of mispris, and breedeth Disorder in her Affairs, which have their Dependancy in their Order upon such Expectations. And thus for this time I committ you to God's Protection.

From the Court
at Whitehall.

Your very loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 2^d Dec. 1602. O. S.

I IN my Letters of the 26th of the last I advertized, that the Duke of Bouillon in his to the King had promised to depart from Turene towards the Court the 16th of the same, about which time he sent a Breviat to all the Posts that way, to keep ready their Horses for him and his Company as far as Orleans, and that there he would resolve to take the way to Fountainbleau or to Paris. This put the King in assurance of his coming, but when he most looked for him, he received a Letter from one Chambret a Gentleman of that Country, that the Duke accompanied with ten Gentlemen well appointed, and as many Arquebusers à Cheval had passed by his House, and communicated to him his pourpose to goe to Castres, where the Chambre of the Edict for the Resort of the Parliament of Thoulouse is established, there to justify the Loyalty of his Duetie and Service, (which by many false Accusations maliciously had ben charged) before that Court, which he acknowledged to be his sole and competent Judge. * The Duke himselfe did write to the King to that purpose, but willed his Secretary (who remains in this Court for his Service) not to deliver his Letter untill the Chambre of Castres should advertize of his coming. But the Secretary (as it seemeth, fearing the like Treatment of Hibbert Secretary to the late Mareschal.)

* This Letter (of which there is a Copy amongst Sir Ralph Winwood's Papers) is printed at large in Mathieu's Cronologie Septenaire, &c. pag 323. b. Edit. Paris, 8vo.

deli-

delivered the Letters as soon as he had received them, which might have turned to the great Prejudice of his Master. This Resolution did and doth much trouble the King, and put them all unto their trumpes; for though Order was taken to impeach his Passage to Sedan both by Sea and Land, (for it was misdoubted that he would imbarke himself at Rochell,) yet no Man dreamed of this Evasion, whereby he hath wound himself out of their Hands. Which in consequence will advise the King, (without casting his State into a desperat Confusion,) not only to condescend to an accord, but to make him sufficient Reparation of his Honour; for this his lawfull Defence, however it is misliked cannot be refused him, without Violation of the Edict for the Liberty of Religion, which wold engage in this particular the common Cause: For when a Personage of his Worth and Power, cannot enjoy the Priveledge of the Law for the Defence of his Life and Honor, what Securitie can all other of meaner sort promise to themselves? Much less can they hope long after to enjoy the Freedom of their Conscience, which with so great difficultie at first was established; and as without Support, will hardly be maintained, so once abolished will never be recovered.

I send herewith the Conference of the Edicts, whereby your Honour may make Judgment whether the Chambre hath Power to take Cognisance of Causés de leze Majesté; which though it hath never been practized, (for the like Case hath not happened,) yet by all those who have Interest therein, is so interpreted and received. Upon the first Advice, Order was given to dispatch into all Provinces with sharp and vehement Protestations against the Duke's Faith and Loyalty; which Monsieur de la Trémoille understanding, perswaded the King to a more temperate Moderation: Remonstrating, that as yet, in the Termes all things did stand, these Differences might be accommodated to the Satisfaction and Honor of his Majesty; but if the Duke should be driven to take desperate and violent Courses, which the Extremities of his Proceedings did enforce, this necessarily wold engender a Combustion within his Estate; which the Enemies of his Crowne did only attend, thereon to build the Advancement of their own Designs. Hereupon stay was made of those Dispatches, and others, conceived in a more moderate Style, were sent into all Parts, especially where the Religion is most strong; which the King hath thought good to accompany with Men of the same Profession, such as are best reputed for their sufficiency, and affection to Quietness and Repose. So Monsieur de la Force (Brother in Law to the late Mareschal and one of the Captaines of the Guards,) is sent into Guienne; St. Julian, a President of the Chambre de Contes at Grenoble, to Monsieur Lefdesquieres into Dauphiné; Monmartin a Gentleman of that Country, into Poitou; and the Duke's Secretary, to Monsieur de Plessis; partly to let him understand how well he stands in the King's Favour, (though many Informations have ben presented that he held a part in these Practices,) partly to ask his Advice what Course shall be taken in this Case without giving Offence to the Religion; the State whereof he doth purpose to uphold, untouched, and inviolable. The King was willing to remove the Secretary from the Court upon this Employment, when most his Presence was necessary for his Master's Service, and the Secretary was willing to accept such a Commission, which might give him pretext of Absence, in a time of so great and assured Danger.

Upon Monday Night there arrived at the Court a Lakey from the Duke with Letters to the King; signifying his being at Castres, and praying that all Informations against him might be sent thither, and the Witnesses to be confronted. Yt is not known what he will do, whether stay there, or else returne into Turene; or, which most is wished, pass to Sedan; which may be done if he pass the River of Rosne, and so enter into Suisserland, and so through part of Germany; or into the Franche Comté, and the Confines of Lorraine. Yt is not thought that the King will so much yeeld, to suffer the Cause to be tryed at Castres; but the Opinion is, that at the end (and the sooner the better) the Matter may be peaceably accorded: The Difficultie will be in the Means, that neither the

An. 1602. Soveraignty of the King be abased, nor the Honor of the Duke be defamed, by acknowledging a Fault or demanding Pardon, to which no Man thinks he will be induced.

The Prince Joyville fence my last hath been abroad, but attended on by an Exempt of the Guards. Though we say, that four or five Nights together before his Restraint, he was observed to repair to the Spanish Ambassador's House at unseasonable Hours, about eleven or twelve. Monsieur Mombarreau is now upon his Dispatch to be Ambassador Ordinary in Spaine, where he doth purpose to be by th' end of the next Month. The Fortresse of Montmelian hath received a Garrison of Spaniards, which doth aboad something which yet is not knowen.

Upon Monday last I had the Commoditie to present to the King those humble Reverences, which your Honor did command me to deliver. Yt pleased him graciously to accept them, and in many Words to make knowen, how acceptable unto him was the Testimony of his Ambassador, both for these particular Curtesies which he in private hath received from your Honor, and for those kind Offices, which his Service doth dayly find by your Favour. For both he doth promise a very gratefull Remembrance, and an Assurance of his Love and kindest Affection, with the like Concurrence of the latter by himself and his Ministers; which Monsieur de Villeroy did entreat me on his part to promise, and with many Protestations, more then ordinary and in greater Fervency, doth assure shall be perfourmed. Your Honor cannot err in any choice of Present to the King; Acceptissima semper munera sunt, Author quæ pretiosa facit: But his Delight is most in Hunting, and the Irish Dogg is much here in Request.

This Day I came from Fountainbleau, where I left the Prince of Pomerania, who is come to see this Court. To morrow we look for the King in this Towne, and on Satterday the Queen. And so, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

S I R,

December 1602.

THE French Ambassador hath in the King his Master's Name, acquainted her Majestie with the Case of the Duke of Bouillon, upon the Confessions which he saith have been made of the Matters which touch him in his Loyalty; and he hath delivered to her the Copy of a Letter of the Kings, whereby he is commaunded to come to the Court to justifye himself. In which Letter, although the Particularities wherewith the Duke is charged be not expressed, yet hath the Ambassador let fall, that he is accused to be privie to the Conspiracie, whereof the late Duke of Biron was attainted; that he hath had some meddling with some other great Persons, about the Succession of the Crowne of France; and thirdly ben contented, that some waie should be made to the King of Spaine to receive him into his good opinion: All which, being Points so nearly concerning the King, the said Ambassador hath, as from him, desired her Majestie's Advice, for his Proceeding with the Duke upon the same. Which Request, although she think it to be rather formall, then that her Counsaile should in this Case prevaile with the King, against any such Determinations as in his own Mind perhaps he may have formed concerning the Duke, if he should hold him Guilty; And that the Drift of opening this Matter to her and to the World, is to possess her Mind with a Prejudice against one in whom he thinketh she hath some Interest, by throwing Aspersions on him of such Crimes, as proving trew, she could not in Honour attempt to excuse; yet having so just an occasion ministred unto her by the King, to speak in a Cause in which otherwise she would not intrude her self, she thinks good not to forbear to utter, that which she conceaveth of the Duke's Inno-

Innocency, and thereby to do for him such friendly Office, as both the Opinion she hath ever had of his Loyalty, and the good Will she bears him in respect of Religion, do require. An. 1602.

You shall therefore understand, that 'tis her Majestie's Pleasure that you do procure Access presently to the King, as having received a Dispatch from her; and then to begin first to give him Thanks in her Name for the Freedom and Inwardness he useth with her, and the Confidence he seemeth to repose in her, in that he wold not only impart unto her a Matter of this Nature between him and his Subject, wherein Princes do not use to communicate their Concoits with their Neighbours, but also desire her Advice in the Course which should be meet for him to hold with the said Duke in this Case; a Matter wherein you may say, she had rather be silent then open her thoughts, had he not so friendly required her; because it is of such quallitic, as in speaking of it she can hardly avoid two Errours, the one prejudiciall to that Wisdom which Experience hath taught her, not to be curious in other Princes Affairs; the other to that Integrity which she professes, least in speaking of a Person of whom the King knoweth that she hath long (and cheefly for his sake) had good Opinion, she should utter any thing that might make him jealous of her, that out of Partialitie to him, she were not zealous for the King's Safetie: But seeing from the one the King's Request doth free her, and from the other her own Conscience, she hath adventured to discover what she conceaves of the Case as she takes it to be, till further Matter be brought to Light; that is, that besides many other Circumstances, there be these speciall great Reasons that move her to beleieve, that the Duke could not forget his Loyaltie to the King.

The one is the antient and constant Service, and untell this time unsuspected, which he hath done unto this King, and the Love, which with often hazard of his Life and Fortunes, he hath made proof to bear in his Heart towards him, ever since both their Childhoods; which having ben bred in him so young, grown with their Years, and proved spotless in all the King's adverse Times, when there was no Inducement of Benefit to invite, nor other Argument to assure his Faith but only Love of his Person, and opinion of the Justice of his Cause, how unlikely is it that he should now swarve from that Affection, when the Greatness of the State the King is arrived unto, doth in all reasonable Construction not only confirm it by hope of Rewards for his former Deserts, but bind it with a stricter knot of Fidellity? Converting that which before was but Affection in him, into the necessary Duetie of a Subject towards his Sovereigne. Further, when she considereth, that one part of the Accusation is, that he should correspond with Mareschal Biron, (between whom and him there was never other than mortal Envie;) it maketh her much the more hopefull that the King shall find this matter false at bottome, of which no Body shall be more glad.

The other Reason is, the Religion he professeth, which to her Understanding, cannot possibly admit one thing which this Accusation doth pretend, and that is, Community with the King of Spaine in any Subject whatsoever; he being one of the most known notorious Adversaries of all those that differ in Religion from the Church of Rome. Which Reasons are so forcible to move her to presume of the Duke's Innocency, that tho' she will not take upon her to give Advice to the King's Affirmative or Negative in so nice a Question, yet she thinks (she being required by him) her Arguments are so well grounded, (the Duke's Case not being yet known to her to be other then his first Report maketh it,) as she may take this Libertie, in this to advise the King, as she would do to her self, to use his accustomed Temper and Judgment, and to cast his Eye to the End as well as to the beginning of all great Actions, where it may please him to note these Circumstances. First it is reported that diverse other great Persons are touched in these Matters, and he only pickt out to be dealt withall of whom it is most improbable, which cannot but stir many Jealousies in those of the Religion, that some practice prevaleth in his Mind, to be readdier to suspect (if not condemn) them, then others; of whom she bears this Opinion, (or otherwise she should hate

An. 1602. bate them) that if he were trewly guilty, none would sooner crye Crucifige then they. Whereas on the other side, if the Matter should prove a weak and false Suggestion, how can this Wound be cured, which this Obloquy hath cast upon him?

Lastly, altho' she doth conclude that it cannot but be, that some thing is amiss in his Estate, for the rectifying whereof she wishes as to her owne, that all happy Courses may be taken; and that although she meaneth not to take upon her self as able to advise, either affirmatively or negatively in so delicate an Affair; yet she hath willed you to acquaint him, how sorry she is, except the Proofs be so evident as that they are (luce clariores,) that he was not pleased to have taken some other Courie, and to have let him know some Part of his Accusation, and so received his Answer, (which would have given great Light to the King's own just and clear Judgment,) before he had proceeded so far, as to command his personall Repaire by a Letter so notoriously knowen; because it is to be doubted, that he, whose only Anchor hath ben in the King's constant Favour to him, may be so intimidated, when he seeth himself proceeded withall in no other degree of Favour then all other of his Subjects, (of which Number few have merited as he taketh himself to have done,) as he will more dread the Danger of his Adversarie's Power and Practice, then trust in his appearing to save himself, though he be never so innocent; which course, though it may on the other side be as ill interpreted against him, yet it is his hard Fortune to be put to such Try-all, seeing those Fears and Apprehensions may work divers Distractions non solum in viro forti, sed in innocente.

Lastly her Majestie hath commanded you to let him know, that if these Practises of the King of Spaine do appear thus violent, that rather then not infest his Estate, he will spare no Faction nor Perswasion of Religion, it will be very Princely for him, to shew more sence then he doth of his perfidious Dealing with him; whereby his Subjects might see, that the King holds him an Enemy, and his Friends and Allies might once perceave that he is so sensible of those many Affronts, that they may have comfort still to joyne both in Counsaills and Actions to prevent his Ambition; in which, and in all things else, she will never be found second to any Prince in Europe.

Thus have you now Sir, the Substance of that which her Majestie would have represented to the King; within which temper both to the King and any of his Counsaill that shall speak to you, it shall be fit that you do keep your self. And you may let it be knowen (underhand) to those of the Religion that are discreet and honest, in what sort she hath shewed her self to the King to take Care of his Estate, both out of her particular Affection towards him, and of her Confidence that he hath done nothing unworthey of her Protection. You must pretend to have received this Direction from her self, not naming it as matter proceeding from the Hands of her Ministers.

For the Matter revealed unto you by that Jesuiticall Person concerning her Majestie's Shippes; although you have reason to transfer it heather, yet for my own Opinion I do not see any great Matter in his Discovery, being rather matter of wild Discourse, then likely to be grounded upon any solid Foundation. So if upon your own Speech with him you discover no more, I think you may forbear to send him over. Alwaies if you find Cause and shall send him, he shall go and come upon your Protection, and be rewarded and remanded according to the Value of his Service. And so for this time I commit you to God's Protection.

From the Court at Whitehall.

Your very loving Friend,
RO. CECYLL.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.Right Honorable,Paris, 17th Dec. 1602. O. S.

I Hold it my Duty to acquaint your Honor with a contumelious Injury which lately I have receiv'd by an Englishman in this Towne, and that in my Lord Ambassadors House. Upon Sunday last the 12th of this Month, there being assembled in my Lord Ambassadors Hall, many both English, and Scotch; and French which understand our Language, to hear the Sermon; the Psalm being begonne by some of my Lord's People, but in so ill a Tune that after a Verse or two they gave over to sing, one Sigismund Alexsander, Son to him that is a Groom in the Stable, who stood by Mr. Adolphus Cary and Mr. Anthony Mayny, and my self, turns towards Mr. Cary, and began to talk and laugh. I speaking to him wished him not to laugh, which would give a Scandall to the Congregation, he answered to none but to me. I said, what I spake was not to make him angry. He replied, if I were angry I might turn the Buckle of my Girdle behinde me. I made no Answer, but was well contented with Patience to be silent. The Sermon ended he cometh to me with these Words, What an Ass are you to bid me leave my laughing, you are an Ass and a very Ass, you are now no more an Agent but an Inferiour, and too saucy to me. I returned not one Word more, then that I perceaved he was angry. That day I passed over in Silence, tho' he to many or most Gentlemen in the Towne, made his Vaunts in what Sort he had used me. The next Morning I repaired to my Lord Ambassador to whom I related this Fact; and remonstrated, that if I were a particular Person it was most likely that the Punctillios of Honour might have transported me to have righted my self without importuning his Lordship; or if I did now remaine alone on the same Terms as before his coming, I then would have had my recourse to the King, under whose Protection I did remaine; but now that his Lordship was invested in this Charge, which in propriety doth bind him to regard with special Accommodation the Good of her Majestie's Service, I held my self in Duty bound to require reason of him, as attending here subordinate unto him (in what Condition he best knew,) and that I held it my Duty to require Reason of him for this Wrong; wherein, if I mistook not, the Honor of her Majestie, the Dignity of his Place, and his particular Honor, were joyntly interessed. I concluded, that now he understood the Matter by the Relation which I made of the Fact and the Reasons of my Demand, I referred the Sequell to his Consideration, whereto I was willing to submit my self. I do acknowledge his Lordship did shew as if he felt my Wrong, and promised to procure my Satisfaction. What he hath done he best can tell, and I dowbt not doth by this Bearer advertize your Honor. I trust I have here carried my self, as doth become me in Duty and Discretion. The Fact I have plainly and truly delivered without Disguise, neither adding Words nor exasperating Circumstances. What is to follow I refer to your Honor's Wisdom, and to that Care wherewith you are accustomed to cherish the Travails of her Majestie's Servants. And so I humbly take my leave, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

An. 1602.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris 18th. Dec. 1602. O. S.

HERE is lately arrived the Procureur du Roy of the Chambre of Castres, who is sent to advertize of the Duke's Appearance there, and to know the King's Pleasure in what manner that Court should proceed. He delivered, that the Duke entered into the Towne only attended with three Persons, and presently laying apart his Armes, rendred himself into the Hands of Justice. Since, here hath been many Assemblies and Consultations between the Councill and Messieurs du Parlement. The last Resultat I understand to be this, that one should be sent from the King to instruct the Duke of the Incompetency of that Court for the Cognoissance of that Cause, as well for the quallitie of his Person, being premier Marechal of France and a domesticall Servant to the King, as for the Nature of the Crimes whereof he is accused; and for this pourpose one Commartin is named to be sent, with Charge peremptorily to advise him personally to appeare before this Parliament within one Month, and with power to interdict the Chambre to undertake the Knowledge of this Cause. This Commartin is premier President du Grand Conseil, and the last Year was imployed about the Difference of Confines between the King and the Archduke; and because he hath ben examined to deliver what he knew or had heard concerning some Practice supposed between the Duke and Count Sore, he excused himself some dayes from this Imployment, but in the end he hath accepted it, and this Afternoon doth depart. Upon this Resolution the general Deputies received a Letter from the Churches of Languedoc and Haute Guienne, requiring them to make their Remonstrance to the King, that whereas this Edict was made not so much for the Preservation of the Goods and Fortunes, as for the Assurance of the Lives and Honours of the Professours of Religion, without the Exception of Condition of Person, or Quallity of Cause, that he would be pleased to admitt the Chambre of Castres to hear and determine the Cause of the Duke, sith to that Jurisdiction he voluntarily hath submitted himself.

Monsieur St. Germain, who now hath that Charge (a Man well known to your Honor, as having ben employed towards her Majestie from the Body of the Religion, to sollicite her gracious Mediation for the Establishment of this Edict, which the King doth not forget, but hath reproached him with that Imploiment within these few Dayes, calling it the Duke of Bouillon's Legation) signified to the King, that he had received such a Letter from the Churches. The King asked if the Churches wold undertake the Protection of Monsieur de Bouillon: He answered, the Letter speaks not so, but beseeched his Majestie to be pleased to read it. He put it by twice or thrice, unwilling to seek what he wold not find; at length he read it, and delivering it back, said, he gave not his Towns into the Hands of the Religion to retire Traytors into them: That he wold remove the Chambre from Castres: That Rhosny should make his Canon march: That in six Weeks he wold ruinate them, and so in this Heat he retired towards his Cabinet, and took with him Monsieur de la Tremouille. St. Germain pressing for an Answer to return to the Churches, he willed him to send them this Answer, Qu'ilz aiguissent leurs Espees; but after a turn or two, he prayed him with many mild Words to carry his Letter to the Chancellor, to Messieurs de Rhosny and Villeroy. Hereupon this was thought convenient, that Monsieur de la Tremouille (which the King solicited with much Earnestness, and prayed might be done with dilligence,) should write to the Duke, to be perswaded to retire from that Place, where his aboad might breed just Suspicion in the King that he hath purpose to disturbe the Peace of his Realme; and withall should advise him to intreat for Permission and safe Conduct to return to some of his own Houses, or to depart out of the Realme; from whence he should promise to clear himself of the Imputations wherewith he is charged. This Dispatch was sent the end of the the last Week: At the Return of the Messenger, it will be known what the Duke An. 1602. will resolve. If he find Suretye for his Retraict yt is thought he will go to Se-dan, where all Differences will soon be composed. In the Place where he is, he is held to be in Surety; but if he stay there, in all likelihood there will follow a great remuement du Mesnage; which besides the publick Detriment, may hazard the Fortunes of many of his Friends, which here are engaged at Court, and faine wold, but cannot depart. His greatest Adversaries, now seeing the Course he hath taken necessary to enforce an accord for his Safety, speake in a more mylde and smooth Style; and acknowledge that in the Informations produced against him, nothing can be found worthy of Death. For that he should complot with Biron they hold it impossible; to turn Spaniard absurd and ridiculous; and that he should joyne in this Partie to marrie the young Prince with the Daughter of the Connestable, and to declare him Successor to the Crown, seemeth a Supposition void of all Appearance. But his Death wold poize the Balance, (which the Death of the late Marechal doth weigh to the ground) and improve the King's Reputation with the Party Catholike, give Satisfaction to the Pope, beat down the Religion, and give the King Revenge of all Piques that have passed between them in those Days, when they were in a manner but Fellows and Friends. Yt is but the other day, when the King inveighing against him to Monsieur St. Germain and calling him Traytor, he asked, when his Majesty had found him to be so; he answered him, beholding him between the two Eyes, depuis quand Monsieur? depuis vingt & cinq ans. So that now are revived the Favours that passed between him and Queene Marguerite of Navarre; and the Love he made to the Dutchess of Bar, who yet hateth him because he carried her not away, and that he had held in Langnedoc a Practise without Dependance to the other; and that at Rochelle, upon the Death of the Prince of Condé, he put upon him a Counsaile to govern the Finances of the War; and many other such like Reasons of like Moment. La Fountaine hath written to one of the Ministers of this Church, qu'on a mis le Corps de la Religion par deça en fort mauvais predicament. They which represent the Body have intreated me to signifye to your Honor, that (though they dowbt not but that hath been endeavoured, yet) sith her Majestie doth know that they never were found disloyall to their Prince, so long as they might enjoye their Loyalltie to God, they rest assured that she ever will remaine their gracious Patronesse; to whose Protection, tantum ad sacram anchoram, they ever have had recourse in the Ocean of their Persecutions.

Monsieur de Barreau (whose Name I think in my last I wrote Mombarreau) is now gone for Spaine. He visited all the Ambassadors in this Towne before he departed, saying my Lord; which some say was forbidden him, for fear of Offence to Spaine. They which seem to know much, do deliver, that he doth carry with him la charte blanche for the Conservation of the Peace, which he hath Charge to maintaine, at what Price and upon what termes soever.

Charles Paget doth so importune me, that I cannot refuse to beseech your Honor to move my Lord Ambassador to give him access, and to treat him with that kindness that he shall perceave his Devotion to her Majesties Service, and to his particular, shall deserve. I have written to Pynson to that Purpose your Honor doth command. And now I humbly beseech to be excused, though I dayly cry cupio dissolvi; for here I languish with Anguish of Soule, and soon should loose all Patience, but that I rest assured of the Protection of your Honor's Favour. And so I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's in all Duty humbly to be commaunded,

RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

2^d January 1602. O. S.

THE Duke of Bouillon having recorded his Appearance before the Chamber of Castres by an authentick Act, finding that Court to be interdicted by the President Verdon, premier President of Toulouse, to take knowledge of his Cause, departed towards Montpelier, accompanied with 150 Horse of the best of the Nobilitie of that Province. Yt is here receaved, that all the way he passed, the Country came round about him, and as he passed by or through the Townes, the Magistrates and People came forth to meet him, presenting their Townes, their Forces, themselves, and all, to be disposed at his Devotion. This relation doth well accord with the Letters of the Churches written in his Favour, and with that Speech of the Town of Rochelle delivered unto Monsieur Commartin, whereby they do acknowledge the Cause of the Publicke to be interested in this particular Instance. St. Julian, (whom the King upon the first bruit of the Duke's going to Castres, did send into Dauphiné to possess the Noblesse there of the Crimes wherewith he is charged) is now returned to this Town. He relateth, that the Duke having passed the Rhosne, made shew at Orenge to make some long stay; from whence he wrote to Monsieur Lesdiguières, that he wold vissit him at Grenoble, to acquaint him with his Cause, which he wold present in like manner to that Chamber as before he had done at Castres. But suddainely he departed thence to Romanze, where he passed the River of Liziere, and so arrived in Safety at Geneva. It was ever probable that he wold not let slip so just occasion to vissit that Towne; thereby to enflame the Zeal of his Persecution, in this time, when as by so miraculous an Escape, the Inhabitants of that Place do so nearly symbolize with his present Fortunes. From thence he wrote to Monsieur Lesdiguières to excuse his not comming to him, for fear to give offence to the King; and withall signified, that he wold take the way through Switzerland to Basil, and so to Heydelbergh, to vissit the Palatine his Brother, and then to his owne home to Sedan.

Monsieur de Rhosny hath proposed to his private Friends some Overtures of Reconciliation, and he hath wished them to move him to demand Pardon and Grace. But they answer, that were to survive his Honour, to despoile himself at once of all his Friends, and to depend afterwards at Discretion either to be receaved with Shame, or refused with despight. And now, the Joy that here is demonstrated upon his so peaceable Departure, doth acknowledge, what Errour it hath been to enforce him to take knowledge of his Power and Strength; whereof before, as he had no cause to make proof of it, so had he little Reason to presume. Now, that Armes were put in his Hands, it was at his Discretion what use to make of them, whose excellent Moderation in choosing rather to cast himself into a voluntary Exile, then that his Country, for his sake, should fall by Relapse into those Miseries wherewith so lately it hath been afflicted, doth seem an Argument more then sufficient to maintaine his Innocency against those Calumnies wherewith he is reproached. And assuredly if the Fashion of this Treatment in all Circumstances had concurred, I say not upon a turbulent Spirit, but upon any other then him, who is of a more then ordinary Resolution for Honor and Judgment, and of a far and clear forecasting Providence, that Fire of Division had been by this Day kindled in this Realme, which no Effusion of Blood could have extinguished; but as Oyle in a Lamp it wold have served rather to enforce then quench the Flame.

Upon the Advice that the Duke had passed as far as Orenge, the Marschal Laverdin was dispatched into those Parts, upon Prettext of this late Remnement at Geneva, but as it is said, not without Charge to intercept or stop him in the way. If he should thereby have been enforced to turn back, yt wold have been wished perhaps too late, that a Bridge had been made him of Silver to pass over.

The

The Ambassador of Florence doth assure me, that his Master by his Letters hath advertized the King, to be wary, how he doth lay his hands not only upon the Blood but upon the Honor and Reputation of his Subjects, and to remember the Example of the Duke of Alva, and the Count Horn and Egmont.

An. 1602.

Upon Fryday last Monsieur de Villeroy communicated unto the Deputies of the Churches, a Letter sent from Monsieur de Betunes the King's Ambassador at Rome; wherein is written, that when he had acquainted the Pope with this Affair of the Duke, and what were his Accusations and who his Accusers; he answered, that those Witnesses were not omni exceptione majores, and being Prisonniers not receivable, presumed by Law to be Men without Honor and Conscience, who to save themselves wold not care whom they blamed; and therefore doth advise the King not lightly to beleave any thing against him, whom the World could not deny ever to have been a faithfull Servant to his Person and Crown. Of this Text this Gloss is gathered, that, that part of the Accusation is true, that the Duke hath purpose to turn both Catholick and Spaniard. Monsieur de Tremouille, who doth bleſs her Majestie's Pietie and Zeale, for those gracious Favours which upon free Motion out of the Fullness of her own Bounty she hath vouchsafed to demonstrate, bewailing his Infelicity, did lately tell me, that at his first Arrivall the King did declare, that nothing was detected or surmized against him; now he is charged, that although he never passed Consent in any of those Complots, yet he was privy to them all, and therefore failed in Duety not to reveal them: So that he begins to apprehend, that his Staffe stands next to the Door. Yet seeing he is in the Net, the more he shall struggle, the more he shall entangle himselfe, and therefore doth resolve to ryde it out; neither should he do wisely in this fowle Weather, to hoise up Saile in so ruinous and rotten a Bottom. The Abolition of the Panchart hath brought forth this Fruit, that the Impositions this Year are increased 500000 Crownes.

I understand that there is ordained to be paid this Year to her Majestie 200000 Franks, (for sence the last Reglement of Money, all Sommes have their Denomination by Franks and no more by Crowns) which is 200000 l. Sterling; but the Declaration hereof (as Monsieur de Villeroy doth answer) the King will not send but by his Ambassador, to deliver to her Majestie. The Secret is, that it will not be declared, untill it be cleared what will be the Issue of this Affair of the Duke. There is assigned for the States 900000 Franks, the same Somme they received last Year, but the Declaration is refused and shall not be delivered but unto Monsieur de Buzenval. Upon this Answer from Monsieur de Villeroy often reiterated to my Lord Ambassador, I was in mind to have demanded Permission of the King for my return; but now I am engaged to stay, untill I shall receive Resolution from your Honor of this Point which followeth. I have been advertized by some about the King, that he was much offended with me for something that I should write into England, as he pretendeth to the Dishonour of his State; and Monsieur de Villeroy hath geeven forth, that I have written, that here was feared another Massacre. So I addressed my self unto him with this Speech: "That I understood that the King and he were discontented with me
 " for somewhat (but what I knew not,) that I should write into England. I " said my Reverence to the King and my respect to him did bring me thither, to " entreate to know the particular, thereby the better to purge my self. Yf I " had wrote any thing irreverently, that was either in my Dispatches to your " Honor, or in private Letters. For the first I did not doubt, but that her Ma-
 " jestie, upon my humble Motion, wold be pleased to assure the King, of my " respectfull Carriage towards him, in all the Time of my Service, both by re" lation to his Ambassador, and by Commission to hers who remaineth here, to " whom I had communicated all Letters of Busyness sence his comming: And yf
 " it should be justified against me that otherwise I have misbehaved my self, I my " self wold beseech her Majestie to give Commandment to her Ambassador,
 " (that the Shame which her Service hath received by my unworthyness might " be expiated,) to deliver me up into their Hands lié & garotté to suffer exem" plary

An. 1602. " plary Punishment, such as my Folly and Temerity should deserve. I was I " said now upon the Point of my return, and therefore did desire to clear my " self of this Imputation, as one desirous to remaine in the King's gracious Favour,
 " and the good Opinion of his State. He answered, that the King was ill satis-
 " fyed with me, upon Advertisement, that I should write into England much to
 " his Dishonour, (these were his Words,) de la mauvaise conduite de ses af-
 " fares, de ses volontés & conseiles. He did not descend to any Particulars,
 " tho' I much urged him, neither did he know, as he said, any Particulars. He " wished me to seek to give the King Satisfaction before I should depart, both for " the Honour of my Service and my particular Reputation; that when I did de" part from hence, I might both leave and receive Contentment.

Herein I beseech such Favour from your Honor, as the Honor of her Maje- sties Service may require, and my Innocency (best known to you) may presume to crave: And withall do beseech to receive her Majestie's Commaundment for my return; for it is many Months sence here they have been weary of me, neither is it likely that they will send the Declaration of the Payment for this Year by me, as not willing to make my Services gratefull, or my return acceptable to her Majestie. I know Monsieur de Beaumont is too full of Honour to lend me this Charity, to whom I have done all good Offices both publick and private, and therefore am loathe to wrong my own Judgment so much, as to suspect from him this unworthey Exchange; and Monsieur la Fontaine should know, that the Diuel doth take his Name a Calumniando.

I have given Order for 10 l. Sterling to be paid to Pinson, praying your Honor to resolve by the next, either to continue him or recall him.

The Duke of Nevers's Secretary doth recommend to your Honor's Favour, the Discourse which herewith I send by Commaundment from his Master; who doth desire it should be presented to her Majestie.

What your Honor shall present unto the King by my hand will be perhaps the less acceptable, as being delivered by a disgraced Person. And so I humbly take my leave.

Your Honor's in all Duty humblie to be commaunded,
 RALPH WINWOOD.

Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll.

Right Honorable,

Paris, 4th Jan. 1602. O. S.

WHEN the King did write to the Duke of Bouillon to command his repaire to the Court, yt was thought that either the Assurance of his own Innocency would have brought him thither, where his Life and Fortunes would have remained at Discretion, or that the Apprehension of the Danger wherewith he saw himself environed, would have caused him to undertake a base and shame-full Flight, which might have presumed a Guiltiness, and cast a Cloud, in the Opinion of the World, over his Honor and Reputation. But now, the Course that he hath taken hath assured his Life, and the Moderation he hath used in the rest of his Carriage, not only preserved, but much magnified his Honor. We are thus far fallen, that we are come to say, that if Monsieur de Bouillon hath not failed aux fonds, yet he hath failed aux formes, in choosing rather to take, then receive his Judges. He arryved at Geneva the third of this Moneth Stilo Novo;
 the Sunday after he received the Communion, which here is ill taken that it was not refused him, and there remained untill the Twelfth, sence which time nothing is heard of him.

Here are come two Deputies named St. Chat and St. Ravy, sent expressly from the Churches of Languedoc, (because they did accompany him in his Retraict as far as Usez upon the Rhosne) to testifie unto the King with what Sobriety and Discretion he carried himself, not only in refusing the generall and particular Offers

Offers which were presented unto him, but in exhorting all in private and public to acknowledge their Duetie and Obedience to the King, and to embrace the Peace and Repose under which they now live, by the Liberty of the Edict; protesting that he wold rather choose to loose his Head upon a Scaffold in the Greve, then that for his sake his Country should reenter into these Troubles wherewith so lately it hath ben attended. The most the King did mislike in this Message; was their Title of Deputies, and the forme of their Commission, which he said argued a formed Body within his Realme, without Dependance upon him and separated from his State; which for this time, he said, he wold be content to pass over, but wold not endure that the like hereafter should be put in Practise, which Monsieur de Frezueze, the Secretary for those Parts, did reiterate unto them, with greater Vehemencie of Spirit then Language.

There is fallen out a great Brouillerie at Metz, where the Town is risen up in Armes against the Cittadell. The Case I take to be this. One called Subole being made a Lieutenant Generall by Monsieur d'Espernon, casting of all dependance on him, declared himself immediately to hold his Place from the King; wherein he governed himself with so little Moderation, that the Inhabitants remonstrated their Greevances which they endured by many of his Violences, and have made their Complaint to the King; with Protestation, that longer they had not Patience to live under the Thraldom of that Subjection. D'Espernon taking this Advantage to be reintegrated into his Government, undertaketh the Protection of the Towne against Subole, and procureth Commission from the King, assisted by the President Vary and Monsieur de Boisfisse, to hear and determine all Differences between the Town and his Lievetenant, under Pretext to accord and pacifie all Matters, but with purpose to seaze himself on the Person of Subole, and to dispossess him of his place; whereunto the King at least made shew to condescend, for one called de Riquyn, a Lievetenant of the Gards, and Brother to de Montigni Governor of this Town, is nominated to succeed him. The King fearing least Monsieur de Espernon, having gained with the Possession of that State the Hearts and Affections of the People, should grow too absolute in that Place, which Conceit the quallitie of his Person, and the important Situation of the Town doth increase, underhand gives Order to Subole to hold good his Place, and he wold maintaine him. D'Espernon and his Accessories having received all Informations on the one hand and the other, and pretending to make a final Agreement of all Differences, appoints an Assembly in the Town-House, where they with the Body of the Town and the Lievetenant would meet. The Day and Howre of the Meeting being come, Subole appears not, first excuseth himself by the Indisposition of his Body, in fine sends Word to his Brother, who there lived with him, that he meant not to come; and if he came, yet his Brother should remaine in guard and possession of the Cittadelle. Upon this Answer the Town riseth up in Arms, and Monsieur d'Espernon blocketh up the Cittadelle, wherein are 300 Soldiars, and so both Parties have advertized the King; who hath dispatchted to this pourpose, that all Matters should remaine as before without Innovation, untill his further Pleasure shall be known, which he wold send by La Varenne, whereunto if they should refuse to accord, he himself wold come in Person. La Varenne is gone, but with what Charge I cannot assure your Honor.

La Marquise this Week was delivered of a Daughter, which hath put much Water in her Wine. But that which most did greeve her is removed, her Son is now legitimated, and acknowledged the naturall Son of the King, by the Name of Gaston de Foix.

Since the Accident of Geneva, the four Cantons which are their nearest Neighbours, Zurich, Berne, Basle, and Schafuze, have joyntly sent to the Duke of Savoy to retire his Forces which still lye before the Towne, protesting otherwise, that they will not be wanting in Assistance both defensive and offensive to their Neighbours and Allies. The Assembly of the Princes Protestant of Germany for the Affair of Strasburgh, between the Marquise of Brandenburgh the Administrator, and the Cardinall of Lorraine, which should have ben held at Heydelbergh,

An. 1602. bergh, was transmitted to Erin in Franconia, there to be kept the 6th of this Month. The Palatine of the Rhine's Son is Christened, and named Louis Phillippe. It is held here for certaine, that the King of Spaine hath made the Perdito for twelve Millions, payable in three Years, with the Bank of Centarioni at Genoa. Carlo Doria in his return from Spaine, is said to be dead by Sickness at Toulon, where he touch'd with his Gallies.

Here are three of the King's Guards in Prifon, upon Suspicion for some Attempt against his Person, and a Priest for not revealing the Confession of one, who declared unto him the purpose he had to kill the King. The Party (who is fled) having cast forth some lewd Speech about such a wicked Intention, the Priest his ghostly Father was examined whether he had communicated unto him any such purpose; which he ingenuously confessed, but that by his Perswasions he had detourned him from the Wickedness of such Thoughts, which he held to be rather a Tentation in him, then a Resolution. The Commoditie of the Bearer doth give the Occasion of theafe, which I pray may be excused. And soe, &c.

Your Honor's, &c.

RALPH WINWOOD.

The Chancellor hath a Quarrell with the Duke of Bouillon, for calling himself in his Letter to the King, the second Officer of the Crown, which he holdeth to be his Right.

Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood.

Mr. Winwood,

5th January 1602.

ALTHOUGH I have no Matter of Moment at this tyme to write, and therefore send no Messenger of purpose, yet having understood of late how you have been abused, I do confesse that I am very much troubled untill I hear how the Ambassador hath used it. For as all Men know you would easilie have righted your self if you had been a private Man, so being as you are, it had been a great fault in you to have done otherwise then you did; wherein all that love Magistracy must nevertheles foresee, that such Examples passed with Impunitie, bring her Majestie's Dignitye in Contempt. I have therefore written unto the Ambassador feelingly, to let him know, that though you have used a great deal of Modestie, yet you could not hide the Sense of this injurious Dealing, and have desyred him (if he meane not to aggravate the Gentleman's Offence) that he will see a Reparation done you according to your Merit. And thus for this tyme I committ you to God.

From the Court at Whitehall.

Your very loving Friend,

RO. CECYLL.

You may return when you will, tho' I do wish if it may be, that you could bring some News of the Money. I think her Majestie is resolved of your Imployment in the Low-Countries.

Mr. Winwood to the Duke de Tremouille.

Monseigneur,

JE n'y aura point de besoin que je recherche des excuses pour avoir tant tardé, de vous escrire. Les raisons en sont trop notoires, & de telle qualité, que nous autres, en aurons tousjours, non moins de ressentiment que de souvenance.
Mais

Mais il faut que nous rengions à la volonté de Dieu, puis qu'il a trouvé bon An. 1652. en sa divine sagesse, de retiner à soy nostre bonne Souveraine, en l'age de 69 & d'avantage, apres qu'elle eust regne tres heurensement quarante quatre années & quelques mois. Sa fin a fort ressemble à sa vie, estant douce, tranquille, & paisible. Luy commença premierement à saillir le somme, apres l'appetit, & finalement le soyn, ou de recouvrir la santé, ou d'allonger sa vie: ne desirant pas autre chose que de troquer ce Royaume terestre & transitoire, avec celuy de Paradis, pour y regner eternellement. Durant le temps de son indisposition, elle se tint fort retirée, estant assise la pluspart sur des quaireaux, sans se vouloir reposer au liét; employant tout le long tant de jour que de nuict, ou aux Meditations privées, ou à la Lecture & Exhortations des Theologiens, lesquels elle ne voulust pas laisser bouger d'apres d'elle. Elle eut Graces à Dieu jusques au dernier soupir, l'entendiment, la memoire, & l'exercice de ses espritz, prompt & capable; tant, que le jour devant son trespas elle declarà pour son Successeur legitime aux Seigneurs de son Conseil le Roy d'Escosse, a cett' heure nostre Roy & Seigneur Soverain. Elle languissant à petit feu par l'espace de 20 jours, rendit son ame à Dieu le 24^e au vieux Style de Mars sur les troys heures du matin. Jamais Princesse est decedé ou plus reverée en sa Vie, ou plus regrettée en sa Mort. Quel a esté le dueil de tout le Monde, outre l'angoisse d'esprit qu'un chacun a porté chez soy, il vous sera plus ayse de concevoir, qu'à moy de vous représenter par escrit. Ce que nous a infiniment consolé, (dont nous aurons juste subject de louer Dieu à jamais) c'est, que par la prudence & magnanime resolution de nostre Noblesse, le mesme jour du deces de la feu Reyne, le Roy d'Escosse a esté déclaré & public Roy par la Ville de Londres, entre les heures de dix & onze avec un applaudissement indicible, & depuis par tout le Royaume, sans que personne de quelques qualite qu'il soyt, s'y est opposé, ou de fait, ou de parole. Je vous envoyé la copie de la susdicte proclamation traduite en Francoys de mot en mot, signée par les principaux Seigneurs, & presque tous de la Noblesse. Deux jeunes Seigneurs furent expediez le mesme jour, pour advertyr nostre Roy de tout ce qui c'est passé. Nous esperons qu'il s'acheminera vers nous en bonne dilligence, ce que nous attendons en tresgrande devotion. Fay pris l'hardiesse de vous envoyer ces nouvelles, m'assurant qu'ellez engendront en vous les mesmes Affections qui nous possèdent, à sçavoir, mixtionnes de tristesse & de rejouissance. Car nous esperons tresasseurement, que comme nous le recognoissons pour nostre Seigneur & Soverain, ce qu'est de nostre devoir, ainsy, luy estant Prince prudent & vertueux, nous maintiendra en paix & tranquillité, & en cell' union de Religion, qui nostre feu Souveraine, de tres heurense & excellent Memoyre, luy a laissé fondée & establié. C'est tout que je vous sçauray escrire pour le present, vous suppliant de le vouloyr prendre en bonne part, comme de celuy, qui vous baisant les Mains

MONSEIGNEUR,

Demeurera tousjours

Vostre treshumble & tresobeissant Serviteur,
